Does not therefore St. Paul thus intimate (as he was constrained to do by those who placed St. Peter in opposition to him) that his own Apostolic privileges and revelations were not a whit inferior to those of St. Peter? Cp. 2 Cor. xi. 5; xii. 11. 1 Cor. i. 12.

On the practical duties arising from a consideration of St. Paul's case, as having a special call, see Bp. Sanderson, iii. 114.

17. ἀνῆλθον] B, D, E, F, G, have ἀπῆλθον, which some Editors have adopted; but A, I, K, and the Greek Fathers, have ἀνῆλθον, which is preferable as to sense; and ἀπῆλθον appears to be only an error introduced from confusion with the word in the following line.

There is a contrast between ἀνῆλθον εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα and ἀπῆλθον εἰς Ἀραβίαν, which adds much force to the argument. I went not up to Jerusalem, the Holy City, as I should have done if I had needed or desired instruction from man, but I went away into Arabia, a heathen wilderness, where I could not expect any such instruction, but where I received revelations from God.

Hence the Latin Versions (Vulg., Cod. Aug., Boern.) have 'veni' for the former word, and 'abii' for the latter.

As to the history of this retirement into Arabia, see note on Acts ix. 23. The Arabic Version here specifies Balca as the place of St. Paul's retirement.

18. μετὰ ἔτη τρία] after three years. On the chronological arrangement of these dates, see above, "Chronological Synopsis" prefixed to the Acts of the Apostles, pp. xxxv. xxxviii.

— ἱστορῆσαι] To visit Peter and make his acquaintance. See the illustrations of ἱστορεῖν, sometimes applied to a place, in Wetstein's note. St. Paul went to visit St. Peter, "ut fraternam charitatem etiam corporali notitiâ cumularet" (Aug.), and not to learn any thing from him (Primasius).

He introduces this incident in order to show that he had never known Peter before, and therefore could not have derived any thing from him. At the same time this circumstance indicates that this visit was a spontaneous overture on St. Paul's part, and that he felt conscious that though he had derived nothing from the other Apostles, yet that the Gospel he had received from heaven was perfectly in harmony with that which was taught by those who were called by Christ upon earth, and that he expects them to own him as a brother, as he owns them. In the fulness of this persuasion he voluntarily repaired to Jerusalem in order to visit Peter, for whom the Jewish Christians, and therefore the Galatians, entertained the highest respect.

— Κηφᾶν] So A, B, and Lach., Sch., Tisch., Meyer, Alf., Ellicott. Elz. has Πέτρον, which is grounded on good MS. authority, viz. D, E, F, G, K, H, but seems to be a gloss for the less familiar name Cephas, which, being the Hebrew form, was more likely to be used by St. Paul in deference to the feelings and practice of the Jewish Christians. But he afterwards used the name Peter also (ii. 7, 8), for the sake of his Gentile Readers, and to show the identity of the person who bore these two names.

— ἐπέμεινα π. αὐτὸν ἡ. δεκαπέντε] I abode with him fifteen days. He thus shows that Peter cordially received him (Primasius). Fifteen days; ample time for Peter to have seen what I was, and to have proclaimed me to the world as a deceiver, if the Gospel which I preached was not consistent with his own. Therefore they who cavil at me, involve Peter also in the charge of conniving at error and delusion.

19. Ἰάκωβον] James. The mention of Peter, one of the Twelve, is followed by the words, other of the Apostles saw I none save James the Lord's Brother. It seems to be a reasonable conclusion from this passage, that James the brother (i. e. cousin) of our Lord, and Bishop of Jerusalem, was also one of the Twelve Apostles. James was the son of Cleophas, and his Mother was Sister of the Mother of our Lord (Theodoret). Cp. Euseb. H. E. ii. 1, and Bengel here, and note on Acts i. 13; xii. 17; xxi. 18, and note on Matt. x. 3, and the authorities referred to, in Ellicott's note here.

St. Paul shows his respect for St. James by calling him the Lord's Brother, as he had shown his respect for St. Peter by saying that he himself went up to Jerusalem in order to visit him (v. 18).

By these preliminary expressions of reverence for those two Apostles, he wisely guards himself against any imputations on the part of his Judaizing adversaries, that he, a new Apostle, was liable to the charge of disparaging the original Apostles of Christ. And he prepares the way for what he is about to say in the next Chapter concerning his resistance to St. Peter, and to those who professed to come from St. James (ii. 12); and shows that he would not have acted as he did, except under a stern sense of duty.

20. ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ] "Jurat utique; et quid sanctius hâc juratione?" (Aug.), who has some excellent remarks here on the true character of an Oath, and on the consistency of St. Paul's conduct in this respect with the precept of Christ (Matt. v. 34), as follows: "An oath which cometh not from the evil (ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ) of him who swears, but from the unbelief of him to whom he swears, is not against our Lord's precept 'Swear not.' Our Lord commands, that, as far as in us lies, we should not swear; which command is broken by those who have in their mouths an oath as if it were something pleasant in itself. The Apostle Paul knew our Lord's command, and yet he swore. They are not to be listened to, who say that these speeches of his are not oaths. As far as in him lies, the Apostle swears not; he does not catch at an oath with eagerness, but when he swears it is by constraint, through the infirmity or incredulity of those who will not otherwise believe what he says." See note above, on Matt. v. 34.

— ὅτι] 'that,' i. e. I speak in the sight of God, who sees that I do not lie. He is my witness that I speak the truth. A verb of seeing is implied in the word ἐνώπιον. Cp. 2 Cor. i. 23.

21. Ἔπειτα ἦλθον] He recites what he did, and what God did for him, but he modestly omits what he suffered for the Gospel in this period, first at Damascus (Acts ix. 22—25), and afterwards at Jerusalem (Acts ix. 26), where see note.

— Κιλικίας] Cilicia, his own country, thus showing his sincerity, courage, and love. See Acts ix. 30.

CH. II. 1. Ἔπειτα—εἰς Ἰεροσόλυμα] to the council at Jerusalem. See notes on Acts xv. 1, 2, and the Chronological Synopsis prefixed to the Acts, p. xxxv. And so Irenæus, iii. 13, and Jerome, and Theodoret, and Primasius here, who says that this journey took place "quando de oneribus Legis quæstio mota est."

St. Paul omits all reference to the journey mentioned Acts xi. 30, because he was not as yet an Apostle when he made that journey (see on Acts xiii. 1—3), and because his mission on that occasion was only carrying alms to the poor Christians at Jerusalem, and had no doctrinal character. See Acts xii. 25, and cp. Kitto, Illustrations, pp. 300—314.

But why, it may be asked, does he not now refer to the decree of this Council on the non-obligation of the Gentiles to receive Circumcision (Acts xv. 23—29)?

He himself, in his second Missionary journey, had delivered copies of that Decree to the Churches of Upper Asia (Acts xvi. 4), and these Decrees were relevant to the question treated of in this Epistle; and the concurrence of the Apostles and Elders at Jerusalem in framing that Decree, would appear to have been a conclusive refutation of those who alleged, that St. Paul, in not enforcing Circumcision on his Galatian converts, had contravened the doctrine and discipline of the Apostles.

The reasons for his silence in this particular may be thus stated;

(1) He had already communicated the Decree of that Council to the Churches of Upper Asia, and in all probability to the Galatians themselves. See the narrative in Acts xvi. 4—6, where, after the mention of the delivery of copies of the decree, it is said that they went through the region of Phrygia and Galatia.

(2) After the promulgation of the decree St. Peter had withdrawn himself from the communion of the Gentile Christians at Antioch.

Therefore it might be alleged that St. Peter had seen reason to renounce the opinion enunciated by that Council.

(3) Hence St. Paul passes over the history of the Council, and proceeds to speak of his own conduct to St. Peter at Antioch (v. 11).

(4) Besides, St. Paul was an Apostle "not of men nor by men (i. 1)." He had received the Gospel which he preached by immediate revelation from God. He claimed to be heard on this ground. He showed his own sense of the independence and sufficiency of his own mission from God, by waiving all reference in its support, even to the decree of the Apostolic Council at Jerusalem (Acts xv. 28).

— μετὰ Βαρνάβα] with whom he had been on his first missionary journey. See Acts xiii. 4 to Acts xiv. 26. Cp. Acts xv. 12.

— συμπαραλαβὼν καὶ Τίτον] Having taken with me Titus also, a Gentile Christian (v. 3), to Jerusalem.

This is the earliest mention of Titus; and his connexion with St. Paul (as far as Holy Scripture has recorded it) dates from the Metropolis of Gentile Christianity, Antioch. Cp. note on 2 Cor. viii. 18, and on Titus i. 4.

2. κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν] by revelation. Not therefore by commission only from the Church at Antioch (Acts xv. 2). Another proof of his independence. He would not have submitted his own revelation to be called into question unless it had been revealed to him that he should go up to Jerusalem to the Council, in which the matter under debate was to be deliberated.

The Holy Spirit revealed to him His Will that he should go to Jerusalem, not in order to learn any thing from the other Apostles, but in order to quell and pacify strife, and to promote the cause of the Gospel, and the success of his own ministry. (Chrys.) — τοῖς δοκοῦσι] those in repute (τοῖς ἐνδόξοις, Theophyl.), Peter, James, and John. See vv. 6—9.

— μήπως εἰς κενὸν τρέχω] lest perchance I might be running, or have run to no purpose. Τρέχω is the present indicative. Cp. Green, N. T. p. 81, and Peile here. Κηρύσσω, the present indicative in this verse, confirms this view. Winer (p. 448) regards τρέχω as the present conjunctive.

Why did St. Paul make this communication to those in repute among the Apostles?

Not from the least doubt or misgiving as to his own doctrine, or in order to receive any greater assurance as to its truth.

If he had felt any hesitation on this point, he would have resorted to the Apostles for such a confirmation before.

Besides, he distinctly says (v. 6), that "those in repute contributed nothing to him."

But he communicated privately with those of reputation, lest perchance by any public altercation between him and them on this fundamental article of the faith (viz. as to the obligation of the Levitical Law) any of his converts might be scandalized, and so his labours on them be in vain. Cp. Phil. ii. 16. See Chrys. and Theophyl. here, who says that he acted thus, ἵνα μὴ στάσις γένηται, καὶ ἵνα ἀρθῇ τὸ σκάνδαλον.

In fact, St. Paul did all that was requisite on his part to obviate that very result which, unhappily, manifested itself among the Galatians, through the evil devices of the Judaizers, who endeavoured to bring his doctrine into public collision with that of the other Apostles, and which he subsequently deplores in this Epistle. See below, iv. 11, "I fear you, lest haply (μήπως) I have laboured on you in vain;" which affords the best philological and dogmatical exposition of the present verse.

By this mention of his private conference at Jerusalem with those of reputation, particularly St. Peter, he prudently prepares the way for his subsequent description of the public dispute at Antioch between himself and St. Peter. He wisely guards himself against the imputation that he had at once, and without previous communication, stood up to give a public rebuke to that great Apostle (v. 11).

St. Paul had abode with St. Peter fifteen days (i. 18). He privately communicated his own Gospel to St. Peter; St. Peter knew therefore what that Gospel was. St. Peter had given him the right hand of fellowship (v. 9), and had agreed that St. Paul should be recognized as the Apostle of the Gentiles, as he himself was to the Jews (v. 9). St. Peter therefore had good reason to expect that, after this previous intercourse with him, St. Paul's conduct to him at Antioch would be no other than what it was.

3. οὐδὲ Τίτος ὁ σὺν ἐμοὶ, Ἕ. ὤν, ἠ. π.] Not even Titus, the person who came with me from Antioch to Jerusalem, was compelled to be circumcised. Compelled: by whom? By the Judaizers. St. Paul explains that this is the meaning, by saying d Acts 15. 24.

4 d διὰ δὲ τοὺς παρεισάκτους ψευδαδέλφους, οἵτινες παρεισῆλθον κατασκοπῆσαι τὴν ἐλευθερίαν ἡμῶν ἣν ἔχομεν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, ἵνα ἡμᾶς καταδουλώσουσιν, 5 οἷς οὐδὲ πρὸς ὥραν εἴξαμεν τῇ ὑποταγῇ, ἵνα ἡ ἀλήθεια τοῦ εὐαγγελίου διαμείνῃ πρὸς ὑμᾶς.

that "he did not give place to them even for an hour." See Augustine here, who says, "The circumcision of Titus could not be extorted from him by these false brethren,—because they enforced it as necessary to salvation, and would have appealed to St. Paul as agreeing with them if he had consented to the circumcision of Titus on their terms." Cp. the use of ἀναγκάζειν also in this sense in v. 14.

The false brethren hoped to be able to place St. Paul in a dilemma, by requiring of him that Titus, his companion, should be circumcised.

If he consented, then they would have had an argument against him, in their appeals to the Gentile converts, whom he had received into the Church without circumcision.

If he refused to circumcise Titus, then they would render him obnoxious to the Jews, by representing him as at variance with the other Apostles at Jerusalem, who were circumcised, and conformed to the ceremonial law in their own persons, and communicated with those who observed it.

St. Paul therefore states here, that he refused to comply with this requisition.

He thus answers those who alleged that he was inconsistent, and practised in Judæa what he did not preach to the Heathen. Cp. v. 11.

He also tacitly justifies himself against the charge of inconsistency in circumcising another person, his other son in the faith, Timothy (Acts xvi. 3).

Timothy had been circumcised by St. Paul a little before St. Paul's visit to Galatia; and Timothy probably accompanied him as his fellow-labourer in his missionary tour to preach the Gospel to the Galatians (Acts xvi. 6). The circumcision of Timothy was therefore, probably, well known in Galatia;

Hence the question arose,

If Timothy was circumcised, why not Titus? If not Titus, why Timothy?

St. Paul replies to this question here, "But not even Titus, he who was with me at Jerusalem, being a Gentile, was compelled to be circumcised." I would not consent that he should be circumcised even at Jerusalem. Much less do I consent that you Gentiles in Galatia should be circumcised. I do not consent to your circumcision,—because you are Gentiles, and because you have embraced the Gospel, and because it would be to force you to go backwards instead of forwards, if I compelled you, or permitted others to compel you, to submit to the Levitical Law.

But Timothy's case was very different from yours;

As has been well said by Augustine (Epist. 82), St. Paul circumcised Timothy in order that Timothy's mother and maternal friends might not imagine that St. Paul detested Circumcision, as if it were an idolatrous thing; for Circumcision was from God, but Idolatry is of the Devil.

But St. Paul did not circumcise Titus, lest he should afford a handle to those who alleged that Gentiles receiving the Gospel could not be saved without Circumcision; and who deceived the Gentile Christians by imputing such an opinion to St. Paul.

4. διὰ δὲ τοὺς παρεισ. ψευδ.] Titus was not compelled to be circumcised. I refused to allow that Titus should be circumcised, not because I abhor Circumcision,—for I know it to be from God, and I circumcised Timothy; but I refused to allow Titus to be circumcised,—not because Circumcision, regarded as an indifferent thing, is destructive of salvation, but (δὲ) because of the false brethren surreptitiously brought in, who crept in secretly, to be spies on the Liberty which we have in Christ Jesus, that they might reduce us to slavery; to whom we gave place by the subjection (τῇ ὑποταγῇ) which they expected of us,—no, not even for an hour.

By this mention of false brethren surreptitiously brought in, he clears the holy Apostles from the imputation of being supposed to have been parties to such a requisition—after the Council of Jerusalem—as that Titus, a Gentile, should be compelled to be circumcised.

Among those false brethren are supposed to have been Ebion and Cerinthus. See on Acts xv. 1. Cp. 2 Cor. xi. 26.

These false brethren are represented as spies clandestinely introduced into the Christian Church as into a free city, and as desirous of finding out some assailable point, by which it might be attacked and reduced to slavery.

Their point of attack was the Liberty of the Church, and was chosen with great subtlety.

They were at Jerusalem, and had the advantage of all the Jewish zeal in behalf of the Levitical Law in their favour.

They imagined that they had St. Paul in a dilemma (see on v. 3), and the point they chose was one in which they apprehended no resistance from him.

They desired to enforce Circumcision on Titus, who was with St. Paul at Jerusalem under his care. But St. Paul resisted this coercion.

And why? Even because of these false brethren, who would have enforced it. Because they were enforcing it as necessary to salvation. On the force of δὲ here see Winer, p. 502.

The fundamental principle of the Gospel of Christ (as distinguished from the Law of Moses) was at stake.

St. Paul might perhaps have allowed even Titus to receive Circumcision, as a thing indifferent, and for the sake of peace and charity. (Augustine.)

But these false brethren did not proffer Circumcision as a thing indifferent, but as necessary.

If St. Paul had complied with their requisition so enforced, and if he had allowed Titus, who was associated with himself, to receive Circumcision on these terms, he would have fallen into the snare which they laid for him, he would have made himself a partner and a patron of their error, and have disqualified himself for being the Apostle of the Gentiles, and for preaching to them the Gospel of Free Grace and of Justification by Faith in Christ without the deeds of the Law (Rom. iii. 28. Gal. ii. 16. Eph. ii. 8. Acts xiii. 39).

Observe therefore the charity and courage of the Apostle.

(1) His charity, in circumcising Timothy at Lystra, in condescension to the scruples of weak brethren. See on Acts xvi. 3.

(2) His courage in refusing to circumcise Titus at Jerusalem, in submission to the requisitions of false brethren.

He was not unwilling, in certain cases, and under certain circumstances, even to practise Circumcision, while the Levitical Ritual, which was of God, was still celebrated, and had not been visibly abrogated by its Divine Author, in the sight of the world, as it soon afterwards was, by the destruction of the city and Temple of Jerusalem. See on Heb. xiii. 10.

In such cases St. Paul would not be unwilling to conform to Levitical ceremonies as things indifferent. And in all indifferent things the Law of his teaching, and the Rule of his practice, was Charity.

But in no case would he enforce Circumcision as necessary, nor would he ever yield for a moment to others, however numerous and powerful, who would enforce it on any as such. He would be tender-hearted to the erring, but he would not make the least compromise with error; and he would make no concession to any who would impose their errors on others as terms of communion.

Doubtless the Miracles wrought by St. Paul were seals of his Apostleship (2 Cor. xii. 12). But assuredly the loving Gentleness, and yet unflinching Intrepidity, the condescending Meekness, and yet uncompromising Zeal, and in all things the consummate Wisdom with which the holy Apostle was enabled to act in the midst of his incessant cares, and on the most critical occasions, and when he stood almost alone, as at Antioch, and when he had a Peter and a Barnabas opposed to him, will afford convincing proofs, that St. Paul was under the abiding guidance of the Holy Ghost, to all those who look back from the present time to the Apostolic Age, and trace the influence of St. Paul's teaching and practice, in the history of the Christian Church, especially in this great question of Justification, and in reference to the true character and office of the Levitical Law.

— ἵνα—καταδουλώσουσιν] So A, B, C, D, E; Elz. καταδουλώσωνται. The ἵνα, with the future, seems to denote, not only the purpose of the act, but also that the act then done was the means by which they would then enslave and still desire to enslave. Cp. 6. Ἀπὸ δὲ τῶν δοκούντων εἶναί τι] Another passage which has been the subject of much controversy.

(1) On εἶναί τι, 'esse aliquid,' to be something, see Wetstein here, and 1 Cor. iii. 7, and note above on i. 7.

(2) But the main difficulty of the paragraph is in the construction of the word ἀπό.

It has generally been supposed that there is an anacoluthon or ellipsis here, and that some words are to be supplied before ἀπό; and many different methods have been resorted to of supplying the supposed deficiency.

(3) But it is very doubtful whether there is any anacoluthon or ellipsis.

The Apostle's meaning may be explained as follows: he had just spoken of the false brethren who had crept in, as it were, by stealth into the Apostolic company.

He now proceeds to speak of the sounder part of the body, into which these false brethren had insidiously insinuated themselves.

He does this in general terms, so as to spare (as usual when he can avoid their mention) the names of individuals.

(4) Ἀπό is used here paraphrastically, as Acts xii. 1, τινὰς ἀπὸ τῆς ἐκκλησίας. Acts xv. 5, ἀπὸ τῆς αἱρέσεως Φαρισαίων, in the record of this same period to which St. Paul here refers. Compare below, ii. 12, τινὰς ἀπὸ Ἰακώβου. Heb. vii. 13, ἀφ' ἧς οὐδείς, and Heb. xiii. 24, οἱ ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰταλίας.

In these combinations the preposition ἀπό marks the origin or quarter from which persons come, and sometimes also the side on which they stood, as in Latin 'a parte meâ, tuâ,' &c.

(5) The true meaning of the words therefore is, But it is no matter to me what sort of persons were from those who seemed to be somewhat. And the apodosis of the sentence is at ἦσαν. The sentence is well rendered by Vulg., i. e. "ab his autem qui videbantur esse aliquid quales aliquando fuerint, nihil meâ interest." See also next note.

— οἱ δοκοῦντες] For even they themselves who seemed to be somewhat, communicated nothing to me; 'nihil mihi contulerunt' (Vulg.); much less therefore was it any matter to me what sort of persons they were who came from them. If the Principals themselves (οἱ δοκοῦντες) could do nothing to inform me, much less could any Subordinates from those Principals (ἀπὸ τῶν δοκούντων) do any thing to enlighten me or to change my resolution. If James himself could add nothing to me in conference, much less could any from James (v. 12).

7. Ἀλλὰ τοὐναντίον] The connexion is this. They who seemed to be, and were somewhat, i. e. the Apostles at Jerusalem, added nothing to me. No, nor did they profess or pretend to do so. Ἀλλὰ τοὐναντίον, But on the contrary, James, and Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars, when they saw that I have been entrusted with the charge of preaching the Gospel to the Uncircumcision, &c., they gave me the right hand of fellowship. On the figure of speech in στῦλοι, see Wetstein. Cp. Rev. iii. 12, and Eurip. Iph. T. 571, στῦλοι γὰρ οἴκων εἰσὶ παῖδες ἄρσενες.

He here mentions James, and Cephas, and John by name, because what he says was honourable to them. But when he has to record any thing that is less creditable to any one, he spares the names of individuals even of the false brethren (v. 4); he practises that Charity which casts a veil over faults, and imputeth no evil (1 Cor. xiii. 5). The name of the incestuous Corinthian, who caused so much scandal, and sorrow, and vexation to the Apostle, is not revealed to us.

We may be sure, therefore, from the specification of St. Peter's name in his narrative of the contest at Antioch (v. 11), that there was a necessity for such personal commemoration; doubtless, because St. Peter's name was cited by the Judaizers in behalf of their own doctrine and practice.

Perhaps, also, it was mentioned providentially, because some who claim to be successors of St. Peter profess to be above error and beyond rebuke. See the Review at the end of this Chapter.

— πεπίστευμαι] See 1 Cor. ix. 17. 1 Thess. ii. 4. 1 Tim. i. 11.

8. ὁ γὰρ ἐνεργήσας] See the record of this fact publicly announced by St. Paul to the Apostles and to the Council at Jerusalem, where they listened to Barnabas and Paul relating what signs and wonders God wrought among the Gentiles by them (Acts xv. 4, 12).

10. τῶν πτωχῶν] the poor Christians at Jerusalem. See Rom. xv. 26.

It was agreed that we should go to the Gentiles, but not forget the Jewish Christians, who were suffering, and continued to suffer, special hardships on account of their peculiar position, being shunned as renegades by their Jewish friends and relatives. Cp. Chrys. here, who refers to 1 Thess. ii. 14 and Heb. x. 34.

The Hebrew Christians were also in an afflicted condition by reason of the Famines, Seditions, and Pestilences which continually ravaged Judæa in the forty years of trial between the Crucifixion and the Destruction of Jerusalem. Cp. on Acts ii. 44; xi. 28, 29. Euseb. ii. 8. 26; iii. 6. 8.

— ὃ καὶ ἐσπούδασα] which I was eager to do, viz. this very thing. 'Quod etiam solicitus fui hoc ipsum facere' (Vulg.); 'studui' (Augustine).

The addition of αὐτὸ τοῦτο brings out the thing recommended more forcibly and emphatically. Cp. Winer, pp. 129 and 134.

Well might St. Paul say that he was eager to do this very thing. For previously to his Ordination to be an Apostle, and when he was only a Prophet, about five years before the Council of Jerusalem, he had come up from Antioch with a collection of alms for the poor saints at Jerusalem from the Gentile City of Antioch (Acts xi. 29; xii. 25).

His subsequent zeal and persevering earnestness in the same labour of love are evident from 1 Cor. xvi. 1—15. 2 Cor. viii. 1—5; ix. 1. Rom. xv. 25, 26. See Introduction to this Epistle, § 14—16.

By mentioning his readiness in this matter he shows here—

(1) His fraternal consent and co-operation with the other Apostles;

(2) His love for the Jewish Christians, many of whom were unfriendly to him;

(3) That his non-compliance with the requirements of the false brethren, who would have enforced the Levitical Law on the Gentiles, was from no lack of charity to them. He would even become a suitor to the Gentiles for alms to the Jews (cp. 1 Cor. xvi. 16. 2 Cor. viii. 1; ix. 1); and at length he became a victim to the rancour of the Jews when he was engaged at Jerusalem in the act of promoting this very thing (Acts xxiv. 17).

11. Κηφᾶς] So A, B, C, and many cursives.

The antiquity of this reading is proved by the opinion of some of the ancients, that the Cephas here mentioned was not the Apostle Peter, but one of the Seventy disciples. See Clemens Alex. ap. Euseb. i. 12. Cp. S. Jerome here, who says, "Si propter Porphyrii blasphemias alius nobis fingendus est Cephas," &c. But Tertullian, in the second century, who often refers to this contest, has no doubt of the identity, e. g. c. Marcion. v. 3, "reprehendit Petrum, planè reprehendit, &c., Petro ipsi non pepercit."

The reading Cephas is more probable on internal grounds, because St. Paul, in recounting a transaction of St. Peter which was of a Judaistic character, consequent on the human prejudices incidental to his Jewish birth and education, and not in harmony with the office of a Christian Apostle, and which St. Paul would not wish to identify with St. Peter as such, would designate him εγνωσμένος ἦν [12] πρὸ τοῦ γὰρ ἐλθεῖν τινὰς ἀπὸ Ἰακώβου μετὰ τῶν ἐθνῶν συνήσθιεν· ὅτε δὲ ἦλθον, ὑπέστελλε καὶ ἀφώριζεν ἑαυτὸν φοβούμενος τοὺς ἐκ περιτομῆς· [13] καὶ συνυπεκρίθησαν αὐτῷ καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ Ἰουδαῖοι, ὥστε καὶ Βαρνάβας συναπήχθη αὐτῶν τῇ ὑποκρίσει.

by his Jewish name Cephas, and so bury that act in oblivion with that Jewish name, rather than associate that transaction with that name by which he lives in the memory and veneration of the Christian Church—the Gentile name of Peter.

In like manner St. Paul's companion, St. Luke, when he has to speak of his brother Evangelist St. Matthew as a Publican, calls him, with reverential delicacy, by the name of Levi (Luke v. 27. 29), and reserves the name of Matthew for the description of his title as an Apostle of Christ (Luke vi. 15. Acts i. 13). It is Matthew alone who speaks of "Matthew the Publican" (Matt. x. 3).

— εἰς Ἀντιόχειαν] to Antioch. On this visit of St. Peter placed here by St. Paul, in its proper chronological sequence, after the Council of Jerusalem, see note on Acts xv. 39.

The mention of the place Antioch itself is fraught with interesting reflections; For,

(1) Antioch was the Mother City of Gentile Christianity. It was to the Gentile World what Jerusalem was to the Jews. See on Acts xi. 26.

(2) It was the place where St. Paul had been ordained to the Apostleship.

(3) It was the starting-place and goal of his Missionary Journeys;

See Acts xiii. 1—xiv. 26, for his first Missionary Journey.

Acts xv. 35—xviii. 22, for his second Missionary Journey.

(4) In Antioch, the metropolis of Gentile Christianity, and which was the home of his Missionary life, in that city where the disciples were first called Christians (Acts xi. 26), St. Paul, the Apostle of the Gentiles, who had been ordained there to the Apostleship, stood, almost alone, in the gap, in defence of the Liberty of the Gospel, and on behalf of the saving and sufficient efficacy of Christ's Death, and on behalf of the Gentile World.

— κατὰ πρόσωπον] face to face. (Acts xxv. 16.)

The taunts of the infidel Porphyry, in which also Marcion joined (see Tertullian c. Marcion. iv. 3), pointing to this open resistance and public rebuke of one Apostle by another, and the inferences thence deduced by him to the prejudice of the Gospel, unhappily had the effect of inducing some in ancient times to soften down the meaning of κατὰ πρόσωπον, so as to make it signify nothing more than a mere external show of resistance,—in fact, a mere compromise, by which, in order to conciliate the Gentiles, St. Paul rebuked St. Peter; and, in order to conciliate the Jews, St. Peter submitted to be rebuked by St. Paul.

This opinion has been for ever exploded, and the important questions involved in it have been clearly elucidated by S. Augustine, especially in his correspondence with S. Jerome in his 28th and 82nd Epistle, and also in his treatise "De Mendacio ad Consentium," c. 26, Vol. vi. p. 778. S. Jerome's replies may be seen ibid. Ep. 40. 75.

S. Jerome himself, after having maintained an opposite opinion, frankly acknowledged the superiority of S. Augustine's arguments, and candidly declared, as his final judgment, that St. Peter was resisted and rebuked face to face by St. Paul. Adv. Pelag. i. c. 8. See also S. Jerome, in Epist. ad Philemon.: "Quondam Petrum Paulus increpaverat;" and in Jovinian. i. Vol. iv. p. 160: "Petrum reprehendit quod propter observationes Judaicas a gentibus se separaret."

— ὅτι κατεγνωσμένος ἦν] because he was condemned,—'quoniam reprehensus erat.' So, rightly, the Old Latin Version in Codex Boernerianus, and not, as the Vulgate has it, reprehensibilis. And the Commentary lately published for the first time by the learned Benedictine J. B. Pitra, in his 'Spicilegium Solesmense,' as the work of S. Hilary, p. 59, has also reprehensus, i. e. 'was condemned;' i. e. condemned by his own practice. See Abp. Whately (Lectures on the Acts, p. 180), Meyer, Alford, and Winer, p. 307. This is explained by St. Paul in v. 14, where he shows that St. Peter was αὐτοκατάκριτος, and why. See on v. 12.

It has been recently alleged by a learned Expositor as a reason for grave censure of the Christian Fathers, that they try to make it appear that the censure of St. Peter by St. Paul was only an apparent one.

But the fact is, that some most eminent of the ancient Christian Fathers, e. g. Cyprian and Ambrose, maintained, even before Augustine, that the censure was real; and since the age of Augustine (one of the greatest of Christian Fathers), scarcely any Father of the Church has held a contrary opinion.

12. ἀπὸ Ἰακώβου] from James, the Bishop of Jerusalem: "a Judæa, nam Ecclesiæ Hierosolymitanæ Jacobus præfuit." (Augustine.) Cp. Acts xxi. 18, εἰσῆει πρὸς Ἰάκωβον. Acts xii. 17, Ἰακώβῳ καὶ τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς.

They came from James, but it does not follow that James sent them with a commission to act as they did. Indeed this is not to be credited, after the speech of St. James at the Council of Jerusalem (Acts xv. 14—21).

But James himself observed the ceremonies of the Levitical Law, and recommended them to the Jewish Christians, even to St. Paul himself at Jerusalem, after this time. See on Acts xxi. 23, 24. Cp. Euseb. ii. 23.

These persons sent by James were weak brethren, and not yet sufficiently instructed as to the cessation of the Levitical ceremonies. Cp. Bp. Sanderson (Prælect. de Conscient. iii. Vol. iv. p. 45), where the subject is admirably treated.

— συνήσθιεν] was wont to eat with them; he made no difference between meats as distinguished by the Levitical Law into clean and unclean. Cp. Acts xi. 2—13, where St. Peter justifies himself for having so done.

Thus Peter openly declared that the Levitical Law was not to be imposed upon the Gentiles, and had ceased to be binding on himself.

— ὑπέστελλε] A nautical metaphor. St. Peter had been, as it were, sailing in company with Gentile partners (μέτοχοι, cp. Luke v. 7), and every thing seemed to be peaceable; but some false brethren came from Jerusalem, and he then (as it were) shortened sail and parted company from them. On this use of ὑποστέλλω and the simple στέλλομαι, see on 2 Thess. iii. 6. 2 Cor. viii. 20. Acts xx. 20. Heb. x. 38, 39.

13. καὶ Βαρνάβας] even Barnabas, my brother Apostle and fellow-labourer in my first mission to the Gentiles. Acts xiii. 2. 4; xiv. 14; xv. 25.

This probably was the first occasion of the difference between St. Paul and Barnabas concerning St. Mark, which occurred soon after this time (Acts xv. 36—40), and which led to St. Paul's association with Silas (v. 40), and also with Timothy. See Acts xvi. 3.

This incident shows the insufficiency of Human Examples to serve as a Rule of Conscience and of Conduct. St. Paul most justly reproved the unseasonable hypocrisy of his fellow Apostle St. Peter, face to face (as the expression signifies in another place in Scripture, Acts xxv. 16), and he did it boldly and openly, before all that were present, for this reason more especially,—because by his example he had seduced Barnabas and the Jews of Antioch into a mistake, and given a grievous occasion of offence to the Gentile converts, who had so lately received the Christian Faith, to the great hazard and scandal of the Liberty of the Gospel. How insufficient the examples of others are, to be the Rule of our own manners and conduct, and how inconsistent it is with the peace and security of the conscience, to defend our own actions by the deportment of others, how pious soever, that have gone before us, will appear in the clearest light from these words (Gal. ii. 13), especially if we inquire into the history they relate to, and consider the full scope and design of them. St. Paul declares that for this fact he reproved St. Peter, and censured him justly, and with more than ordinary freedom; not only because he himself, to the scandal of so many of the brethren, either from too great a desire of obliging, or a fear of giving offence, expressed more favour for the Jewish ceremonies than became him; but by his example he carried others away into the same hypocrisy, and by the same methods attempted to force the believing Gentiles, against their will and their conscience, into the rites of Judaism. Bp. Sanderson (Lectures on Conscience, Vol. ii. p. 128. 131. 6th ed. Lond. 1722).

— συνυπεκρίθησαν—ὑποκρίσει] This vacillation of St. Peter is called ὑπόκρισις by St. Paul, because St. Peter was not ignorant that these Levitical Ceremonies were not necessary to the Gentiles, and ought not to be enforced upon them; and that it was his duty to communicate with them, without exacting conformity from them to those ceremonies. He had been taught this by the heavenly Vision at Joppa, on which he himself had acted at Cæsarea (Acts x. 13). He had entertained Gentiles at Joppa (Acts x. 23), and had eaten with them at Cæsarea (xi. 3).

Therefore his defection at Antioch was that of hiding the truth, known to be truth, and of conniving at error, known to be error. He was therefore κατεγνωσμένος. And this his fault was ὑπόκρισις in its double character of dissimulatio and simulatio. As Augustine says (Ep. 40), "fallacem simulationem Paulus reprehendit." See also below, on v. 14, ἀναγκάζεις.

14. οὐκ ὀρθοποδοῦσι πρὸς τὴν ἀλήθ. τ. εὐ. κ.τ.λ.] are not walking uprightly according to the truth of the Gospel.

Ὀρθοποδεῖν is best explained by its opposite prævaricari, said properly of those who do not plough in a straight furrow, 'non recto pede, sed variis cruribus;' and thence applied, in a moral sense, to those who do not walk straight in the path of duty, but diverge from the right line, especially by collusion; and so is used of prevarication generally.

On this use of πρὸς see Luke xii. 47, ποιήσας πρὸς τὸ θέλημα. Winer, p. 361, Tertullian c. Marcion. iv. 3, and Ellicott here.

The sense is well given by Vulg.: "Recto pede incedere ad veritatem Evangelii." Cp. Horat. (2 Epist. i. 58): "Plautus ad exemplar Siculi properare Epicharmi."

The Truth (ἡ ἀλήθεια) of the Gospel is an expression very familiar with St. Paul describing specially its character as a dispensation of Grace, and as distinguished from the Judaistic error which he impugns in this Epistle. See Gal. iv. 16. Tit. i. 14.

— Κηφᾷ] So A, B, C (v. 11), and so Scholz., Lach., Tisch., Meyer, Alford, Ellicott. Elz. has Πέτρῳ. See above, v. 11.

— Εἰ σὺ—ζῇς] So א, A, B, C, F, G, and several cursive MSS., and Origen and Vulg., and so Lachm., Meyer, Ellicott. Elz. has ζῇς after ἐθνικῶς, and the contrast is between the personal practice in ζῇς and that required of others in Ἰουδαΐζειν.

St. Peter lived ἐθνικῶς by going in to men uncircumcised at Cæsarea, and eating with them (Acts xi. 3).

— πῶς] The reading of the best MSS. and Editions. Elz. has τί.

St. Paul did not ask the reason why, for he knew well that no reason could be given for such coercion, but he asks πῶς; how is it that thou (who wast instructed by a heavenly Vision at Joppa, and who wast enabled by God's grace to admit Cornelius into the Church, and to speak as thou didst at the Council of Jerusalem, and who livest as do the Gentiles), how is it that thou constrainest the Gentiles to Judaize?

— ἀναγκάζεις] constrainest them. How?—by withdrawing thyself from them.

In fact, the refusal of St. Peter to communicate with the Gentiles unless they complied with the Levitical Law, was tantamount to an imposition of that Law upon them as a term of communion.

If one part of that Law was obligatory upon them, the whole was. If Peter would not communicate with them because they would not observe the Levitical difference between meats as a matter of obligation, he could not in consistency communicate with them unless they consented to receive Circumcision also as necessary to salvation. He virtually imposed Circumcision on them as a term of communion.

"Paul did not rebuke Peter because Peter observed in his own person the traditions of his fathers, which, though no longer necessary, were not as yet hurtful. But he rebuked him because he compelled the Gentiles to Judaize, which he could not do in any other way than by treating these Levitical rites as if, after the coming of Christ, they were necessary to salvation.

"This is what the Voice of Truth dissuaded by the Apostleship of St. Paul. Nor was St. Peter ignorant of this verity. But he acted through fear. 'He feared them of the Circumcision.'" (Augustine, Ep. 40, Vol. ii. p. 127).

See also above on v. 13, and Augustine says, p. 287, "It was contrary to Evangelical verity to imagine that they who believed in Christ could not be saved without the Levitical ceremonies. This is what they of the Circumcision maintained; against whom the Apostle Paul contended with constancy and valour."

15. ἡμεῖς] we who are Jews by nature, and not proselytes (Chrys.), and so enjoy great spiritual privileges (Rom. iii. 2), and are not sinners of the Gentiles (i. e. sinners in the Jewish sense of the word, see Matt. ix. 10, 11; xi. 19. Mark ii. 16. Luke v. 30. Augustine), but yet, since we know that no man is justified by the works of the Law (nor in any manner) except through Faith in Jesus Christ; even we believed, ἐπιστεύσαμεν (and professed our faith, see Rom. xiii. 11), in Christ, in order that we may be justified by Faith in Christ, and not by the works of the Law: because by the works of the Law no flesh shall be justified.

He says here, We are not sinners of the Gentiles. But he takes care to state that the Jews are sinners also, as well as the Gentiles, and he calls them such (v. 17).

On the language and doctrine of this passage, especially as to the sense of the word justified, see Rom. iii. 20—28.

17. Εἰ δὲ ζητοῦντες κ.τ.λ.] If we Jews, seeking to be justified by Christ, were also found to be sinners as well as the Gentiles (v. 16).

Observe the contrast between ζητοῦντες and εὑρέθημεν. We seek for righteousness, and have been found to be unrighteous. We, in and by our very search for Justification, have been discovered to be sinners. For no one seeks to be justified who does not own himself guilty. And by seeking to be justified by Christ we acknowledge that Christ died for our sins, and thus therefore we are discovered to be sinners.

"Is Christ therefore a minister of sin?" God forbid that we should dare to say this! Our need of Justification did not make us sinners, but declared us to be sinners. But Christ died to take away our sins, and to reconcile us to God, which the Law could not do. "Ecce quales nos invenit gratia Salvatoris, quos nec Lex sanos facere potuit! Quia ergo ex Lege non erat Justitia, ideo mortuus est Christus ut per fidem justificentur qui ex Lege non justificabantur." (Augustine, Serm. 26.)

— μὴ γένοιτο] On this formula, derived from the LXX, it is to be observed that the Septuagint render—

(1) אָמֵן (Amen) by γένοιτο. See the remarkable instance in Deut. xxvii. 15—18, &c., and passim; and

(2) They render חָלִילָה (chalilah), i. e. absit, literally profanum sit, by μὴ γένοιτο (Gen. xliv. 7. 17. Josh. xxii. 29).

Μὴ γένοιτο, something much more than a direct negation, such as 'No verily.' It is a vehement expression of indignant aversion, reprobating and abominating such a notion as that by which it is evoked. And therefore the English God forbid! properly understood, i. e. God forbid that any one should so speak, is a fit rendering of it.

The formula μὴ γένοιτο is used (as Conybeare observes) fourteen times by St. Paul (ten times in the Epistle to the Romans, thrice to the Galatians, and once in 1 Corinthians), and is generally employed by him to rebut an objection supposed by him to be made by an opponent, as here.

18. εἰ γὰρ ἃ κατέλυσα] God forbid! (i. e. that any one should dare to say that Christ is a minister of sin). For (γὰρ), on the contrary, if I build up again the foundation of the Levitical Law, which I pulled down, I establish myself a transgressor.

The Apostle St. Paul, in this speech to St. Peter, courteously uses the first person, I, instead of the second, thou: and with that delicate refinement and consummate skill of which he is a master (see on 1 Cor. vi. 12), he leaves St. Peter to adopt his words, and to apply them to himself.

The speech of St. Paul to St. Peter is continued to the end of this chapter, where it is well observed by Primasius (Bp. of Adrumetum in the 6th century), in his commentary, "Hoc totum sub sud personâ adversus Petrum de Petro disputat."

The metaphor here is an architectural one. St. Paul regards himself and the Apostles generally as builders of the Christian Church, particularly by their decree at the Council of Jerusalem, and especially St. Peter, who was commissioned by a vision from heaven to receive Gentiles into the Church without the imposition of the Law.

He and they had pulled down the Judaistic system of Justification grounded on the works of the Law, and imposing obedience to the Levitical Law, as of necessity to salvation, on the Gentiles.

And in the place of that Judaistic system they had built up the structure of Free Grace in Christ, and of universal Justification through Faith in the atoning and cleansing efficacy of His blood shed for the sins of the World.

St. Paul is here replying to those who alleged that he had set aside the Levitical Law, and had made himself a transgressor of that Law; and that by accepting the Gospel, which by its declaration of universal need of justification proclaimed the universality of sin, and of free pardon through Christ, he made Christ to be a minister of sin.

He declares that so far from this being the case, the fact is that they who build up again the Law, do in fact build themselves up to be transgressors.

Observe the word συνιστάνω, 'constituo,' 'colloco.' In this word he follows up the architectural figure. The Architect would constitute, establish, build up, and display himself as a transgressor even of the Law itself properly understood. And why?

(1) Because it is Christ alone Who has fulfilled the Law; and because it is only by virtue of our being in Christ, Who has taken our Nature, and Who has engrafted us by Baptism into Himself, and Who, as our Second Adam and Head, has perfectly obeyed the Law for us, and made an all-sufficient Expiation for our transgressions of the Law, and has paid its penalty for us by His Death, that we are acceptable to God. But if we place ourselves apart from Christ, if we are regarded by God as otherwise than in Christ, if we rely for our hope of Justification on our own obedience to the Law, then all our sins rise up against us; we constitute ourselves transgressors;

(2) Because the Law itself bore witness, in its Scriptures and Sacrifices, to the universal sinfulness of man, both Jew and Gentile (see Rom. iii. 9—31), and to the universal need of a Redeemer, and to the universal provision for Justification by means of the blood of Christ;

(3) Because also the Law, in its own Scriptures and Sacrifices, bore witness to its own manuductory and transitory character, and to its own future fulfilment in the Gospel.

Therefore now that the fabric of the Gospel has been built up by Christ, any one who, in professed zeal for the Law, would impose the Law as obligatory on the Gentiles, would, in fact, pull down the Gospel in order to build up the Law again on its ruins, and would be rejecting the testimony of the Law itself to the Gospel; he would be violating the Law itself, he would be building himself up into a transgressor of the Law. See Theodoret here, who says, "The Apostle wisely retorts the objection of his opponents. According to them, he who did not maintain the Law transgressed it, but he shows them that now (after the Gospel) it was transgression of the Law to maintain the Law." And so Chrysostom, "The Judaizers wished to prove that he who kept not the Law was a transgressor of the Law; but the Apostle shows that he who imposes the Law is not only a transgressor of the Gospel, but of the Law itself, and that he sins against God in endeavouring to reinstate that which has been abolished by Him."

See also the following verse.

19. ἐγὼ γὰρ διὰ νόμου] For I, through the Law, died to the Law, that I might live to God, and, in saying this of myself, I am speaking of thee, Peter, and of the Apostles generally, and of all true children of the Law who have been brought by and through the Law unto Christ, Who is the end of the Law (Rom. x. 4). I died to the Law even through the operation of the Law, which taught me that the Law was designed by God to prepare me for a new birth in Christ. Therefore by going back to the Law I should be doing violence to the Law; I should be returning to a state of death, from that state of Life in Christ to which I have been brought by the Law. Cp. Rom. vii. 4, Ye became dead to the Law by the body of Christ. "Per ipsam Legem veterem ipsi Legi mortuus sum quia ipsa se cessaturam prædixit." (Primasius.)

The Law has led me to Christ; I obey the Law in coming to Him. (Theodoret.) The Law was my pædagogus in leading me by the hand, and bringing me, a child, to Christ, in order that I might become a man in Him (see below, iii. 24). But (adds Augustine), "Hoc agitur per pædagogum, nt non sit necessarius pædagogus; sicut per ubera nutritur infans, ut jam non uberibus indigeat, et per navem invehitur ad patriam, ut jam navi non opus sit."

Thus I am brought by the Law to the Gospel, so as no longer to need the Law; and if I remain in the Law I frustrate the Law's own work, which was to bring me to the Gospel.

— νόμῳ ἀπέθανον] I died to the Law. We must be careful not to pervert this and other like speeches of St. Paul into pleas for Antinomianism.

The Law is to be considered both as a Rule and as a Covenant. Christ has freed us from the rigour and curse of the Law, considered as a Covenant, but he has not freed us from obedience to the Law considered as a Rule. The Law, as a covenant, was rigorous, and under that rigour we are not, now that we are in Christ; but the Law, as a Rule, is equitable, and under that equity we are still.

See Bp. Sanderson, iii. p. 295, and cp. below on Rom. vii. 4.

— ἵνα Θεῷ ζήσω] I died to the Law that I should live to God.

A further reply to those who had alleged that by setting aside the Law the preaching of the Gospel became an encouragement to sin. No. I died to the Law that I might live to God; not live to myself and to the world, but live to God and Christ, Who died for my sins, and Who therefore laid me under the strongest constraint to abhor sin, for which He died, lest by sinning I should crucify Him afresh, and therefore he adds as follows:—

20. Χριστῷ συνεσταύρωμαι] with Christ crucified, I have been crucified also (cp. below, vi. 14). I have been crucified to Sin, which crucified Him; and in His Burial and Resurrection represented in my Baptism, I was buried, and I rose again from the death of sin. Yea, even Christ rose in me, and liveth in me, and quickens me, who have been born into the body of Christ, in order that I may live the life of Christ. See Chrys. here, and Theodoret, who quotes Col. iii. 5. Rom. vi. 6, and Augustine in Ps. cxviii. and Serm. 25.

So far is He from being a minister of sin (v. 17), that He has crucified in me my sinful affections and lusts (see v. 24). He has abolished sin in me, and in all who, being baptized into His body, live as healthful and sound members of the same. Cum Christo confixus sum cruci. Whoever mortifies his members upon the earth, and is conformed to the death of Christ, he is crucified with Jesus, and has the trophy of his own death affixed to the tree on which his Lord died. (Jerome.)

Cp. Rom. vi. 1—23, the best commentary on this passage, and showing how the sketch drawn by the great Apostle in this Epistle to the Galatians was afterwards filled up by the same hand in that to the Romans.

— ἀγαπήσαντός με] who loved me, i. e. who loves each man individually, and all universally. Chrysostom, who quotes John iii. 16. Rom. viii. 32. Tit. ii. 12.

21. Οὐκ ἀθετῶ] A further reply, and something more than a reply, to his opponents;

Having disposed of their arguments against himself, he now turns the controversy back on them;

I do not frustrate, cancel the grace of God in Christ (as shown in His dear Son, Who loved us and gave Himself for us) as you do, if you rebuild the Law; for if Justification is to be sought through the Law, then Christ, Who died for our sins, died without cause,—"gratis, sine causâ." (Augustine.) Cp. below, v. 4.

The Death of Christ was superfluous, if the Law is sufficient for Justification. (Theodoret.)

REVIEW OF THE SECOND CHAPTER OF THE EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

THE important circumstances mentioned by St. Paul in this chapter seem to require a special review.

I. St. Paul is relating the incidents of his own life after his Conversion. He states that he came to Antioch, the principal city of Syria, in which the disciples were first called Christians (Acts xi. 26).

On the occasion to which he is referring, St. Paul met St. Peter. St. Peter had been warned by a Vision and a Voice from Heaven, not to regard any man as unclean (Acts xi. 9): and he had also taken part in the Council of Jerusalem, in which it was decided that no other burden should be laid upon the Gentile converts, than that they should abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from fornication; and consequently, that they were not subject to the ordinances of the Levitical Law, which made distinctions between meats, and prohibited the use of some as unclean (Acts xv. 29).

St. Peter, having been thus instructed, came down to Antioch, where he communicated, in the first instance, without scruple, with the Gentile converts. He partook with them of the same meats, at the same tables: and thus gave practical proof of his persuasion, that the kingdom of God standeth not in meats and drinks (Heb. ix. 10); that the Levitical Law was only the shadow of the good things to come (Heb. x. 1); that the substance is Christ (Col. ii. 17); that God is no respecter of persons (Acts x. 34); that in Christ Jesus there is neither Greek nor Jew, Circumcision nor Uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond, nor free: but Christ is all in all (Col. iii. 11).

But St. Peter was not exempt from human infirmities. Certain Jewish Christians came down from Jerusalem to Antioch who were zealous for the Levitical Law, and did not as yet perceive that its office was that of a schoolmaster, to bring men to Christ (Gal. iii. 24); and not recognizing this its manuductory and provisional character, were desirous of making it perpetual, and of bringing the Gentiles under its yoke.

Accordingly, they remonstrated with St. Peter for eating with the Gentiles; and their expostulations had too much effect upon him. They induced him to contravene the mandates of the heavenly Vision, and to disobey the edicts of the Council of Jerusalem. He withdrew himself from the Gentiles, fearing them of the Circumcision (Gal. ii. 12), and even became a champion of their principles, and endeavoured to win proselytes to their party. As St. Paul expresses it, the other Jews dissembled with him, insomuch that Barnabas also was carried away by their dissimulation.

But happily for St. Peter, and for St. Barnabas, and for the Gentiles, and for the Jews, and for the Church at large, there was another Apostle at Antioch, and that Apostle was St. Paul.

If any one had a right to be zealous for the Levitical Law, it was he, who was a Hebrew of the Hebrews, brought up at Jerusalem, at the feet of Gamaliel, of the straitest sect, a Pharisee (Phil. iii. 5. 2 Cor. xi. 22. Acts xxii. 3; xxiii. 6; xxvi. 5). The whole bias of his early life had been on the side of the Law. He therefore could not be charged with any prejudice against it. But he had been led by the Holy Spirit to understand its true character. He knew that it was of Divine origin, and that its Divine origin was apparent in its providential arrangements and prospective adaptations and preparatory adjustments to another future dispensation,—to which it was introductory, in which it was to be fulfilled, and by which (as far as its ceremonial ordinances were concerned) it was to be superseded,—the Gospel of Christ.

He knew therefore, that now when the substance had been revealed in the Gospel, of which the Law was the shadow, those persons who would perpetuate the Law, and make it of universal obligation, did not understand the true nature either of the Law or of the Gospel, but were resisting the will of the One Divine Author of both.

St. Paul therefore did not take counsel with flesh and blood (Gal. i. 16). Peter was his friend, Barnabas was his friend, but, still more, Truth was his friend. Christ had said, "He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me." And, "If any man come unto me, and hateth not brethren and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple" (Matt. x. 37. Luke xiv. 26, 27. 33).

St. Paul had been ordained to the Apostleship at Antioch. (See Acts xiii. 1—3.) He could not be unmindful of the solemn trust then committed to him. Filled with the grace of the Holy Ghost then given him, and strong in the cause of God, he did not waver. Though he was deserted by his friend and companion, who had been ordained with him, and though he whom he resisted was one who had received a special blessing from Christ, and though he himself was almost alone, he stood up boldly and publicly in the great city of Antioch, the centre of Gentile Christianity, in the defence of Truth. The false brethren (he says) attempted to bring us into bondage. But to them we gave place by subjection, no, not for an hour (Gal. ii. 4, 5). And he describes his own conduct in these words: I withstood Peter to the face because he was condemned. When I saw that they walked not uprightly, I said to Peter, before them all, Why compellest thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews? (Gal. ii. 11. 14.)

Thus the courageous Apostle vindicated the cause of Christian Liberty, Christian Truth, and Christian Love. Thus the "Hebrew of the Hebrews," the former Pharisee, stood forth as the advocate of the Gentiles, and rescued them from the bondage which the Jews would have imposed on them.

Thus also he delivered his brother Apostle St. Peter from the sin of making the observance of the ritual Law to be essential to a reception of the Gospel, and of propagating a Judaistic Christianity; or, in other words, he rescued him from the guilt of enforcing unlawful terms of Church Communion.

II. We should have a very imperfect view of this History if we omitted to consider the following question;

How did St. Peter receive the rebuke of St. Paul?

Happily, we are enabled to ascertain this fact, by way of inference, as follows:—

At the close of his second Epistle, written shortly before his death (2 Pet. i. 14), St. Peter speaks of St. Paul; he there calls Paul his beloved brother, and he refers to St. Paul's Epistles. Even as our beloved brother Paul also, according to the wisdom given unto him, hath written unto you. St. Peter proceeds to speak of St. Paul's Epistles as Scripture, that is to say, St. Peter declares that St. Paul's Epistles were inspired by the Holy Ghost; and therefore he acknowledges that whatever is affirmed in them is true.

We may observe also that the Epistle of St. Peter, where these words occur, was addressed to Jewish Christians of Pontus and Galatia (see 1 Pet. i. 1 compared with 2 Pet. iii. 1); that is, he was writing to persons of the same class and country as are addressed by St. Paul in his Epistle to the Galatians, to use St. Paul's own words, "to the Churches of Galatia" (Gal. i. 1, 2).

Now, in St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, it is asserted that St. Peter was condemned (κατεγνωσμένος, ii. 11) in withdrawing himself from the Gentile converts at Antioch. Hence it follows that St. Peter erred. And St. Peter, in referring to this Epistle as Scripture, i. e. as the word of God, frankly acknowledges himself to have erred. And it reflects no small honour on St. Peter's character that he has referred his readers to the Epistles of his beloved brother Paul, and has lauded the wisdom of him who censured him openly, and in whose Epistles the occasion of this censure, and the error which called it forth, are described without reserve.

III. This history is also fraught with instruction, in the striking proof it affords of the truth of Christianity.

One of the earliest antagonists of Christianity, Porphyry, who was brought up in the school of Origen, but afterwards apostatized to Heathenism, pointed with contumelious scorn to this passage in the Epistle to the Galatians, as exhibiting two leading Apostles publicly contending with each other. "How could Peter and Paul," he exclaimed, "be Ambassadors of God and Heralds of Peace, since they could not refrain, in the sight of Jews and Gentiles, from passionate altercation[1]?"

But if the Gospel had been a cunningly-devised fable, then a public contest between its two main champions would have greatly damaged it. But from that day it proceeded on its course more gloriously. The great principle of the saving efficacy of Christ's death, apart from the deeds of the Levitical Law, was now established for ever by the intrepid eloquence of St. Paul.

Christianity was also seen by Jew and Gentile to be the mother of moral virtues. It was the spirit of holy courage given by the Divine Comforter which emboldened St. Paul to rebuke St. Peter in the presence of the Jews. And it was the same Author and Giver of all spiritual gifts Who endued St. Peter with patience to hear, with charity not to resent, and with wisdom to profit by the rebuke of St. Paul.

How generous and lovely does his character appear when he speaks of St. Paul as his beloved brother, and bears witness to his wisdom, and refers to the Epistles of St. Paul, in which his own failing is recorded! Here was a magnanimous use of correction, and a noble recovery from error.

IV. This history also displays the true origin, nature, and use of the Ceremonial Law.

It was a question of great importance and difficulty, How that Law was to be treated by the Apostles?

If the Apostles, who were Jews by birth, had, on their reception of the Gospel, suddenly snapped asunder all connexion with the Levitical ritual, if they had at once renounced all the ordinances of the Mosaic Law, they would have appeared to treat that Law as no better than a Heathen system. Thus they would have seemed to place Christ in opposition to Moses, instead of displaying Moses in his true character, as the divinely-appointed Forerunner of Christ. The evils of such a course have been well pointed out by Augustine, Ep. lxxxii., who says, "Cùm venisset Fides quæ prius illis observationibus (Legis Mosaicæ) prænuntiata, post mortem et resurrectionem Domini revelata est, amiserant tanquam vitam officii sui. Verumtamen, sicut defuncta corpora, necessariorum officiis deducenda erant quodammodo ad sepulturam, nec simulatè, sed religiosè; non autem deserenda continuò, vel inimicorum obtrectationibus tanquam canum morsibus projicienda. Proinde nunc, quisquis Christianorum, quamvis sit ex Judæis, similiter ea celebrare voluerit, tanquam sopitos cineres eruens, non erit pius deductor vel bajulus corporis, sed impius sepulturæ violator."

Augustine has thus pointed out the way to the true view of the Legal Ceremonies in their different stages—

1. Before the Gospel, as viva sed non vivifica.

2. After the Gospel, but before the destruction of the Temple, as moribunda, sed non mortifera.

3. After the destruction of the Temple and diffusion of the Gospel, as mortua et mortifera.

But if the Apostles had treated the Levitical ceremonies as deadly, they would have armed the Gentiles with hatred against Judaism, and have riveted the Jews in their prejudices against Christianity. The Apostles would then have been like Marcionites and Manichæans, instead of being preachers of the Same Everlasting Word Who spake first from Mount Sinai in the Law, and afterwards from Mount Sion in the Gospel.

Here then were dangers on the one side:

There were no less perils on the other;

If, after the consummation of the Law in the Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of Christ, the Apostles had continued constantly and uniformly to observe the Rites of the Levitical Dispensation, and had enjoined them as necessary to be observed by the Gentile converts, they would have laid a heavy burden upon them, and have led those converts to imagine that there was a saving virtue in those Rites; they would have induced them to place confidence in them, and have impaired the efficacy of the Cross of Christ.

St. Paul was enabled by God to steer, wisely and charitably, a middle course between these two extremes. He gave public practical testimony to the Jews that he did not condemn the Ceremonial Law. He circumcised Timothy, whose mother was a Jewess (Acts xvi. 1). He performed the vow of a Nazarite at Cenchreæ (Acts xviii. 18). He purified himself according to the Law at Jerusalem (Acts xxi. 24; xxiv. 18).

By complying thus far with the ordinances of the Ritual Law he showed his countrymen that he concurred with them in regarding it as of Divine origin.

But he had something else to teach them. They were now to learn that though the Ritual Law was of Divine origin, it was not of perpetual obligation; and that though it was perfect (as every thing from God is) in its tendencies, it was imperfect in itself; and that it had now found its proper end in that to which it tended, and which is perfect in itself. Those Levitical tendencies were now evolving themselves, like swelling germs of spring, into the spiritual fruits of the Gospel; and they were to be treated tenderly, and not to be rudely shattered as unripe buds by a boisterous gale, but to be nurtured by the soft and vernal breezes of Christian love, till they should set and ripen in vigorous maturity on the sacred tree of the Church, now about to expand itself in full majesty and beauty.

But St. Paul took good care that no one should mistake the foliage and flowers of the Law for the ripe fruit of the Gospel. He did not censure St. Peter for observing Jewish ceremonies in his own person, but he blamed him for imposing those ceremonies as terms of communion on others. He rebuked St. Peter for separating himself from the Gentile converts, who did not observe those ceremonies. For this cause he withstood him to the face; and not only by words, but by deeds he asserted the truth. He did not compel Titus, a Greek, to be circumcised (Gal. ii. 3). He ate and drank with the Gentiles, who made no distinction between meats. He arraigned those who regarded circumcision as necessary. He charged them with vitiating the Gospel. If ye be circumcised, he said, that is, if ye be circumcised in the belief that Circumcision is necessary and efficacious to salvation, then Christ shall profit you nothing (Gal. v. 2). If ye rely on the ritual ceremonies of the Law, then ye deprive the sacrifice of Christ of its due honour; ye virtually deny that His sacrifice is alone meritorious and satisfactory to God, and is a plenary propitiation for the Sins of the whole world. Ye rob yourselves, therefore, of pardon and grace; for if Righteousness come by the Law, then Christ died in vain (Gal. ii. 21).

Thus we may recognize in this history a clear exhibition of the true nature of the Law as preparatory to the Gospel, and the Gospel as the completion of the Law; and the Cross of Christ as the only cause of our Justification with God.

V. St. Paul's example on this occasion is instructive in another view. He did not at once renounce the Jewish ceremonies. He even on some occasions complied with them. His maxims were, Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ (Gal. vi. 2).

Though I am free from all men (he says) yet made I myself servant unto all, that I might gain the more. Unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews: to them that are under the Law, as under the Law, that I might gain them that are under the Law: to them that are without the Law, as without the Law (being not without law to God, but under the Law to Christ), that I might gain them that are without Law. To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak. I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some (1 Cor. ix. 19—22).

Thus by complying, under certain circumstances, with the Levitical ceremonies, which had then become matters of indifference, and might be practised as such, while the Temple was yet standing[1], and while the true nature of the Gospel was not yet fully proclaimed, St. Paul set a noble example of Christian condescension, Christian prudence, and Christian love.

But having done this, he would not proceed further. He would not go on with St. Peter to enforce those Levitical ceremonies as terms of communion. When St. Peter withdrew himself from the Gentile converts, St. Paul withdrew himself from St. Peter. He deserted St. Peter when St. Peter deserted the truth. He withstood him to the face because he was condemned. He rebuked him for not walking uprightly; and St. Peter had the wisdom and magnanimity to profit by the rebuke of St. Paul.

St. Paul then here teaches to be tolerant in indifferent things,—that is, things which are neither commanded nor forbidden by lawful authority,—and to condescend with Christian gentleness to the infirmities of the weak, but never to surrender a fundamental principle of Truth.

He teaches that nothing is more cruel than that self-styled charity which patronizes popular fallacies, and surrenders unpopular truths; that nothing is more intolerant than that self-styled toleration which caresses falsehood, and nothing more illiberal than that self-vaunting liberality which deals out errors as a boon; and that he only is truly charitable who speaks the truth in love; and that he is really liberal who rescues the erring from his error.

VI. This history is also important in another respect.

In the chapter before us it is stated by St. Paul, that St. Peter in withdrawing himself from the Gentiles at Antioch walked not uprightly, and that he was condemned.

This Epistle of St. Paul is part of Canonical Scripture; that is, it was inspired by the Holy Ghost. Whatever therefore is asserted in it is true. It is undeniable, therefore, that St. Peter erred.

This error, be it observed, was in a matter of vital importance; it concerned the essence of Christianity.

It it clear therefore that St. Peter was not infallible.

In making this avowal, we are not to imagine that the Epistles of St. Peter, which are contained in the Scriptures of the New Testament, are in any way blemished with the least flaw of error.

Those Epistles were dictated through St. Peter by the HOLY GHOST; and they have been, and are, received as divinely-inspired Scripture by the consentient voice of the Universal Church of Christ, which is His Body, and in which His Spirit dwells. A fallible mortal was their penman, but the Spirit Who guided him was infallible.

The fallibility of the workmen who were employed in writing the Scriptures, and the perfection of the work itself, constitute a proof that the workmen were instruments, and that the work itself is not of man, but of God.

St. Peter then was not infallible, and the Holy Spirit who is infallible, speaking by the mouth of St. Paul in Canonical Scripture, affirms that St. Peter erred in a matter of faith and practice.

The particular form of St. Peter's error was this. In contravention of the true nature of the Gospel, and in opposition to a declaration which he himself had received in a vision from heaven, and in contradiction to the decree of the Council at Jerusalem, a decree which he himself had aided in framing, he withdrew himself from the Gentile converts, and required from them an observance of the ritual Law.

He thus, as far as he was able, imposed upon them unwarrantable terms of Church communion.

It was on this account that his brother Apostle, St. Paul, resisted him openly, and gave him a public rebuke.

The Bishop of Rome professes to be the Successor of St. Peter. In virtue of this alleged succession, he affirms himself to be infallible. On the same ground he claims to be the Supreme Governor of the Church; and he asserts that he is irresponsible, that he can give laws to the world, and may not be resisted by any[3].

Let us grant, for argument's sake, that the Bishop of Rome is successor of St. Peter;

But St. Peter himself was not infallible. The Holy Ghost in Scripture says St. Peter was condemned, that he walked not uprightly.

Next, St. Peter was not irresponsible. He was openly resisted, he was publicly rebuked by St. Paul.

St. Peter did not give laws to the Church. He did not claim dominion over her faith (2 Cor. i. 24). He did not act as a Lord over God's heritage (1 Pet. v. 3). No. Like a wise and charitable man, he listened to the reproof of his brother Apostle; he thanked him for his rebuke, and, almost with his dying breath, he referred to the Epistles of St. Paul, in which that rebuke is contained, and he acknowledged them to be Holy Scripture inspired by the Holy Ghost (2 Pet. iii. 15, 16).

The mode in which St. Peter erred at Antioch was, as has been said above, by imposing unjustifiable terms of communion. Notwithstanding the warning and instruction given by this example of St. Peter, the Bishops of Rome have erred in the same manner, though in a far greater degree. They have invented articles of doctrine contrary to the Word of God; they have framed and promulgated one very recently[4],—that of the sinlessness, original and actual, of the Blessed Virgin,—and they require all men to accept those articles at their bidding, on pain of everlasting damnation.

St. Peter was betrayed into an error, but he speedily recovered from it; and he blessed St. Paul, who rebuked and retrieved him.

But the so-called successors of St. Peter have persisted in imposing unscriptural terms of communion for more than a thousand years.

Nor is this all. Instead of confessing their errors, and instead of thanking and blessing those who have charitably pointed out those errors, and have laboured to bring them back to the Truth and to Christ, they have driven them from them, they have loaded them with contumelies and curses[5], and they have denounced them as heretics, and schismatics, and rebels; and they have declared to them and to us, that if we do not renounce our faith, and embrace their dogmas, we are no better than heathens, and cannot be saved[6].

Thus then the present chapter of this Epistle to the Galatian Churches, is fraught with Divine instruction to all in every age of the Church. St. Paul has solemnly declared with a reiterated warning, in this Epistle, that if any man, or even an angel from heaven, preach any thing besides the Gospel, which he preached and the Church received from him, he is to be accounted as anathema (Gal. i. 8, 9). They who imitate the Apostle in his zeal, his prudence, his wisdom, his courage, his charity, will share with him in his victory, through the power of Christ which strengthened him, and will strengthen them; and they, through Christ's merits, will be joined together hereafter to the company of Apostles, and Evangelists, and Saints, and Martyrs, in which St. Paul and St. Peter are, and to which all will come who tread in their steps.

III. [1] [a]Ὦ ἀνόητοι Γαλάται, τίς ὑμᾶς ἐβάσκανεν, οἷς κατ' ὀφθαλμοὺς Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς προεγράφη ἐν ὑμῖν ἐσταυρωμένος; [a] ch. 5. 7.

CH. III. 1. Ὦ ἀνόητοι Γαλάται] O foolish Galatians,—foolish as children. See next note, and v. 3.

This bold language of reproof, in an Epistle sent to be circulated and read in the Churches of Galatia, affords a striking proof of St. Paul's consciousness of his own Divine mission and authority. And the preservation, and general reception, and universal dissemination of this Epistle, as divinely-inspired Scripture, is a strong testimony of, and tantamount to, a public recognition of that authority on the part of the primitive Churches, and of the Universal Church of Christ.

This testimony will appear still stronger, when it is borne in mind that this reproof, though addressed to the Galatians, yet was also no less a rebuke to the large and powerful contemporary party of Judaizers who had beguiled the Galatians and others into this foolishness. Cp. note below on Tit. i. 12, Κρῆτες ἀεὶ ψεῦσται. — ἐβάσκανεν] 'fascinavit,' bewitched. Βάσκανος is, properly, one who is supposed to bewitch by the influence of an evil eye, particularly of envy and jealousy. Cp. *Schol. Hence the word βασκαίνω was applied to describe the operations of Envy, which seem to be designated by 'the evil eye' in Matt. vi. 23; xx. 15. Cp. Horat. (1 Ep. xiv. 37), c Heb. 6. 4—6. & 10. 32—39. 2 Pet. 2. 20—22. 2 John 8.

d Acts 14. 3, 9, 10. & 19. 11, 12. Rom. 15. 19. 1 Cor. 1. 4, 5.

2 [b] Τοῦτο μόνον θέλω μαθεῖν ἀφ' ὑμῶν, ἐξ ἔργων νόμου τὸ Πνεῦμα ἐλάβετε, ἢ ἐξ ἀκοῆς πίστεως;
3 Οὕτως ἀνόητοί ἐστε, ἐναρξάμενοι πνεύματι νῦν σαρκὶ ἐπιτελεῖσθε;
4 [c] Τοσαῦτα ἐπάθετε εἰκῇ, εἴ γε καὶ εἰκῇ;
5 [d] Ὁ οὖν ἐπιχορηγῶν ὑμῖν τὸ Πνεῦμα, καὶ ἐνεργῶν δυνάμεις ἐν ὑμῖν, ἐξ ἔργων νόμου ἢ ἐξ ἀκοῆς πίστεως;

The Ancient Glossaries interpret βασκαίνειν by φθονεῖν. And this meaning is doubtless intended here.

For it must be remembered, that one of the strongest motives of the Judaizers to enforce the Levitical Law on the Galatians and other Gentile Christians, was Envy.

They were jealous of the communication of the privileges of the Gospel to the Gentiles, without previous conformity to the Levitical Law. Our Lord had prophetically described their feelings and practice, in the character of the Elder Brother in the Parable of the Prodigal Son (see on Luke xv. 28), and the Apostle of the Gentiles often adverts to it. Hence Chrys. interprets τίς ἐβάσκανε here, by τίς ἐφθόνησε; 'who envied you?' And S. Jerome, citing the passage of Virgil above quoted, observes, that the evil eye of Envy was supposed to be particularly injurious to the young; and therefore the word was applicable to the 'teneros agnos' of the Apostle, viz. to the Galatians as newly converted—his lambs in Christ.

The comment of Primasius deserves mention here, as preparing the way for the true exposition. "Quis vos fascinavit? Quis vobis invidit? In Græco significantius ponitur βάσκανος, fascinator. Dicitur fascinus propriè infantibus nocere, et ætati parvulæ." He then quotes Virgil, as above: "Quomodo ergo tenera ætas noceri dicitur fascino, sic etiam Galatæ, in Christi fide nuper nutriti. Quis vos fascinavit quibus tantum manifesta est passio Christi, me prædicante, ut eum ante oculos vestros pendere putaretis?"

After ἐβάσκανε Elz. adds τῇ ἀληθείᾳ μὴ πείθεσθαι, which words are not found in the best MSS. and Editions. S. Jerome testifies that they were in some copies in his days, but not in Origen's MSS., and that he therefore did not insert them in his Latin Version. They are, doubtless, an explanatory gloss, derived from v. 7.

— οἷς κατ' ὀφθαλμοὺς Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς προεγράφη ἐν ὑμῖν ἐσταυρωμένος] before whose eyes Jesus Christ was plainly written in you, crucified.

Remark the order of the words, which may be an aid in clearing up the sense of this difficult passage.

I. It is to be explained by reference to the words which precede it,—

Who bewitched you with his envious eye,—you, who had Jesus Christ plainly written before your own eyes, in you; and who therefore ought to have been proof against his bewitching influence?

This being borne in mind, we may next observe,

II. That the sentence seems to contain a double allusion;

(1) To a Heathen practice.

(2) To a Jewish one.

(1) To a Heathen practice. In order to guard children, and even grown-up persons, against the influence of the evil eye, certain objects were attached to their persons, as amulets (called περίαπτα, περιάμματα), being tied round them. See Ernesti on Xenophon, Mem. Socr. ii. 6, 3, and the Commentators on Virgil, Eclog. vii. 25—27, "Baccare frontem cingite," &c.

This practice is still retained in Greece and Italy; and it is worthy of remark, that certain scrolls of portions of the Scriptures are sometimes used for this purpose, which are visibly forewritten (προγεγραμμένα) to guard the wearer against the evil eye. Cp. Bingham (Antiq. xvi. 5), who says that "many Christians made use of charms and amulets, which they called periammata and phylacteria, pendants and preservatives. These were made of ribands with a text of Scripture." See Conc. Laodic. Can. 36. And Chrys. (Hom. 73 in Matth.) speaks of women who made phylacteries of the Gospels to hang about their necks. And see Basil, in Ps. 45. Epiphan. Hær. 15, de Phariseis.

(2) To a Jewish practice.

The Jews were commanded to have certain precepts of Scripture, as it were, written before their eyes. See Deut. vi. 8: "Thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes." See also Exod. xiii. 16, and Deut. xi. 18.

Interpreting this precept literally, the more rigid Jews, such as the Judaizers of Galatia, wore, accordingly, certain texts of Scripture upon the forehead, between the eyes. These texts were Exod. xiii. 1. 10, 11—16. Deut. v. 4—9; xi. 13—21. See Jahn, Archæol. Bibl. § 319. And they derived their Hebrew name from this circumstance. These parchment scrolls of Scripture, thus bound between the eyes, were called φυλακτήρια, preservatives, amulets. See on Matt. xxiii. 5.

(3) These considerations may enable us to explain St. Paul's meaning as follows;

O foolish Galatians,—foolish as children,—who was it that bewitched you with his evil eye of jealousy? who envied you the liberty of Christ, and desired to spoil you of it? who beguiled you, my little children (Gal. iv. 19), whom I was rearing up as a father into men in Christ? who beguiled you back into Judaism, with its rites and ceremonies and external observances? Your false teachers who so deal with you, would have written and bound before your eyes the scrolls of the Law; they would have laid upon you its outward fringes and phylacteries, and thus would have entangled you in bondage. Who envied you the liberty of the Gospel, which I, your Apostle, preached to you? who bewitched you, before whose eyes was written and bound by me, as your true scriptural scroll, your frontlet of Faith, your Spiritual Phylactery, CHRIST CRUCIFIED; and who had, as I thought, thus been guarded by me against all the envious fascination of your spiritual enemies?

Let us now consider the remainder of the sentence;

— ἐν ὑμῖν ἐσταυρωμένος] ἐν ὑμῖν is omitted by some MSS., and rejected by Lachm.; but is rightly retained by Tisch., Meyer, Ellicott, Alford.

It is to be explained from the considerations just stated;

The Phylactery, which was written and bound by me before your eyes, was not an outward one, on your forehead,—like that of your Judaizing deceivers,—but it was an internal one, ἐν ὑμῖν, in your hearts,—a frontlet between the inner eyes of your Faith; it was Jesus Christ within you, and that crucified.

The words ἐν ὑμῖν, in you, derive additional light from what he had just said, ζῇ ἐν ἐμοὶ Χριστὸς, Christ liveth in me (ii. 20).

2. τὸ Πνεῦμα ἐλάβετε] Received ye the Spirit from the works of the Law, or from the hearing of Faith?

Did the spiritual gifts then bestowed upon you in your baptism, in the speaking of tongues, proceed from any words of the Levitical Law, and not from the hearing of Faith; from the hearing, not only of the outward ear, but from the inner hearing, the spiritual hearkening, of Faith? Cp. Theodoret and Chrys.

Ἀκοή is not passive here; it does not mean the thing heard, the κήρυγμα, or Gospel; but it is the spiritual faculty and function of hearing; and ἀκοὴ πίστεως is the hearing ear of Faith, which listens attentively to the command of Christ, "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." So ἀκοή, ear, Matt. xiii. 14. Mark vii. 35. Luke vii. 1. Acts xvii. 20; xxviii. 26. 1 Cor. xii. 17. Heb. v. 11. Cp. note on 1 Thess. ii. 13.

3. Οὕτως ἀνόητοί ἐστε] so foolish are ye? These sentences are like so many aculei, darted rapidly forth in a volley from the heart of the Apostle, in the vehement emotion of his indignation and love. Each of them contains a separate argument, and affords matter for special consideration. They are therefore printed separately.

4. Τοσαῦτα ἐπάθετε εἰκῇ] suffered ye so many things in vain? Ye suffered afflictions for the Gospel, and not for the Law. If now ye go back to the Law, these sufferings will have been in vain. But if ye go forward in the Gospel they will not be in vain, but will lead you to glory. Will you allow any to take away from you your heavenly crown? Theodoret, Jerome, Chrys.

— εἴ γε καὶ εἰκῇ] If really even in vain. If, which I cannot imagine possible, ye even allow your sufferings to have been wasted on nothing; which will not be the case if you return, as I trust you will, to a better mind. Chrys., Bp. Fell.

5. Ὁ ἐπιχορηγῶν ὑμῖν τὸ Πνεῦμα κ.τ.λ.] A return to the argument in v. 2. He who ministereth to you the Holy Spirit, and worketh wonders within you (viz. Almighty God), does He do it as a fruit growing out of the Law, or of the hearing of Faith?

On your conversion to Christ, God gave you extraordinary gifts (χαρίσματα), tongues, &c., and He is ever bestowing upon you ordinary graces, love, joy, the fruits of the Holy Ghost, and thus He has sealed your profession of Faith. But He never operates in this marvellous manner on any who rest their hopes of salvation on the Levitical Dispensation, apart from Christ.

Thus, by His own working within you, He testified to you that Justification is to be sought and obtained by Faith in Christ, and not by the deeds of the Law.

6. καθὼς Ἀβραάμ] An answer to a supposed objection, viz.

How can it be said that Justification is never given by God except as a fruit of Faith in Christ?

Was not the Patriarch Abram justified?

Yes, but it was by Faith, as the Law itself testifies. (Gen. xv. 6.) There is but one way of Justification to any, viz. by Faith in Christ; and all who are justified, are justified in this way. See Acts iv. 12. Heb. xiii. 7, 8.

Abram believed in Christ to come; you believed in Christ having come. The seasons of the Church vary, but not her Faith. See S. Aug. Tract. in Joann. xlv. iii. p. 2131, "Ante adventum Domini Nostri Jesu Christi, quo humilis venit in carne, præcesserunt justi, sic in Eum credentes venturum, quomodo nos credimus in eum qui venit. Tempora variata sunt, non Fides. Diversis quidem temporibus, sed per unum fidei ostium videmus ingressos." See also S. Aug. ii. pp. 415. 420, and S. Irenæus, iv. 5. 4, who says, "We, having the same faith as Abraham had, and bearing the cross as Isaac did the wood, follow Abraham." For mankind had already been taught in Abraham to follow the Word of God—Christ. Abraham in his Faith followed the command of the Word of God. He with a willing mind gave up his only-begotten son as a sacrifice to God, that God might be pleased to give up His own Only-begotten as a sacrifice for our redemption. Thus Abraham, who was a Prophet, and who saw in the Spirit the Day of Christ (John viii. 56) and the dispensation of His Passion, by Whom (viz. Christ) he also, and all they who believe as he believed, would begin to be saved, greatly rejoiced.

The Faith of the holy men of the Ancient Church, before the coming of Christ, is clearly expressed by the father of the Baptist in Luke i. 68—79, and in the Song of Simeon, Luke ii. 25—32. See also below on Heb. xi. 19, and the Essay in Bp. Barlow's Remains, p. 582—592, "Patres sub antiquo fœdere per Christi mortem salutem sunt consecuti," and the XXXIX. Articles, Art. VII., "Both in the Old and New Testament everlasting life is offered to mankind by Christ; wherefore they are not to be heard which feign that the Old Fathers did look only for transitory promises." In the words of Hooker (i. ii. 4—8), "The Invisible Church consisteth only of true Israelites, true sons of Abraham, true servants and saints of God."

— ἐλογίσθη—δικαιοσύνην] See on Rom. iv. 1—11, where the argument is expanded.

7. Γινώσκετε] 'Cognoscite,' Iren. iv. 21, but he has 'cognoscitis,' v. 32. The former, Know ye, is preferable; and so the Vulgate, and Syriac and English Versions, and Ellicott.

— οἱ ἐκ πίστεως] they who spring (ἐκ) out of Faith, as their root, as opposed to those who are ἐκ νόμου. See on Rom. iii. 26; iv. 14. 16; v. 1; x. 6, and below, vv. 8, 9. 12. 22. 24, and who springing out of it, depend on it (a common sense of ἐκ, see Winer, p. 329), and bring forth fruit from it.

8. τὰ ἔθνη] the Gentiles, emphatic: an answer to another objection tacitly supposed; that though Abraham was justified by faith, yet, as he was the Father of the Jews, the Heathen had no right to expect to be justified as he was.

This objection is likewise answered by the Apostle from the Law itself (Gen. xii. 3; xviii. 18; xxii. 18; xxvi. 4), proclaiming that, not the Jews only, but all Nations, would be blessed in him. And therefore all, of whatever nation, who believe as he did, are justified with the believing Abram (σὺν τῷ πιστῷ Ἀβραάμ). See Irenæus, iv. 21.

10. Ὅσοι γάρ] A new argument.

Not only does Justification (i. e. acquittal with God) not come from the Law, but they whose works spring out of the Law as their root, are under a Curse: for the Law requires perfect Obedience, and denounces malediction on those who do not continue in Obedience to all the commandments of the Law (Deut. xxvii. 26. Cp. Surenhus. p. 569), a condition which no one has ever fulfilled, as the Book of the Law itself declares, which pronounces all men to be sinners. See the quotations from the Old Testament cited by the Apostle in Rom. iii. 10—19. And therefore the Old Testament (to which the Judaizers themselves appeal) points not to the Law as affording any hope of Justification to man, but expressly declares that the just shall live by Faith, or, as the Hebrew literally signifies, the just shall live by his faith (Habak. ii. 4. See on Rom. i. 17); whence it is evident that ἐκ πίστεως is to be construed with ζήσεται and not with δίκαιος.

— ὅτι] Not in Elz., but in the best MSS. and Editions.

— Ἐπικατάρατος] The Law itself declares that "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the Book of the Law to do them."

It may be objected—

Was not therefore the Law an evil, inasmuch as no one could obey it in all things, and inasmuch as it declares all to be cursed who do not obey it?

No. The Law was holy, just, and good (Rom. vii. 12). It did not make men to be accursed, but it showed all men to be sinners (see on Rom. v. 20; vii. 7—13), and therefore under a curse, and liable to death, the wages of sin.

It proved, therefore, that they must look elsewhere for help, and not to themselves. The Law corrected their pride and self-sufficiency, and demonstrated their need of a Redeemer whose sacrifice for sin was pre-announced in the Scriptures of the Old Testament, and was prefigured in all the Ritual of the Law; and thus the Law itself prepared the way for the Gospel.

And all the holy men who lived before the Law (such as Abraham), and under the Law (as David), were candidates for a blessing, and were not subject to a curse, because they did look for justification to Him Who was promised even to Adam after the Fall (Gen. iii. 15). See above on v. 6, below on v. 21.

12. ὁ ποιήσας] he who performed the Law shall live in it. See Levit. xviii. 5, where the original signifies, "which things if a man do, he shall live by them." Whence the Jewish Rabbis argued that the Law offered life. True: but it did not give the grace to do those things which were requisite to attain life; and it pronounced that he who did not do them was under a curse (Deut. xxvii. 26. Cp. Surenhus. p. 572). Ἄνθρωπος is added in Elz. after αὐτά, and is in LXX, but not in the original Hebrew, nor in A, B, C, D*, F, G here, and is rejected by Griesbach, Scholz., Lach., Tisch., Meyer, Ellicott, Alf.

13. ἐξηγόρασεν] redeemed us from or out of. The aorist is important to be observed, as intimating that the Redemption was effected by one act, i. e. by the shedding of His Blood, paid as the price (τιμὴ, λυτρόν) of our ransom, when He became a curse for us by dying on the cross. See 1 Pet. i. 18, 19. 2 Pet. ii. 1. Rev. v. 9. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. X. p. 680, note.

— ἡμᾶς] us. Limited to the Jews by some Expositors;

But this seems to be a defective view of the sentence.

It is true that the Moral Law, as promulgated by Moses to the Jews, obliged them in a special manner, even by that peculiar promulgation. But that promulgation was in fact only a re-

κατάρα, ὅτι γέγραπται, Ἐπικατάρατος πᾶς ὁ κρεμάμενος ἐπὶ ξύλου, 14 ἵνα εἰς τὰ ἔθνη ἡ εὐλογία τοῦ Ἀβραὰμ γένηται ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, ἵνα τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν τοῦ Πνεύματος λάβωμεν διὰ τῆς πίστεως.

publication of the original principles of Morals, and primitive Natural Law, which oblige, and always have obliged, all Mankind. See on Rom. v. 13.

And as Disobedience to God's Law subjects him who disobeys to a curse, and as no man has perfectly fulfilled the moral Law, given before the Sinaitic dispensation, and coeval with man's very existence, therefore all Mankind are by nature, as well as by the express declaration of the Levitical Law, under God's malediction.

Besides, in the ages which intervened between the publication of the Law and the Gospel, the Moral Law of the Decalogue being up to that time the only written Revelation of Moral Law, that Moral Law obliged all to whom it was made known, and all were bound to accept it, with all its commands to obey, and all its denunciations for disobedience.

Consequently St. Paul here, in quoting Deut. xxvii. 26, recites the words thus, "Cursed is every one who continueth not in all that is written in this Book of the Law to do them."

Therefore Christ by His death redeemed all, and not the Jews only, from the curse of the Law.

Therefore, in saying that Christ redeemed us from the curse of the Law, St. Paul means that He redeemed the Gentile Galatians as well as himself; that He redeemed all mankind, even Abraham himself and the Patriarchs who lived before the Law was given.

This is the language of Christian Antiquity; see Justin Martyr (Dialog. c. Tryph. capp. 94—96), who says that "all mankind was liable to the curse according to the Law of Moses, which says, 'Cursed is whosoever,' &c. (Deut. xxvii. 26)." The Father of all willed that His own Anointed should take on Himself the Curse due to all Mankind, well knowing that He would raise Him from the Dead.

Why, therefore, do ye Jews speak as if He were cursed, and not rather weep for yourselves who crucified Him?

S. Jerome also says here, "Patriarchas de maledicto legis redemit Christus;" and Theodoret, "When all were under the curse of the Law, Christ redeemed us from it." And so Primasius, "Redemit nos Christus de maledicto legis, quod peccantibus constitutum est."

This is also the language of our own best Divines;

Christ hath redeemed us from that general curse which lay upon all men for the breach of any part of the Law, by taking upon Him that particular curse which underwent a certain punishment of the Law (Deut. xxi. 23). Bp. Pearson on the Creed, p. 39.

To which may be added the following clear statement:—

The Law of Moses, as a Rule, only showeth us what is good and evil, what we are to do, and not to do. He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good, and what doth the Lord require of thee (Mic. vi. 8), without any condition annexed, either of reward if we observe it, or of punishment if we transgress it;

But the Law, as a Covenant, exacteth punctual and personal performance of every thing that is contained therein, with a condition annexed of God's acceptance, and of blessing if we perform it to the full, but of His wrath and curse upon us if we fail in any thing;

Now, by reason of transgression, we having all broken that Covenant, the Law hath its work upon us, and involveth us all in the curse (Gal. iii. 10); so as by the covenant of the Law no flesh living can be justified (ibid. 11);

Then cometh in Christ, Who, subjecting Himself for our sakes to the Covenant of the Law, first fulfilleth it in His own person, but in our behalf as our surety, and then disannulleth it, and instead thereof establisheth a better covenant for us (Heb. viii. 6), even the covenant of Grace. So that now as many as believe are free from the Covenant of the Law, and from the curse of the Law, and set under a covenant of Grace, and under promises of Grace.

There is a translation of the Covenant, but what is all this to the Rule? That still is where it was, even as the nature of good and evil is still the same as it was. And the Law, considered as a Rule, can no more be abolished or changed, than can the nature of good and evil be abolished or changed.

It is our singular comfort then, and the happiest fruit of our Christian Liberty, that we are freed by Christ, and, through faith in Him, from the Covenant and Curse of the Law; but we must know that it is our duty, notwithstanding the Liberty that we have in Christ, to frame our lives and conversations according to the Rule of the Law, which, if we shall neglect under the pretence of Christian Liberty, we must answer for both, both for neglecting our duty, and for abusing our Liberty. Bp. Sanderson (iii. p. 295). See also below on 2 Cor. v 21.

— γενόμενος ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν κατάρα] Having become a curse for us.

Two Curses pronounced in the Law are here referred to by St. Paul.

1. "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in this book to do them." Deut. xxvii. 26, LXX.

2. "Cursed is he that hangeth on a tree." Deut. xxi. 23, LXX. Cp. Surenhus. p. 572.

All mankind was liable to the former curse.

How was it to be removed?

(1) He who was to remove it must not himself be liable to it. He who was to be a substitute for the guilty must himself be innocent. He who was to suffer in the stead of the disobedient must himself be obedient in all things.

(2) He who was to be the substitute for all must have the common nature of all. He must not take the person of one individual man (such as Abraham, Moses, Elias), but He must take the nature of all, and sum up all mankind in himself.

(3) He who was to do more than counterbalance the weight of the sins of all must have infinite merits of His own, in order that the Scale of Divine Justice may preponderate in their favour. And nothing that is not divine is infinite. In order, therefore, that He may be able to suffer for sin, he must be human; and in order that He may be able to take away the sins of all, and to satisfy God's Justice for them, He must be Divine.

(4) In order that He may remove the curse pronounced in the Law of God for disobedience, He must undergo that punishment which is specially declared in that Law to be the curse of God.

(5) That punishment is "hanging on a tree." That is specially called in the Law "the Curse of God." Deut. xxi. 23.

By undergoing this curse for us, Christ, He Who is God from everlasting, and Who became Emmanuel, God with us, God in our flesh, uniting together the two Natures—the Divine and the Human—in His One Person,—Christ Jesus, redeemed us from the Curse of the Law. As Chrys. says here, οὕτως τὴν κατάραν δεξάμενος τῆς κατάρας ἐξήλλαξεν. Thus, having accepted the Curse, He liberated us from it.

This passage of St. Paul must be read with reverential caution, lest we fall into the Marcionite heresy (revived in part by the Socinians), which imputes vindictive injustice and cruelty to the Divine Author of the Law, in laying a curse on the innocent and holy Jesus dying for us on the Cross, and thus endeavours to bring the Old Testament into antagonism with the New. See S. Jerome here, who says, "Subrepit in hoc loco Marcion de potestate Creatoris, quem sanguinarium infamat, et vindicem, asserens nos redemptos esse per Christum, qui alterius boni Dei filius sit." Cp. Tertullian, c. Marcion. v. 3.

In order to avoid this deadly heresy we must bear in mind what it was in Christ that was the object of God's malediction.

He was made or became a curse for us; But how?

Not in His Divine Nature; for in that He did not suffer. Not in His spotless Holiness and perfect obedience; for in that He was blessed, and most blessed in His death. And therefore at His glorious Transfiguration Moses and Elias, the Representatives of the Law and the Prophets, spake specially of His Death, and the heavenly Voice came then from God the Father, "This is my beloved Son, in Whom I am well pleased." Luke ix. 35. Matt. xvii. 5.

What then was it in which He became a curse? In that mortal nature in which He died; that is, in our nature. And whence was its mortality? From Sin. It was the penalty of the sin of Adam. The malediction of that penalty it was (says Augustine in his exposition here) which our Lord took on Himself when He bare our sins in His own body on the tree (1 Pet. ii. 24), "Non ergo contumelia in Dominum putanda est, quod maledictus est appellatus qui pendet in ligno." For (as Augustine well adds) no one would be startled by this saying, When Christ died, Death was cursed; and what was it but the Death of Christ which hung on the Tree, in order that by dying He might conquer Death? That was cursed which was also conquered.

See also Primasius here, who well says, "Reum non facit pœna sed causa. Christus, cui non erat causa crucis et maledicti, pro nobis maledictum subiit, quia omnes rei eramus mortis, et debiti ligno, quia maledicti, quippe qui non permansimus in omnibus quæ scripta sunt in libro Legis. Utrumque enim Lex eadem scripserat Maledictum."

So again, if we were to say that, when He was crucified, Sin was cursed, who would be staggered? And what was it that hung on the tree? The Sin of our Old Man, the First Adam? Whence the Apostle did not hesitate to say that God made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin (2 Cor. v. 21), in order that He might condemn sin (Rom. viii. 3), and so our old man be crucified with Christ, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that we might not serve sin (Rom. vi. 6).

It was therefore Mankind, summed up in Christ, that was under the Curse when He hung upon the Tree, in order that He might redeem Mankind from the Curse.

The Word became Flesh (John i. 14). and by becoming flesh without sin, took on Him the curse due to sinful flesh. He became a curse, in order that in Him, the promised Seed of Abraham, all nations might be for ever blessed. See v. 14.

The reasoning of the Apostle of the Gospel had already been visibly represented by Moses under the Law.

Moses was commanded by God to make the serpent of brass, and to set it up on a pole, in order that it might heal those who were bitten by the Serpents of fire. Num. xxi. 9.

The Serpent was the cause of Man's fall and death. Fitly then was the Serpent reared on the pole as an emblem of Death. In that type of the brazen serpent Christ hung on the Cross. Who (says Augustine) would be perplexed by the words, Cursed is the Serpent that hangeth on the Tree? And yet the Serpent on the Tree prefigured Christ on the Cross; as Christ Himself has taught us (John iii. 14), as Moses lifted up the Serpent in the wilderness, so must also the Son of Man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

God forbid that we should imagine that when Moses lifted up the serpent on the pole as a figure of Christ he did this in dishonour to Christ. No; he recognized in Christ on the Cross mankind saved, as he saw in the serpent on the cross mankind healed.

Therefore let us not wonder that by a Curse He overcame the Curse, Who conquered Death by Death, and Sin by Sin, and the Serpent by the Serpent. He triumphed over all these by the Cross.

And may we not say that the Second Adam at His Death made the Curse to recoil on the Serpent who was cursed at the fall of the First Adam (Gen. iii. 14)? For then the Devil was caught in his own snare. Then Satan was crucified. He was put to open shame. He hung nailed to the Cross. Christ spoiled and triumphed over him in it (Col. ii. 15, see note). Then the Serpent of fire was lifted up on the pole; then, in the fullest sense of the words, was fulfilled the Scripture, Cursed is he that hangeth on a Tree.

One of the main practical inferences from these truths may be stated as follows:—How much reason have we to abominate our sins, which were the principal causes of the Crucifixion of Christ! He was delivered for our offences (Rom. iv. 25. 2 Cor. v. 21). They were indeed the traitors which, by the hands of Judas, delivered Him up. He that knew no sin was made sin for us: that is, was accused, was condemned, was executed as a sinner for us. It was therefore we who by our sins did impeach Him; the Jewish priests were but our advocates; we by them did adjudge and sentence Him. Pilate (against his will and conscience) was but our spokesman; we by them did inflict that punishment on Him, the Roman executioners were but our agents therein. He became a curse for us (Gal. iii. 13); that is, all the mockery, derision, and contumely He endured did proceed from us. The Jewish people were but proxies acting our parts; our sins were they which cried out Crucifige (crucify Him, crucify Him), with clamours more loud, and more effectual, than did all the Jewish rabble. He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities (Isa. liii. 5). It was they, which by the hands of the fierce soldiers, and of the rude populacy, as by senseless engines, did buffet and scourge Him; they, by the nails and thorns, did pierce His flesh and rend His sacred body: upon them, therefore, it is most just and fit that we should turn our hatred, that we should discharge our indignation. Dr. Barrow (Sermon on the Crucifixion, Vol. iv. p. 593).

— Ἐπικατάρατος—ξύλου] From Deut. xxi. 23. See the foregoing note.

(1) Observe the wonderful providence of God, so ordering the circumstances of Christ's Death, that though the power of life and death had been then taken away by the Romans from the Jews, and therefore it was not probable, humanly speaking, that He should suffer any punishment at their hand according to their Law, yet it was so disposed that He suffered precisely that death which was declared in that Law to have in it the particular characteristic to which the Curse belonged, namely, that of hanging on a tree. And the Jews themselves to this day fulfil the prophecy written in their Law concerning Christ, to which St. Paul here refers, even when they think to cast on Christ the greatest ignominy, as they do when they call Christ by the very name used by Moses קלוי (talui) Deut. xxi. 23, and call Christians עבדי התלוי "the servants of the hanged one," as Trypho the Jew objects to Justin Martyr (Dialog. 32), "Your Christ was so disgraced as to be subjected to the lowest curse (τῇ ἐσχάτῃ κατάρᾳ) of the Law of God, for He was crucified." See the answers of Justin Martyr, ibid. c. 94—96, and Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. IV. p. 392, and note.

(2) The Christian rejoices in this reproach as a proof of the truth of the Gospel, and as an assurance of the blessings derived from the death of Christ. "Ille pependit in ligno ut peccatum quod nos commiseramus in ligno scientiæ boni et mali, ligno deleret appensus." The second Adam hung on the tree in Calvary, in order that by hanging on the tree He might abolish the sin committed by us in the first Adam, when he ate of the fruit of the tree of good and evil in Paradise. He was made a curse for us ('factus, non natus') that the blessings promised to Abraham might be poured forth by Him on the nations, and the promise of the Holy Ghost might be fulfilled in us, through faith in Him like the faith of Abraham.

(3) Hence an ancient Father argues the necessity of Christ's Death, and the propriety of the manner of it, i. e. by crucifixion, "For if He came to bear the curse to which we were subject, how could He have become a curse for us unless He had died by that death which is cursed, and so declared to be in Scripture, i. e. by crucifixion? For it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree."

Since also the Lord's death is the ransom for all, and by that death the wall of partition is broken down, and the Gentiles are called to God, how could He so well have called us unless He was crucified? For there on the Cross He extends His hands to all, and calls all; as He Himself says, "When I shall be lifted up, I will draw all men to Myself." John xii. 32. See on Eph. iii. 18. Athanasius (de Incarn. § 24, p. 55).

(4) Another remarkable conformity of the prophetical reference in Deut. xxi. 23 to Christ, may be here noticed.

It is there declared that the person executed by hanging on a tree should not remain all night on the tree.

But, humanly speaking, it was very unlikely that Christ, being crucified, should be taken down at all from the tree, and much more on the day of the crucifixion.

For crucifixion was a Roman punishment, and part of its enormity and ignominy was that the bodies of those who were crucified remained to be devoured by fowls of the air on the cross. Hence "Non pasces in cruce corvos." Horat. 1 Ep. xvi. 48. Cp. Juvenal xiv. 77.

So it would have been with Christ crucified, if Divine Providence had not intervened to order all things in the Crucifixion so that all the Prophecies concerning it might be fulfilled, even by the hands of those who crucified Christ.

If He had been crucified on some ordinary day, and not on the day before that great High Day, the Sabbath of the Passover, the Jews would have been as eager that He should remain on the Cross, for the contumelious derision of Him and His Gospel, and for the terror of His disciples and friends, and for their own triumph, as they were earnest with Pilate that He should not remain, but be taken down from the Cross. (John xix. 31.)

Thus, in crucifying Him, and taking Him down from the cross, they proved unconsciously that He whom they crucified is the Messiah, and that it was He Who, bearing the curse of the Law, has taken away that curse from all who believe and obey Him.

16. οὐ λέγει καὶ τοῖς σπέρμασιν, ὡς ἐπὶ πολλῶν, κ.τ.λ.] It has been alleged by some modern Expositors that this is a mere play upon words, and a Rabbinical sophism.

Let us examine the Apostle's argument. God made two promises to Abraham and to his seed,

(1) I will give the land (the promised land, the type of the heavenly inheritance) to thee and to thy seed for ever. Gen. xiii. 15. See also Gen. xii. 7; xv. 18; xvii. 8.

(2) I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee, in their generations, for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee (Gen. xvii. 7. 9), and I will be their God.

Now what the Apostle observes here as remarkable is, that Almighty God, in promising these blessings to Abraham's posterity, always uses a singular noun, seed, זֶרַע (zera), semen, and never a plural.

His argument therefore is, that the promise is made to the progeny of Abraham, not scattered in a plurality of families, but collected into one. The promise is made to the seed, not as dispersed and disseminated (which it is the characteristic of seed to be, and which the very name of seed implies), but as united, as one.

If it be objected (as it is by some) that it was not according to the genius of the Hebrew language to use זְרָעִים (semen, seed) in the plural number, then it may be replied,

(1) That this is not strictly true. See 1 Sam. viii. 15, where the plural occurs. And the word is sometimes used in the singular for an individual person, Gen. iii. 15, where it is spoken of Christ; and cp. Surenhus. p. 574.

(2) Almighty God in delivering this promise to the Father of the faithful, was not tied to the use of any particular word, and therefore not of the word seed, but might have said to Abraham that He would give the promised blessing to him and to all his descendants.

But He always uses the word seed. He chose to use a word which is almost always singular; and the Apostle thence argues that He marked the oneness of the seed, and infers that there is a Divine meaning in this use.

What, then, is that meaning?

He declares it to be this, that they to whom the promise is made in Abraham were to have a certain unity, although they were to be as numerous as the stars of heaven and as the sand of the sea shore (Gen. xv. 5; xxii. 17; xxxii. 12), that they could not be counted for multitude, and yet be only as one.

This seemed a paradox, yet this has been punctually fulfilled;

It has not been fulfilled in the literal Israel. The Jews are scattered abroad like seeds in an innumerable plurality in all parts of the world. The very name given in the Apostolic Age (see on John vii. 35, and in Acts ii. 9—11) to the scattered seeds of their Tribes, διασπορά, dispersions, was a national witness to that distracted plurality.

But the Promise was a Divine Promise, and it has therefore a fulfilment.

The fulfilment (says the Apostle) is in Christ. He gathers together in one, all the children of the faithful Abraham, wherever they are. The Holy Spirit Himself declared this, when He said, that the reason of Christ's death was, that He should "gather together into one the children of God that were scattered abroad" (ἵνα τὰ τέκνα τοῦ Θεοῦ τὰ διεσκορπισμένα συναγάγῃ εἰς ἕν. John xi. 52).

Has then Christ gathered together all in one? and if so, how?

He, the Second Adam, the father of the regenerate race, has incorporated together in one, in His own mystical body, all of every kindred and language, who hold the "one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism." They are all one family—one seed—one new man in Him (Eph. iv. 5).

This is the great truth which the Apostle proceeds to declare in what follows (v. 26—29), "Ye are all children of God, through faith in Christ; for as many of you as were baptized into Christ have put on Christ; ye are all one man (εἷς) in Christ Jesus; and if ye are Christ's, ye are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Cp. Irenæus (v. 32. 2).

17. εἰς Χριστόν] in Christum, into Christ: so as to tend toward, and be consummated in, Christ as its End, Who, as Man, sums up all Abraham's seed in Himself. On the accusative cp. 2 Cor. ii. 8. The words εἰς Χριστὸν are not in A, B, C, or Vulg., Coptic, Æth., Armen. Versions; but they are found in D, E, F, G, I, K, and the great majority of Cursives, and in Christo in Syriac and Arabic Versions.

— ὁ μετὰ τετρακόσια καὶ τριάκοντα ἔτη γεγονὼς νόμος] the Law, which first appeared 430 years afterwards, does not annul a covenant ratified before by God into Christ, so as to make void the promise.

The promise to which St. Paul here refers is that in Gen. xii. 1—3, thirty years before the birth of Isaac, and four hundred and thirty before the Exodus and the Law. See on Acts vii. 6. Observe γεγονὼς, marking the first origin of the Law.

19. τί οὖν ὁ νόμος;] what then is the Law? What is its purpose and use?

The Law had a supplementary, parenthetical, provisional, and manuductory character, and came in, as it were, accidentally. See v. 21, and on Rom. v. 20; viii. 3, 4, and on 1 Cor. xv. 56; and Augustine, Serm. 26. 125. 136. 156. 163, where he treats the question why the Law was given.

The purpose of the Law has been stated in clear language by the author of Paradise Lost, who puts into the mouth of Michael the following words in addressing Adam:

"To whom thus Michael: Doubt not but that Sin
Will reign among them as of thee begot;
And therefore was Law given them, to evince
Their natural pravity, by stirring up
Sin against Law to fight; that, when they see Law can discover sin, but not remove
Save by those shadowy expiations weak
The blood of bulls and goats, they may conclude
Some blood more precious must be paid for Man;
Just for unjust; that in such Righteousness
To them by Faith imputed, they may find
Justification towards God, and peace
Of conscience, which the Law by ceremonies
Cannot appease; nor Man the moral part
Perform; and not performing, cannot live.
So Law appears imperfect; and but given
With purpose to resign them, in full time,
Up to a better covenant; disciplined
From shadowy types to truth; from flesh to spirit;
From imposition of strict Laws, to free
Acceptance of large grace; from servile fear
To filial; works of Law to works of Faith.
And therefore shall not Moses, though of God
Highly beloved, being but the minister
Of Law, His people into Canaan lead;
But Joshua, whom the Gentiles Jesus call,
His name and office bearing, Who shall quell
The Adversary-Serpent, and bring back
Through the world's wilderness long-wandered Man
Safe to eternal Paradise of rest."

Milton (P. L. xii. 285).

been made. Observe the perfect tense; showing that the promise made to Abraham still continues effectual in its operation.

In fact, as the Apostle here shows, the promise which was made to Abraham four thousand years ago is actually performed to every Christian in particular, on his baptismal incorporation into the Body of Christ.

— διαταγεὶς δι' ἀγγέλων] ordained through Angels: "disposita per Angelos." Irenæus, iii. 3. "Lex ordinata (sc. a Deo) per Angelos." Vulg. The Law was ordained (by God) through the mediate instrumentality of Angels, and was not delivered directly and immediately, as the Promise was to Abraham and to his seed represented by him; and as the Gospel is, which is spoken by the Lord Himself, Heb. ii. 3.

Thus even the form of its delivery marked the inferiority of the Law to the Promise, and to the Gospel.

The relative inferiority of the Law, on this account, to the Gospel, is noted in Heb. ii. 2: "If the Word (i. e. the Levitical Law) spoken through Angels (δι' ἀγγέλων, as here) was stedfast . . . how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord?"

The Apostle applies here a like argument, in comparing the Law with the Promise.

— μεσίτου] Moses (Theodoret). As it is happily paraphrased by Milton, P. L. xii. 235:—

> "The voice of God
> To mortal ear is dreadful. They beseech
> That Moses might report to them his will,
> And terror cease. He grants what they besought,
> Instructed that to God is no access
> Without Mediator, whose high office now
> Moses in figure bears; to introduce
> One greater, of Whose day he shall foretell,
> And all the Prophets in their age the times
> Of great Messiah sing."

20. Ὁ δὲ μεσίτης ἑνὸς οὐκ ἔστιν, ὁ δὲ Θεὸς εἷς ἐστιν] The variety and uncertainty of the interpretations of this memorable passage (which may be seen in Meyer, Kommentar. p. 125—138, and in De Wette's Einleitung, p. 48), seem to have arisen from a want of due regard to the order of the Apostle's words.

The order of the words is always of primary importance in the New Testament,—"Ordo verborum mysterium est" (Jerome), —and particularly in so concise a sentence as this, where brevity has a tendency to produce obscurity. And it may fairly be presumed that the writer has arranged his words in such a manner as to give a clue to their sense.

St. Paul does not say ὁ μεσίτης οὐκ ἐστὶν ἑνὸς, 'the Mediator is not (a Mediator) of one,' as he probably would have done, if he had meant to say (as he is generally supposed to mean) that a "Mediator is not a Mediator of one" person or party, but of more than one.

But he says ὁ μεσίτης ἑνὸς οὐκ ἔστιν,—that is, the Mediator of one is not, has no existence.

Nor does he say ὁ Θεὸς ἑνὸς ἐστιν εἷς, God is one. But what he says is, ὁ Θεὸς εἷς ἐστιν,—that is, "God being one, is," or exists. St. Paul is not only predicating the Unity, but also the Eternal Self-Existence, of God.

The order of the sentence is accurately preserved in the Vulgate: "Mediator autem unius non est, Deus autem unus est."

There are therefore two striking contrasts in this one short sentence;

(1) A contrast between ὁ μεσίτης (Moses), and ὁ Θεός (God).

(2) A contrast between οὐκ ἔστιν, non est, does not exist, and ἔστιν, est, does exist. On this use of ἔστι and οὐκ ἔστι, see 1 Cor. xv. 12, 13. 44. Heb. xi. 6.

The discrepancies of interpretation seem to have arisen from a want of due attention to the arrangement of these words, and to the contrasts represented by them;

Their true meaning may be paraphrased as follows: The Apostle is showing the superiority of the Evangelical Promise made to Abraham and to his seed, over the Levitical Law.

The Promise was more excellent than the Law by priority of time; and it could not be cancelled or impaired by the Law, which was added afterwards not on account of any inherent and essential excellence in itself, but which came in accidentally and parenthetically, because of transgressions (v. 19).

The Law, he says, was delivered (διαταγεὶς) through the medium of Angels, and by the hand of Moses.

But the Promises to Abraham were spoken immediately (ἐρρήθησαν, v. 16) by the mouth of God Himself.

Hence the superior dignity of the Promise given to Abraham as compared with the Levitical Law, given through the ministry of Angels, and through a human mediator, Moses.

What he says then is this: The Mediator of one Being has no existence (οὐκ ἔστι). Even God Himself, Who is One, cannot constitute a person to be a Mediator without the addition of a third party. The office, therefore, of a Mediator is itself a dependent, relative, and accidental one.

The Mediatorial office even of Christ Himself will one day have an end. See on 1 Cor. xv. 24—28. But Christ, as coequal and coeternal with the Father, and as the Jehovah of the Old Testament, exists and reigns for ever. "His kingdom shall have no end."

Moses, in his office of Mediator, had no independent existence. He required the presence and concurrence of two contracting parties to call him into existence, and into action, as a Mediator.

The function of Moses, the Mediator of the Levitical Law, was merely occasional, and it terminated with the occasion which gave it birth.

Such was the official character of him from whose hand, and through whose intervention, the Israelites received the Levitical Law.

But very different from this is the nature of Him, Who, not mediately, but in His Own Person, gave the promise to Abraham, Ὁ Θεὸς εἷς ἐστιν, 'Deus unus EST.' God Who is One exists. He is independent of all persons, times, and places. He is the self-existing יְהוָה, JEHOVAH, ὁ ὤν, the "Being-One," as He Himself declared to Moses when He sent him (Exod. iii. 14; vi. 3. Cp. Rev. i. 4). He is the very Essence of Unity and Eternity; and in his Unity and Eternity He is the Author of all Being.

In this Unity and Self-Existence He is distinguished by the Apostle from those gods whom the Galatians and other heathens had served. They (says St. Paul in the next chapter, iv. 8) not knowing God, served τοῖς φύσει μὴ οὖσι θεοῖς. Gods, many, and yet non-existent, but the "Lord our God is One God." There "is no God but one." And He it was Who, in His Divine Majesty and Glory, without any intervention of a Mediator, gave the Promise, talking face to face with Abraham (Gen. xvii. 3. 22), whom the Holy Ghost in Scripture calls "the friend of God." (2 Chron. xx. 7. Isa. xli. 8. James ii. 21—23.)

Hence, therefore, is evident the superior dignity of the Promise to the Law.

This argument was very relevant to the present question, and it could not be rebutted by the Apostle's adversaries in order to disparage the Gospel. For the Gospel was given by Him Who is "God manifest in the flesh." And it is a confirmation of the present interpretation, that the doctrine of the Godhead of Christ is used by St. Paul to prove the superiority of the Gospel, as well as of the Promise, to the Law. See Heb. ii. 2, 3; iii. 2, 3.

21. εἰ γὰρ ἐδόθη νόμος] We must take care not to fall into the Marcionite and Manichæan perversions of this text (as if it involved a censure of the Law), or into those of modern Antinomianism;

On the question hence arising as to the Divine Benevolence, see Augustine in Ps. cxviii., Serm. 27, and contra Faustum Manichæum, xix. 7, where he vindicates the Law as having a salutary effect in humbling man's pride and presumption, and as showing to him by its holy precepts how far he had fallen below the divine standard of Right, and as proving to him his need of a Redeemer and Sanctifier. "Non enim Lex jubebat delictum, sed superbos sibi multum tribuentes, mandati sancti et justi et boni adjectio reos etiam prævaricationis effecerat, ut eo modo humilitati discerent ad Gratiam festinare per Fidem, et jam non essent Legi subditi per reatum, sed Legi sociati per justitiam."

And again he says, in his Treatise de Spiritu et Litera, § 34,

"The Law was first given in order that Grace might be desired, and Grace was afterwards given in order that the Law might be obeyed. For it was by no fault of its own that the Law was not obeyed, but by the fault of our corrupt flesh; and this disease of our corrupt flesh was first to be manifested by the Law, and then to be healed by Grace."

IV. 1 Λέγω δὲ, ἐφ' ὅσον χρόνον ὁ κληρονόμος νήπιός ἐστιν, οὐδὲν διαφέρει

On this subject, see also above on v. 19; and below on 1 Cor. xv. 56. Rom. v. 20; vii. 12—25; viii. 3, 4.

22, 23. συνέκλεισεν—ἐφρουρούμεθα] We were shut up in the Law as in a prison.

The Law was given ex accidenti: it was superinduced on account of mankind's transgressions (v. 19), and it proved man's guilt, but did not remove it.

It was, as the Apostle here shows, like a prison-house into which men were brought, and in which they were placed in ward, because they would not exercise rightly the gifts which God had bestowed on them, of Conscience, Reason, and Free Will, and had allowed the record of primeval Law almost to fade from their minds.

Therefore God bound them with the chains of the Law, under which they were to wait the revelation of the Promise in Christ. Jerome.

But we are not to imagine that the Law was the author of sin because it concluded all under sin. No; the Law was no more the Author of sin, than the Judge is the cause of crime because he imprisons the criminal. But it kept them in ward, till God, the Lord of all, gave them free pardon in Christ. Jerome.

24. παιδαγωγός] Another metaphor. He had compared mankind, while under the Law, to prisoners, and the Law to their prison, in which they were kept in ward, till they were liberated by Christ. He now compares them to children, and the Law to a pædagogus, generally a slave, who had under his charge the children (παῖδας) of his master from six years of age till fourteen, and conducted them to the gymnasium or school, but was not qualified or allowed to teach them. See on 1 Cor. iv. 15.

So the Law had a preparatory and manuductory office, that of training God's people as children, and bringing them to school in the Gospel, which would qualify them to dwell in their Father's house, no longer as παῖδες, children, but as υἱοί, sons, in Christ.

On this preparatory office of the Law, see S. Hilary in Ps. xci., who says, "Quotiescunque aliquid ex Lege relegitur in opere præsentium mandatorum, speculum futurorum est contuendum."

27. ὅσοι εἰς Χριστὸν ἐβαπτίσθητε] as many among you as were baptized into Christ, put on Christ (aorist) at your Baptism. Ye were then clothed in the righteousness of the Son of God, and were all made His Members by the sanctification of Baptism, and were made therefore to be Sons of God by adoption. See Prismasius here.

To be baptized into Christ (cp. Rom. vi. 3) is to be incorporated by Baptism into the One Body of Christ (1 Cor. xii. 13), and to become a member of the same; and by virtue of such incorporation into Christ, the Son of God, to become a Child of God by adoption, and a joint heir with Christ: and therefore every child of the Church of England is rightly taught in the Catechism, that by Baptism he was made a "member of Christ, a child of God, and an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven."

The Apostle says that all they who are baptized into Christ put on Christ; that is, when they were made members of Him, they were invested with His Righteousness. As the garment of a body clothes the members of the body, so the spotless robe of Him Who is "the Lord our Righteousness" (Jer. xxiii. 6), covers the members of Christ. At their baptism Justification by faith in Him was given them. God looks at them as no longer in the first Adam, but He sees them in Christ, and as clothed with Him.

Therefore St. Paul says to the Galatians, When you were baptized into Christ, you were then clothed with the robe of filial adoption; ye became sons of God by the profession of faith in Christ Jesus, and by virtue of your engrafting into the Body of the Son of God. See Gal. iv. 5, and Greg. Nazianz. de Baptismo, Homil. xl. p. 696—717, and Augustine in Ps. c., who says, "We having put on Christ are all Abraham's seed in Him, and we are Christ's members; we are one man in Him."

Our Lord had suggested this language by His own words in the Parable of the Prodigal Son, where the Almighty Father receives back the Gentile World after its wanderings, and readmits it to Sonship, by commanding the Servants ἐξενέγκατε τὴν στολὴν τὴν πρώτην, καὶ ἐνδύσατε αὐτόν, ὅτι ὁ υἱός μου νεκρὸς ἦν, καὶ ἀνέζησε, Luke xv. 22—24.

On the doctrine of the conveyance of Justification to Christians at their Baptism, and of their investiture in Christ's righteousness in that Sacrament, see note on 1 Cor. vi. 11.

This doctrine must be guarded against Antinomian misinterpretation.

At Baptism we were clothed in Christ. But it is of no avail for a man to have a white robe given him if he trails it in the dust, or drags it in the mire. The whiter the robe, the fouler will its stains appear. It is not enough to have put on Christ in baptism, he must wear Christ. He must walk in white (Rev. iii. 4). He that saith he abideth in Him, ought also himself to walk even as He walked (1 John ii. 6). And when that holy robe is sullied by sin, it must be washed with tears of Repentance and the blood of the Lamb. Rev. vii. 14.

Therefore the Church of England well says to those who are baptized in riper years, "As for you, who have now by Baptism put on Christ, it is your part and duty, being made the children of God, and of the light, by faith in Jesus Christ, to walk answerably to your Christian calling, and as becometh the children of light."

An ancient writer, in a memorable passage, shows from this passage that by Baptism the blessings of the Incarnation are conveyed to us as Christians. "Si Emmanuel nobiscum Deus est Deus autem nobiscum Christus est, Qui etiam in nobis est, quotquot enim in Christum tincti estis Christum industis, tam proprius est Christus in significatione nominis, quod est, 'nobiscum Deus,' quam in sono nominis quod est 'Emmanuel.'" Tertullian (c. Marcion. iii. 12.)

28. Οὐκ ἔνι Ἰουδαῖος] There is no Jew, as such, in Christ, nor Greek as such. The alterable social distinctions are contrasted by οὐδὲ, the unalterable natural one is expressed by καί. (Ellicott and Alford.) The latter distinction is specially applicable as against the Jews insisting on their own spiritual privileges, and on the perpetual obligation of circumcision.

29. τοῦ Ἀβραὰμ σπέρμα ἐστέ] Ye are Abraham's seed. Being all united into one Body, the Body of Christ. He returns to the argument in v. 16, and completes it; see note there, and Augustine, Epist. 196, and de Doctr. Christ. iii. 44, where he deduces from this verse, compared with Gal. iii. 16, a memorable argument on the Unity of Christ and His Church. "Scientes aliquando capitis et corporis, id est, Christi et Ecclesiæ unam personam nobis intimari. Neque enim frustra dictum est fidelibus, Ergo Abrahæ semen estis (Gal. iii. 29), cum sit unum semen Abrahæ, quod est Christus (Gal. iii. 16), non hæsitemus quando a capite ad corpus, vel a corpore transitur ad caput, et tamen non receditur ab una eademque persona. Una enim persona loquitur dicens, Sicut sponso imposuit mihi mitram, et sicut sponsam ornavit me ornamento (Isa. lxi. 10), et tamen quid horum duorum capiti, quid corpori, id est, quid Christo, quid Ecclesiæ conveniat, utique intelligendum est."

2. ἄχρι τῆς προθεσμίας τοῦ πατρός] till the season predetermined by his father.

Προθεσμία is the legal term for any 'tempus præfinitum' within which any act was to be done. See Kennedy, in Dr. Smith's Dict. of Antiqq., p. 797.

St. Paul does not mean to say that the father fixes the time at which the son is to succeed to the inheritance: that was already defined by law. (See the authorities in the articles Heres, Infans, Impubes, in Dr. Smith's Dictionary.) But he means to say, that the parent assigned to him certain guardians and stewards, named by him, for a definite time.

3. Οὕτω καὶ ἡμεῖς] so we, i. e. Human nature generally. He, the Apostle of the Gentiles, identifies himself with those to whom he was sent, and to whom he is now writing. Augustine.

— ὑπὸ τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου] the visible elements of the world; the sun, moon, sea, earth, and other creatures, once deified and worshipped by the Galatians (v. 8) and the Heathen world generally, in the place of the Creator. Rom. i. 25. Jerome.

4. γενόμενον ἐκ γυναικὸς—ὑπὸ νόμον] born of a woman, born under the Law.

As born of a Woman Christ redeemed all. He is the Woman's seed (Gen. iii. 15) promised to Adam, and in him to all his posterity.

St. Paul therefore first declares that Christ was born of a Woman; and thus shows the Galatian Gentiles that He belonged to them even before He belonged to the Jews, as such.

But he adds, that He was born under the Law; and in order to show that the Jews had need of redemption, he adds, that He was so born in order that He might redeem them from the bondage of the Law, by fulfilling the Law (cp. Augustine, Epist. 140, and in Ps. xxxi.), and by becoming subject to the penalty of the Law (iii. 13); and thus he obviates an objection which might have been raised in favour of the Law on the ground of Christ's having been born under the Law.

Christ redeemed both the Gentiles and the Jews; the one from the bondage of Heathenism, the other from that of the Law.

5. ἵνα τὴν υἱοθεσίαν ἀπολάβωμεν] This clause is not to be connected with ἐξαγοράσῃ, but it is a common summary of the testamentary privileges of all men—whether Gentile or Jew—by virtue of Christ's Incarnation.

It depends on ἐξαπέστειλεν, and the right rendering is: "When the fulness of the time came, God sent forth His Son, born of a Woman, born under the Law, to redeem those who are under the Law, in order that we (i. e. all men) may receive the adoption of sons."

So Irenæus (iii. 16. 3): "The Son of God became the Son of man, in order that we might receive the adoption of sonship through Him, now that man bears, and receives, and embraces the Son of God." Cp. Irenæus (v. 20, 21).

And therefore St. Paul adds—changing his person from we to ye—because ye, even ye Gentiles, are sons of God, by virtue of the Incarnation of the Son of God, Who is our Emmanuel, God with us, God manifest in our flesh, the common nature of us all: therefore God sent forth not only His Son (v. 4), but also the Holy Spirit, proceeding from His Son,—the Holy Ghost, given by His Son (see on Acts ii. 33. John xv. 26; xvi. 7), and crying in our hearts, as the Son Himself cried in Gethsemane, "Abba, Father" (see on Mark xiv. 36. Rom. viii. 15); and thus witnessing to our sonship, and making it the ground of a filial appeal to God.

Augustine supposes, that in order to mark this union of all mankind, whether Jew or Gentile, as sons of God in Christ,—born of a Woman, and yet under the Law,—the Apostle uses the one word, Father, in two languages, Ἀββᾶ, πατὴρ,—the first the language of the Jewish world, the second of the Gentiles: "ut Hebræum verbum ad Hebræos, Græcum ad Gentes, utriusque autem verbi eadem significatio ad ejusdem fidei Spiritûsque unitatem pertineret."

It is also observed by Augustine, that St. Paul aptly here proves the adoption and heritorship of the Gentiles, from the presence and gift to them of the Holy Ghost. For it was not till after the Ascension of Christ and the Day of Pentecost, that the Gospel was preached to the Gentiles: and it was by the descent of the Holy Ghost on the uncircumcised Cornelius, that St. Peter himself had been convinced that the Gentiles were to be received into the Church by Baptism, and into a communion of spiritual privileges with the Jews. See Acts x. 47.

6. τὰς καρδίας ἡμῶν] our hearts. This, which is the reading of the best MSS.—and not κ. ὑμῶν, the reading of Elz.—declares that the Holy Spirit is now given to all—whether Jew or Gentile—united in one Body, the Body of Christ.

7. καὶ κληρονόμος Θεοῦ διὰ Χριστοῦ] This reading, or what in sense is tantamount to it, κληρονόμος διὰ Χριστοῦ, seems to be strongly confirmed by external and internal evidence, and therefore is not to be easily set aside for the reading of A, B, C*, κλ. διὰ Θεοῦ.

If however διὰ Θεοῦ, or, as it is in F, G, διὰ Θεὸν, is the true reading, it is to be interpreted, with Aug., "per misericordiam Dei;" i. e. sons by God's grace and favour in Christ, and not by carnal descent, as the literal Israel boast that they are. Cp. John i. 12, 13. Rom. viii. 15.

8. φύσει μὴ οὖσι] So A, B, C, D, E. Elz. τοῖς μὴ φύσει οὖσι.

The reading in the text declares, that by nature, which is God's work, the gods of the Heathen have no existence. Cp. 1 Cor. viii. 4—6.

Ye once worshipped Cybele, and other Heathen deities, as having dominion over the elements of Nature—air, sea, earth, fire. But so far from having dominion over Nature, I affirm (says the Apostle) that they had no existence in Nature at all. How miserable therefore was your bondage, to worship, and serve, and depend on that which did not exist!

9. πῶς ἐπιστρέφετε] how is it that ye are returning into bondage to the elements? By falling now into Judaism, ye do in fact relapse into the principles of Heathenism. Ye become again slaves of the physical elements, the sun, moon, earth, &c., according to which the calendar of the Levitical Law is regulated; with its days, and new moons, and festive seasons, and sabbatical years, which were shadows of good things to come (Col. ii. 17); and so had once a beneficent and Divine office, but now that these good things have come, have passed away. And therefore to return to them as things obligatory, and as necessary to salvation, and to observe them with scrupulous veneration as essential parts of religion, is even to go back to that Gentile bondage, to the physical elements of the world in which as Heathens ye were enslaved. See Theodoret. Cp. Col. ii. 20, the best exposition of this passage.

— ἐπὶ τὰ ἀσθενῆ] ἐπὶ τὰ πτωχὰ καὶ ἀσθενῆ στοιχεῖα καταπίπτομεν. Athenagoras, Legat. pro Christianis, p. 15.

— δουλεύειν θέλετε] it is your will to be slaves. Observe the word θέλετε, showing that this submission to bondage is a mere act of their own will: that it is not submission to God's will, but an arbitrary subjection of their own will which they have no right to enslave (see v. 1. 1 Cor. vii. 23) to the will of others, their false teachers, who have no right to command. Cp. the use of the word θέλων in Col. ii. 18, μή τις ὑμᾶς καταβραβευέτω θέλων: and v. 23, ἐθελοθρησκεία.

10. παρατηρεῖσθε] ye do not observe rightly, but observe perversely (παρὰ), beside the mark, contrary to God's will. The sense of παρατηρέω is to mark with an evil intent in Dan. vi. 11. Ps. xxxvi. 12. Susan. 12. 15, 16.

— ἐνιαυτούς] years; e. g. the seventh year of release, or the year of Jubilee. Primasius.

11. φοβοῦμαι ὑμᾶς] You ought to be objects to me only of love, but you are objects to me of fear, lest I have laboured in vain upon you, and therefore shall fail of having you as my 'crown of rejoicing' at the great day. (1 Thess. ii. 19.) Meyer compares Soph. Œd. R. 760, δέδοικ' ἐμαυτὸν—μὴ πόλλ' ἄγαν εἰρημέν' ᾖ μοι.

12. Γίνεσθε] Become as I am, who was once under the Law, and zealous for the Law, but now am free in Christ from the bondage of the Law. (v. 1. Phil. iii. 3—7. Acts xxvi. 5.)

Become ye as I am, for I also am what ye are; that is, I am one who claims no pre-eminence above you by virtue of his carnal descent from Abraham, but am one "qui utique, cùm Judæus natus sim, jam ista carnalia contemno" (Augustine); and though born a "Hebrew of the Hebrews," yet now I regard myself as no better than a "sinner of the Gentiles," one of the universal family of man, who are all one in Christ (iii. 26). "Ego sicut vos; id est, non Judæus sed homo sum." Augustine.

These words of St. Paul appear to be quoted by Justin Martyr, Cohort. ad Græc. p. 40, γίνεσθε ὡς ἐγὼ, ὅτι κἀγὼ ἤμην ὡς ὑμεῖς.

— ἀδελφοί, δέομαι ὑμῶν] He, their spiritual father, now changes his tone, and becomes a suppliant, and calls them no longer little children, but brethren.

These sudden changes of feeling and language, these sobbings of the spirit bursting forth abruptly from a full heart, appear to be best marked by being broken into separate sentences, and are so represented in the text.

— Οὐδέν με ἠδικήσατε] με thus placed is emphatic (cp. on Matt. xvi. 18). When ye fell back from the Gospel ye wronged not me, but ye wronged yourselves and God. Do not imagine, therefore, that I am pleading my own cause with you; no, I am pleading with you for your own selves and for God. Compare the similar disavowal of personal feeling in 2 Cor. ii. 5, where the pronoun holds the same place before the verb as here, οὐκ ἐμὲ λελύπηκεν, It is not I whom he has grieved.

13. Οἴδατε—τὸ πρότερον] He is contrasting their former love toward him, with their present estrangement from him.

Διὰ here signifies, by reason of. Cp. Rom. vi. 19, and Winer, p. 356.

The sense is, Ye know, that on account of weakness of the flesh I preached the Gospel to you at the first, and ye, my spiritual children, did not set at nought, nor show any disdain for that trial of yours which was in the flesh of me your spiritual father, but on the contrary ye accepted me as an angel sent from God, yea, even as Christ Jesus.

(1) As to the reading of this passage, πειρασμὸν ὑμῶν, your trial, is the reading as in A, B, C, D*, F, G, and in many Western Fathers. And after he had used the first person singular in εὐηγγελισάμην he would not have said ἡμῶν (as in Elz.), but μου. And ὑμῶν gives a sense which is not likely to have been intended by copyists. As Hooker says, "The teacher's error is the people's trial," and so is the teacher's infirmity. "Grandis tentatio discipulis, si magister infirmetur." (Primasius.) The infirmity of the Pastor exercises, proves, and elicits the patience and love of the People. St. Paul's bodily infirmity was not only a trial and an exercise of his own Christian virtues and graces in preaching the Gospel, but of theirs also to whom he preached it.

As S. Jerome says, the weakness of St. Paul was a temptation to the Galatians. It tempted them to despise him whom they heard preaching glorious things, and yet saw suffering grievous things: they knew also that he had suffered much persecution and contumely. This was a sore temptation to them. Could St. Paul (they might ask) be the Apostle of Christ, or could Christ be believed to have divine power, if He suffered His Apostle to endure so much in His service?

(2) The infirmity in his flesh, here mentioned, was probably the thorn in the flesh which was given him by God, in order that he might not be elated with the abundance of his revelations, and which exposed him to the contempt and derision of the censorious and malignant. See note on 2 Cor. xii. 7.

(3) τὸ πρότερον, at the first. The meaning of this phrase is to be explained by its contrast with the present τὸ νῦν. The affectionate feeling of the Galatians, τὸ πρότερον, in their former mind, is compared with their present altered temper towards the Apostle. Compare the use of τὸ πρότερον in John vi. 62; ix. 8, and Davidson, ii. 295, and Mr. Long in Dr. Smith's Dictionary of Ancient Geography, Art. 'Galatia,' p. 931.

It would seem that St. Paul had first been visited with this physical infirmity about the time of his Ordination to the Apostleship of the Gentiles. See 2 Cor. xii. 2—7.

St. Paul, when sent to the Gentiles, after his Ordination, would not therefore be led to seek for intercourse, as a Preacher, in the first instance with such populations as prided themselves on their civilization and refinement, and which are usually more disposed to be supercilious and fastidious, and to be offended and revolted by any eccentricities of manner and physical defects or deformities in their teachers.

But he would rather resort in the first instance to ruder and more barbarous tribes, who are not so easily affected by such peculiarities.

Having once established his character there by the supernatural effects of his ministry, he would then proceed, on the strength of his credit so assured, to address himself to politer populations.

Accordingly, on referring to the Acts of the Apostles, we find that when St. Paul set out on his second Missionary tour, without Barnabas, from Antioch, he passed through Syria and Cilicia, where he was well known, to Lycaonia, thence to Phrygia, and thence to Galatia. See Acts xv. 40; xvi. 1—6.

These countries were comparatively rude and uncivilized. Cp. Jerome on cap. iii. 15.

It is also expressly stated that St. Paul was then forbidden by the Spirit to preach the word in Asia, i. e. at Ephesus, the refined capital of Ionia. (Acts xvi. 6.)

It may suffice to offer this suggestion, which might be prosecuted further, that on account of the thorn in his flesh, or, as he calls it here, the infirmity in his flesh, and the consequent temptation to his hearers, he was naturally led—perhaps he was guided by the Holy Spirit—to shun in the first instance the more civilized populations of Asia and Europe, and to go rather to the despised Galilees of the world, such as Lycaonia, Phrygia, and Galatia, and then, in due course of time, when his reputation was established, to proceed through Macedonia to Athens (where he had little success), and thence to Corinth and to Ephesus, and so finally to Rome.

He might therefore well say to the Galatians that they had done him no wrong personally.

On the contrary, he frankly owns that they were well aware that it was by reason of the infirmity of his flesh (δι' ἀσθένειαν τῆς σαρκὸς) that he had preached to them at the first, rather than to others; and though this was the case, and he came to them therefore, as it were, by necessity rather than by choice, and though he had not then as yet established his reputation as an Apostle by the effects of his miracles and his preaching, yet such was their love for him that they did not despise him, but received him with affectionate enthusiasm as a messenger of God, and would have given their eyes to him.

14. ὡς Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν] Ye received me, not as an Angel merely, but as the Lord of Angels.

15. Ποῦ οὖν ὁ μακαρισμός] Elz. has τίς οὖν ἦν ὁ μακαρισμός; But ποῦ is in A, B, C, F, G, and ἦν is omitted by A, B, C.

Some learned Interpreters suppose these words to mean, 'Where is the predication of your own happiness?'

But the sense appears rather to be, according to the context, ὀφθαλμοὺς ὑμῶν ἐξορύξαντες ἐδώκατέ μοι. 16 [v] Ὥστε ἐχθρὸς ὑμῶν γέγονα ἀληθεύων ὑμῖν;

17 [m] Ζηλοῦσιν ὑμᾶς οὐ καλῶς, ἀλλὰ ἐκκλεῖσαι ὑμᾶς θέλουσιν, ἵνα αὐτοὺς ζηλοῦτε. 18 Καλὸν δὲ τὸ ζηλοῦσθαι ἐν καλῷ πάντοτε, καὶ μὴ μόνον ἐν τῷ παρεῖναί με πρὸς ὑμᾶς, 19 [n] τεκνία μου, οὓς πάλιν ὠδίνω, ἄχρις οὗ μορφωθῇ Χριστὸς ἐν ὑμῖν, 20 ἤθελον δὲ παρεῖναι πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἄρτι, καὶ ἀλλάξαι τὴν φωνήν μου, ὅτι ἀποροῦμαι ἐν ὑμῖν.

'Where now is your felicitation of me?' So μακαρισμός, Rom. iv. 9, where see Fritz. i. p. 219, and in Clemens Romanus, c. 50, οὗτος ὁ μακαρισμὸς (this pronunciation of felicity) ἐγένετο ἐπὶ τοὺς ἐκλελεγμένους τοῦ Θεοῦ.

You almost worshipped me, you treated me as one of the μάκαρες, the blessed Angels, even as the Son of the Blessed. Where is now your beatification of me fled?

On the verb μακαρίζω, see Luke i. 48. James v. 11, and its use by LXX, Gen. xxx. 13. Job xxix. 11. Isa. iii. 11. Mal. iii. 15.

— τοὺς ὀφθαλμούς] your eyes, what was dearest to you.

"Quanti, si tibi vos oculos debere Catullum, Aut aliud, si quid carius est oculis." (Catullus.)

"Pro Evangelico lumine sua lumina tradidissent." (Primasius.)

Some persons have hence inferred that St. Paul's infirmity was in his eyes. See on this subject below, 2 Cor. xii. 7.

— ἐδώκατε] Elz. has ἄν, which is not in the best MSS. See John xv. 22; xix. 11. (Ellicott.)

16. ἐχθρὸς ὑμῶν γέγονα ἀληθεύων ὑμῖν;] Have I become your enemy by being true to you? Ἀληθεύω is not here to speak the truth, but to act truly (see Prov. xxi. 3, LXX, and Gen. xlii. 16); εἰ ἀληθεύετε ἢ οὔ, whether you be true men or no. So that the question of the Apostle is in fact, "Have I now become an enemy of yours by being your true friend?"

These words, therefore, do not show (as has been asserted by some able Expositors) that St. Paul had been again to Galatia, and had preached to the Galatians, after his first visit (Acts xvi. 6), and before he wrote this Epistle.

On this subject, see above in the Introduction to this Epistle, § 8.

17. Ζηλοῦσιν ὑμᾶς οὐ καλῶς, ἀλλὰ ἐκκλεῖσαι ὑμᾶς θέλουσιν] The substantive ζῆλος (from ζέω, ferveo) is used by the LXX for the Hebrew קִנְאָה, kineah (whence Simon Zelotes = Cananite, see Matt. x. 4. Mark iii. 18. Luke vi. 15), and is sometimes rendered by our Translators Zeal, and sometimes Jealousy, the root of both which words is the same. See Num. xxv. 11 concerning Phinehas, and 1 Kings xix. 10. 14 of Elijah, and Isa. lix. 17. John ii. 17.

The word ζηλοῦν, used with an accusative, as here, of a person who is its object, includes both the idea of zeal for him and jealousy against any rival who would supplant the person who is zealous, in the favour of him who is the object of the zeal. Cp. 2 Cor. xi. 2, ζηλῶ ὑμᾶς Θεοῦ ζήλῳ, and 2 Sam. xxi. 2.

The Apostle's meaning here is, I am true to you, I am zealous for your true interests, I am jealous with a godly jealousy (a holy indignation, cp. 2 Cor. vii. 11) against any who would steal your hearts from me, and from the truth, and from God.

They also, your false teachers, pay court to you; they solicit your favour; they profess zeal for your interests, and are jealous of my influence over you. But they do this not honourably (οὐ καλῶς); they profess eagerness to promote your spiritual advancement by admitting you into the Jewish Covenant, and into the favoured family, by Circumcision. But the fact is, their zeal for you is the zeal of envy (cp. Acts vii. 9, οἱ πατριάρχαι ζηλώσαντες Ἰωσὴφ ἀπέδοντο). Their will is (θέλουσιν, see above, v. 9) to exclude you from that covenant into which you have been already admitted by your baptism into Christ (iii. 26—29), and from which they will exclude you if you comply with their solicitations, and lapse into Judaism. See chap. v. 2, 3.

— ἵνα αὐτοὺς ζηλοῦτε] in order that you may pay zealous court to them; as the Jewish Proselytes were expected to do to those who were Hebrews, and who regarded themselves as a nobler race than the mere Jewish Proselytes and Hellenists, to which class the Galatians would belong on their submission to Circumcision. See on Acts vi. 1.

Hence the zeal of the Pharisees to make proselytes. See Matt. xxiii. 15, a text which explains St. Paul's meaning here. By making proselytes they made clients and courtiers, votaries, partizans, and zealots for themselves.

On the syntax of ἵνα ζηλοῦτε, see on 1 Cor. iv. 6, and Winer, p. 259.

18. Καλὸν δὲ τὸ ζηλοῦσθαι ἐν καλῷ πάντοτε] But it is a good thing to be an object of zealous and jealous courtship in a good matter at all times; and such you are to me, not only when I am present with you, but whether I am present with you or absent from you.

I who am the friend of the Bridegroom (cp. John iii. 29), and who have espoused you as a chaste virgin to Christ, am ever zealous and jealous for you with a godly zeal and jealousy, not for my own sake (for I am not the Bridegroom), but for your eternal welfare and for His honour. Cp. 2 Cor. xi. 2, the best exposition of this text.

Compare the note in Mr. Ellicott's excellent Edition of this Epistle, p. 71.

19. τεκνία μου—ὠδίνω] Your relapse is a relapse also to me. I now must regard you once more as τεκνία, little children; I must even endure once more the throes of spiritual parturition till Christ be formed in you. Cp. 1 Thess. ii. 7, and our Lord's words, Matt. xii. 48. Mark iii. 35. Luke viii. 21.

On the relation of οὓς to τεκνία, see John vi. 9, παιδάριον ὅς. Matt. xviii. 19, ἔθνη—αὐτούς. Acts xv. 17; xxvi. 17. Rom. ii. 14.

On the metaphor here used, compare St. Paul's words concerning Onesimus, whom he calls his σπλάγχνα, Philem. 12.

This metaphor has been adopted and expounded in the Epistle of the primitive Churches of Gaul, connected by race with Galatia, in Euseb. v. 1, who say that by means of the Martyrs much joy accrued to the holy Virgin Mother, the Church of Christ, receiving back alive those whom she had lost as abortions, οὓς ἐξέτρωσε, and also because, through means of the Martyrs, very many of her children who had fallen away by apostasy, were again conceived in her womb, and were being brought forth again to life (ἀνεμητροῦντο καὶ ἀνεκυΐσκοντο).

— μορφωθῇ] "Pariuntur ii, in quibus Christi imago formatur." (Ambrose de Isaac, 8. A Lapide.)

20. ἤθελον δὲ παρεῖναι] but I could wish. See Rom. ix. 3. The question, whether he accomplished this desire, is considered above, in the Introduction to this Epistle, § 16—22.

24. ἀλληγορούμενα] allegorized. See the examples of the use of this word in this sense by the Jewish Hellenists, especially Philo, Allegor. ii. p. 1334, et passim, in Wetstein here.

These things of which the Apostle is speaking are not an allegory (for an allegory has no historical basis), but they are allegorized, or allegorically expounded; "per allegoriam dicta" (Vulg. Tertullian c. Marcion. v. 4), and then St. Paul proceeds to unfold their inner meaning;

They have a second spiritual sense; the holy Apostle does not take away the History, but he teaches us what is spiritually signified by it. Theodoret, Chrys.

The Apostle here instructs us how to allegorize aright,—namely, to preserve the truth of the history, while we elicit from it its spiritual sense. Abraham (he says) had two sons, from two wives; here is the History. He then tells us what was their spiritual meaning; there is the Allegory. Primasius.

Marcion and Manes perverted this passage into an argument that the Law was only an Allegory. Jerome.

— δύο διαθῆκαι] Elz. prefixes al—not in the best MSS.

A full exposition of this allegorical sense may be seen in S. Augustine on Ps. cxix. 7, who applies it to the condition of the Visible Church in this world suffering manifold trials and persecution from the race of Ishmael dwelling in the tents of Kedar, the Hagarenes of the earthly generation; but at length to be freed, at the time of the final severance, when the son of the bond-servant will be cast out, and not be permitted to inherit with the true Israelites, the genuine sons of Abraham, the children of the Promise, in the heavenly Jerusalem, the Church glorified.

25. τὸ γὰρ Ἄγαρ] As to the reading of this passage, it is to be observed, that

(1) The word Ἄγαρ is omitted by C, F, G, and by Origen, Vulg., and Jerome, many of the Latin Fathers, and is cancelled by Lachmann.

Bentley, and Kuster in the Preface to his edition of Mill's N. T., supposed Σινᾶ—Ἀραβίᾳ to be a gloss.

But the received reading is strongly confirmed by the best Greek MSS., A, B, D, E, J, K, and the Syriac Versions, and the Greek Fathers.

(2) As to the sense, the words are thus rendered by many Interpreters,—"For the name Hagar is Mount Sina in Arabia;" and it is affirmed by Chrysostom, that Mount Sina was called Agar in the vernacular tongue (ἐπιχωρίᾳ γλώττῃ). And so Theophylact: "Sina is called Agar in the language of the Arabs."

The evidence of modern topographers and philologers on this subject (which may be seen in Winer's and Meyer's notes, and also in Bloomf., Ellicott, Alford) does not appear to be conclusive. Nor does the meaning of a name (unless imposed by Divine authority) seem to afford any strength to the argument for the analogy.

(3) Besides, if St. Paul had desired to make any thing of the argument from the supposed meaning of Hagar's name, he would also have dwelt on the etymology of Sara, the Princess,— שָׂרָה symbolizing the royal prerogatives of Christians (Rev. i. 6) as contrasted with the servile drudgery of the Jews, and as representing the pre-eminence of the Spiritual Jerusalem over the Literal.

(4) Further, this supposition, which regards Ἄγαρ as simply a word or name, and interprets τὸ γὰρ Ἄγαρ as equivalent to, "for the word or name 'Hagar' is Mount Sina in Arabia," is not consistent with St. Paul's own words which follow. For how can a word or name be said to συστοιχεῖν, how can a mere name range with a thing?

(5) St. Paul compares Hagar, the person, with the Levitical Sina and its dispensation; and he compares Sarah, the person, with the Christian Sion and its dispensation.

(6) How then are the words to be construed?

Not by connecting the article τὸ with the word Ἄγαρ (as is commonly done), but with the words Σινᾶ ὄρος, as follows:

For Hagar is (i. e. represents) the Mount Sina in Arabia (τὸ Σινᾶ ὄρος ἐν τῇ Ἀραβίᾳ), and ranges with the Jerusalem that now is; for she is in bondage with her children. But the Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all.

On the connexion of the article τὸ with Σινᾶ it may be observed,

(1) that it was not likely to cause any difficulty, as it was evidently not to be connected with Hagar a woman.

(2) that any other arrangement of the words, e. g. Ἄγαρ γὰρ τὸ Σινᾶ ὄρος ἐστὶν, would have been very inharmonious.

(3) The translation proposed above is confirmed by the old Latin Version in the Codex Claromontanus and Sangerman,—"Agar enim," &c.—and by Theodor. Mopsuest. in Cramer's Catena, p. 71, who says that ἡ Ἄγαρ ἰσοδυναμεῖ τῇ παρ' ἡμῖν Ἱερουσαλήμ, and by the ancient Commentary lately published by Père Pitra as the work of S. Hilary, p. 83; and also by the Vulgate and Cod. Augiensis and Cod. Boernerianus properly understood, and by other respectable authorities, which here omit the word Ἄγαρ, and have "Sina enim mons est in Arabia," i. e. "Hagar is, or represents, Mount Sina in Arabia."

On the article used as here, see Matt. xxvi. 28. Mark vi. 3; vii. 15. 1 Cor. x. 4. Cp. Winer, p. 104; and as to the Hyperbata and Trajections in St. Paul's writings (cp. Eph. ii. 3, τέκνα φύσει ὀργῆς), and the examples in Winer, p. 488—493; and particularly as to the separation of the definite article from its substantive, see the instances in Matthiæ, Gr. Gr. § 278. As to the verb ἐστὶ meaning represents, cp. εἰσὶ in v. 24, and in Rev. i. 20; the candlesticks represent (εἰσὶ) Churches; the stars represent (εἰσὶ) the Angels of the Churches; and xvii. 18, the Woman is the great city, &c. See also 1 Cor. x. 4.

According to this rendering, the sense is plain and easy. Abraham had two sons, Ishmael and Isaac; the one by the bond-woman, Hagar; the other by the freewoman, Sarai. But he who was of the bondwoman was born after the flesh, but he who was of the freewoman was born through the promise. Which things have an allegorical signification. For these women represent two Covenants, the one from Mount Sinai, which beareth children unto bondage, which is Hagar. For Hagar represents Mount Sina in Arabia, and corresponds to the Jerusalem that now is, for she is in bondage with her children. But the Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all.

— δουλεύει] γὰρ sc. Elz. has δουλεύει δὲ, with D, E, I, K, and Syriac and Vulg., and it may be the true reading. But γὰρ is found in A, B, C, D*, F, G.

26. πάντων] Some Editors cancel πάντων here, on the authority of B, C*, D, E, F, G, and some Fathers; but it is found in A, I, K, and the Old Latin Version of Irenæus (v. 35) has "mater omnium nostrum;" and it seems to have been in the text as early as the time of S. Polycarp, ad Philipp. 3, where see Dr. Routh's note.

27. μᾶλλον] rather, not more. See Matt. xviii. 13.

29. ἐδίωκε] was persecuting. An assertion much cavilled at in some recent criticism, which asks, "When did Ishmael ever persecute Isaac?"

This question has been long ago considered and disposed of.

The Book of Genesis only tells us that Sarah saw Ishmael playing with her son Isaac. (Gen. xxi. 9.) The original has מְצַחֵק (metsakhek), and the LXX has παίζοντα. But the temper in which Ishmael played with Isaac, may best be inferred from the comment which Isaac's mother made upon it. Sarah's words interpret Ishmael's act. If his play had been loving play, she would not have been displeased by it. It must have been the spirit of spiteful malice, made more offensive by its pretence to sportiveness and love, which extorted from Sarah the words which the Holy Spirit, speaking by St. Paul, here calls a verdict of Scripture,—a prophetic oracular speech (cp. Gen. ii. 24, with Matt. xix. 5),—Cast out the bondwoman and her son. And Almighty God Himself vouchsafed to confirm Sarah's interpretation of Ishmael's play, by commanding Abraham, although reluctant, to hearken to Sarah's voice in that matter. See Gen. xxi. 12.

Accordingly, it has been well said by one of old (whose words may be commended to the attention of some later Interpreters), "Ludentes eos vidit Sara, et ait 'Ejice ancillam et filium.' Quare? quia vidit eos ludentes? Sed lusum illum Paulus persecutionem vocat, quia lusio illa illusio erat. Major erat Ismael et roboratus in malitia: et fraudes ludendi cum infirmo faciebat; animadvertit mater lusum illum esse persecutionem; sic intelligens Sara lusum illum, dixit Ejice ancillam et filium ejus." Augustine (Serm. 3).

The Holy Spirit, speaking by St. Paul, thus enables us to explain Sarah's words, and justifies them; and so the later portions of the Divine Word will often be found to reflect light upon the earliest records of Inspiration.

St. Paul's comparison here is peculiarly apposite and relevant to the subject before him.

The Judaizers, with whom he is dealing in this Epistle, were like Ishmael, the son of the bondwoman Agar, the representative of the Old Covenant not spiritually understood. They professed friendship for the Galatian Christians, who were the spiritual Isaac. In semblance they were playing with the offspring of the freewoman, but in reality they were persecuting him. The Judaizers were endeavouring to rob the Galatian Christians of their Evangelical inheritance derived from Abraham. Thus Ishmael pretended to be playing with Isaac, but was in fact persecuting him.

The Apostle, therefore, who had just been comparing himself to an affectionate mother, comes forward as a vigilant Sarah, and interferes to part the Jewish Ishmael from the Christian Isaac; and to rescue the children of the promise and of freedom from the treacherous flattery and tyrannical sport of the children of the flesh and of bondage.

The comparison, therefore, is a very happy and beautiful one. And yet it has been contemptuously exploded by some as sophistical and false! And its beauty is much marred by others (as may be seen in Meyer, p. 193, and De Wette, p. 67) who desert the Scriptural narrative of the Book of Genesis (as excellently expounded by Augustine), and resort to a Rabbinical tradition, that Isaac was openly and cruelly persecuted by Ishmael, and suppose that the Apostle here deserted Scripture to follow Tradition.

31. Ἄρα] B, D*, E, and a few cursives, have διὸ here, which is received by Lachm., Tisch., Alf., Ellicott; and Tertullian has 'propter quod' (c. Marcion. v. 34); and so Euseb. de Mart. Palæst. c. 11, who compares Heb. xii. 22: "Ye have come unto Mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem."

Ch. V. 1. Τῇ ἐλευθερίᾳ] Elz. inserts οὖν here, but it is placed after στήκετε by A, B, C*, F, G. There are some other variations here: Lach. omits ᾗ, and Tertullian has "Qua libertate Christus nos manumisit" (c. Marcion. v. 4), and Vulg., which adds "state."

On the true character of this Liberty which has been purchased for Christians by Christ's blood, and which is to be maintained by them as His servants, and not to be bartered away on the one hand by an absolute subjection of their Will, Reason, and Conscience to the domination of another, nor yet to be abused into a plea for insubordination and resistance to lawful Authority in any lawful command, see Bp. Sanderson, iii. p. 276, 277—286, Serm. on 1 Pet. ii. 16.

— μὴ πάλιν ζυγῷ δουλείας ἐνέχεσθε] μὴ ἐνέχεσθε = "ne cervicem jugo subdatis." See the Syriac Version here. Do not put your necks again into a yoke of bondage so as to be held by it. Ἐνέχομαι is the middle voice, as βαπτίζομαι. (1 Cor. x. 2; xv. 29.) St. Peter himself, even at Jerusalem, had called the Levitical Law a yoke. Acts xv. 10.

Ye are not now under the yoke of bondage, but under the easy yoke, the ζυγὸς χρηστὸς, of Christ. Matt. xi. 29, 30.

2. Ἴδε] not ἰδὲ as in Attic Greek. Buttmann, i. 466. Winer, p. 47. De Wette, p. 69.

— ἐγὼ Παῦλος κ.τ.λ.] Mark well, I Paul, whom they falsely accuse of preaching circumcision (see v. 11), warn you that if you are circumcised, i. e. if you submit to circumcision (middle voice, see vv. 1. 4, δικαιοῦσθε) with any belief in the necessity and saving efficacy of circumcision, Christ profiteth you nothing.

It is not to be imagined that St. Paul himself, when he circumcised Timothy (Acts xvi. 3), made Christ to be of none effect to him, or that he would have circumcised Timothy in order to conciliate any one, if such would have been the result.

But Christ would have been of none effect to Timothy if he had been circumcised under any persuasion that Circumcision was in itself necessary and profitable for salvation, and if he had relied on it as such, as the Judaizers persuaded the Galatians to do. See S. Augustine's Epistle to S. Jerome on this subject, Epist. lxxxii. 20, Vol. ii. p. 295, and note above on Acts xvi. 3.

3. Μαρτύρομαι] I protest. See Acts xx. 26.

4. Κατηργήθητε ἀπό] "evacuati estis a." (Vulg.) Ye were reduced from a state of ἐνέργεια to one of ἀέργεια and ἀργία. Cp. Rom. vii. 2, Ye have been made void from Christ. Ye have disfranchised yourselves. Καταργεῖν, a word peculiar to St. Luke (Luke xiii. 7, where see note) and to St. Paul, who uses it about twenty-seven times.

This state of ἀργία, to which they reduce themselves by seeking for Justification from the Law, is contrasted with the state of inner life and Christian fruitfulness described in v. 7, πίστις δι' ἀγάπης ἐνεργουμένη.

— δικαιοῦσθε] are justifying yourselves, are placing your hopes of Justification, in the Law.

— τῆς χάριτος ἐξεπέσατε] εἰ κατὰ νόμον Ἰουδαϊσμοῦ ζῶμεν, ὁμολογοῦμεν χάριν μὴ εἰληφέναι. Ignatius (ad Magnes. 8).

5. Πνεύματι] By the Holy Spirit. We, by the operation of the Holy Ghost, wait from Faith for the hope (not of being justified, for we have already been justified by Faith, when we were baptized, see 1 Cor. vi. 11. Rom. v. 1, 9) which Justification holds out to us.

This is to be connected with what precedes, Ye, by seeking to be justified by the Law, would fall from the state of Grace and Favour in which ye were, and in which ye are.

For we, by the Operation of the Holy Ghost from our foundation of Faith (ἐκ πίστεως), patiently wait for the blessed hope (Tit. ii. 13), the hope laid up in heaven (Col. i. 5), as a fruit and reward of the Justification first conveyed to us when we put on Christ in our Baptism (Gal. iii. 27), and which receives fresh occasions of Sanctification by the daily renewing of the Holy Ghost (Tit. iii. 5), and which is consummated in the "new heavens and new earth wherein dwelleth Righteousness." 2 Pet. iii. 13.

Having received the earnest of the Spirit, and having Faith in God's promises, we wait for the life to come, which will be glorified in immortality and freedom from sin. Theodoret. See also Augustine de Spiritu, c. 56. 9, 10, Vol. x. p. 354.

6. ἐνεργουμένη] working inwardly and effectually. See 1 Thess. ii. 13. 2 Thess. ii. 7. 2 Cor. i. 6; iv. 12. Rom. vii. 5. Col. i. 29. Eph. iii. 20. It has never a passive sense in the New Testament. See Fritz. on Rom. vii. 5.

7. Ἐτρέχετε καλῶς· τίς ὑμᾶς ἐνέκοψε] Ye were running well. Who drove you athwart from the course? Elz. has ἀνέκοψε, but ἐνέκοψε is the reading of the best authorities.

The metaphor seems to be derived from a Chariot Race, where one Car impinges upon another, and flings it aside from the course. Cp. 1 Thess. ii. 18. 1 Pet. iii. 7. ἐγκόπτω, incido, impedio, Gloss. Vet. ap. Labb. ἐγκόπτει = ἀναχαιτίζει, Suid.

8. Ἡ πεισμονὴ] Your persuasion is not from Him Who called you, i. e. from God. You have been persuaded (you say) by the arguments of your new teachers; but this is a persuasion which has led you to be not persuaded of what is true, τῇ ἀληθείᾳ μὴ πείθεσθαι.

But still I entertain a hope that there is but little leaven among you, though it may (if not cast out) leaven the whole lump; and I am therefore persuaded in the Lord that you will be no otherwise minded than you were at first; and he who troubleth you will bear the condemnation (of having dissuaded you from the truth) whoever he may be.

9. μικρὰ ζύμη—ζυμοῖ] St. Paul applies this same proverb to errors both in faith and in practice.

When he speaks of persons leavened, he means not only such as are lewd of life, tainted that way, but even such as are unsound in matters of religion. To the Corinthians he would have the incestuous person cast out with his leavened life (1 Cor. v. 6, 7); to the Galatians he presseth the same point against another kind (Gal. v. 3, 4), such as leavened the Gospel with Moses' ceremonies, and so corrupted the truth in religion (Gal. v. 9. 12); and them he would have cut off, both Corinthian and Galatian leaven; both must out. And mark, upon the same reason both, and in the very same words, that a little leaven doth not a little hurt (Gal. v. 9), but marreth the whole. Evil doctrine is against truth; evil life against walking in the truth; evil company will bring us to both; therefore away with them. Bp. Andrewes, iii. p. 306.

11. εἰ περιτομὴν ἔτι κηρύσσω] An answer to the objection that because he had circumcised Timothy (Acts xvi. 3) he must be an advocate for circumcision.

12. Ὄφελον] See 1 Cor. iv. 8. 2 Cor. xi. 1. Winer, p. 276.

— καὶ ἀποκόψονται] a difficult passage. The best explanation, indeed the only one which seems to be admissible, is as follows;

These false Teachers accuse me of preaching Circumcision, which, if enforced, as they enforce it, is only a mutilation of the body. And then the Apostle exclaims, "Utinam etiam se ipsos castrarent!"

The sense is well expressed in the ancient commentary lately edited by Père Pitra, p. 88: "Si frivolam corporis excisionem bonum quid esse judicant, etiam integra membra genitalia sibi excidant, ut majora acquirant lucra, si carnis excisione juvari se existimant!"

The true interpretation may be arrived at by the following considerations:—

(1) The sense of the word ἀποκόπτεσθαι here used is 'mutilare seipsum.' See Arrian, Epictet. ii. 20, and Hesych. Γάλλος (Priest of Cybele) ὁ εὐνοῦχος, ὁ ἀπόκοπος, and especially the use of the word in the Septuagint Version of the Jewish Law (Deut. xxiii. 1, ἀποκεκομμένος), which affords a clue to the true sense of this passage.

(2) The almost universal consent of the Greek and Latin Fathers who have expounded this passage. See the Commentaries here of Chrys., Theodoret, Theophyl., Jerome, and Augustine, and a considerable degree of concurrence of modern Expositors. See Meyer, p. 211.

(3) A somewhat similar paronomasia in Phil. iii. 2, where St. Paul uses the word κατα-τομὴ, concision, in order to censure and condemn in strong and stern language the Judaistic enforcement of περι-τομὴ, circumcision.

(4) The insertion of the conjunction καὶ, even, intimating more to be done in the case of false Teachers than in that of the taught.

(5) We must remember also that the act of ἀποκοπὴ, or self-mutilation, abhorred as it is by us (blessed be God, through Christianity), was familiar to the Heathen, especially to the Galatians,—even as an act of Religion.

There was a peculiar propriety in a reference to such an act in this Epistle to the Galatians, acquainted as they were with the fanatical excesses of the Galli, or Priests of Cybele, who were excited by their religious zeal to mutilate themselves, ἀποκόπτεσθαι, particularly in the Galatian city of Pessinus on Mount Dindymus, whence Cybelé was called Dindyméné. See Strabo, xii. p. 567, Ammian. Marcellin. xxii. 9, and particularly the poem of Catullus, almost unrivalled in the awfulness of its grandeur and the tenderness of its pathos, in which one of the votaries of this dreadful superstition pours forth the bitterness of his soul in remorse for his deed.

(6) The Apostle's meaning appears to be, Would that this example of the enthusiastic self-mutilation of your heathen priests the Galli would be imitated by these Judaizing deceivers, who are subverting you on the plea of religious zeal, and who are imposing on you Galatians, as necessary to your salvation, the rite of circumcision, which, when enforced as such, is as vain and injurious as the phrenzied self-violation of the votaries of your heathen Goddess.

(7) But was not this a vindictive wish on the part of St. Paul?

It may be explained by the following considerations:—

These Judaizers were enforcing circumcision, which had now become concision. (Phil. iii. 2, see note.) St. Paul desires that they would go further in their own case; that they, who in zeal for the Law are subverting the faith of those who believe the Gospel, would even (καὶ) become ἀποκεκομμένοι. Then what would be the result? A beneficial one for you Galatians, in comparison with their present treatment of you; and a good one also, comparatively, even for themselves. There would be more hope from their ἀποκοπὴ, ex-cision, than from their περι-τομὴ, or circumcision. There would be more hope of them even if they imitated the Priests of Cybele in one particular characteristic, than if they continue to be votaries of the Law in their sense of it. For then, being ἀποκεκομμένοι, they would be excluded from the Jewish Congregation, according to the enactments of that very Jewish Law which they now desire to impose on you. (Deut. xxiii. 1.) Then they would begin to feel the rigour of that Law; then they would be ashamed of enforcing it on you; then they would be thankful to be freed from it themselves. Then there would be good hope, that they also would joyfully hail and accept the gracious liberty of the Gospel, and would be joined as sound members to the Body of Christ.

— οἱ ἀναστατοῦντες ὑμᾶς] they who are subverting you. The word ἀναστατοῦν is properly applied to the hostile act of an army, assaulting, taking, and destroying a city, and uprooting its inhabitants and selling them into slavery. And by this word the Apostle intimates that the false teachers are rooting up the Galatians from the soil of their heavenly city, and reducing them to bondage. See Chrys.

13. μὴ τὴν ἐλευθερίαν] On the ellipse of the accusative, see Winer, p. 526.

Compare the proverb μηδὲν ἄγαν, 'Ne quid nimis.'

17. Πνεύματος] the supernatural grace of God, as throughout in this passage (see vv. 18. 22. 25), where operations are described which cannot be ascribed to man's spirit, but are due to the agency of God the Holy Ghost. See S. Irenæus, v. 10 and v. 11, and S. Augustine, who says (Serm. 128), "Thou hast the means of fighting against the flesh, for thy God is in thee;" and de Natura et Gratia, c. 67, Vol. x. p. 411, where he refers to Rom. v. 5. See also Bp. Sanderson's remarks on the use of the word πνεῦμα here, Vol. i. p. 428, who refers to John iii. 6 as the best explanation of it.

20, 21.] Cp. 2 Cor. xii. 20; and see Justin Martyr (Exhort. ad Græc. p. 40), who has ἔχθραι, ἔρεις, ζῆλος, ἐριθεῖαι.

The word ἐριθεια is from ἔριθος, a labourer for hire (from root ἔρδω),

(1) a mercenary; and

(2) one who hires himself to a cabal for party purposes: and therefore signifies,

(3) a venal partizan: such as the factions of gladiators, and other ruffians hired by rival candidates at elections to intimidate the voters in the Roman forum.

Hence ἐριθεια signifies venal partizanship. See Fritz., Excurs. ad Rom. ii. 8, and Ellicott here. It occurs 2 Cor. xii. 20. Rom. ii. 8. Phil. i. 16; ii. 3. James iii. 14. 16.

22, 23.] On these verses see Bp. Sanderson's Sermons, i. p. 424—447.

24. ἐσταύρωσαν] 'they crucified them' (aorist); i. e. they nailed them to Christ's cross at their Baptism, and "on this cross the Christian must hang all his life long." Augustine (Serm. 205).

CH. VI. 1. ἐὰν κ. προληφθῇ ἄ. κ.τ.λ.] This exhortation to others to recover and restore the penitent in a spirit of meekness, has peculiar propriety at the close of this Epistle, as opening a door to them of return to their spiritual Father, and as assuring them of his parental tenderness and love. Cp. Hilary, in Ps. cxl.

2. Ἀλλήλων τὰ βάρη βαστάζετε] See on v. 5. A comfortable assurance this to the Galatians, that he who thus addresses them was ready to bear their loads.

3. εἶναι τὶ μηδὲν ὤν] ἐὰν δοκῶσι τὶ εἶναι μηδὲν ὄντες. Plato, Apol. p. 41. (Wetstein.) See above, on i. 7.

4. τὸν ἕτερον] the other, with whom he compares himself, as the Pharisee did with the Publican (Luke xviii. 11), in order to elevate himself by depressing him.

5. φορτίον] We are to support (βαστάζειν) one another's βάρη, as Christ bare our infirmities, τὰς νόσους ἡμῶν ἐβάστασε (Matt. viii. 17), and as He bore (ἐβάστασε) the cross (John xix. 17), and commands us to bear it (Luke xiv. 27).

— βαστάσει] This word βαστάζειν is used four times in this Epistle; here, v. 10; vi. 2. 17, and only twice in the rest of St. Paul's Epistles, Rom. xi. 18; xv. 1.

But we may not lay on the shoulders of others, as the Pharisee did, φορτία δυσβάστακτα, ἀνθρώπους φορτίζοντες (Luke xi. 46); nor can we shift the burden of our own sins on any other person. We cannot make the burden of our own sins lighter by imputing a heavier burden of sin to others. Praise of ourselves, whether it proceeds from our own lips or that of others, cannot lighten our burden; it may aggravate it. (Augustine.) We are not better because others may be worse.

Nor can we divest ourselves of our own personal responsibility by transferring the burden of our sins to a spiritual Guide. Every one must bear his own burden at the Great Day.

This precept in v. 5, ἕκαστος τὸ ἴδιον φορτίον βαστάσει, is to be taken together with that in v. 2, ἀλλήλων τὰ βάρη βαστάζετε, and a distinction is to be made between φορτία and βάρη, as was observed by an ancient Father, who says that every man's sins are his φορτία, and that we are not to bear the (φορτίον) burden of one another's sins by partaking in them, nor to call others to take a part in bearing the burden of our sins. But Christ calls us to Himself, because we labour and are heavy laden by them, and exhorts us to take His light burden (φορτίον) upon us. (Matt. xi. 28—30.) Thus He converts our heavy burdens, which depress us to earth, into light wings, which waft us to heaven. The wings of birds are their weights, which they bear, and which bear them. Let thy soul have the weight of Christ's burden; "hæc sarcina non est pondus onerati, sed ala volaturi;" it has the pinions of peace, and the wings of charity, and will bear thee to heaven. Thus bear thy own weight, and it will bear thee.

But we must also bear one another's βάρη. Such a load is Poverty, and such a load also is Wealth. Poverty is the load of some, and Wealth is the load of others, perhaps the greater load of the two. It may weigh thee down to perdition. Bear the load of thy neighbour's poverty, and let him bear with thee the load of thy wealth. Thou lightenest thy load by lightening his. Thus bear one another's loads, and fulfil the law of Christ. Cp. Augustine (Serm. 164).

6. Κοινωνείτω] Let him who is taught in the Gospel communicate in all his worldly substance with his spiritual Pastor.

On the use of κοινωνεῖν (not active, 'contribuere,' but neuter, 'communicare') and κοινωνία, in the sense of communication of our worldly substance with others, see Phil. iv. 15. 2 Cor. viii. 4; ix. 13; and Chrys. and Theophyl. here, and the examples quoted by Wetstein.

9. Τὸ δὲ καλὸν ποιοῦντες] See 2 Thess. iii. 13.

— ἐγκακῶμεν] So A, B, D*. Elz. has ἐκκακῶμεν. See on 2 Cor. iv. 1. 16.

11. Ἴδετε πηλίκοις ὑμῖν γράμμασιν ἔγραψα τῇ ἐμῇ χειρί] Mark, with what large letters I have written this Epistle to you with my own hand.

A memorable admonition, and doubtless intended to be very significant.

On this sentence it may be observed, that

(1) Ἴδετε is not to be translated ye see, but mark ye; and is an emphatic word, used to call attention to a remarkable fact, or noticeable object, or memorable precept. Compare its use above, v. 2, and particularly in John i. 29. 36. 47; xix. 5. 26; and in the Book of Revelation, vi. 2. 5. 8.

(2) πηλίκος means 'how great,' 'how large.' See Zech. ii. 2, LXX. Heb. vii. 4. Cp. Theocr. iv. 55, ὀσσίχον ἐστὶ τὸ τύμμα, καὶ ἁλίκον ἄνδρα δαμάσσει.

(3) ὑμῖν, to you, is put in a remarkable place, between πηλίκοις and γράμμασιν, and before its verb ἔγραψα. Mark, with what large letters I have written to you, with my own hand. Thus St. Paul calls attention to the fact that he is now doing something special to them, the Galatians, which he did not do to others.

(4) γράμμασιν means characters traced in writing. Compare Æschyl. S. c. T. 429, χρυσοῖς δὲ φωνεῖ γράμμασιν, ΠΡΗΞΩ ΠΟΛΙΝ. See also ibid. v. 647, ὡς τὰ γράμματα λέγει, ΚΑΤΑΞΩ Δ' ΑΝΔΡΑ ΤΟΝΔΕ κ.τ.λ.

(5) ἔγραψα refers not only to the portion of the Epistle that follows, but to the whole Epistle, which was written by the Apostle with his own hand. Chrys., Jerome, Theodoret.

Indeed there would have been nothing noticeable in the circumstance that only a few lines of the Epistle were written in large letters with St. Paul's own hand.

(6) But the two circumstances to which he calls their attention are that, contrary to the custom of those times in which authors usually dictated their productions to Secretaries, but did not write them with their own hand (see on Horat. 1 Epist. x. 49, "Hæc tibi dictabam," &c., and 1 Sat. x. 92, "I puer, atque meo citus hæc subscribe libello"), and contrary to St. Paul's own previous practice and general intention, which was to dictate his Epistles to an amanuensis, and only to authenticate them with his own signature and Benediction at the close of the Epistle (see on 2 Thess. iii. 17), he took the pains of writing the whole of this present Epistle to the Galatians with his own hand.

(7) This was a circumstance which well deserved their attention.

Even when ordinary persons wrote any of their own productions with their own hands, it was thought worthy of record. Thus it is noted concerning Origen, that certain ἐπισημειώσεις prefixed to his works were ὀλόγραφοι, i. e. written entirely with his own hand. (See Euseb. vi. 24, with the note of Valesius.) The remarkable σημείωσις of S. Irenæus, referred to by Eusebius (v. 20), seems also to have been of this kind.

(8) It was therefore a fact which might well arrest the attention and excite the gratitude of the Galatians, that St. Paul, in the midst of his labours and sufferings for Christ, had found time and inclination to do for them, who had fallen away from their first enthusiasm for him, what he had not done for the Thessalonians, and what, as he had declared to the Thessalonians, he did not intend to do for any other Church, namely, to write to them an entire Epistle, and that not a short one, with his own hand.

He thus marked his solicitude for their spiritual welfare, and his affection for them, and also his sense of the importance of the subject on which he was writing in this Epistle.

(9) He also calls their attention to the fact that he writes this Epistle to them in large letters.

What was there noticeable in this circumstance? Why does he exhort them to observe it? Not, surely, in order that (as has been sometimes said) they might there see a proof of any infirmity or defect in him, such as weakness of eyesight or incompetency to write well.

Such an avowal on his part would not have been likely to give any weight to his exhortations, but might rather have furnished an occasion to the Galatians for treating his person and office with levity and disparagement. If (they might have said) he cannot write well, why does he write with his own hand? Why does he make an exception in our case? and why does he not write, as his custom is, by a secretary who can write well?

(10) But the reference to the largeness of the letters in which this Epistle was written, was doubtless designed to serve the same purpose as the reference to the fact that it was written in his own hand.

It was intended to confirm the inferences thence to be derived, viz. that the writer felt special love and anxiety for the persons to whom he writes, and laid special stress on the subject concerning which he writes.

In explanation then of this expression it is to be observed, that St. Paul's Epistles, which were written at his dictation by Secretaries (notarii, amanuenses), were probably written with rapidity, as was the case with those discourses which were taken down from the mouths of speakers in ancient times, and of which we find mention in Eusebius, vii. 29. Such notaries were in course of time regularly appointed to serve as officers of Christian Churches, and had stated ecclesiastical duties as such. (See the authorities in Bingham, iii. 13.) From the rapidity of their writing they were called ὀξύγραφοι and ταχύγραφοι. To them we owe the Acts of the primitive Martyrs, such as of S. Ignatius and S. Polycarp, still extant. Such notaries would not write in large characters, but in smaller ones to save time.

The Apostle might have spared himself much time and trouble if he had employed one of these amanuenses, or if he had written in such characters as they used.

But he would prove his special affection to the Galatians by writing in his own hand, and also by writing in large letters, which by their very appearance would afford visible demonstration to all who saw this Epistle (which was to be circulated among the Churches of Galatia, see i. 1) that he puts forth boldly and singly, in his own name and in his own hand, a solemn claim to be heard as "an Apostle," not of men, or by men, but by Jesus Christ and God the Father (Gal. i. 1); and accordingly he does not associate any one's name with his own in the beginning of this Epistle; and that, though he writes this Epistle with vehemence and impetuosity, and with sudden bursts of astonishment and indignation, mingled with affectionate appeals of almost maternal tenderness, and with moving exhortations and imperative mandates of paternal authority, yet that nothing that he has there written is to be ascribed to transitory impulse or momentary ebullition of feeling, but that all his words have been well weighed, that every syllable and every letter has been traced with his own hand with calm deliberation; and that though he was charged with temporizing and vacillation by some, yet that the Galatians might see, even in the boldness, and firmness, and clearness of the characters with which he wrote, an indication of the vigour of authority and plainness of speech with which he delivers his message, and of his own constancy and courage in delivering it. Cp. Theodor. Mopsuest. (in Cramer, Caten. p. 90), who says that St. Paul, purposing to make an aggression on his adversaries in this Epistle, employed larger characters to show that he is not ashamed of himself, and does not shrink from what is said.

(11) But is there not something even deeper than this in the admonition, "Mark with what large letters I have written to you in my own hand?"

Probably there is. What was the message in this Epistle? what is its subject?

It may be summed up in those few words which the Apostle quotes from the prophetic declaration of the Old Testament (Hab. ii. 4) in chap. iii. 11, "The just shall live by Faith."

Justification by Faith in Christ, and not by the works of the Law, is the one doctrine which is the subject of this Epistle.

Now, in proclaiming this doctrine by the Prophet Habakkuk in the Old Testament, the Holy Spirit had used certain memorable words, to which (it is probable) the Apostle here alludes.

The prophet had said, "I will stand upon my Watch, and set me upon the tower (or rock), and will watch to see what He (the Lord) will say to me, and what I shall answer when I am reproved." n ch. 3. 29. 2 Cor. 4. 10. & 11. 23—25. Col. 1. 24.

12 [i] Ὅσοι θέλουσιν εὐπροσωπῆσαι ἐν σαρκὶ, οὗτοι ἀναγκάζουσιν ὑμᾶς περιτέμνεσθαι, μόνον ἵνα μὴ τῷ σταυρῷ τοῦ Χριστοῦ διώκωνται· 13 οὐδὲ γὰρ οἱ περιτεμνόμενοι αὐτοὶ νόμον φυλάσσουσιν, ἀλλὰ θέλουσιν ὑμᾶς περιτέμνεσθαι, ἵνα ἐν τῇ ὑμετέρᾳ σαρκὶ καυχήσωνται. 14 [k] Ἐμοὶ δὲ μὴ γένοιτο καυχᾶσθαι, εἰ μὴ ἐν τῷ σταυρῷ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, δι' οὗ ἐμοὶ κόσμος ἐσταύρωται, κἀγὼ τῷ κόσμῳ. 15 [l] Ἐν γὰρ Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ οὔτε περιτομή τι ἐστὶν, οὔτε ἀκροβυστία, ἀλλὰ καινὴ κτίσις. 16 [m] Καὶ ὅσοι τῷ κανόνι τούτῳ στοιχήσουσιν, εἰρήνη ἐπ' αὐτοὺς καὶ ἔλεος, καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν Ἰσραὴλ τοῦ Θεοῦ.

17 [n] Τοῦ λοιποῦ κόπους μοι μηδεὶς παρεχέτω· ἐγὼ γὰρ τὰ στίγματα τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ ἐν τῷ σώματί μου βαστάζω.

18 Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ τοῦ πνεύματος ὑμῶν, ἀδελφοί. ἀμήν.

This was precisely St. Paul's condition when he wrote this Epistle. He, like the Prophet, had been reproved. His Epistle is apologetic. He had been obliged to mount his watch, to set himself upon his tower, and to deliver a message from God to the Galatians, who had now strayed from him, and who had been arrayed by his enemies against him.

And what was the answer of God to the Prophet?

The Lord answered me and said, "Write the Vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it."

Observe also that the Prophet is informed that the Vision is for an appointed time, which specially denotes the fulness of time (compare Gal. iv. 4), the time of the end, the time of the Gospel; and that its fulfilment is not to be immediate, that it is to be patiently waited for (compare Gal. v. 5), that at the end (or at the last) it shall speak and not lie; though it tarry wait for it, because it will surely come, and it will not tarry. Thus some distant accomplishment of the prophetic Vision was pre-announced to the prophet, and he was warned that his prophecy will not soon be exhausted.

What now was the message to the Prophet Habakkuk?

It was precisely the same message which the Apostle St. Paul afterwards delivered in this Epistle, and which he delivered in the very words of the Prophet Habakkuk (Habak. ii. 4. Cp. Gal. iii. 11), The Just shall live by his Faith.

This was the message which the Prophet was enjoined to write with his own hand; and which he was commanded to write in such large letters, that he might run that reads it.

(12) Therefore, lastly, when we consider that the same Holy Spirit Who had spoken by the Prophet spake by St. Paul, and that the words of the Holy Ghost to the Prophets do not die with them, but have also a meaning for the Apostles (as St. Paul here shows); and that St. Paul was an Apostle, "not of men," nor through men, but through Jesus Christ, and God the Father; and that the one doctrine delivered in this Epistle is the same doctrine as that delivered by the Prophet Habakkuk; and that he quotes the Prophet's language as the exponent of that doctrine; and that this doctrine is described as a Vision that is for an appointed time, and to be tarried for, to be waited for; and that in the end it will speak and not lie; and that this doctrine is the root of the Gospel, as distinguished from the Law, may we not say, with reverence, that there was something of Divine direction even in the very act by which the Apostle made an exception to his usual practice in writing this Epistle; and that by the writing of it in his own hand, and also in the writing of it in large letters, he connected himself with the prophetic watchman when he was reproved; and that he fulfilled in a secondary sense a Divine prophecy, and complied with a Divine command, "Write the Vision and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it?" The Vision is for an appointed time, and in the end it will speak and not lie. "Behold, THE JUST SHALL LIVE BY FAITH;" and that St. Paul calls attention to that identification, when he exhorts the Galatians in this solemn admonition at the close of this Epistle, "Behold, with what large letters I have written to you with mine own hand. He that runs may read it; let all who read it run well" (Gal. v. 7); "let all who run, run by this rule." (See v. 16.)

15. ἐστὶν] So A, B, C, D*, E, F, G.—Elz. ἰσχύει, which is a gloss.

16. κανόνι] The rule, or line of the course, on which the Christian is to run. See on 2 Cor. x. 13—16. The line or rule of faith here spoken of is that contained in vv. 14, 15, and, in one word, the doctrine of Justification by Faith in Christ.

— εἰρήνη ἐπ' αὐτοὺς καὶ ἔλεος] The only place in the New Testament where εἰρήνη is placed before ἔλεος. See 1 Tim. i. 2. 2 Tim. i. 2. Tit. i. 4. 2 John 3. Jude 2.

17. κόπους μοι μ. π.] let no one trouble me, by alleging that I am a mere time-server, and preach Circumcision to some, and Christian Liberty to others (see v. 11); for I bear in my body the proofs of my loyalty to Christ in the scars and wounds I have received through the envy of the Judaizers for His sake, particularly at Lystra (Acts xiv. 19; cp. xv. 26), and from the Heathen at Philippi (xvi. 22, 23).

Let no one disturb me; for I am Christ's servant, soldier, and worshipper (see next note), engaged in Christ's service. He therefore that interrupts and disturbs me in my work, is guilty of an affront not to me only, but to my Master, Christ.

— στίγματα] I bear στίγματα in my body, the brands of Christ. An allusion to three ancient customs:

(1) of slaves, who were branded with the names of their masters.

(2) of soldiers, who wore the marks of the General whom they served.

(3) of votaries of Deities, whose names and emblems they bare on their bodies.

Ancient authorities on this subject may be seen, cited by Wetstein here, and in the Appendix to the present Editor's edition of the Apocalypse, Appendix G.

So (says the Apostle) I, the servant, soldier, and worshipper of Christ, my Master, Captain, and God, bear His marks imprinted on my body. "Christum igitur hic repræsentat ut Deum." Wetstein.

These 'stigmata' were the marks of the sufferings endured by St. Paul in Christ's service, and they proved his loyalty to Christ.

"Apostolus stigmata voluit appellare quasi notas pœnarum de persecutionibus quas patiebatur." Augustine.

This was what Christ had promised at his Conversion. (Acts ix. 16.) "Sed," adds Aug., "omnes illæ tribulationes ei ad coronam victoriæ proficiebant." These scars on his body are proofs of his courage, and trophies of his victory. Chrysostom.

In a secondary sense, it may also perhaps be worthy of consideration, whether the Apostle, having been sealed by Christ with the sign of the cross at his baptism, does not here say that he bare the στίγματα of Christ; and (as has been remarked by Professor Blunt, Lectures, p. 136) there is something appropriate in this sense here, where the Apostle has been just speaking of Circumcision, and then of the Cross, and of the new creature. And then adds, "as many as walk by this Rule, the Rule of Christian Faith (as distinguished from the Levitical Law), professed by them at their Baptism, peace be on them, and upon the Israel of God;" i. e. on all the company of faithful people who are Israelites indeed, true children of God, by the faith of their Father Abraham.

Hence probably it is that there are no salutations to individuals at the close of this Epistle to the Galatians. It would have been invidious to specify only a few names among so many, and it would have been impossible to enumerate all.

The same observation applies to the two Epistles to the Corinthians (see 1 Cor. i. 1, and 2 Cor. i. 1), in which there are no salutations of individuals, and also to the Epistle to the Ephesians. (See on Eph. i. 1.)

INTRODUCTION

TO

ST. PAUL'S TWO EPISTLES TO THE CORINTHIANS.

I. On the design, contents, and results, of the Two Epistles to the Corinthians.

The two Epistles to the Corinthians afford remarkable specimens of the operation of Divine power working by the ministry of St. Paul, for overruling evil by good; and for making the designs of the Evil One into occasions for declaring the truth, and promoting the glory of Christ; and for converting local and temporary scandals and calamities into means of instruction and edification to the Church of every age.

This appears as follows:

(1) There were schisms at Corinth; religious dissensions and divisions, feuds and factions, under party-leaders. The Corinthian Church had written a letter to St. Paul, which he received a little while before he wrote this Epistle (1 Cor. vii. 1). In that letter they had put several questions to him concerning their own spiritual regimen; but it does not appear that they had made any mention in it of their own distracted condition. On the contrary, they seem to have gloried in their religious divisions, and to have been puffed up in behalf of one leader against another (1 Cor. i. 11; iii. 4. 22; iv. 6—8. 18). And he was left to learn their divisions from some private persons—those of Chloe—probably by word of mouth (i. 11).

These divisions furnished the Apostle with an occasion for stating the principles, duty, and privileges of Church Unity. See 1 Cor. xii. 12—27.

(2) The Greeks generally,—and especially the Corinthians, being exercised in human learning and secular eloquence and philosophy,—were proud of intellectual gifts. The Apostle hence took occasion to assert, by way of contrast, the transcendent excellency of that Divine wisdom in which he himself had been schooled, and the surpassing worth of the Cross of Christ which he had preached at Corinth (1 Cor. ii. 1—9), as the fundamental article of saving truth,—although it was a stumbling-block to the Jews, and to the Greeks foolishness (i. 23).

He was also constrained thereby to assert his own qualifications for revealing hidden mysteries, and for declaring supernatural truths by Divine Inspiration, not only with regard to the substance of what he so declares, but also as to the language in which he utters it (1 Cor. ii. 10—13).

(3) The Corinthians were guilty of sins of Impurity, for which their City was notorious. Hence the Apostle is led to remind them of their Christian obligations to Holiness, grounded

1. on their incorporation by Baptism into the mystical Body of Christ (1 Cor. vi. 15).

2. and on the consecration of their bodies into Temples of the Holy Ghost (1 Cor. iii. 16; vi. 19. 2 Cor. vi. 16).

3. on their redemption by Christ, so that they are not their own, but His (1 Cor. vii. 23); and are bound to glorify Him in their bodies, which are His (1 Cor. vi. 20); and

4. on the doctrine of the Resurrection of the Body, designed for a glorious Immortality (1 Cor. xv. 42—54).

(4) The Corinthians had been induced, in a vain conceit of superior knowledge (γνῶσις, 1 Cor. viii. 1), and in the indulgence of a carnal appetite, to eat meats that had been offered in sacrifice to the Heathen Idols of Corinth, although they knew those meats to have been so offered.

Hence St. Paul was constrained to lay down the principles which ought to regulate human conduct in the use of indifferent things,—i. e. of things neither prescribed nor prohibited by Divine or human authority. And he teaches, that many things not forbidden are to be foregone and forborne by Christians, from a charitable regard to the spiritual benefit of their brethren, even though they be weak (1 Cor. viii. 11—13); and that the edification of others, their fellow-members in Christ's body, and the good of the whole Body, is to be the end aimed at by the faithful, in the use of things indifferent (1 Cor. x. 23—32).

(5) The Apostle had not claimed ministerial maintenance for himself during the eighteen months in which he had been resident at Corinth, but had worked for his bread with his own hands (Acts xviii. 3. 2 Cor. xi. 9; xii. 13, 14). And this act of forbearance on his part, as contrasted with that of other preachers (1 Cor. ix. 6), had been construed by some into a distrust, on his part, of his own Apostolic mission and authority.

He was thus induced to explain the reasons of his own forbearance in this respect; and he shows that it had been produced by considerations of regard for their edification; and he thence inculcates on them a similar regard for the spiritual welfare of others. And he proceeds to state with greater force even because he himself had waived his own claim to sustenance from his flock, the sacred duty of all Christian People to provide adequate maintenance for their Pastors (1 Cor. ix. 7—15).

(6) There were many irregularities in the public assemblies of the Church at Corinth, in regard

1. to the attire of women.
2. to the Administration of the Holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

St. Paul took occasion therefrom to recall the attention of the Corinthians to first principles, as laid down in Holy Scripture and in the Law of Nature and of Reason, and as shown in the universal sense of mankind, and in Christian usage (1 Cor. xi. 16);

1. As to the true relation of woman to man; and the consequent difference to be maintained in regard to their attire; and then he proceeds to apply these principles to the question before him (1 Cor. xi. 3—16).

2. As to the second point, he points out the true principles of Reformation, whether in Doctrine or Discipline. He shows by his reasonings on this question, that when a degeneracy has ensued in either of the two, it is no part of Christian wisdom to destroy what has been abused; but that its proper office is to look back to the original institution and design, and to remove the abuse by restoring the use. This is what is done by St. Paul in his correction of the abuses which had crept into the Church of Corinth in the administration of the Holy Communion (1 Cor. xi. 17—33). A noble example of genuine Reformation, for every age.

(7) The Corinthians were richly endowed with spiritual gifts (1 Cor. i. 4—7), particularly in speaking with Tongues. But they misused these gifts for occasions of vain-glorious and unprofitable self-display, and of unseemly rivalry and contention.

These abuses furnished St. Paul with an occasion for explaining the true use of supernatural gifts, particularly the gift of Tongues; and for stating what its proper place was in the circle of Christian graces; and also for laying down certain propositions of universal applicability (1 Cor. xii.—xiv.). Particularly, the Divine Apostle was thence led to give a necessary warning to the world, viz. that great spiritual gifts may co-exist with great moral depravity, especially with spiritual pride; and to declare, that no gifts or graces, spiritual or intellectual, are of any avail to those who possess them, unless they use them in a spirit of charity; that is, of love to God, and of love to man in God. He thence proceeds to teach, that the sovereign grace of all Christian graces is Love, which he describes in such language as none could command who was not inspired by the Divine Spirit of Love (1 Cor. xiii.).

(8) A heinous sin had been committed at Corinth by one who appears to have had great influence there (1 Cor. v. 1). This sin had been connived at by the Corinthian Church. And though the Corinthians had written a letter to the Apostle concerning other matters (1 Cor. vii. 1), yet they had made no report to him there concerning this grievous scandal, or concerning the divisions among themselves, which were reported to him by others (1 Cor. i. 11; v. 1; xi. 18).

On the other hand, such was their spiritual blindness, that they were puffed up (1 Cor. v. 2), and imagined themselves to be in a safe and prosperous state; they were elated with a vain-glorious spirit of pride, presumption, and self-sufficiency, and were disposed to manifest an insubordinate and refractory temper of contemptuous disobedience to the Apostle's person and office, rather than to receive seasonable rebuke and salutary correction from him.

This enormous sin, and the indifference and even self-complacency with which it was viewed by the Corinthian Church, afforded St. Paul an opportunity of vindicating his own Apostolic authority, and of exercising Ecclesiastical Discipline, and of exhibiting to the Corinthians, and to the Church of every age, the importance and necessity of Penitential Discipline, and the manner in which it ought to be exercised (1 Cor. v. 1—13. 2 Cor. ii. 3—8; vii. 8—12).

We have also here a strong proof of the truth of St. Paul's assertion, that he was invested with supernatural and miraculous powers for accrediting and avouching his claims (2 Cor. xii. 12).

If he had not been inspired by God, he would not have ventured to write to the Corinthians in the authoritative tone of stern reproof, censure, and condemnation, which he uses in these Epistles.

He would rather have sought to win their affections, and conciliate their favour, by smooth speeches.

If, also, the Corinthians had not been convinced, on their part, of his Divine mission, they,—being filled with spiritual self-conceit, and beguiled by the flatteries of vain-glorious teachers hostile to the Apostle,—would have scorned to receive, as they did, the first Epistle of St. Paul, in which they are so severely condemned. They would have refused to comply with its injunctions (2 Cor. ii. 3—8; vii. 8—12). They would not have read it publicly as Canonical Scripture, as the inspired Word of God[1].

(9) Again: the Evil Spirit had tempted some persons, and parties of considerable influence at Corinth, to cavil at and censure St. Paul, and to disparage his person and office, and they had excited a turbulent spirit of disaffection and rebellion against him (1 Cor. iv. 3; ix. 3. 2 Cor. iii. 1; v. 12; x. 2—10).

The Apostle is therefore constrained to state his own claims to respectful reverence and obedience. He is forced to record his own sufferings for the Gospel, and to divulge his own revelations from heaven (2 Cor. xi. 16—33; xii. 1—6).

He is also led to explain the reason, why he was buffeted by a visible bodily infirmity, his "thorn in the flesh" (2 Cor. xii. 7), which seems to have been turned by some envious persons into an occasion for censorious reflections upon him (2 Cor. xii. 10. Cp. Gal. iv. 14).

If St. Paul had not been resisted and vilified by those parties, whom the Enemy of Christ and of the Church had stirred up to thwart him at Corinth, and unless the Apostle had been conscious that the cause of the Gospel would be injured and imperilled, if he suffered their aspersions to escape without refutation, he would never have penned that noble Apology of himself in the Second Epistle to the Corinthians (2 Cor. xi. xii.).

He did not praise himself willingly; but that Vindication of himself was extorted from him. His enemies compelled him to resort to what he called the foolishness of boasting (2 Cor. xi. 17; xii. 11). This is evident from the fact, that though those heavenly Visions to which he there refers had been vouchsafed to him fourteen years before (2 Cor. xii. 2), and though he had been personally resident at Corinth for eighteen months (Acts xviii. 11), yet he had never as yet communicated to the Corinthians any intimation of those his "Visions and Revelations from the Lord." Hitherto he had hid them as a profound secret treasured up in the recesses of his own heart. They were wrung from him by the cavils of others.

If Satan had not stirred up those evil men against the Apostle, the Church would never have had the privilege of knowing how much St. Paul suffered for the Gospel, and how much was revealed to him by Christ.

Thus the censures of his adversaries have been made by God to redound to his praise. Thus the arts of the Enemy endeavouring to undermine his Apostolic authority, and to mar his Apostolic work, have been made instrumental in establishing the credit of this great master-builder in Christ, and of consolidating the fabric which he built.

Thus also the arts of Satan, who had the power of death (Heb. ii. 14), and is the Prince of the power of the air (Eph. ii. 2), and of darkness, and who desires to drown men's souls and bodies in the lake of fire (Rev. xix. 20), have been made, in God's hands, to be instrumental in revealing to the faithful the blessedness of Paradise, to which the souls of those who die in the Lord are conveyed immediately on their dissolution from the body; and also the everlasting glories of the third heaven, in which the faithful will have their perfect consummation and bliss, both in body and soul, for evermore. (See note on 2 Cor. xii. 2—4.)

(10) Lastly: the Arch-enemy of God and man laboured to shake the foundation of the faith in the great article of Christianity, the doctrine of Christ's Resurrection from the Dead, and of the universal Resurrection of the Body. He had too much success at Corinth, where indulgence in the lusts of the flesh, and the speculations of a secular philosophy, had conspired to prejudice many against the reception of this doctrine.

Hence St. Paul was prompted and constrained to write in its defence. He has vindicated and enforced it with such divine power, courage, and eloquence, as to silence for ever those who gainsay it. He was enabled by the Holy Spirit not only to declare the truth of a future Resurrection, but also to describe it. Behold I show you a mystery (1 Cor. xv. 51). He enables us to hear the sound of the last trump; and reveals the dead rising from their graves, and the Saints clothed with their glorified bodies, and all earthly powers subjected to Christ, and Satan and Death put under His feet (1 Cor. xv. 26. 55—57).

Thus the devices of the Evil One sowing tares in the field of God's husbandry (1 Cor. iii. 9), are made to recoil on himself. His dissemination of error in regard to the doctrine of the Resurrection has been made subservient to the declaration of its truth, and to a manifestation of the future discomfiture of Satan himself, and of the full and final triumph of Christ.

Thus by signal examples Almighty God has taught the Church, in these Epistles of St. Paul, to elicit good from evil; to make the prevalence of schism ministerial to her confirmation in Unity, and even the diffusion of Heresy to be subservient to the propagation of the Faith.

Thus also He has comforted and cheered her with the joyful assurance, that all things work together for good to those that love God (Rom. viii. 28); that the worst evils will hereafter be made occasions of the greatest good; and that all the waters of the flood with which the Enemy now seeks to overwhelm her, will make glad the city of God (Ps. xlvi. 4).

II. On the Date, of Time and Place of the First Epistle to the Corinthians.

The First Epistle was written to the Corinthians at Ephesus in the spring of A.D. 57.

This appears from the following evidence.

I. It was written at Ephesus.

1. St. Paul says (1 Cor. xvi. 19), "The Churches of Asia salute you." Ephesus was the capital of the Asia of the New Testament.

2. "Aquila and Priscilla salute you" (1 Cor. xvi. 19). They were at Ephesus during the time in which the Epistle was written. See Acts xviii. 18. 26; and compare also note on Rom. xvi. 3, 4, where Aquila and Priscilla are said to have laid down their necks for St. Paul's life, i. e. probably in his perils at Ephesus.

3. He says also in this Epistle, "I will tarry at Ephesus until Pentecost" (1 Cor. xvi. 8).

4. Accordingly, we find that in the third century Origen takes it for granted that this Epistle was written from Ephesus. See his περὶ εὐχῆς, c. 31, where, commenting on 1 Cor. v. 4, he says that Paul when writing those words was associated not only with the Ephesians (i. e. those with whom he was present in body), "but also with the Corinthians," with whom he was in spirit.

II. The First Epistle to the Corinthians was written in the spring of A.D. 57.

1. At the Pentecost of the year A.D. 58, St. Paul was at Jerusalem, and was there arrested and was sent to Cæsarea, and after two years' detention at Cæsarea was sent to Rome.

This appears from what has been already stated in the Chronological Synopsis prefixed to the Acts of the Apostles, xxxvii.—xxxix.

In the beginning of that year and the end of the preceding one, he had been for the second time at Corinth, where he spent three months (Acts xx. 3), and which he quitted early in A.D. 58, and proceeded thence to Macedonia, where he was at Easter in that year (Acts xx. 6), and thence came, by Troas and Miletus, to Cæsarea and to Jerusalem for the Feast of Pentecost (fifty days after Easter) in the same year (Acts xx. 6—12).

2. It is clear from the language of the First Epistle to the Corinthians, that St. Paul had been already once at Corinth. See 1 Cor. ii. 1, 2. "I, brethren, when I came unto you, came not with excellency of speech." Compare also 1 Cor. ix. 2, where he speaks of the Corinthians as the "seal of his Apostleship," and reminds them that he had preached the Gospel to them without charge (1 Cor. ix. 12—15. Cp. 2 Cor. xi. 9).

It is also evident from the First Epistle, that St. Paul intended to visit Corinth again soon after he had written it. See 1 Cor. iv. 19: "I will come to you shortly, if the Lord will;" and 1 Cor. xvi. 5: "I will come to you when I shall have passed through Macedonia, for I am now intending to pass through Macedonia." See also 1 Cor. xi. 34: "the rest I will set in order when I come."

Many circumstances noticed in the Epistle, viz. the growth of feuds and factions at Corinth (1 Cor. i. 12; iii. 4); the occurrence of many grave questions of doctrine and discipline, concerning which the Corinthians had sent a deputation with a letter to St. Paul (vii. 1) to consult him,—questions with which he deals in a considerable portion of this First Epistle (ch. vii.—xii.),—intimate that St. Paul had not been personally present at Corinth for some considerable length of time before it was written.

Thus we are led to the conclusion, that the First Epistle to the Corinthians was written between two visits to Corinth, but, probably, after a longer interval from the former than from the latter visit.

3. If we now turn to the Acts of the Apostles, we shall find that St. Paul was at Corinth twice. His former visit is described in Acts xviii. 1—11. It lasted at least a year and six months (xviii. 11—18). Thence, after a short visit to Jerusalem, he came to Ephesus, where he spent three years (Acts xx. 31).

He then left Ephesus and came through Macedonia, and paid another visit to Corinth, where he remained (as already said) three months (Acts xx. 3).

Thence he sailed, at the beginning of A.D. 58, in his way to Jerusalem.

The purpose of his visit to Jerusalem was to carry the alms he had collected for the poor Christians at Jerusalem (Acts xxiv. 17), and which had been contributed by the Churches of Galatia, Macedonia, and Achaia (1 Cor. xvi. 1. Rom. xv. 26).

These circumstances tally exactly with what has been already deduced from the First Epistle.

It was at Ephesus that he wrote that Epistle. See above, I. 1.

In that Epistle he says that he intends to remain at Ephesus till Pentecost (1 Cor. xvi. 8).

He also says in that Epistle that he will shortly come to Corinth through Macedonia (1 Cor. xvi. 5).

He says further, that he hopes to remain at Corinth during the ensuing winter (1 Cor. xvi. 6).

These words, written before a Pentecost (1 Cor. xvi. 8), must have been written after the winter preceding it; i. e. they must have been written in spring.

He also incites the Corinthians to make a collection of alms for the poor Saints at Jerusalem (1 Cor. xvi. 1—3), and intimates his own readiness to go with those alms to Jerusalem (1 Cor. xvi. 3).

Thus the visit of which St. Paul speaks as shortly about to be paid by him to Corinth (1 Cor. xvi. 5), is shown to be the same as that which he did pay at the close of A.D. 57, and which lasted three months (Acts xx. 3), and after which he passed through Macedonia, where he was at Easter, A.D. 58, and went with the collection of alms from Macedonia and Achaia to Jerusalem, where he arrived at the ensuing Pentecost in that year.

The First Epistle to the Corinthians was therefore written after the winter of A.D. 56, and before the Pentecost of A.D. 57; i. e. it was written in the spring of A.D. 57, i. e. about the Passover of that year.

4. This result serves to illustrate the contents of the Epistle, and is also illustrated by them.

The reference in the Epistle to the True Passover,—"Christ our Passover is sacrificed" (1 Cor.

v. 7),—the only passage in St. Paul's Epistles, except Heb. xi. 28, where the word πάσχα occurs, gains in force and beauty from the chronological coincidence.

The allusion to leaven (1 Cor. v. 6—8), the exhortation to "keep the feast," and to be spiritually "unleavened" (1 Cor. v. 8), receives additional significance from the same consideration; as is suggested by the adoption of these words of the Apostle into the Ritual of the Church in her Paschal office.

The exhortation to consider the true meaning and design of the Holy Eucharist (1 Cor. xi. 18—34) was very appropriate at the Anniversary of its Institution. The allusion to the Exodus of the Israelites from Egypt, and their passage through the Red Sea, "figuring Holy Baptism;" and the exposition of the typical character of that deliverance (1 Cor. x. 1—11), have a felicitous connexion with the annual commemoration of the sacrifice on the cross, of which these historical Events were figurative adumbrations; and would have been read at that season with especial profit and delight by all at Corinth who had passed, as it were, from the spiritual ante-chapel of the Law into the inner shrine of the Gospel, and from the oblation of Levitical sacrifices to a participation in Evangelical Sacraments. And of all the Easter Homilies ever delivered on the great Anniversary of Christ's Resurrection, none has been more effectual in confirming the faith and comforting the heart, and quickening the hope, and invigorating the energy of the Universal Church, than that glorious Sermon on the Resurrection of the Body which was preached to the Church of Corinth when she first received this Epistle, and has ever since sounded in the ears of universal Christendom, in the public reading of the New Testament.

III. The question,—whether St. Paul had been more than once at Corinth, before he wrote the two Epistles to the Corinthians, will be further considered in the Introduction to the Second Epistle.

Ch. I. 1. κλητός] called. See Rom. i. 1. His calling by Christ is stated in order—

1. To establish his authority equal to that of the other Apostles called by Christ on earth. Therefore his office was not to be disparaged by the Corinthians. He was "called," or had a vocation from Christ to be an Apostle, as they were called or had a vocation as Saints.

2. To show that what he claimed, he claimed not in his own name, but in that of Christ.

— Σωσθένης ὁ ἀδελφός] Sosthenes our brother. If Sosthenes is the same person as he who is mentioned in Acts xviii. 17, as is probable (see note there, and Theodoret), there would be a special reason why he should be associated with St. Paul in addressing this Epistle to the Corinthians. The name of Sosthenes, formerly a chief of the Synagogue at Corinth, would have weight against the Judaizing party who undermined the Apostle's authority at Corinth. (2 Cor. xi. 22.)

2. τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ—κλητοῖς ἁγίοις] To the Church of God—called, and holy. Ἅγιοι, sancti, the proper idea of which is separation from a common to a holy use. As He Who called you is holy, so be ye who have been called by Him holy also. (1 Pet. i. 15.)

Since every one who is called and baptized is thereby separated from the world which are not so, and though the work of grace be not perfectly wrought, yet when means are used, without something appearing to the contrary, we ought to presume the good effect. Therefore all such as have been received into the Church may be in some sense called holy. Bp. Pearson (On the Creed, Art. IX.).

The Corinthians are here called a Church of God, and holy, though they had among them (as this Epistle shows) schisms, and heresies, and grave errors in practice. (See i. 2; iii. 3; v. 1; vi. 6; xvi. 12.) The field was still God's field, though overgrown with tares. (See on Matt. xiii. 26—38.) An important caution for those who fondly hope to see a perfect Church on earth, or forsake the communion of the Church because it is not free from imperfection. Cp. S. Jerome adv. Lucifer. ad fin., and Hooker, iii. 1 and v. 68.

— ἐν Κορίνθῳ] in Corinth. For a description of Corinth at this time, see note on Acts xviii. 1. The character of the inhabitants at this time is briefly drawn by Cicero (de leg. Agrar. ii. 32) in terms which illustrate the topics handled in this Epistle by St. Paul: "Corinthii non minùs lascivia, quàm opulentia et philosophiæ studio insignes." As to the first of these characteristics, it was even made by them a part of their Religion in the worship of Aphrodité, in whose Temple were more than a thousand ἱερόδουλοι, ἑταῖραι, devoted to her impure service. (Strabo, viii. p. 580, A.) See the full historical collections in Wetstein, p. 102, which he sums up thus, "Ex his planiùs intelligimus quæ Apostolus in Sophistas et Sophismata contra Resurrectionem mortuorum, in Scortationem et incestum, denique in divites avaros Corinthiis scripsit;" and cp. Meyer, p. 1, who recites other more recent authorities; and Howson, i. 489—495; ii. 23. 187; and A. P. Stanley's Introduction to the Epistle, 1—18.

— σὺν πᾶσι] with all who call on the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. This Epistle, and the Second to the Corinthians, are addressed not only to the inhabitants of Corinth, but to the Churches of Achaia generally. (See 2 Cor. i. 1.)

Hence there are no salutations of individuals at their close. A similar observation applies to the Epistle to the Galatians, and to the Ephesians. See Gal. vi. 18.

— ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ αὐτῶν τε καὶ ἡμῶν] in every place, theirs and ours. So Vulg., "in omni loco ipsorum et nostro." So Syriac and Arabic. For, though they are separated from us (i. e. from you and me) by the diversity of place, yet, wherever they are, they are united to us by a community of Faith in the One Lord Jesus Christ, whose name we adore with them. An intimation to them that they ought to be at peace and in love, not only among themselves and with the Apostles, but with all Christians throughout the world. Chrysostom.

This expression is also a proof that St. Paul's Epistles were meant for the general use of other Churches besides those to whom they were originally sent and inscribed. See Col. iv. 16. 1 Thess. v. 29.

He also thus shows that all particular Churches make together One Universal Church throughout the World. Origen[1].

4, 5. Εὐχαριστῶ—ἐν παντὶ ἐπλουτίσθητε] He begins with thanksgiving for their rich abundance in spiritual gifts and graces from God, and afterwards proceeds to reprove them for their misuse of those gifts and graces by vain-glorious ostentation and uncharitable rivalry (viii. 1—11; xiv. 26).

— λόγῳ] prophecy and tongues.

6. καθὼς τὸ μαρτύριον—ἐν ὑμῖν] as the testimony concerning

Christ, that is, the preaching and profession of the Gospel (1 Cor. ii. 1) was established in and among you by spiritual gifts and by miracles. Chrys., Theodoret, and Bengel.

7. χαρίσματι] spiritual gift. Χάρισμα is to be distinguished from χάρις,—χάρισμα is a special gift to be used for general edification, χάρις is grace generally for personal sanctification. Tongues, Miracles, Healing are χαρίσματα. Χάρις is given in order that χαρίσματα may be rightly used.

On the continuance of charismata in the Christian Church, see Euseb. v. 7.

— τὴν ἀποκάλυψιν] the Revelation. He so calls it, δεικνὺς ὅτι πᾶν (read ἐὰν or κἂν) μὴ ὁρᾶται (Χριστὸς), ἀλλ' ἔστι, καὶ πάρεστι, καὶ μὴν καὶ τότε φανήσεται. Origen.

10. ἵνα τὸ αὐτὸ λέγητε—νοῒ—γνώμῃ] These sentiments are expressed almost in the same words by an Apostolic Father, showing his acquaintance with this Epistle: ἵνα ἐν μιᾷ ὑποταγῇ ἦτε κατηρτισμένοι τῷ αὐτῷ νοῒ, καὶ τῇ αὐτῇ γνώμῃ, καὶ τὸ αὐτὸ λέγητε πάντες. Ignatius (ad Ephes. 2).

— νοῒ καὶ γνώμῃ] "νοῒ, intus in credendis; γνώμῃ, sententiâ prolatâ, in agendis." Bengel.

On the form of the substantive Genitive νοὸς and Dative νοΐ, used by St. Paul alone in the New Testament, see Winer, § 8, p. 59. The more usual Greek forms are νοῦ and νῷ.

11. ὑπὸ τῶν Χλόης] by those of Chloe.

(1) Why does St. Paul refer to persons as his informants who might be exposed to obloquy from the Corinthians on account of these accusations, and might be disconcerted at finding themselves thus placed publicly in opposition to the powerful members of the communion to which they belonged?

(2) Who were these persons called here οἱ Χλόης?

There was, doubtless, good reason for this mention. St. Paul practises a remarkable reserve and delicacy with regard to names. In this Epistle he never specifies the name of the person who gave him so much grief, nor of any of his own opponents at Corinth. There must, therefore, have been good ground for the mention of the name, that of a woman, here specified.

In order to escape the imputation of giving credence to hearsay reports, and of encouraging anonymous allegations, the Apostle would be desirous to state the authority on which his censure was grounded. But he would hardly have ventured to do so without the consent of the parties themselves who gave him the information.

It seems probable, therefore, that these parties who had brought the information were present with him when he wrote the Epistle, and had consented to this mention of their names,—a mention sufficiently precise to secure credence, and yet sufficiently general to avoid provocation. Observe the Apostle's prudence (says Origen), he does not specify any single person, but an entire household, in order that he might not render them hostile to his informant.

The word ἐδηλώθη seems to intimate oral communication on their part; and this is confirmed by the fact that the information is not represented as coming from Chloe herself, the mistress of the household, but from οἱ Χλόης, members of her family. (Syriac and Arabic Versions.)

From this public mention of Chloe's household in this Epistle, it may be suggested that she may have been at Corinth what Lydia was at Philippi (Acts xvi. 14. 40), and that a Christian Congregation assembled in her house (cp. Rom. xvi. 5), and that she herself may have had an official position in the Church. Cp. note on Acts xviii. 18. Rom. xvi. 1.

It is not unlikely that the persons called οἱ Χλόης had come from Corinth as the bearers of the questions from the Corinthians themselves (vii. 1), and that they were entrusted with the duty of communicating between the Corinthian Church and the Apostle, and that the information which they gave, and to which he here refers, was elicited in reply to his oral inquiries concerning the state of the Corinthian Church, and that they authorized him to refer to them as his authority for the statements in question.

Perhaps they were no other than the Fortunatus and Achaïcus who came to St. Paul with the message from Corinth, of whom he speaks so highly. (1 Cor. xvi. 17.) If so, no exception could be made by any one to statements by St. Paul on such authority.

12. Λέγω δὲ τοῦτο] S. Clement, Bishop of Rome, contemporary with the Apostles, refers to this passage in his own letter to the Corinthian Church (cap. 47) thus, "Take into your hands the Epistle of the blessed Apostle St. Paul. What did he write to you at the first planting of the Gospel among you? Certainly he, being inspired by the Holy Spirit, admonished you concerning himself, and Cephas, and Apollos, because even then there were parties among you."

— Ἀπολλώ] Apollos. See on Acts xviii. 24.

— ἐγὼ δὲ Κηφᾶ] In all the places where that Apostle is mentioned in this Epistle (here, iii. 22; ix. 5; xv. 5), he is mentioned, not by his Greek name Πέτρος, but by his Jewish name Κηφᾶς. Probably this name was more agreeable to those Judaizers who called themselves his adherents at Corinth. Cp. note above on Gal. ii. 11. 14.

It does not appear that Peter had been at Corinth. Rather, from all omissions of his name in St. Paul's narrative of ministerial labours at Corinth (below, iii. 5—7), it would seem that Peter had not been there. He had not been there before St. Paul's first visit (see Rom. xv. 20); and if Peter had come to Corinth after that visit, and before the date of the present Epistle, St. Paul, in mentioning Apollos would hardly have failed to mention Peter.

It is probable that some Jewish Christians at Corinth, who had heard Peter at Jerusalem at the Feast of Pentecost, and on other occasions, and who were disposed to prefer him as having converted them, and as having been specially honoured and favoured by Christ on earth, whereas Paul was not even one of the Twelve who had been called by Christ, would be prone to say Ἐγὼ Κηφᾶ.

It was, however, supposed by S. Dionysius, Bishop of Corinth in the Second Century, that Peter had preached at Corinth. (Euseb. ii. 25.)

On the name Cephas, see John i. 42.

13. Μεμέρισται ὁ Χριστός] A difficult passage.

St. Paul uses the word μερίζω four times in these two Epistles, i. e. here, and vii. 17. 34, and 2 Cor. x. 13. In both the latter places the word μερίζω signifies to allot, to assign a portion, a share, μερίδα. And so Rom. xii. 3, ἑκάστῳ ὡς ὁ Θεὸς ἐμέρισε μέτρον. Heb. vii. 2, ᾧ καὶ δεκάτην ἐμέρισεν, to whom he assigned or shared out a tenth. These are all the passages where the word is used by St. Paul.

In all these cases the word has, most probably, one and the same sense, the most obvious and natural one, that which is used in the Septuagint as the rendering of the Hebrew חָלַק (chalak), distribuit. See Exod. xv. 9. Numb. xxvi. 53. 56. Deut. xviii. 8. Prov. xxi. 24. And compare the use of the word by St. Paul's companion St. Luke, xii. 13, μερίσασθαι μετ' ἐμοῦ τὴν κληρονομίαν, to apportion and share with me the inheritance. Since, then, μερίζω signifies to portion off, to assign as a lot, the passive μερίζομαι means to be portioned off as a share. Therefore it would seem the sense here cannot be 'Is Christ divided?' But the meaning is, Has Christ been portioned off as a share to some particular party? Is He not the Head of the Whole Church? Are not all Christians members of Him? Are not all Churches portions of the Universal Church, which is His Body?

p Acts 18. 8. Rom. 16. 23.

ὑμῶν ; ἢ εἰς τὸ ὄνομα Παύλου ἐβαπτίσθητε ; 14 p Εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ ὅτι οὐδένα ὑμῶν ἐβάπτισα, εἰ μὴ Κρίσπον καὶ Γάϊον· 15 ἵνα μή τις εἴπῃ ὅτι εἰς τὸ

This interpretation of the word is confirmed by some ancient Interpreters. Thus Theodor. Mops. (in Caten. p. 477) explains the word, κατὰ μερίδα τινὲς μὲν τὸν Χριστὸν ἔλαχον; Have some particular persons received Christ (the Universal Saviour) as their own private share?

This question follows very appropriately by way of reply to what St. Paul had just recited as the language of the different religious factions at Corinth, "I am of Paul, but I of Apollos, but I of Cephas, but I of Christ." What! has Christ become the heritage of a sect? Has He become the leader of a religious party in opposition to one of Paul, Apollos, or of Cephas . . . He Who is Lord of all!

This passage, thus understood, supplies a salutary warning against the erroneous teaching of those who,

(1) in an eclectic and libertine spirit, regard Christ only as one Teacher among many, instead of being the Teacher of all, or

(2) in a narrow Donatistic temper would limit His gifts and graces to their own party, instead of regarding Christ as the Head of the Church Universal in every age and clime.

— ἐσταυρώθη ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν] Was Christ crucified for you? A statement of the doctrine of the meritorious and propitiatory nature of the Atonement made by Christ on the Cross. (See on xv. 3.) If (as Socinianism alleges) the sufferings of Christ were merely exemplary, there would be no such absurdity and impiety, as St. Paul here assumes there to be, in comparing Christ's sufferings with those of Paul.

14—17. Εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ—οὐ γὰρ ἀπέστειλέ με Χριστὸς βαπτίζειν]

(1) Why does St. Paul thank God that he baptized none but those here mentioned?

(2) And why did Christ send him as an Apostle (ἀπέστειλε) not to baptize but to preach?

(3) Do not such assertions as these tend to disparage the Sacrament of Baptism as compared with Preaching?

(1) He answers the first of these questions by adding the words, "lest any should say that I had baptized in my own name," and not that of Christ. Therefore it happened providentially that St. Paul had not been led to administer Baptism with his own hands; and he acknowledges that he had been guided in this respect by wisdom from above. For it could not be alleged by his adversaries that an Apostle who had refrained from administering Baptism was desirous of creating a party to be called by his own name. If, therefore, any one ventured to say, "I am of Paul," such a party-shibboleth could not be imputed to any suggestion of Paul himself.

(2) There were very good reasons why St. Paul should not have been sent to baptize, so much as to preach. That he was sent to baptize is clear from the fact here recorded by himself. He did baptize some, which he would not have done without having been sent to do it; and he would not otherwise have been on a par with the other Apostles, who had a commission to go and baptize all Nations. (Matt. xxviii. 19.) On this mode of speaking, see note on Matt. ix. 13. Glass, Phil. Sac. p. 468.

One of the reasons for his backwardness to baptize, was lest he should thus create a party for himself. If converts were so eager to say, "I am of Paul," though he had not baptized them, much more would this have been the case if he had personally received them into the Church by the Sacrament of Baptism. He thus teaches the duty of giving no countenance to schism, and of maintaining the unity of the Church.

S. Chrysostom observes, that what St. Paul says here concerning the administration of Baptism is directed against those Teachers who, on the plea of having baptized particular persons, claim those persons as their own, instead of remembering that by Baptism men become members, not of a party, but of the Church, and are not to be called by names of men, but only by that of Christ.

Besides, he had a great work to do, and a short time to do it in. He must therefore, like "a wise master-builder," economize his resources, and dispense them in the manner most profitable to the Church. He had special gifts from Christ for preaching; but others could baptize with the same efficacy as the chiefest Apostle. He could preach to many in the same time as that in which he could only baptize a few. Well therefore might he say that Christ sent him not to baptize, but to preach.

Indeed, the same might be said of the other Apostles also, to whom Christ gave the charge to "Go and teach all nations, baptizing them" (Matt. xxviii 19). This command prescribed that they should teach with their own lips, which were to be sanctified by the Holy Ghost, but it did not imply that they were to baptize with their hands those whom they had taught with their mouths. And it is not without reason that the Holy Spirit has noted in the history of the reception of Cornelius, and of the other first Gentile converts into the Church, that St. Peter did not baptize them with his own hands, but commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. (Acts x. 48, and note there.)

The Apostles were inspired to write Epistles, and bequeath them to the Church. And so their teaching remains with all ages of the world, even unto the end. But they are no longer able to baptize. And if they had been forward to baptize with their own hands, it might have been supposed that some special benefit was conferred by Baptism administered by Apostles, as distinguished from other inferior Ministers of the Church, and that when they ceased to live, this special benefit ceased to exist.

Then indeed the divine efficacy of the Holy Sacrament of Baptism would have been disparaged. For its virtue would have been supposed to depend on the personal qualification of special Ministers, instead of being acknowledged to be due to the power of the Holy Spirit operating therein, and to the Divine authority of Christ who instituted it, and to be equally efficacious now as it was in the days of the Apostles, and to be as much the "laver of regeneration" (Titus iii. 5) when bestowed by the ministry of the meanest deacon of the Church, as if it were conferred by the hands of St. Paul.

(3) Thus, then, it may be seen that the forbearance of St. Paul—and, we may add, of the other Apostles also—to administer Baptism with their own hands, is very far from being any disparagement to Baptism. It seems rather to bring out in a clearer light the divine origin of Baptism, and consequently its dignity and necessity; and to inspire feelings of gratitude towards God for the privileges and blessings conferred by Him through Baptism on every age of the Church.

(4) We may ascend still higher, and observe that (with reverence be it said) the same Wisdom which restrained Paul from baptizing with his own hands, operated on a greater than St. Paul in a similar manner, and, in some respects, for similar purposes—even our Blessed Lord Himself.

We read that Jesus Himself baptized not, but His disciples (John iv. 2); and yet He is said in the same place of Holy Scripture to "have baptized more disciples than John the Baptist." "He baptized," and yet "He did not baptize, but His disciples." "He baptized," because all who were baptized by His disciples were baptized by Him; and because all the efficacy of the Baptism administered by them, was due solely to Him, and because all, in every age, who are baptized by Christ's ministers, are baptized with the Baptism of Christ, and are received by Him into His mystical body, the Church. But He did not baptize with His own hands, lest it might be imagined by some in after ages, when His visible presence in the body was withdrawn from the eyes of the world, that the Church had sustained some irreparable loss, and that He no longer baptizes; and in order that the truth might be more sensibly felt and generally acknowledged by all, that Christ in His Divine Power is invisibly present, and effectually works, in every Baptism duly administered by His Disciples, in every age and country of the world. See above on John iv. 1.

From these considerations we see why St. Paul uses the words ἵνα μὴ v. 15, which indicate (as Bengel and Meyer observe) that he was led by Divine direction to abstain from baptizing in order that no one should say that the Baptism he administered was the Baptism of Paul, and not the Baptism of Christ.

14—16. Κρίσπον . . . Γάϊον . . . Στεφανᾶ οἶκον] Since, as we have seen above in the preceding note, there were good reasons why St. Paul laid down for himself, as a general rule, to abstain from administering Baptism with his own hands, it may be inferred that he had also good reasons for the exceptions which he made to that rule.

Accordingly, such there appear to have been in the cases here specified. Crispus was "the chief ruler of the Synagogue" at Corinth, who believed on the Lord with all his house (Acts xviii. 8). From his position he was entitled to special regard from St. Paul. And doubtless it was an office of no small responsibility and peril, on account of the hatred and violence of the Jews—who were very turbulent at Corinth (Acts xviii. 6—12)—to receive the Ruler of their Synagogue as a convert into the Church of Christ by Baptism. St. Paul did not delegate this perilous office to another, but took it boldly on himself.

Gaius was "the host of St. Paul, and of the whole Church," as the Apostle says in his Epistle written to the Romans from ἐμὸν ὄνομα ἐβαπτίσθητε· 16 [q] ἐβάπτισα δὲ καὶ τὸν Στεφανᾶ οἶκον· λοιπὸν οὐκ οἶδα εἴ τινα ἄλλον ἐβάπτισα.

Achaia (Rom. xvi. 23), and the "house of Stephanas" were "the firstfruits of Achaia" (1 Cor. xvi. 15). These persons therefore appear to have had special claims for personal service from St. Paul.

We may also observe that this mention of these three names here, taken together with the passages just quoted from the Acts and the Epistle to the Romans, serves to show in a silent, and therefore more forcible manner, the consistency and harmony of these portions of Holy Scripture with each other. Cp. Paley, Horæ Paulinæ, p. 39.

15. ἐβαπτίσθητε] So A, B, C*, and many Cursives and Versions, and Lach., Tisch. Elz. has ἐβάπτισα. The former reading, grounded on such authority, seems preferable, and also because it was not so much his own credit that St. Paul would wish to defend and to put forward most prominently, as the dignity of Christ and the unity of the Church.

16. οὐκ οἶδα] Such sayings as these, in which the Apostles declare their own forgetfulness or ignorance of some particulars, are no disparagement of their claim to Inspiration; but the contrary. The Apostles do not lay claim to Omniscience, but to Inspiration. And this candid avowal of the writers of Holy Scripture, that there are some things which, through human infirmity, they either do not know or have forgotten, ought to procure greater credit to their assertion, that they have "the Spirit of God" (1 Cor. vii. 40), and that they speak "not in words which man's wisdom teacheth, but in words which the Holy Ghost teacheth" (1 Cor. ii. 13), and that every Scripture, being "divinely inspired," is able to make men wise unto salvation through faith that is in Christ Jesus (2 Tim. iii. 15, 16). See above note on John vi. 19.

18. ἀπολλυμένοις . . . σωζομένοις] On the peculiar force of these present participles of the middle voice, which it is not easy to render in English, see on Acts ii. 47, προσετίθει τοὺς σωζομένους τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ.

— δύναμις Θεοῦ] The Cross is Christ's Trophy against Satan. (Origen.)

19. γέγραπται] From Isaiah xxix. 14, the Septuagint version, with the exception of ἀθετήσω for κρύψω.

In both his Epistles to the Corinthians St. Paul makes frequent citations from the Old Testament, and follows frequently the words of the LXX introduced by the formula γέγραπται. See i. 31; ii. 9; iii. 19; ix. 9; x. 7; xv. 45. 2 Cor. viii. 15.

The same may be said of the Epistle to the Romans. See the Parallels collected by Grinfield, pp. 1467—1473, and in the Epistle to the Galatians, see ibid. p. 1477.

But he never uses the formula γέγραπται in writing to the Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, or Thessalonians, and very rarely quotes the Old Testament in writing to them. See above on 1 Thess. i. 9.

But he generally uses the word εἴρηκε (God hath spoken) in quoting Scripture to the Hebrews. See i. 13; iv. 3, 4. 7; xiii. 5. In that Epistle Scripture is quoted as the word spoken to them, and not written.

This circumstance may serve to illustrate the difference of the elements which mainly composed the classes of Churches to which St. Paul's Epistles were addressed.

The first class, consisting of the Churches of Rome, Corinth, and Galatia, contained a large admixture of Jewish Converts, who had been long familiar with the Jewish Scriptures, particularly in the Septuagint Version.

The second may be called the Gentile class, and to them the Ancient Scriptures were as yet very little known, nor would citations from those Scriptures carry with them the same weight as with the converts from Judaism to Christianity.

The only representative of the third class are the Hebrews; not Proselytes, but of regular Hebrew descent. To them the Old Testament was the word spoken. It is quoted as such in the Epistle to the Hebrews, as it is in the Gospel of St. Matthew.

These internal characteristics of St. Paul's Epistles, addressed to various classes of Churches, are in perfect harmony with the facts which the History of the Acts of the Apostles presents to us concerning these Churches respectively, and may be regarded as an evidence and illustration of the veracity and genuineness of the History and of the Epistles.

20. ποῦ συζητητὴς τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου;] where is the disputer of this world? A reference to Isaiah xxxiii. 18, where the Hebrew signifies "where is he who counteth the towers?" which may either signify, as the Jewish Rabbis explain it (see Surenhus. p. 523), where is he who numbers the towers which pay tribute to the king, and provide for the collection of his revenues? or, where is he who calculates the force of the city? Cp. Ps. xlviii. 12, "Tell her towers," סַפְּרוּ מִגְדָּלֶיהָ (sipru migdaleyah), where the same words occur as in the prophet Isaiah.

The Apostle modifies this expression by a paraphrase, thus,—Where is the disputer of this world? where is he who relies on secular wealth or power?

The application made of this sentence by St. Paul is adopted by one of the Apostolic Fathers, showing that the Apostle's words were in his mind when he is speaking of the doctrine of Christ crucified. "The Cross," he says, "is a stumbling-block to the unbeliever, but to us it is salvation, and life eternal;" and then he exclaims ποῦ σοφός; ποῦ συζητητής; ποῦ καύχησις τῶν λεγομένων συνετῶν; (Ignatius, ad Ephes. 18.)

— τοῦ κόσμου] Elz. adds τούτου, which is not in A, B, C, D, and many Fathers.

21. διὰ τῆς σοφίας] By means of its so much vaunted wisdom. Cp. Winer, p. 340.

— τῆς μωρίας τοῦ κηρύγματος] The "foolishness" (so called) "of what is preached." A common mode of speaking in Holy Scripture, where "opinio hominum sæpe pro re ipsâ ponitur." See Glass. Phil. Sac. p. 699, and above, note on Matt. ix. 13.

This passage has been often misapplied;

By κήρυγμα here, we are not to understand preaching (κήρυξις), but the thing preached (κήρυγμα), i. e. the Gospel.

That which must save believers is the knowledge of the cross of Christ, the only subject of all our preaching. And in their eyes what doth this seem as yet but folly? The words of the Apostle declare the admirable force those mysteries have which the world derideth as follies; they show that the foolishness of the cross of Christ is the wisdom of true believers; they concern the object of our faith, the matter preached of, and believed in, by Christian men. This we know that the Grecians, or Gentiles, did account foolishness; but that they ever did think it a fond or unlikely way to seek men's conversion by sermons, we have not heard. Manifest, therefore, it is that the Apostle, applying the name of foolishness in such sort as they did, must needs by the "foolishness of preaching" mean the doctrine of Christ, by which we learn that we may be saved. (Hooker.)

22. σημεῖα] So A, B, C, D, E, F, G, I. Elz. σημεῖον.

23. ἔθνεσιν] So A, B, C, D, E, F, G, I. Elz. Ἕλλησιν.

23, 24. σκάνδαλον—μωρίαν—δύναμιν] Perhaps an Oriental paronomasia. The Cross, seccel, is micsol, an offence to the Jew, and it is mashcal (Eccles. x. 6), or folly to the Greek.

But to us it is secel or wisdom (Prov. xii. 8; xxiii. 9). Cp. A Lapide, and Winer, p. 561, who doubts the allusion.

The Cross of Christ was a stumbling-block to the Jews, who looked for a temporal and triumphant, and not for a spiritual and suffering Messiah. (See Bp. Pearson, Art. IV. p. 344, 376.)

Christ conquers, and teaches us to conquer, by suffering, and to triumph, in and by tribulation. For an illustration of the Apostle's assertion that the doctrine of the cross of Christ was a scandal to the Jews, we may refer to the words of St. Peter even immediately after his good confession that Jesus is the Christ. See Matt. xvi. 22. There the Jewish feeling vented itself even by the mouth of the Christian Apostle, who had been blessed by Christ for his confession. A remarkable proof of the depth of that feeling in the Jewish mind; and it is remarkable that our Lord there uses the word σκάνδαλον in his reply, σκάνδαλόν μου εἶ.

The Cross is a stumbling-block to thee; and thou art a stumbling-block to me (Matt. xvi. 23). The full exposition of the feeling may be seen in the Jewish arguments which are cited by Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Cyprian, Origen, and other Christian Apologists arguing with the Jews, who affirmed that for the Messiah to have been subjected to death on the Cross, the Malefactor's death, the death of the accursed, was a thing incredible. Cp. Professor Blunt, Lectures on the Early Church, p. 120, 121.

25. σοφώτερον τῶν ἀνθρώπων] wiser than men are (Winer, p. 218). "Quid est stultum Dei sapientius hominibus, nisi Crux et Mors Christi? Quid infirmum Dei fortius homine, nisi Nativitas et Caro Dei?" Tertullian (c. Marcion. v. 5).

26. Βλέπετε γάρ] For consider—stronger than ὁρᾶτε, and Imperative. Cp. the passages below, 1 Cor. viii. 9; x. 18; xvi. 10; in all which the word has this sense. And so Vulg., "Videte enim."

He refers them to what their own eyes may see. He proceeds to show that the Divine plan of saving the world, and of overcoming the wisdom of the world by means of the Cross, which was a stumbling-block to the Jews, and foolishness to the Greeks, was in perfect harmony with what God had done among themselves; He had called the weak and the simple among them, in order to confound the mighty and the wise, in order that by the very weakness and simplicity of the instruments used, the work effected thereby might not be attributed to the instruments, but to God.

— τὴν κλῆσιν ὑμῶν] He does not say τ. κλῆσιν ὑμετέραν, nor τὴν ὑμῶν κλῆσιν, but τὴν κλῆσιν ὑμῶν, the calling of you; i. e. the principles and method of God's dealings in His calling of you to His kingdom of Grace and Glory. Cp. Eph. iv. 1. 2 Tim. i. 9. Heb. iii. 1, κλήσεως ἐπουρανίου μέτοχοι, and Meyer's note here.

— οὐ πολλοὶ σοφοὶ κ.τ.λ.] Some expositors supply here, are the callers. But this does not seem to agree well with what precedes, βλέπετε γ. τ. κλῆσιν ὑμῶν, and it could hardly be said that Apollos, by whom some of the Corinthians were called, was not σοφὸς, or that he and St. Paul belonged to the μωρὰ τοῦ κόσμου. Indeed his assertion that he determined not to speak with human wisdom, implies that he could have so spoken, if he had desired it. Hence it is observable that Irenæus (ii. 34) thus renders St. Paul's words, "Videte vocationem vestram, fratres, quoniam non multi sapientes apud vos."

It may, however, be allowed that St. Paul uses an abstract term, κλῆσιν, in order to include both the callers and the called. Accordingly, some of the Fathers apply it to the former, as Ambrose on Luke vi., "He chose the Twelve. Observe His Divine Wisdom. He chose not the wise, nor rich, nor noble, but fishermen and publicans, lest He might appear to have drawn the world to Himself by wisdom, or to have redeemed it by wealth, or to have allured men by the influence of power and rank; and in order that the power of Divine Truth, not the charms of disputation, might prevail." So Theodoret, "God enclosed the nations in the Evangelical net of Galilæan Fishermen." See also S. Augustine (Serm. 87 and 250), who observes that "Christ caught Orators by Fishermen, not Fishermen by Orators."

But Chrysostom rightly applies the words to the called also, and observes, "Christ not only called unlearned men to be teachers, but the scholars which He chose were of a similar character." And so Origen, Theodor. Mops., and Theodoret.

28. καὶ τὰ μὴ ὄντα] καὶ is omitted by some uncial MSS., and by some Editors, but on insufficient authority. The καὶ completes the climax, whereas without it the force of the sentence seems to be impaired, which affirms that God not only chose the weak things to confound the strong, but even (καὶ) chose those things which were deemed to be non-existent (τὰ μὴ ὄντα, not τὰ οὐκ ὄντα, τοὺς μηδὲν εἶναι λογιζομένους, Chrys.), and chose them because they were so deemed, in order to nullify the things which were deemed to be all-powerful.

29. ὅπως μὴ—πᾶσα σάρξ] that no flesh,—a Hebraism. Cp. Winer, p. 155, and see on Matt. xxiv. 22, οὐκ ἂν ἐσώθη πᾶσα σάρξ. Rom. iii. 20, ἐξ ἔργων νόμου οὐ δικαιωθήσεται πᾶσα σάρξ.

It may be resolved literally thus, "That all flesh may not glory," i. e. may have no ground of boasting. (Meyer.)

On this passage, see Irenæus iii. 1.

30. δικαιοσύνη] The LORD (Jehovah) our RIGHTEOUSNESS (Jer. xxxiii. 16). He in whom we are justified, or accounted righteous before God, by virtue of His Incarnation, and of His perfect Obedience, and of His meritorious Sufferings in our Nature; and by reason also of our Incorporation in Him our Emmanuel. See on Rom. iii. 28.

— ἁγιασμός] He is the origin of our Sanctification by reason of His Divine Nature, and of its union with our Nature in One Person, the Man Christ Jesus; and by reason also of His Unction as Man by the Holy Ghost at His Conception and Baptism, and of the gift of the Holy Ghost procured for us by His Ascension into heaven, and Session at God's Right Hand; and of the communication of that Gift to us in our Baptism, and in the other means of Grace. Cp. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. IX.

— ἀπολύτρωσις] Our Redemption or Ransom from the captivity of Sin and Death by the payment of the price of His own Blood for us. See 1 Pet. i. 18, οὐ φθαρτοῖς ἀργυρίῳ ἢ χρυσίῳ ἐλυτρώθητε, ἀλλὰ τιμίῳ αἵματι Χριστοῦ, and Matt. xx. 28, δοῦναι τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ λύτρον ἀντὶ πολλῶν, where see note.

"Damnatur ergo hìc error Petri Abelardi, quem sequuntur Sociniani, qui docent Christum Doctorem Orbis, non Redemptorem; nimirum eum fuisse missum à Patre, ut daret exemplum perfectæ virtutis, non autem ut à peccatis nos liberaret et redimeret." (A Lapide.)

31. ἵνα] On this use of ἵνα introducing a precept, see iv. 6.

— καθὼς γέγραπται] The words which follow are no where found literatim in Holy Scripture, but are a compendious summary of two texts, Jer. ix. 23, 24, and 1 Sam. ii. 10, LXX. In the condensation of several passages of Scripture St. Paul follows a practice very usual with Jewish Doctors and Expositors of Scripture. See Surenhus. p. 525, and note above on Matt. ii. 23.

It is remarkable that S. Clement, writing also to the Corinthians (i. 13), adopts St. Paul's compendium totidem verbis, ὁ καυχώμενος ἐν Κυρίῳ καυχάσθω, which is repeated by the Apostle in his second Epistle (2 Cor. x. 17), and seems to have been designed by him to be a brief sententious antidote against the vain-glorious spirit of worldly wisdom prevalent in the Christian Communion which he addressed. Compare a similar example below, ii. 9.

Ch. II. 2. οὐ γὰρ ἔκρινα] For I determined not. So οὐ φημὶ = I deny; οὐκ ἐῶ = I forbid. Cp. Matth. Gr. Gr. § 600.

— τι εἰδέναι] Elz. has τοῦ εἰδέναι τι. But τοῦ is not in A, B, C, D, E, F, G.

On the use of τοῦ in such a construction, see Acts iii. 12; xxvii. 1. Τι, which is emphatic, is rightly placed before εἰδέναι by B, C, D, E, and by Griesbach, Scholz., Lach., Alford, Meyer. Indeed, εἰδέναι τί ἐν ὑμῖν would have been liable to an inconvenient misinterpretation, to know what is in you.

— εἰ μὴ Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν, καὶ τοῦτον ἐσταυρωμένον] The knowledge of which St. Paul speaks, namely, the doctrine of Jesus Christ, and Him Crucified, is not distinguished from or contrasted with other articles of Christian Knowledge, but is opposed to the secular knowledge and Human Philosophy of which the Corinthians were proud, and against which he is warning them, as unable to give them any spiritual insight into divine things. See what follows, vv. 6—12.

The sense therefore is, You glory in other knowledge; other Teachers among you boast of other knowledge. But the only knowledge, on which I was resolved to build my preaching among you, was that of Jesus Christ and Him Crucified.

Jesus Christ is the Rock on which the Church is built. (See on Matt. xvi. 18.) And the Apostle says here that other foundation can no man lay save that which already lieth, Jesus Christ. (1 Cor. iii. 11.) And the acknowledgment of this foundation is necessarily followed by the confession of Christ's Passion. See the remarkable words in Matt. xvi. 21, immediately following the confession of Peter that He is the Christ, ἀπὸ τότε ἤρξατο ὁ Ἰησοῦς δεικνύειν τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ, ὅτι δεῖ αὐτὸν ἀπελθεῖν εἰς Ἱεροσόλυμα, καὶ πολλὰ παθεῖν . . . καὶ παρρησίᾳ τὸν λόγον ἐλάλει. (Mark viii. 31, 32.)

Thus the doctrine of Jesus Christ and Him crucified is the Foundation of the Christian Church; and this one foundation precludes all other foundation, particularly, as here St. Paul shows, all foundation of Human Reason and Philosophy, such as the Greeks would have desired to lay; and also all foundations of ceremonial and ritual observances, and moral obedience to the Law, such as would be laid by the Jews.

But it does not exclude, but rather it supposes and requires, the superstructure of other articles of saving Faith upon it, which St. Paul calls the "gold, and silver, and precious stones" of sound Christian teaching. (1 Cor. iii. 12.) And he shows this by his own practice, especially in these two Epistles to the Church of Corinth, in which, on the one foundation soundly laid of "Jesus Christ and Him crucified," he builds up a solid fabric of Christian Faith and Practice, particularly with regard to the duties of Unity in Christ's Mystical Body, and of mutual edification and Charity, and of purity and holiness of life.

3. ἐν ἀσθενείᾳ] infirmity. The same word as used by him in speaking to the Galatians (iv. 13), and probably referring to the same thing, his thorn in the flesh. See note there and 2 Cor. xii. 7.

4. πειθοῖς] persuasive. On this and similar verbal adjectives, generally oxytone, with the exception of φάγος (Matt. xi. 19. Luke vii. 34), see Meyer and Lobeck, Phryn. p. 434. Winer, G. G. § 16, p. 88.

After πειθοῖς Elz. adds ἀνθρωπίνης, which is not in B, D, E, F, G, and is cancelled by Griesb., Scholz., Lachm., Tisch., Alf., Meyer.

6. ἐν τοῖς τελείοις] "inter perfectos," Iren. v. 6. This word may have a twofold meaning,

(1) It may signify those who have been initiated into the τέλη or τελεταὶ of the μυστήριον, or Mystery of Godliness, of which the Apostle proceeds to speak in the next verse, and which he describes as revealing joys which eye hath not seen; where, perhaps, there may be an allusion to those Grecian Mysteries (such as at Eleusis) in which they who were admitted to the Visions there revealed were said to be ἐποπταὶ and ἐποπτεύειν. Cp. Valcken. here, and the notes on Eurip. Hippolyt. 25 (the scene of which is laid near Corinth), σεμνῶν ἐς ὄψιν καὶ τέλη μυστηρίων.

(2) The word τέλειος is used for of mature age in spiritual growth and ripeness, as distinguished from νήπιος, a babe. Cp. below, iii. 1; xiv. 20. Eph. iv. 13. Col. i. 28. Phil. iii. 15. Heb. v. 14.

This verse was alleged by the Pelagians in behalf of their notion of man's perfectibility by means of his own Reason and Will; for a reply to which see S. Jerome, adv. Pelagian. Dial. i. p. 488.

7. Θεοῦ σοφίαν] So the best MSS. Θεοῦ is emphatic, and rightly placed first and not after σοφίαν, as in Elz.

— ἐν μυστηρίῳ] God's Wisdom in the Mystery of the Incarnation and Suffering of the Son of God, pre-ordained by God before the world began (Acts iv. 28. Eph. iii. 11. 1 Pet. i. 20. Rev. xiii. 8; xvii. 8), but hidden even from the Angels themselves, was clearly revealed to all by the preaching of the Gospel in the Church of Christ, and fully expounded in St. Paul's later Epistles to other Churches. See Eph. iii. 9, 10. Col. i. 26, 27; ii. 2. 1 Tim. iii. 15, 16.

8. τῶν ἀρχόντων] Such as Caiaphas, the Chief Priests, Pilate, and other earthly Powers, which are καταργούμενοι, i.e. in course of being brought to nought by the power of Christ. See Daniel's Prophecy, ii. 34. Cp. Tertullian, c. Marcion. v. 6, and Theodoret here.

S. Cyril here (in Caten. p. 39) supposes St. Paul to mean the Powers of the Air and of Darkness (cp. Eph. ii. 2), who acted by Judas (John xiii. 27) and the crucifiers of Christ, and who were caught in their own snare; for Christ triumphed over them by the Cross.

9. καθὼς γέγραπται] The Text which follows is a paraphrastic adaptation of Isaiah lxiv. 3, 4, where the Prophet expresses a vehement longing for future blessings reserved for all who wait for him, which the Apostle here represents as realized in the Gospel preached to all nations. Cp. S. Jerome (ad Pammach. ii. 247), who says, "Apostolus non verbum expressit e verbo, sed παραφραστικῶς eundem sensum aliis sermonibus indicavit;" and see Surenhus. p. 527.

It is remarkable that the words καὶ ἐπὶ καρδίαν ἀνθρώπου οὐκ ἀνέβη have no place in this passage of Isaiah in the Hebrew original, nor in the LXX, and yet they are adopted verbatim from this passage of St. Paul by Clement of Rome in his Epistle to the Corinthians i. 34, thus showing his familiarity with St. Paul's Epistles, and his reverence for St. Paul's authority in quoting the Old Testament.

The same words are also found in Clem. Rom. Epist. ii. 11, and in Martyr. Polycarpi, c. 2.

For another example of this adoption, see on 1 Cor. i. 31.

The citations of the Old Testament by the Apostles and Evangelists in the New, have, in fact, become like an Inspired Targum to the Christian Church.

— ἃ ἡτοίμασεν] A, B, C have ὅσα ἡ., and so Lachm., Meyer.

10. ἀπεκάλυψεν ὁ Θεός] This is the order of the words in the best MSS., ἀπεκάλυψεν being the emphatic word.

— τὸ γὰρ Πνεῦμα—Θεοῦ] It is clear that the Spirit which searcheth the deep things of God cannot be a Creature or less than God. Athanasius (ad Serapion. i. § 22, p. 535.)

See also the excellent summary of an English Theologian: "The Person of the Holy Ghost is described in Scripture as the immediate Author and Worker of miracles (Acts ii. 4; x. 45, 46. Rom. xv. 19. 1 Cor. ii. 4, 5; xii. 4. 8. 11; xiv. 2), and even of those done by our Lord Himself (Matt xii. 18. Acts x. 38); the Conductor of Christ Jesus, in His human capacity, during His state of humiliation here upon earth (Matt. iv. 1; xii. 18. Luke iv. 1. John i. 32; iii. 34. Acts i. 2); the Inspirer of the Prophets and Apostles; the Searcher of all hearts, and the Comforter of good Christians in difficulties. To lie to Him is the same thing as to lie unto God. (Acts v. 3, 4.) Blasphemy against Him is unpardonable. (Matt. xii. 31, 32.) To resist Him is the same thing as to resist God. (Acts vii. 51.) He is in God, and knows the mind of God as perfectly as a man knows his own mind, and that in respect of all things, even the deep things of God. (1 Cor. ii. 10, 11.) Men's bodies are His temple (1 Cor. vi. 19), and by being His temple are the temple of God. (1 Cor. iii. 16. Eph. ii. 21, 22.) He is joined with God the Father and the Son in the solemn form of Baptism (Matt. xxviii. 19), in religious oaths, and in invocations for grace and peace (2 Cor. xiii. 14. Rom. ix. 1. Rev. i. 4, 5), in the same common operations (1 Cor. xii. 4—7, &c.), in the same authoritative mission and vocation of persons into the ministry (Acts xiii. 2. Compare Hos. ii. 23. Acts ix. 15); and He is joined with the Father in the same common mission even of the Son Himself. (Isa. xlviii. 16.) In a word, He is Lord (compare Exod. xxxiv. 34 with 2 Cor. iii. 17), or Jehovah (Acts v. 3, 4), and Lord of Hosts. This is a brief summary of what the Scriptures have taught us of the person, character, and offices of the Holy Ghost." (Waterland's Works, Vol. ii. p. 114, Moyer Lecture, Serm. 6.)

11. ἔγνωκεν] So the best MSS. and Editions. Elz. οἶδεν.

On the meaning of this verse, as declaring the Office and Dignity of the Human Conscience, see Bp. Sanderson's First Lecture, de Conscientiâ, Vol. iv. p. 153.

13. Ἃ καὶ λαλοῦμεν—διδακτοῖς Πνεύματος] Which things we speak also not in words taught by human Wisdom, but in words taught by the Spirit. An important assertion, and when combined with what precedes, showing that the Apostle makes two distinct claims to Inspiration.

(1) As to the substance of what he writes, see vv. 10—12, and

(2) As to the language in which the substance is expressed.

He does not claim to know all things, or even to remember every thing that he himself has done (see on i. 16), but he affirms that he has received the Spirit of God, in order that he may know supernatural truths, which the Intellect of man could never discover (v. 7, 8); and he asserts that he is enabled to utter those supernatural truths in words which the Holy Ghost teacheth.

Here is a sufficient reply to the assertions of those who allege that the Inspiration vouchsafed to St. Paul was limited to a general perception of divine truth, and that he was left to himself without divine guidance as to the form in which that divine truth was to be expressed.

A caution also is thus supplied against the notion that there are verbal inaccuracies, and blemishes, and defects in St. Paul's representation of the supernatural truths which he was commissioned by God to deliver for the salvation of mankind.

Compare the statement of Augustine on this subject, quoted above, Preface to the Gospels, p. xx. and Hooker II. viii. 6, and his Sermon v. 4, p. 423, and Professor W. Lee, D.D., on Inspiration, Lect. vi. p. 250; and for a valuable Catena of ancient authorities on the Inspiration of St. Paul, see Routh, Reliquiæ Sacræ, Vol. v. p. 336—341.

After Πνεύματος Elz. adds Ἁγίου, which is probably a gloss.

On the genitive after διδακτοῖς, see on John vi. 45, and Winer, p. 175. So Soph. Elect. 336, κείνης διδακτὰ, things taught of, i. e. by her.

— πνευματικοῖς πνευματικὰ συγκρίνοντες] combining spiritual things with spiritual.

These words have a comprehensive signification;

(1) Blending things spiritual with spiritual, in the sense of not adulterating spiritual things with any admixture of worldly wisdom, either in the substance of what we deliver as supernatural truth, or in the language in which we utter it. According to the saying of the ancient Father, "Gypsum Dei lacte misceri non potest."

This sentiment is expressed by the Apostle in his second Epistle (2 Cor. ii. 17), οὐ καπηλεύοντες τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, not, as the many do, adulterating the Word of God by any earthly admixtures or alloy, but speaking with sincerity, in the presence of God, in Christ; and the word of God so communicated is called by St. Peter τὸ λογικὸν ἄδολον γάλα, i. e. the sincere (i. e. undiluted and unadulterated) milk of the Word. 1 Pet. ii. 2.

Concerning this use of the word συγκρίνειν, to combine, as the opposite of διακρίνειν, to sever, see Valckenaer here, and Porson, Med. 136, and Meyer, p. 56, especially the Fragment quoted by Valck. from Epicharmus concerning the human soul and body, συνεκρίθη, καὶ διεκρίθη,—it was combined with the body in life, but is now dissolved in death, καὶ ἀπῆνθεν ὅθεν ἦνθεν, γᾶ εἰς γᾶν, τὸ δὲ πνεῦμα ἄνωθι.

(2) But this sense of συγκρίνω is to be extended so as to embrace also that of comparing, and of explaining by means of comparison, a sense which is well illustrated by Wetstein, p. 107, and is adopted by Chrys., Theodoret, and the Syriac, Vulgate, and Authorized English Version, and is the same sense in which St. Paul himself uses the word in his second Epistle (2 Cor. x. 12), the only other passage in the New Testament where it occurs.

He gives some noble specimens of this σύγκρισις, or comparison of spiritual things with spiritual, in the present Epistle, especially in the fifth chapter, where he teaches us to recognize Christ as the True Passover; and in the Tenth Chapter, where the Apostle συγκρίνει or combines and compares the spiritual food and drink of the Ancient Church in the Wilderness (vv. 2, 3) with the Sacraments of the Christian Church.

We have the testimony of the Holy Spirit in the Old Testament, and by it we confirm the New. When we desire to display the types of our own Mysteries, we appeal to the Lamb of the Passover and the Blood sprinkled on the Doors, and the Passage of the Red Sea, and the streams gushing from the Rock, and the supply of Manna from heaven; and by this comparison of spiritual things with spiritual we prove their truth. (Theodoret.) By the simultaneous examination of one phrase of Holy Scripture with another, and by the collation of like passages of Holy Writ with like, the Mind of the Holy Ghost is revealed to us. (Origen.)

If we find any difficulty in a spiritual truth we compare it with some other spiritual truth. Thus, in treating of the doctrine of Christ's Resurrection, or Birth from a Virgin, we resort to spiritual examples and types, such as the history of Jonah in the whale's belly, and the birth of Isaac, and the growth of trees in Paradise without any previous seed-time, and the birth of Adam from the ground. Thus I compare spiritual things with spiritual; and (in such supernatural things) I do not need worldly wisdom, which (in such matters as these) rather darkens than illumines the mind. (Chrysostom.) And so Origen (in Caten.).

This sense is confirmed by that in which συγκρίνω and σύγκρισις are used in the Septuagint, where they are commonly employed for to interpret and the interpretation of a Vision or χικὸς δὲ ἄνθρωπος οὐ δέχεται τὰ τοῦ Πνεύματος τοῦ Θεοῦ· μωρία γὰρ αὐτῷ ἐστι, καὶ οὐ δύναται γνῶναι· ὅτι πνευματικῶς ἀνακρίνεται. 15 [p] Ὁ δὲ πνευματικὸς ἀνακρίνει μὲν πάντα, αὐτὸς δὲ ὑπ' οὐδενὸς ἀνακρίνεται. 16 [q] τίς γὰρ ἔγνω νοῦν Κυρίου, ὃς συμβιβάσει αὐτόν; ἡμεῖς δὲ νοῦν Χριστοῦ ἔχομεν.

14. Ψυχικός] the animal man; 'animalis homo' (Irenæus, i. 3), opposed to πνευματικὸς, spiritualis, or, as St. Jude expresses it (v. 19), ψυχικοὶ, πνεῦμα μὴ ἔχοντες. Ψυχὴ is equivalent to anima as the seat of animal life and appetite (τὸ ἐπιθυμητικὸν) common to man with beasts, and in this respect equivalent to the classical word θυμὸς, and distinguished from the nobler faculty of the mind and soul, which the Apostle calls πνεῦμα, or spirit. This distinctive nomenclature appears to be of Hebrew origin. Cp. Valck.

He is ψυχικὸς who lives according to the flesh, and is not illumined by the Spirit. Cyril (in Caten.).

Adopting these terms, Tertullian brands with the epithet of ψυχικοὶ ("homines solius animæ et carnis." De Jejun. c. 17) those who rejected the new revelation (claimed by Montanus), and confers the distinguished appellation of πνευματικοὶ, or spiritual, on his own Montanists. Cp. Bp. Kaye's Tertullian, p. 30.

It must not, however, be imagined that ψυχικὸς is synonymous with σαρκικός. As Grotius observes here, ψυχικός is here the natural man, who (as opposed to the πνευματικὸς, or spiritual) is led by natural Reason. Such were the Gentile Philosophers; they were all ψυχικοὶ, and many of them were also σαρκικοί.

— οὐ δέχεται] does not accept, is not able or willing to receive it.

15. ἀνακρίνει μέν] μὲν is omitted by A, C, D*, F, G, and by Lachm., Tisch.

— πάντα] A, C, D*, F, G prefix τά. Meyer supposes that the τὰ has been omitted by Copyists in order to make the numeral correspond in gender with οὐδενός. And Irenæus, Didymus, and Theodoret read πάντας.

On the use of πάντα, as equivalent to all things necessary or convenient, see on Acts i. 1.

— αὐτὸς δὲ ὑπ' οὐδενὸς ἀνακρίνεται] but, as far as he is really spiritual, he himself is judged by no man. Cp. 1 John iii. 9. If he is really led by the Spirit, he will listen to the voice of the Spirit speaking in the public consent and practice of the Church Universal, to which the presence of the Spirit is promised by Christ (John xiv. 17. 26; xv. 26; xvi. 13), and will not oppose thereto the notions of his own private spirit in insubordinate acts, which are not fruits of the Holy Spirit, but of the Evil Spirit, and are signs of a carnal mind. See the next chapter, vv. 3, 4.

16. τίς ἔγνω—αὐτόν] A literal quotation from the Septuagint Version of Isa. xl. 13.

No one can judge him who is spiritual, that is, one who is led by the mind of God. For who can instruct God, whose Spirit we have? Cp. Cyril and Severian here (in Cat. p. 50).

— συμβιβάσει] properly will instruct them by means of proofs deduced and collected from different quarters. See LXX. Exod. iv. 15; xviii. 16. Hence Hesych. συμβιβασθέντες = διδαχθέντες. See Wetstein.

Note on the Two foregoing Chapters.

On reviewing the two preceding chapters it may be requisite to offer a caution against the error which has perverted several statements in them into arguments for the disparagement of Human Reason and Learning in matters of Religion.

The results of this abuse have shown themselves in the history of our Church and nation in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

A warning against those notions cannot be better conveyed than in the words of Richard Hooker, which have also an appropriate place here, as illustrating the personal history and public ministry of St. Paul, particularly in connexion with his Epistles to the Church of Corinth.

The name of the Light of Nature is made hateful with men; the "star of Reason and Learning," and all other such like helps, beginneth no otherwise to be thought of than if it were an unlucky comet, or as if God had so accursed it, that it should never shine or give light in things concerning our duty any way towards Him, but be esteemed as that Star in the Revelation (Rev. viii. 11) called Wormwood, which being fallen from Heaven maketh rivers and waters in which it falleth so bitter that men tasting them die thereof.

A number there are who think they cannot admire as they ought the power and authority of the Word of God, if in things divine they should attribute any force to man's Reason. For which cause they never use Reason so willingly as to disgrace Reason. Their usual and common discourses are unto this effect,—

First, "the natural man perceiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned" (1 Cor. ii. 14).

Secondly, it is not for nothing that St. Paul giveth charge to "beware of Philosophy" (Col. ii. 8), that is to say, such knowledge as men by natural reason attain unto.

Thirdly, consider them that have from time to time opposed themselves, and most troubled the Church with heresy. Have they not always been great admirers of human Reason? Hath their deep and profound skill in secular learning made them the more obedient to the truth, and not armed them rather against it?

Fourthly, they that fear God will remember how heavy His sentences are in this case, "I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will cast away the understanding of the prudent. Where is the wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world? Hath not God made the wisdom of this world foolishness? Seeing the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save believers" (1 Cor. i. 19).

Fifthly, the Word of God in itself is absolute, exact, and perfect; the Word of God is a twoedged sword (Heb. iv. 12). As for the weapons of natural Reason they are as the armour of Saul (1 Sam. xvii. 39). rather cumbersome about the soldier of Christ, than needful; they are not of force to do that which the Apostles of Christ did by the power of the Holy Ghost. "My preaching," therefore, saith Paul, "hath not been in the enticing speech of man's wisdom, but in plain evidence of the Spirit, and of power, that your faith might not be in the wisdom of man, but in the power of God" (1 Cor. ii. 4).

Sixthly, if I believe the Gospel, there needeth no Reasoning about it to persuade me; if I do not believe it, it must be the Spirit of God, and not the Reason of man, that shall convert my heart unto Him.

By these and the like disputes an opinion hath spread itself very far in the world, as if the way to be ripe in Faith, were to be raw in Wit and Judgment; as if Reason were an enemy unto Religion, childish Simplicity the mother of ghostly and divine Wisdom.

The cause why such declamations prevail so greatly is, for that men suffer themselves in two respects to be deluded: one is, that the wisdom of man being debased either in comparison with that of God, or in regard of some special thing exceeding the reach and compass thereof, it seemeth to them (not marking so much) as if simply it were condemned: another, that Learning, Knowledge, or Wisdom, falsely so termed, usurping a name whereof they are not worthy, and being under that name controlled, their reproof is by so much the more easily misapplied, and through equivocation wrested against those things whereunto so precious names do properly and of right belong.

This, duly observed, doth to the former allegations itself make sufficient answer.

Howbeit for all men's plainer and fuller satisfaction;

First, concerning the inability of Reason to search out and to judge of things divine, if they be such as those properties of God and those duties of men towards Him, which may be conceived by attentive consideration of heaven and earth; we know that of mere natural men the Apostle testifieth (Rom. i. 21. 32), how they knew both God and the Law of God.

Other things of God there be which are neither so found, nor though they be showed can ever be approved without the special operation of God's good grace and Spirit. Of such things sometime spake the Apostle St. Paul, declaring how Christ had called him to be a witness of His Death and Resurrection from the dead, according to that which the Prophets and Moses had foreshowed. Festus, a mere natural man, an infidel, a Roman, one whose ears were unacquainted with such matter, heard him, but could not reach unto that whereof he spake; the Suffering and the Rising of Christ from the dead he rejecteth, as idle, superstitious fancies, not worth the hearing (Acts xxv. 19).

The Apostle that knew them by the Spirit, and spake of them with power of the Holy Ghost, seemed in his eyes but learnedly mad (Acts xxvi. 24).

Which example maketh manifest what elsewhere the same Apostle teacheth, namely, that Nature hath need of Grace (1 Cor. ii. 14), whereunto I hope we are not opposite, by holding that Grace hath use of Nature.

Secondly, Philosophy, we are warned to take heed of: not that Philosophy, which is true and sound knowledge, attained by natural discourse of Reason; but that Philosophy, which, to bolster heresy or error, casteth a fraudulent show of Reason upon things which are indeed unreasonable, and by that mean, as by a stratagem, spoileth the simple which are not able to withstand such cunning. "Take heed lest any spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit" (Col. ii. 8). He that exhorteth to beware of an enemy's policy doth not give counsel to be impolitic, but rather to use all provident foresight and circumspection, lest our simplicity be overreached by cunning sleights.

The way not to be inveigled by them that are so guileful through skill, is thoroughly to be instructed in that which maketh skilful against guile, and to be armed with that true and sincere philosophy which doth teach, against that deceitful and vain, which spoileth.

Thirdly, But many great Philosophers have been very unsound in belief. And many sound in belief, have been also great Philosophers. Could secular knowledge bring the one sort unto the love of Christian faith? No, nor Christian faith the other sort out of love with secular knowledge. The harm that Heretics did, they did it unto such as were unable to discern between sound and deceitful Reasoning: and the remedy against it was ever the Skill which the ancient Fathers had, to descry and discover such deceit. Insomuch that Cresconius, the heretic, complained greatly of S. Augustine, as being too full of logical subtleties.

Fourthly, There is in the world no kind of Knowledge, whereby any part of truth is seen, but we justly account it precious; yea, that principal truth, in comparison whereof all other knowledge is vile, may receive from it some kind of light; whether it be that Egyptian and Chaldean wisdom mathematical, wherewith Moses and Daniel were furnished (Acts vii. 22. Dan. i. 17), or that natural, moral, and civil wisdom, wherein Solomon excelled all men (1 Kings iv. 29, 30), or that rational and oratorial wisdom of the Grecians, which the Apostle St. Paul brought from Tarsus; or that Judaical, which he learned in Jerusalem, sitting at the feet of Gamaliel (Acts xxii. 3); to detract from the dignity thereof were to injure even God Himself, Who being that light which none can approach unto, hath sent out these lights whereof we are capable, even as so many sparkles resembling the bright fountain from which they rise.

But there are that bear the title of wise men, and scribes, and great disputers of the world, and are nothing in deed less than what in show they most appear. These, being wholly addicted unto their own wills, use their Wit, their Learning, and all the Wisdom they have, to maintain that which their obstinate hearts are delighted with; esteeming, in the frantic error of their minds, the greatest madness in the world to be wisdom, and the highest wisdom foolishness. Such were both Jews and Grecians, which professed the one sort legal, and the other secular skill, neither of them enduring to be taught the Mystery of Christ; unto the glory of Whose most blessed name, whoso study to use both their Reason and all other gifts, as well which Nature as which Grace hath endued them with, let them never doubt but that the same God, who is to destroy and confound utterly that wisdom, falsely so named in others, doth make reckoning of them as of true Scribes, Scribes by wisdom instructed to the kingdom of heaven (Matt xiii. 52), not Scribes against that kingdom hardened in a vain opinion of wisdom; which in the end being proved folly must needs perish; true Understanding, Knowledge, Judgment, and Reason continuing for evermore.

Fifthly, Unto the Word of God, being in respect of that end, for which God ordained it, perfect, exact, and absolute in itself, we do not add Reason, as a supplement of any maim or defect therein, but as a necessary instrument, without which we could not reap by the Scripture's perfection that fruit and benefit which it yieldeth.

"The Word of God is a twoedged sword" (Heb. iv. 12), but in the hands of reasonable men; and Reason is as the weapon that slew Goliath, if they be as David was, that use it.

Touching the Apostles, He which gave them from above such power for miraculous confirmation of that which they taught, endued them also with wisdom from above to teach that which they so did confirm. Our Saviour made choice of twelve simple and unlearned men, that the greater their lack of natural wisdom was, the more admirable that might appear which God supernaturally endued them with from heaven. Such, therefore, as knew the poor and silly estate wherein they had lived, could not but wonder to hear the wisdom of their speech, and be so much the more attentive unto their teaching. They studied for no tongue, they spake with all; of themselves they were rude, and knew not so much as how to premeditate; the Spirit gave them speech and eloquent utterance.

But because with St. Paul it was otherwise than with the rest, inasmuch as he never conversed with Christ upon earth as they did; and his education had been scholastical altogether, which theirs was not; hereby occasion was taken by certain malignants secretly to undermine his great authority in the Church of Christ, as though the Gospel had been taught him by others than by Christ Himself; and as if the cause of the Gentiles' conversion and belief through his means had been the Learning and Skill which he had, by being conversant in their books; which thing made them so willing to hear him, and him so able to persuade them; whereas the rest of the Apostles prevailed, because God was with them, and by miracle from heaven confirmed His word in their mouths. They were mighty in deeds: as for him, being absent, his writings had some force; in presence, his power not like unto theirs. In sum, concerning his preaching, their very by-word was λόγος ἐξουθενημένος, addle speech, empty talk (2 Cor. x. 10); his writings full of great words, but in the power of miraculous operations his presence not like the rest of the Apostles.

Hereupon it ariseth, that St. Paul was so often driven to make his apologies. Hereupon it riseth, that whatsoever time he had spent in the study of human learning, he maketh earnest protestation to them of Corinth, that the Gospel which he had preached amongst them did not by other means prevail with them, than with others the same Gospel taught by the rest of the Apostles of Christ. "My preaching," saith he, "hath not been in the persuasive speeches of human wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith may not be in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God" (1 Cor. ii. 4, 5). What is it which the Apostle doth here deny? Is it denied, that his speech amongst them had been persuasive? No; for of him the sacred history plainly testifieth, that for the space of a year and a half he spake in their synagogue every Sabbath, and persuaded both Jews and Grecians. (Acts xviii. 4. 11.) How then is the speech of men made persuasive? Surely there can be but two ways to bring this to pass,—the one human, the other divine. Either St. Paul did only by art and natural industry cause his own speech to be credited; or else God by miracle did authorize it, and so bring credit thereunto, as to the speech of the rest of the Apostles. Of which two,—the former he utterly denieth. For why? If the preaching of the rest had been effectual by miracle, his only by force of his own learning; so great inequality between him and the other Apostles in this thing had been enough to subvert their faith. For might they not with reason have thought, that if he were sent of God as well as they, God would not have furnished them and not him with the power of the Holy Ghost? Might not a great part of them, being simple, haply have feared lest their assent had been cunningly gotten unto his doctrine, rather through the weakness of their own wits than the certainty of that truth which he had taught them? How unequal had it been, that all believers through the preaching of other Apostles should have their faith strongly built upon the evidence of God's own miraculous approbation, and they whom he had converted should have their persuasion built only upon his skill and wisdom who persuaded them!

As therefore calling from men may authorize us to teach, although it could not authorize him to teach as other Apostles did; so although the wisdom of man had not been sufficient to enable him such a teacher as the rest of the Apostles were, unless God's miracles had strengthened both the one and the other's doctrine; yet unto our ability both of teaching and learning the truth of Christ, as we are but mere Christian men, it is not a little which the wisdom of man may add.

Sixthly. Yea, whatsoever our hearts be to God and to His truth, believe we or be we as yet faithless, for our conversion or confirmation the force of natural Reason is great. The force whereof unto those effects is nothing without grace. What then? To our purpose it is sufficient, that whosoever doth serve, honour, and obey God, whosoever believeth in Him, that man would no more do this than innocents and infants do, but for the light of natural reason that shineth in him, and maketh him apt to apprehend those things of God which, being by Grace discovered, are effectual to persuade reasonable minds and none other, that honour, obedience, and credit, belong of right unto God. No man cometh unto God to offer Him sacrifice, to pour out supplications and prayers before Him, or to do Him any service, which doth not first believe Him both to be, and to be a rewarder of them who in such sort seek unto Him. (Heb. xi. 6.) Let men be taught this either by revelation from heaven, or by instruction upon earth; by labour, study, and meditation; or by the only secret inspiration of the Holy Ghost; whatsoever the mean be, they know it by, if the knowledge thereof were possible without discourse of natural reason, why should none be found capable thereof but only men? nor men till such time as they come unto ripe and full ability to work by reasonable understanding? The whole drift of the Scripture of God, what is it but only to teach Theology? Theology, what is it but the science of things Divine? What science can be attained unto without the help of natural discourse and reason? "Judge ye of that which I speak" (1 Cor. x. 15), saith the Apostle. In vain it were to speak any thing of God, but that by reason men are able to judge of what they hear, and by discourse to discern how consonant it is to truth.

Scripture indeed teacheth things above Nature, things which our reason by itself could not reach unto. Yet those things also we believe, knowing by Reason that the Scripture is the Word of God. Hooker (iii. viii. 4—11).

CHAP. III.] In this chapter St. Paul remonstrates with the Corinthians for dividing themselves into parties, and ranging themselves under human leaders, and calling themselves by their names.

He censures this practice as the fruit of a carnal mind.

He declares that even Apostles themselves are only instruments, by which God works, and derive all their efficiency from Him.

He shows that by calling themselves adherents of human leaders, and by adopting their names, they defraud God, Whose they are.

He intimates that their sin is greater, in that they range themselves under some leaders, who are not Apostles, nor wise builders, but either build on some other than the only true foundation, Jesus Christ, or else build ill upon that one foundation.

He then introduces a solemn warning to those false teachers, of whom he specifies two classes;

i. Those who build ill on the one foundation, which is Christ (v. 15).

ii. Those who utterly corrupt and defile (φθείρουσι) the building of God's spiritual house, the Church (v. 17). See further on vv. 12—15.

He remonstrates with them on surrendering their Christian liberty, and filial inheritance with which God has enriched them in Christ, by making themselves the servile followers of human leaders of religious parties, and by even glorying in their names (vv. 21—23).

1. Κἀγώ] So A, B, C, D, E, F, G; and this seems preferable to the reading of Elz., καὶ ἐγὼ, which brings out the personal pronoun in a more prominent manner, less suited to the Apostle's humility, especially in this place, where he depresses his own person and office in order to elevate that of Christ. Cp. ii. 1.

— σαρκίνοις] So A, B, C*, D*; and this reading has been received by Griesb., Lach., Tisch., Alf., and Meyer: and it is confirmed by the exposition of Origen (in Cramer's Catena, p. 51). The word σάρκινος is stronger than σαρκικός. Elz. has σαρκικοῖς. St. Paul means that at first they were only σάρκινοι, and even now are not better than σαρκικοί, v. 3.

The word σάρκινος signifies carneus, made of flesh. Compare the similar adjectives, ξύλινος, made of wood; πήλινος, of clay; ἀκάνθινος, of thorns; βύσσινος, of fine linen. (Winer, § 16, p. 89.) And see the use of σάρκινοι in 2 Cor. iii. 3.

But the word σαρκικὸς means carnal, as opposed to spiritual. Hence Ignatius (ad Ephes. 8), οἱ σαρκικοὶ τὰ πνευματικὰ πράσσειν οὐ δύνανται οὐδὲ οἱ πνευματικοὶ σαρκικά.

— νηπίοις] babes. The reason is given in the following verses.

On schisms as proofs of spiritual childishness, see Introduction to the Ephesians, § vii., and on Eph. iv. 14.

2. Γάλα—οὐ βρῶμα] milk—not meat. The Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews uses very similar language, v. 12—14.

— οὐ βρῶμα] Elz. prefixes καὶ, not in A, B, G, nor in Irenæus, who quotes this passage and v. 3 in iv. 3. 5.

— οὐδέ] not even. So the best MSS. Elz. οὔτε.

S. Chrysostom examines here the important question, how the Corinthians could be called carnal, when they were "behind in no gift" (i. 7, χαρίσματι)? and shows from the examples of Balaam, Caiaphas, and others, that men may possess extraordinary spiritual gifts (such as prophecy, and miraculous powers, and tongues), and yet abuse them, and so be guilty of greater sin in proportion to their spiritual gifts. And why? because they have not Ἀγάπη, or Love. See v. 3; xiii. 1—5. A warning to those who are in heresy and schism, and yet imagine themselves to be spiritual because they have great spiritual gifts.

4. ἄνθρωποι] So A, B, C, D, E, F, G, and Vulg., Copt., Æthiopic Versions; and so Lach., Tisch., Rückert, Meyer, Alford. And this reading is confirmed by Origen (in Caten. p. 53), who says, "There are two paths in this world, the one is according to man, the other is according to God. If we walk as most men do we walk according to man, but if we separate ourselves from the world we walk according to God. They who form parties in religion, and attach themselves to human leaders,—they who follow men,—they are mere men, and walk according to the flesh."—Elz. has σαρκικοί.

St. Paul blamed the part-takings in the Church of Corinth, whilst one professed himself to be of Paul, another of Apollos, another of Cephas, as fruits of carnality unbecoming Christians. Is it not also blameworthy in us, and a fruit of the same carnality, if any of us shall affect to be counted rigid Lutherans, or perfect Calvinists, or give up our judgments to be wholly guided by the writings of Luther, or Calvin, or any other mortal man whatsoever? Worthy instruments they were, but yet were they not men? had they received the Spirit in the fulness of it, and not by measure? knew they otherwise than in part? might they not in many things, did they not in some things, mistake and err? Howsoever, the Apostle's interrogatories are unanswerable. What saith he, Was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul? (1 Cor. i. 13.) Even so, Was either Luther or Calvin crucified for you? or were ye baptized into the name either of Luther, or Calvin, or any other man, that any one of you should say, I am of Luther, or any other I am of Calvin? What is Calvin, or Luther, nay, what is Paul or Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed (1 Cor. iii. 5)? that is to say, instruments, but not lords of your belief. Bp. Sanderson (iv. p. 289).

Observe also, St. Paul represents the Corinthians as carnal, and as vitiated by many sins; and yet he addresses them as having been sanctified, ἡγιασμένους κλητοὺς, ἁγίους (i. 2), and as members of Christ's body, and as Temples of the Holy Ghost. (iii. 16; vi. 19.)

An Apostolic lesson to all Preachers of the Gospel. They may not allow vicious men to imagine that they have received nothing from God in their Baptism; but they are bound to warn them of the sin whereof they are guilty, and of the danger which they incur, by grieving the Spirit of God, Who made them Members of Christ at their Baptism, and Temples of God the Holy Ghost.

5. Ἀπολλὼς—Παῦλος] This is the order in A, B, C, D, E, F, G. Elz. places Παῦλος first.

— διάκονοι] Elz. prefixes ἀλλ' ἢ, which is not in the best MSS.

— ἐπιστεύσατε] Ye became Christians, and made public profession of your faith. See Acts viii. 13; xiii. 48. Rom. xiii. 11.

6. Θεὸς ηὔξανεν] God was giving the increase. Observe the force of the imperfect, intimating a continual bestowal of divine grace, as distinguished from the transitory acts of His Ministers, Paul and Apollos, whose operations are described by the aorists, ἐφύτευσα, ἐπότισεν. Cp. Acts vi. 7, where the word ηὔξανεν marks the continual increase of the Church while under persecution; and see Acts ii. 47. So here the Apostle means to say that while he himself planted, and Apollos watered, God was all the while giving the increase, without which their acts would have been vain.

8. ἕν εἰσιν] 'unum sunt' (Vulg.). Observe the neuter gender. God is ὁ εἷς, they are ἕν. He is the One Agent, they are an instrument in His hands; and they are one as united together in Christ. But they are not what you would make them in your party factions to be, separate persons, and rival heads and leaders of opposite sects.

— ἕκαστος δὲ—κόπον] Although your Pastors are one thing, as far as they are only channels and instruments of Divine Grace to you, and not original sources and independent agents; and as far as they are all united, as fellow-members under the One Head, Christ; yet do not suppose that, as far as their own free will and human labour (κόπος) are concerned, they have no distinct personal identity, or will all have one and the same reward for their several work. No, though the workmen are nothing without Divine Grace, yet each will be rewarded according to his own work.

9. Θεοῦ γεώργιον—Θεοῦ οἰκοδομή] God's husbandry—God's building are ye: and God's fellow-workers are we.

The house does not belong to the architect, but to its master. Chrys.

He repeats the word Θεὸς, God, and places it emphatically at the beginning of the several clauses, in order to remind them that since they are God's property they cannot sell themselves to Man.

Ye are God's garden, why do you break down the hedge by schism? Chrys.

10. σοφὸς ἀρχιτέκτων] a skilful master-builder. He does not scruple to claim this title. "Talem facit cognitio Christi (Bengel) et gratia Spiritûs ipsi donata, χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ δοθεῖσά μοι." St. Paul calls himself wise, not as vaunting himself, but propounding himself as an example, and showing that it is the part of wisdom to lay one foundation, and to build well upon it. Chrys.

— θεμέλιον] St. Paul uses the masculine form, see v. 11, and 2 Tim. ii. 19. In the Apocalypse θεμέλιοι signify foundation stones (xxi. 14. 19). St. Luke (Acts xvi. 26) uses the neuter plural θεμέλια. The neuter is the Attic form, the masculine the common one. Thom. Mag.

11. παρὰ τὸν κείμενον] beside that which lieth. He does not say τεθέντα, laid, but κείμενον, lying, of its own accord. Christ, the True Foundation Stone, was not laid by human hands, but κεῖται, lies, by His own free will and act. Comp. Dan. ii. 34. 45.

This word, κεῖται, descriptive of His character as the one foundation of the Church (see Matt. xvi. 18), is applied to Him in His first Presentation in the material Temple at Jerusalem. Luke ii. 32, οὗτος κεῖται εἰς πτῶσιν καὶ ἀνάστασιν, i. e. He is a Stone of stumbling to some, and a "stone elect, precious," the foundation stone, to others. (Isa. viii. 14, 15; xxviii. 16. Rom. ix. 32, 33. 1 Pet. ii. 7, 8.)

It is observable also that the Man of Sin, who places himself as a Foundation of the Church in the room of Christ, the one Foundation, is called by St. Paul, ὁ Ἀντι-κείμενος. (2 Thess. ii. 4.)

The present is a strong passage against the Roman theory, that Peter, and the Bishop of Rome (on the alleged ground of succession to him), is the Rock of the Church;

The following comment of an ancient Father and Bishop of the Church on the present passage is pertinent to that question.

It is for us to build superstructures, not to lay foundations. For no one can lay any other than that which already exists. That foundation was laid by Peter, or rather by the Lord Himself. For, when Peter had said, "Thou art the Son of the Living God," the Lord replied, "On this Rock I will build My Church." Do not therefore name yourselves from men, for the only foundation is Christ. (Theodoret.) See further on Matt. xvi. 16—18.

There is none other foundation but Christ: none "other name by which we must be saved," but His. There is "One Lord Jesus Christ through Whom are all things," and "He is the Head of the Body, the Church." He who denies this foundation, and rejects Him who is the Rock, builds on the sand. Cyril (in Catenâ, p. 59).

12—15. Εἰ δέ τις ἐποικοδομεῖ] It will be convenient to offer an exposition of these verses collectively in one note.

St. Paul has declared that there is but one Foundation, Christ: see here v. 11, and above on ii. 2.

He now proceeds to state the cautions to be observed by those who build upon that one Foundation.

He describes two kinds of superstructures laid upon it:

(1) The good, and fair, and durable, one of sound doctrine, represented by Gold, Silver, Precious Stones.

Compare the description of the fabric of the Church glorified, Rev. xxi. 10—21.

(2) The worthless and perishable superstructure of vain and false teaching, represented by wood, hay, stubble.

He is here speaking of a doctrinal superstructure, growing up into a holy life. See Theodoret, Ambrosius, Anselm, and, before them all, Tertullian (c. Marcion. v. 6), where he speaks of Christ as the one foundation, "unicum fundamentum," of those who believe; and adds, that a man's work will stand, or be destroyed, according as he has built "dignam indignamve doctrinam" upon it. Cp. Hammond here.

St. Paul also affirms here that 'the Day,' namely, the Great Day of the Lord, will try and manifest what is the character and quality of each man's work.

This trial he represents as to be made by fire: "The Day will declare it, for it is revealed by Fire;"

To show the certainty, and perpetual imminence of that fiery trial of the Last Day, he uses the present tense (ἀποκαλύπτεται, is revealed). So Rev. i. 7, "Behold He cometh with clouds." Rev. xxii. 20.

That the fire of which he speaks is the fire of the Great Day, is evident from the context, and from other similar passages (see 2 Thess. i. 7), "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire." Cp. Heb. x. 27; xii. 29. 2 Pet. ii. 7, and Daniel's Vision of the Great Day (vii. 9, 10). And so the passage is interpreted by Theodoret and others.

St. Paul next asserts, that,

(1) If the superstructure of Faith and Practice which a man has built upon the one foundation shall abide (μενεῖ, see Winer, p. 50), and endure the trial of the Great Day, he shall receive a reward, μισθόν. Cp. Matt. v. 12 John iv. 36.

(2) But, if a man's work, which he has built on the one Foundation, does not stand the trial of that day, but is consumed and destroyed by the fire, then he shall suffer loss: he shall forfeit his reward, ζημιωθήσεται. Cp. Matt. xvi. 26. Phil. iii. 8.

Yet, he adds, that the workman himself will be saved; but with fear, danger, and difficulty; and "as through fire."

As to this meaning of ὡς διὰ πυρὸς, a proverbial saying, aptly introduced after the mention of the fire of the Great Day, see further, Psalm lxvi. 12, "We went through fire," Isa xliii. 2, and cp. Chrys. here, Hammond, Wetstein, and the interpreters on Theocrit. v. 31, μὴ σπείσῃ, οὐ γάρ τοι πυρὶ θάλπεαι, and on Juvenal iii. 199, and Valck. here, "Proverbium est de iis qui summum evasere discrimen."

"Si primum locum habet Christus, rectè positum est fundamentum. Ergo qui ædificat securus ædificet, si pro dignitate fundamenti ædificat aurum, argentum, lapides pretiosos. Si autem

And he explains St. Paul's reference to fire by "ignis in die judicii futurus."

Christ is the only Foundation. They who build sound doctrines on this foundation, build gold and silver; they who build erroneous doctrine, build hay and stubble. Origen (in Caten. p. 57).

The meaning, therefore, of the whole is, that the fire of the Great Day will try every man's work; and that if the work is the mere hay and stubble of unsound doctrine, it will be destroyed; but if the workman has built on the one foundation, he himself will be saved. But because he has built ill upon it, he will lose his reward, and be saved as through fire, with great peril and difficulty.

This passage is fraught with important doctrinal and practical instruction;

(1) It does not countenance the Roman doctrine of Purgatory, as has been sometimes alleged. The Fire of which St. Paul speaks, is the Fire of the Great Day; not a Fire of any intermediate state. And the Fire, which he describes, does not cleanse, as that intermediate fire is feigned to do, but tries and destroys. It is not a Purgatorial, but a Probationary Fire.

(2) It shows the necessity of building on the One Foundation, Jesus Christ, and Him crucified.

If a workman who builds upon that one true foundation, that is, grounds his own faith and hope, and leads others to ground theirs, upon it, but builds ill upon that true foundation, that is, erects a superstructure of unsound doctrine upon it,—if he will suffer loss, and hardly escape perdition, what will be the lot of those who build on some other foundation than Jesus Christ?

(3) It proves that it is not enough to build upon the One Foundation, but that it is also necessary to build well upon it. If a man builds well, if he raises the solid and symmetrical superstructure of the One True Faith on the One Foundation, Jesus Christ, he will receive a reward at the Great Day.

But if he builds ill—if he erects a crazy superstructure of heterodox notions on the One Foundation, his work will be burnt up (κατακαήσεται,) and he himself will suffer loss, loss of the reward reserved for those who build well upon that foundation. And although he will himself be saved, because he has built on the true foundation, yet it will be with difficulty, and, as it were, like a man who has escaped through the fire which has burnt down his house.

This is a truth which had been intimated by Christ Himself (Matt. v. 19), "Whosoever shall break one of these commandments, even the least, and shall teach men so, shall be called least in the kingdom of God; but whosoever shall do and teach them, he shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven."

(4) Hence we have a solution of a difficulty which has perplexed many;

Holy Scripture affirms that there is "One Lord, One Faith, One Baptism" (Eph. iv. 5. Phil. iii. 16), and condemns all religious differences, whether in doctrine or discipline, as fruits of a carnal mind (1 Cor. i. 10; iii. 3, 4. Gal. v. 20. James iii. 14).

And yet the Christian Church is blemished by heresies and rent by schisms. Persons eminent for some Christian virtues, and animated by love of Christ, are seen teaching things at variance with the doctrines delivered by Christ and His Apostles, and swerving from the right rule of discipline, and marring the Unity of the Church.

Are we to doubt the truth of Holy Scripture, affirming that there is "one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism?" May we imagine that conflicting doctrines can be equally pleasing to God, and equally conducive to Salvation? This cannot be.

On the other hand, can it be supposed that the piety of persons who teach some doctrines at variance with "the Faith once delivered to the Saints," or do not teach some articles of that one Faith, is of no avail? This would be a hard saying.

Where, then, is the solution? It is supplied here by the Apostle, who affirms that for the attainment of the heavenly reward of those who "turn many to righteousness," it is requisite to build on the true foundation, and also to build upon it well; and that they who build ill upon that true foundation will only just escape, as through fire, and will forfeit that reward which they might have obtained by building upon it well.

(5) Lastly, this passage confirms the doctrine—deducible from other Scriptures—that there will be different degrees of reward in heaven, according to the different degrees of labour with which men have improved the different degrees of grace vouchsafed to them on earth. See above, notes on Matt. x. 15. Luke xii. 47, and below, 1 Cor. xv. 41, and 2 Cor. ix. 6, and Bp. Bull's Sermon "on different degrees of bliss in heaven" (Serm. vii. Vol. i. p. 168—192).

16. Οὐκ οἴδατε] He passes to another argument against the sin of ranging themselves in opposite factions under human leaders, particularly such as corrupt the essential purity and fundamental soundness of the spiritual fabric of the Church, which is a Temple holy to the Lord.

— ναὸς Θεοῦ ἐστε, καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα τ. Θεοῦ οἰκεῖ ἐν ὑμῖν;] ye are the sanctuary of God, and the Spirit of God dwells in you. Ναὸς is more holy than ἱερόν: it is the very sanctuary or Holy Place in which God dwells, ναίει. See above on 2 Thess. ii. 4.

If Christ drove with anger the buyers and sellers from the outer courts of the ἱερὸν, as guilty of sacrilege, how great is His indignation against those who pollute the ναὸς, the sacrarium, the Holy Place, in which the Godhead dwells? And ye are this ναὸς Θεοῦ. Are ye not jealous for its sanctity? Will you allow it to be defiled?

An important text as proving the Divinity of the Holy Ghost. See Athanasius de Incarnatione, p. 704.

Every faithful Christian is called a temple (that is, a place consecrated to God), because the Holy Spirit in a special manner is present in him. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" saith St. Paul; "Know ye not that ye are God's temple?" (1 Cor. iii. 16, 17; vi. 19. 2 Cor. vi. 16.) Whence should we know it? From hence, that God's Spirit inhabiteth you (Rom. viii. 9), because the inhabitation of the Spirit is the same with the inhabitation of God. The same Apostle again, In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit (Eph. ii. 22), for an habitation of God in the Spirit. That is therefore an habitation of God, because the Spirit dwelleth in you. How could the divinity of the Holy Spirit be more expressly declared? Dr. Barrow, Sermon 34, Vol. v. p. 161.

17. φθείρει] corrupt, by false doctrines raised on the false foundation of human pride and worldly wisdom. The words φθείρω, διαφθείρω, are here applied to heretical pravity sullying and vitiating the essential purity and fundamental soundness of the one true faith. Cp. 1 Tim. vi. 5. Ignat. ad Ephes. c. 16: ἐάν τις πίστιν Θεοῦ ἐν κακῇ διδασκαλίᾳ φθείρῃ, ὁ τοιοῦτος, ῥυπαρὸς γενόμενος, εἰς τὸ πῦρ τὸ ἄσβεστον χωρήσει.

— φθερεῖ τοῦτον ὁ Θεός] him will God destroy. St. Paul repeats the word φθείρω. God will destroy him who neither builds well, nor builds on the one foundation, but destroys the Temple of God by subverting the faith of the people of God, who are His Temple.

19. γέγραπται γάρ] From Job v. 13, where the Septuagint Version, less closely following the Hebrew, has ὁ καταλαμβάνων σοφοὺς ἐν τῇ φρονήσει. St. Paul's words are more expressive,—God grasps the wise in and by their own craftiness: He uses it as a hand whereby to clutch them, a net wherein to take them, a pit wherein to catch and imprison them.

The following verse is almost verbatim from the Septuagint Version of Ps. xciv. 11.

It appears from these two verses, thus placed in juxtaposition, that St. Paul follows the LXX, but uses his own discretion in doing so, and sometimes substitutes for it a translation approaching more nearly to the Original.

21. Ὥστε] This word is used by St. Paul to introduce the summing up and conclusion of his argument here and elsewhere in this Epistle; iii. 7; iv. 5; vii. 38; xi. 33; xiv. 39; xv. 58.

22. θάνατος] death is yours. The death of Adam to make us mortal, but the death of Christ to make us immortal: the death of Adam ἵνα σωφρονισθῶμεν, the death of Christ ἵνα σωθῶμεν. (Chrys.) And by that death of Christ we have gained a victory and lordship over the Grave. 1 Cor. xv. 55.

22, 23. πάντα ὑμῶν ἐστιν—Χριστὸς δὲ Θεοῦ] St. Paul here displays a specimen of that spiritual logic and rhetoric in which he is a consummate master;

He is preparing to censure the Corinthians, in a subsequent part of the Epistle, for their uncharitable and licentious abuse of their Christian Liberty, in gratifying their own appetites by indulgence in meats which had been offered in sacrifice to heathen Idols; and in other respects. See chapters vi. 13—18; viii. 1—15, and x. 16—33.

But he will not allow them to imagine that he has any desire to abridge their Christian Liberty.

Therefore, before he proceeds to reprobate their abuse of Christian Liberty, he takes care to state here in clear terms the true doctrine concerning it, and to establish it on its proper foundation, namely, that of the Incarnation, and of our Incorporation into Christ's mystical body, and our adoption by God in Him, by Whom we have become heirs of Creation, and have been reinstated, by a divine and sovereign act of enfranchisement and infeodation, in that plenary right of dominion which we once had in Adam, and from which we lapsed by the Fall, and to which we have been restored in Christ.

He thus shows that the Corinthians are inconsistent with themselves, and that so far from duly exercising that Christian Liberty with which they have been endowed by God in Christ, they have been foregoing and forfeiting it by surrendering and sacrificing themselves, in a spiritual vassalage, to human leaders of schismatical parties: and have degraded themselves from a condition of spiritual freedom, filial dignity, and royal dominion, to that of slaves.

He thus obviates the objection, that he desired to curtail their Christian Liberty.

He shows that he is desirous to emancipate them from that bondage to which they have reduced themselves, and to restore them to that state of Liberty, Sonship, Lordship, and Royalty, which they themselves have lost.

This he does by displaying the sin and ignominy of blindly following human guides, instead of remembering that they are fellow-members in the Body of Christ under one Head; and by reminding them that if they themselves are Christ's, and if they know no other foundation than Christ, no other Head, no other Teacher than Christ, and are soundly built up on Him, then they are lords of all Creatures through Christ. St. Paul does not claim lordship over them; no, but he says that Paul is theirs and Apollos is theirs. Let them, therefore, not be slaves of men, of false teachers, of blind guides; let them not rob Christ of His own, for they are Christ's, and He is God's.

The Doctrine here stated of Christian Liberty, and Christian Dominion over the creatures, ("All things are yours,") is so important, and the due understanding of it is so requisite to the apprehension of St. Paul's reasoning in this Epistle, and it is a doctrine which has been so often misrepresented, that it may be well to insert here some observations upon it, by one of the best expositors of St. Paul's meaning.

If by Adam's sin we had lost all that first title we had to the creatures, wholly and utterly, yet as God hath been pleased graciously to deal with us, we are now fully as well as before. God the Father hath granted us, and God the Son hath acquired for us, and God the Holy Ghost hath sealed to us, a new Patent. By it whatsoever defect is, or can be supposed to be, in our old evidence, is supplied; and by virtue of it we may make fresh challenge, and renew our claim unto the creatures.

The Blessed Son of God, having made peace through the blood of His cross (Col. i. 20), hath reconciled us to His Father, and therein also reconciled the creatures both to us and Him; reconciling by Him, saith our Apostle, πάντα, all things, not men only, unto Himself For God having given us His Son, the heir of all things, hath He not with Him freely given us all things else? (Heb. i. 2.) Hath He not permitted us the free use of His Creatures in as ample right as ever? (Rom. viii. 32.) If the Son have made us free, we are free indeed. (John viii. 36.) And as verily as Christ is God's, so verily if we be Christ's all things are ours.

St. Paul setteth down the whole series and form of this spiritual Hierarchy (if I may so speak), this subjection and subordination of the creatures to man, of man to Christ, of Christ to God,—All are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's. (1 Cor. iii. 22, 23.) Bp. Sanderson (Sermon on 1 Tim. iv. 4, Vol. iii. p. 158).

The holy and comfortable use of the creatures ariseth from the word of God's decree even as the former did, but not from the same decree. That former issued from the decree of common Providence, and so belonged unto all. But this later decree proceedeth from that special word of God's decree whereby, for the merits of Christ Jesus, the Second Adam (1 Cor. xv. 45), He removeth from the creature that curse wherein it was wrapped through the sin of the first Adam. (Gen. iii. 17.)

And in this the wicked have no portion, as being out of Christ; so as they cannot partake of God's creatures with any solid or sound comfort, and so the creatures remain in this degree unsanctified to them.

This is probably the meaning of Origen's remark here: πάντα τοῦ ἁγίου ἐστὶν· τοῦ πιστοῦ ὅλος ὁ κόσμος· τοῦ δὲ ἀπίστου οὐδὲ βόλος· ὃς γὰρ λρστὴς ἔχει ἃ ἔχει ὁ ἄπιστος· οὐ γὰρ εἰδὼς αὐτοῖς χρῆσθαι, οὐδὲ τὸν κτίσαντα ταῦτα Θεόν.

For this cause the Scriptures call the faithful, primogenitos, the first-born (Heb. xii. 23), as to whom belongeth a double portion (Deut. xxi. 17); and Hæredes mundi, 'heirs of the world,' as if none but they had any good right thereunto.

And St. Paul deriveth our right unto the creatures from God, but by Christ. All things are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's; as if these things were none of theirs who are none of Christ's. And in 1 Tim. iv. 3 he saith of meats, that God hath created them to be received with thanksgiving of them (i. e. by them) which believe and know the truth; as if those persons that wanted faith and saving knowledge did but usurp the bread they eat.

And, indeed, it is certain that the wicked have not right to the creatures of God in such ample sort as the godly have. A kind of right they have, and we may not deny it them, given them by God's unchangeable ordinance at the Creation, which, being a branch of God's image in man, which was of natural, and not of supernatural grace, might be and was fully defaced by sin, but was not, neither could be, wholly lost. A right then they have, but such a right as, reaching barely to the use, cannot afford unto the user true comfort or sound peace of conscience in such use of the creatures. For though nothing be in and of itself unclean, for every creature of God is good, yet to them that are unclean, ex accidente, every creature is unclean and polluted, because it is not thus sanctified unto them by the Word of God.

And the very true cause of all this is the impurity of their hearts by reason of unbelief. The Holy Ghost expressly assigneth this cause. To the pure all things are pure, but to them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure; but even their mind and conscience is defiled. (Tit. i. 15.) Bp. Sanderson (Vol. iii. pp. 182, 183).

With regard to the error (derived from these words of St. Paul, "all things are yours") that none but the godly have a right to any authority over the creatures, see below on 1 Cor. vi. 12.

— Χριστὸς δὲ Θεοῦ] Christ is God's, not as a Creature, but as the Everlasting Son of the Everlasting Father.

He is also God's as Man; and it is His Humanity which forms the connecting link in St. Paul's argument. It is by His Incarnation that Christ is our second Adam, and reinstates us in our acquired liberty and dominion over the creatures; and it is through H m, as our Emmanuel, that all things are ours.

On the question how "Christ is God's," see further below on viii. 6 and xi. 3.

CH. IV. 1, 2. Οὕτως] He deters them from supposing that, because he had said "all things are yours, whether Paul or Apollos," they have a right to pronounce censure on him their Teacher and Apostle. No, Paul is yours, to hear and to profit by, but not to judge. I am God's Minister, and he that judgeth me is the Lord.

— Ὁ δὲ λοιπόν] But what remains, i. e. to be done on our side. Your part is to esteem us as Ministers of Christ and Stewards of the Mysteries of God. Our duty is to be faithful. He does not disclaim responsibility; he is accountable to God for fidelity, but not to them.

Some of the oldest MSS., A, B, C, D*, F, G read ὧδε, which is received by some Editors, who render it, here, in this world. But this is harsh; and nothing is more common, even in the best MSS., than the confusion of ο and ω, on account of the identity of sound and similarity of letter in uncial characters. See the remarkable instance of this confusion below, xv. 49, φορέσωμεν for φορέσομεν, and Luke xvi. 25.

St. Paul uses the phrase τὸ λοιπὸν to mark a conclusion—finally, to show that there is no further consideration needed to determine the question in hand. See 1 Cor. vii. 29. Eph. vi. 10. Phil. iii. 1; iv. 8. 2 Thess. iii. 1.

3. εἰς ἐλάχιστον] 'in modico,' Tertullian (de Pudicitiâ, 14), i. e. of no moment or account. See Acts xix. 27, εἰς οὐδὲν λογισθῆναι, and Winer, G. G., § 29, p. 165.

— ἀνθρωπίνης ἡμέρας] A day of man as distinguished from the Day, the Day of the Lord, to which he has just referred as proving every man's work. (1 Cor. iii. 13.) Compare the Latin phrase, "diem alicui dicere," to indict a man for trial.

— ἀλλ'] yea. Cp. 2 Cor. vii. 11.

4. οὐδὲν ἐμαυτῷ σύνοιδα] I am not conscious to myself of any sin. Cp. Job xxvii. 6, LXX, οὐδὲν σύνοιδα ἐμαυτῷ ἄτοπα πράξας. (Bengel.) "Nihil mihi conscius sum, inquit Paulus (1 Cor. iv. 4), id est, non scio me aliquâ ex parte defuisse officio meo." Bp. Sanderson (de Conscient. i. 16).

St. Paul speaks hypothetically, and by a common use of the first personal pronoun I (see 1 Cor. vi. 12) makes himself a representative of Christian Ministers and Teachers generally. This is what he calls μετασχηματίζειν εἰς ἑαυτὸν, to transfer to himself, by a figure, a general proposition applicable to a class of persons. (1 Cor. iv. 6.) Although, as a Christian Minister, I may not be sensible to myself of any default in the discharge of my ministerial duties, yet I am not thereby acquitted. I am not my own Judge; I cannot pronounce sentence on myself. He that judgeth me is the Lord. The Day on which my cause will be tried is the great Day of the Lord. That Day will bring to light all hidden things, and manifest the secrets of the hearts.

There are, therefore, sins of ignorance to be repented of. And every one may say with the Psalmist, "Who can tell how oft he offendeth? O cleanse Thou me from my secret faults,"—faults secret even to myself. (Ps. xix. 12.) See Origen here (in Caten. p. 73).

S. Ignatius (ad Rom. 5) referring to St. Paul's words, says, ἐν τοῖς ἀδικήμασιν αὐτῶν μᾶλλον μαθητεύομαι (I am trained in the school of Christ by the malice of my enemies), ἀλλ' οὐ παρὰ τοῦτο δεδικαίωμαι (but I am not thereby justified).

5. πρὸ καιροῦ] Before the season, i. e. of Judgment. See Matt. viii. 29, where the same words occur in the same sense.

— ὁ ἔπαινος] The praise, i. e. that is due. The award of praise supposes also its correlative award of blame: but this he leaves to be understood.

6. Ταῦτα μετεσχημάτισα εἰς ἐμαυτὸν καὶ Ἀπολλώ] See on v. 4. These things I expressed by a schema or figure of transference, applying to myself and to Apollos, as specimens, what is not to be limited by you to us, but to be extended by you, in a process of generalization, to all similar cases. See Origen, in Caten. p. 77.

On this use of μετασχηματίζω, to transfer as by a figure, see Wetstein, p. 112, who quotes Martial iii. 69, "Schemate nec dubio sed apertè nominat illam."

St. Paul, in his wisdom and charity, abstains from mentioning the names of the false Teachers by whom the Corinthians were led astray, and in whose names they gloried. He condemns their erroneous principles and practices (iii. 11—22), but he spares their persons. Thus he endeavours to bring them to repentance. He points their attention to the hidden persons of the false teachers by specifying the true. (Chrys.) He mentions his own name and that of Apollos, in order that, by means of these two personal specimens, and by exposing the sin of making himself and Apollos into leaders of religious parties, he may show, à fortiori, the sin of following other leaders who had not the gifts and qualifications of Paul and Apollos, but were Teachers of error and enemies of the Truth.

— ἵνα ἐν ἡμῖν μάθητε τὸ μὴ ὑπὲρ ἃ γέγραπται] That ye may learn by our cases the lesson of not going beyond the things that are written.

Elz. adds φρονεῖν after γέγραπται, but φρονεῖν is not found in the best MSS., A, B, D*, E*, F, G, nor in Vulg., and seems to be a gloss, and is omitted by Lachm., Tisch., Meyer, Alf. The article τὸ is thus prefixed to sentences of an emphatic and proverbial kind. See above on Mark ix. 23. Cp. Rom. viii. 26; xiii. 9.

And the ellipsis of the verb is significant as giving greater largeness and general comprehensiveness to the proverb, which would be limited by the insertion of a particular verb with a special idea, such as φρονεῖν. Compare a similar ellipse in a similar prohibitory proverb in Terence, Andr. I. i. 61,

——————— "id arbitror Apprimè in vitâ esse utile, ut nequid nimis;"

and Milton (P. L. xi.),

——————— "Observe
The rule of Not too much by Temperance taught."

But it may be asked, Where are the things written to which the Apostle refers? In the Scriptures generally. Hence ἃ (the reading of A, B, C) seems preferable to ὃ, which would imply rather an allusion to some one particular text; whereas St. Paul's reference is to the general tenour of the Scriptures, which teach that "Cursed is he that putteth his trust in man, and taketh man for his defence" (Jer. xvii. 5), and "Let him that glorieth, glory in the Lord" (Jer. ix. 23, 24). See above, 1 Cor. i. 31.

St. Matthew's Gospel had been written at this time, as Chrys. supposes, and is probable (see Pref. to the Gospels, p. xlix). There the Corinthians would find divine cautions from Christ against the sin of calling, and of being called Rabbi, Rabbi; "for One is your Master, even Christ, and ye all are brethren" (Matt. xxiii. 8—10).

— ἵνα μὴ—φυσιοῦσθε] The form of the verb φυσιοῦσθε after ἵνα μὴ is remarkable. Origen and Theodoret seem to have read ἕνα for ἵνα, and φυσιοῦσθαι for φυσιοῦσθε, and then the text would stand, ἕνα μὴ ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἑνὸς φυσιοῦσθαι, as it is cited by Origen (p. 78). And this seems to have been the reading of those MSS. followed by Vulg. but not Cod. Augiensis, and Boerner.

But the Greek MSS. represent with an overwhelming consent the reading in the text.

(1) Bengel calls φυσιοῦσθε "an irregular form of the subjunctive," and compares Gal. iv. 17, ζηλοῦσιν ὑμᾶς . . . ἵνα αὐτοὺς ζηλοῦτε.

(2) On the other hand, Winer (Gr. Gr. § 41, p. 259) supposes these forms to be indicatives used irregularly, according to the usage of a declining Græcism, for the conjunctive; and he quotes instances of this usage from a Byzantine Historian, and from Apocryphal writings; and observes that, in modern Greek, νὰ (= ἵνα) is often used with an Indicative.

He observes also, that the only two instances of this usage in the New Testament, are supplied by contracted verbs in -όω, —φυσιόω, ζηλόω.

This, however, is not absolutely certain. In Titus ii. 4, κατὰ τοῦ ἑτέρου. 7 [g] Τίς γὰρ σὲ διακρίνει; τί δὲ ἔχεις ὃ οὐκ ἔλαβες; εἰ δὲ καὶ ἔλαβες, τί καυχᾶσαι ὡς μὴ λαβών;

The fact that the indicative of a past tense is used even by the best classical authors, under certain conditions, after ἵνα (see Elmsl., Soph. Œd. Tyr. 1389; Monk, Hippol. 641; Hermann, Viger. § 350), may suggest the probability of a similar use of the present also.

(3) Some other Expositors (Meyer and Fritzsche) suppose ἵνα to be a particle of place. But this is not consistent with the context.

(4) It cannot be denied that the use of ἵνα μὴ with an indicative is a barbarism, and though it is true that in the structure of sentences St. Paul has usages of his own, which are above the ordinary rules of Grammar, yet it does not therefore follow that he uses words or idioms which are solœcisms.

It may, therefore, be submitted for the reader's consideration, whether we have not here an instance of an idiom which gives liveliness to the style and address, and is often found in the New Testament, especially in the writings of St. Paul's fellow-traveller, St. Luke, viz. a change from the oratio indirecta to the oratio recta; and whether, therefore, φυσιοῦσθε may not be regarded as a regular and legitimate form, viz. an imperative, "be not ye puffed up."

For examples of this sudden transition to the oratio recta, see on Acts i. 4; xvii. 3; xxiii. 22. Luke v. 14. Mark vi. 9.

Accordingly, the rendering of the present sentence would be such as to convert it into a general exhortation from the Apostle, which seems to be very apposite and in harmony with the general tone of the Epistle, which, be it remembered, was publicly read, on its reception, in the Christian Assemblies at Corinth. And thus all direct, personal, imperative addresses and precepts, would have a special force.

According to this view, the whole paragraph would read thus: These things I transferred by a figure to myself and Apollos, for your sakes, in order that you may learn in us (i. e. by means of our cases put hypothetically in my argument) the lesson of not (going beyond) what is written (in Holy Scripture) in order that—(you may practice this precept)—Be not ye puffed up, each of you, the one for the one leader against the other.

There seems to be a similar usage of ἵνα introducing a precept addressed to persons as if actually present with the writer, in 1 Thess. iv. 13, according to the reading of A, D*, F, G, I, οὐ θέλομεν ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν . . . ἵνα . . . μὴ λυπεῖσθε καθὼς καὶ οἱ λοιποί.

Also it is observable that ἵνα is put thus independently in an anacoluthon, and so as to introduce a precept expressed by an imperative, as here in the present Epistle, i. 31, ἵνα . . . καθὼς γέγραπται, ὁ καυχώμενος ἐν Κυρίῳ καυχάσθω.

For other instances of conjunctions in anacolutha, see John vi. 22; Rom. ix. 22. Col. i. 21. Winer, G. G. § 63.

— ὑπέρ] in behalf of; the opposite of κατά. See Mark ix. 40. John x. 15; xi. 50. Rom. v. 6; viii. 31; ix. 3; x. 1.

7. διακρίνει] distinguishes thee from another, and makes thee to differ from another by special gifts. On this use of διακρίνω, see Acts xv. 9.

An apostrophe to some false Teacher, and carrying with it a κέντρον, or sting, which must have been keenly felt when this letter was publicly read in the Church at Corinth.

8. Ἤδη κεκορεσμένοι ἐστέ] Ye are already filled to satiety. He passes to another topic, and with something of rhetorical irony, κωμῳδῶν αὐτοὺς (says Chrys.), remonstrates with them on their presumptuous notions of sudden perfection, and on their spiritual pride, vain-glory, and self-sufficiency, which he reprehends and exposes by means of a reductio ad absurdum. Ye, our children, are already filled to satiety; what then ought we, your spiritual parents, to be? Ye, the taught, exult; how much more ought we, your Teachers, to do so? But what is the fact? I trow (δοκῶ) that God has displayed us as the last, while ye imagine yourselves to be the first in the Christian race; and has destined us to death, like prisoners cast to wild beasts in the arena, while ye sit aloft as spectators, and reign as kings. And yet we are patient, and bless Him. If this is our case, you may be sure that pride and vain-glory, and self-confidence, such as yours are no fit badges of Christians.

— ὄφελον] ὄφελες = ὤφειλες, scil. εὐχῆς, Apollon. (Lex.) Cp. 2 Cor. xi. 1. Gal. v. 12. Winer, p. 270.

— ἐβασιλεύσατε] ye reigned. Ye attained the crown, and are already seated on the throne. Cp. Latin regno. Hor. (1 Epist. x. 8), "Quid quæris? vivo ac regno." Terent. (Phorm. ii. 3. 58.)

9. Δοκῶ] 'puto' (Tertullian), I am persuaded. See vii. 40. Not an expression of doubt, but a strong asseveration. Photius (in Cat. 86).

— ἐπιθανατίους] appointed to death; rendered "bestiarios" by Tertullian (de Pudicit. 14). "Puto, nos Deus Apostolos novissimos elegit, velut bestiarios." καταβίκους (Chrys.), θηριομάχους (Gloss.), i. e. prisoners or convicts brought out as destined for death, led out into the amphitheatre to be torn in pieces by wild beasts. Cp. Tertullian, Apol. 40, "Si Tiberis ascendit ad mœnia, &c. Christianos ad Leonem:" the hue and cry at Rome, made more vociferous by its rhythmical cadence, — ⏑ — — | — ⏑ — — |.

In another, spiritual, sense the Christian is ἐπιθανάτιος, he 'dies daily;' he is dead to the world; he bears in his own body 'the dying of the Lord Jesus;' he is 'conformed to His death.' Origen (in Caten. p. 84).

— θέατρον] Like those ἐπιθανάτιοι brought into the arena, as S. Ignatius was afterwards into that of the Colosseum at Rome. Cp. Ignat. ad Rom. 4. Martyr. Ignat. 6.

— τῷ κόσμῳ] Not of a single city, but of the World. (Chrys.)

10. Ἡμεῖς μωροὶ διὰ Χριστόν] An irony. (Origen.)

We, your teachers, who suffer these things, are counted fools for Christ's sake, and yet ye, the taught, reign like kings, and think yourselves wise in Christ! A reductio ad absurdum. (Chrys.)

11. γυμνιτεύομεν] So the best MSS. On the form of this verb (like μεσιτεύω), see Winer, p. 84.

12. καὶ κοπιῶμεν ἐργαζόμενοι τ. ἰ. χ.] Even now at Ephesus we labour with our own hands: a statement confirmed incidentally by what is said by St. Paul to the Ephesian presbyters at Miletus (Acts xx. 34), αὐτοὶ γινώσκετε ὅτι ταῖς χρείαις μου . . . ὑπηρέτησαν αἱ χεῖρες αὗται.

13. περικαθάρματα] (1) Properly things which are scoured off on all sides from other objects, as their offal and refuse, and are then thrown away. Cp. Isa. xxx. 22; lxiv. 6.

(2) Hence whatever is despised and cast off. Cp. Lament. iii. 45, "Thou hast made us as the offscouring and refuse in the midst of the people."

(3) Persons, reserved in heathen cities for emergencies of public calamity, e. g. Pestilence, Famine, or Invasion, and then devoted as ἀναθέματα, to death, as an expiation of the sins of the People, and to propitiate and appease the wrath of the gods (Schol. Aristoph. Eqq. 1133);—a remarkable witness from heathen tradition and practice, in behalf of the doctrine of Vicarious Atonement for sin.

Heb. 6. 3.

Hence in Prov. xxi. 18, for כֹּפֶר (copher) the LXX have περικάθαρμα, an expiation.

(4) Since the persons thus destined for these expiatory sacrifices, like scapegoats, were usually strangers, captives, prisoners, and miserable outcasts, therefore καθάρματα and περικαθάρματα came to signify miscreants of the most abject condition, as here. See the commentators on Aristoph. Equit. 1133, Plut. 444, and the story of Sinon, Virg. Æn. ii. 115—129, and the passages quoted here by Wetstein, p. 114.

— περίψημα] "peripsema," Tertullian (de Pudicit. c. 14), and so Vulg., as not having an equivalent in Latin. The meaning of the word is,—

(1) Whatever περιψᾶται, circumraditur, is rubbed round and rubbed off by friction, as the filings or smeltings of metals, the sweepings of a house,—"rasura cujusque rei." (Glossar. Cangii.)

The Metaphor is taken from the scouring of tables after meat. What is used for that purpose, and is afterwards thrown away as refuse, is called περίψημα. Theodor. Mopsuest. (in Cat. 83).

(2) Hence the word is applied to any thing or any person who is an object of scorn, and is thrown aside as such, while that from which it or he is separated, becomes more clean by the separation.

(3) Hence the word signifies a person or thing which is ready to be sacrificed and cast off in contempt for the benefit of some other person or thing. Thus in the book of Tobit (v. 24), Anna, the mother of Tobias, says, ἀργύριον περίψημα τοῦ παιδίου γένοιτο, let the money be sacrificed as nought for the sake of the child. And S. Ignatius applies the word to himself (ad Ephes. c. 8), ἐγὼ περίψημα ὑμῶν, and c. 18, περίψημα τὸ ἐμὸν πνεῦμα τοῦ σταυροῦ, and S. Barnabas (c. 6), ἐγὼ περίψημα τῆς ἀγάπης ὑμῶν. And it was a common expression of love among the early Christians, ἐγὼ περίψημά σου. See the note of Valesius on Eusebius vii. 23.

And this seems to be St. Paul's meaning here. He is himself πάντων περίψημα, i. e. he draws off from others, and absorbs into himself, the shame and misery which would otherwise be theirs.

(4) Hence the word περίψημα was also used in a piacular sense. See Bp. Pearson (Vind. Ignat. ii. c. xv.) for ἀντίλυτρον and ἀντίψυχον.

15. παιδαγωγούς] Properly persons who were employed to escort children to School, and to watch over them as their attendants and guardians. See the character in Euripides' Medea, the scene of which is Corinth, and the statue in the famous group of Niobe's children, at Florence. Cp. Plaut. (Mercator i. 190), "Servum qui pædagogus fuerat," and see Wetstein and Valck. here. They were called by the Romans literiones, and are not to be confounded with the slaves called capsarii, who carried the books, &c., of the pupil to school. Horat. (Sat. I. iv. 78).

He here contrasts the severe moroseness of the παιδαγωγὸς with the affectionate tenderness of the πατήρ. In Gal. iii. 34, the distinction is between the manuductory office of the former, and the more perfect work of the Teacher.

16. μιμηταί μου γίνεσθε] See on 1 Cor. xi. 1.

17. Τιμόθεον] Timotheus, who had been with St. Paul on his first visit to Corinth, with Silas (Acts xviii. 5), and who had now been sent by St. Paul from Ephesus (with Erastus of Corinth, Rom. xvi. 23), to go through Macedonia to Corinth, a little before the writing of this Epistle (Acts xix. 22), and was with St. Paul in Macedonia when he wrote his Second Epistle to the Corinthians (2 Cor. i. 1).

18. τινες] Certain persons: he does not specify their names, lest he might harden them in sin, and in order that he might leave the door open for their Repentance, for which he hoped and laboured; and which, under his wise and merciful treatment, was realized. Cp. Origen here.

19. ἐλεύσομαι ταχέως] Which he did soon after the writing of the Second Epistle. Compare xvi. 6. Acts xx. 1, and Introduction to this Epistle.

21. ἐν ῥάβδῳ] with a rod. On the use of ἐν, as indicating an accompaniment with which, and an instrument by which, a person acts, see Luke xiv. 31, ἐν δέκα χιλιάσιν. Eph. vi. 16, τὸν θυρεὸν τῆς πίστεως ἐν ᾧ κ.τ.λ. Cp. Exod. xxi. 20, πατάξῃ ἐν ῥάβδῳ, and Meyer here.

The ῥάβδος, or Rod, is an emblem of power, and an instrument of executing judgments, as is seen in the History of Moses, Exod. vii. 9, 10. 19; viii. 5, and passim; and in the passages of Holy Scripture describing the Royal and Judicial Office of Christ, Ps. ii. 9. Heb. i. 8. Rev. ii. 27; xix. 15.

Here, then, the words "with a rod," signify punitive power. (Chrys.)

Ch. V. 1. Ὅλως] altogether; 'prorsus, planè, omnino;' παντελῶς (Hesych.); said of what is indubitable. See the use of the word 1 Cor. vi. 7. Hence Tertullian (De Pudic. c. 14) translates the passage thus: "Auditur in vobis in totum fornicatio." And Chrys. interprets the word to mean, that the crime was one common to all by their connivance at it, and says, that by using the word ὅλως, κοινοῖ τὸ ἔνδειγμα τοῦ ἐγκλήματος. Some recent Expositors render the words, "the character of πόρνος is actually borne among you," but this is erroneous.

Observe the contrast. A sin, he says, is commonly heard of among you Christians, which does not exist even among the Gentiles.

He also mentions the common notoriety of the sin, in order to prepare the way, and to account for the declaration which he is about to make, that although absent from them, he has already pronounced sentence upon it (ἀπὼν ἤδη κέκρικα, v. 3).

The divisions and dissensions of which he had been speaking before, had been reported to him by those of Chloe, i. 11. Cp. xi. 18, ἀκούω σχίσματα ἐν ὑμῖν εἶναι. But the sin of which he is now going to speak was as public as it was heinous; and being so notorious, he needed not to inquire further, nor refer to any special witnesses to avouch the fact.

The connexion of this topic with the preceding, is to be seen in the words ἐν ῥάβδῳ ἔλθω, iv. 21. Shall I come with a rod, the rod of discipline and chastisement? and why? for a great sin has been committed among you; it is a notorious and flagrant sin, one which concerns you all; and yet you connive at it, and are even puffed up with spiritual pride, and imagine yourselves to be in a flourishing state.

— ἔθνεσιν] Elz. adds ὀνομάζεται, which is not found in the best MSS.

The abhorrence felt even by the heathens for the sin in question had been pourtrayed by Euripides in the character of his Hippolytus Coronifer,—the scene of which drama is laid at Troezen, in the neighbourhood of Corinth. Cp. S. Cyril here (in Cat.). For other proofs of the execration with which such an incestuous connexion was regarded by heathens, see Cicero pro Cluentio, 5, 6, and Wetstein, p. 116.

— ὥστε γυναῖκά τινα τοῦ πατρὸς ἔχειν] This incestuous person is supposed by some of the ancient Expositors to have been a person of wealth and influence, and a leader in a party of the Church at Corinth. See Theodoret and Severian here.

2. ἀρθῇ] So the best MSS. and Editions.—Elz. ἐξαρθῇ.

— τὸ ἔργον τοῦτο] this deed. On this mode of speech see above, on 1 Thess. iv. 6.

3. ἀπών] Elz. prefixes ὡς, which is not in A, B, C, D*. And the sense is more clear without it. For I, though absent in body, &c.

There is something in the involved structure of this sentence which gives a strong impression of the emotion, anguish, and indignation with which it was written, and which vented itself in broken and disturbed periods, as it were, "per singultus."

What must have been the effect of such sentences as this—and of others like it in this Epistle—when publicly read for the first time in the Church at Corinth!

— ἤδη κέκρικα] I have already resolved. A very important text in relation to the question concerning the independence of spiritual authority in the exercise and administration of Ecclesiastical Discipline.

It appears

(1) That St. Paul, when now at Ephesus (ἀπὼν τῷ σώματι), had already resolved (ἤδη κέκρικα) to excommunicate the incestuous person at Corinth, whose sin was notorious.

(2) That he did this without taking counsel with the Corinthians, and probably against their inclination; for they were conniving at the sin, and were puffed up with spiritual pride (πεφυσιωμένοι), as if nothing was amiss among them.

(3) That the sentence of Excommunication was not private, but to be promulgated in their presence, and when they were gathered together in a religious assembly (συναχθέντων ὑμῶν).

(4) That these requisitions of St. Paul were complied with. (2 Cor. vii. 6—16.)

(5) That the sentence of Excommunication pronounced by the Apostle was afterwards taken off by him, when absent, on the Repentance of the guilty party. (2 Cor. ii. 5—7.)

Hence conclusive arguments may be derived,

(1) against the errors of Erastianism, which would unduly limit Ecclesiastical Discipline on the part of the Spiritualty; and would confine the Power of the Keys (see on Matt. xvi. 19) to the mere hortatory efforts of Persuasion; and transfer all its practical efficiency to the Civil Power.

(2) Against the notions of Beza and the Genevan Discipline, which would associate Lay Elders with the Spiritualty in cognizance of purely Spiritual causes, and in the exercise of Spiritual Discipline by Excommunication and Absolution.

(3) Against the Papal theory, which would derive all ecclesiastical authority and spiritual jurisdiction from the Roman Pontiff as the representative of St. Peter. (See above on Matt. xvi. 19, and on John xx. 23.)

St. Paul in this act of Excommunication makes no reference to St. Peter, but says Ἐγὼ κέκρικα: and in this Epistle he speaks of Cephas in conjunction with himself and Apollos (i. 12) as fellow-workers under Christ.

On these important questions, the younger student may consult the passages from Holy Scripture and the Fathers, and also from Hooker, Bp. Taylor, Sanderson, and others, quoted in Theophilus Anglicanus, Part iii. chap. v. Also on the "Power of the Keys," the authorities quoted in Part i. ch. xiii. and xiv.

The power of the Apostle,—pronouncing so awful a sentence as this in his absence, a sentence accompanied, it is probable, with bodily consequences to the guilty party (see next note),—must have been greatly confirmed in the minds of the Corinthians, and have tended to produce in them the salutary effects of reverential deference to St. Paul's authority, which appear from many places of the Second Epistle, e. g. 2 Cor. vii. 11.

5. παραδοῦναι τὸν τοιοῦτον τῷ Σατανᾷ] By ἀφορισμὸς, or Excommunication,—that is, by separation from external communion with the Visible Church in religious offices. See Chrys., Theophyl., and Suicer in v. ἀφορισμός.

"The punishment for extreme contumacy (says Barrow, Serm. lviii. Vol. iii. p. 140) is called delivery to Satan, and this power is spiritual." (2 Cor. x. 4.)

(1) The term "deliver to Satan," used by St. Paul here and 1 Tim. i. 20, appears to have had its origin from consideration of the fact, that physical evil is due to the agency of the Evil Spirit. This truth had been revealed in the history of Job (Job ii. 6), and was further illustrated by our Lord's teaching (Luke xiii. 16), in the case of the woman "with a spirit of infirmity," and in the history of the demoniac at Gadara, and the fate of the swine (Matt. viii. 30—32. Mark v. 13. Luke viii. 33); and in the Evangelical history generally of demoniacal possessions accompanied with bodily sufferings. Hence St. Paul's thorn in his flesh is called by him ἄγγελος Σατᾶν. (2 Cor. xii. 7.)

(2) Excommunication is a withdrawal of the ordinary means of grace,—a cutting off from the channels by which the influences of the Holy Ghost are usually bestowed. They who have grieved the Holy Ghost by heinous sin, are deprived, for their sin, of His comfortable presence, and are given over to the power of their own Master, Satan, whose service they have preferred to that of God.

(3) The ordinary means of grace being withheld, by which the Presence of the Holy Ghost is usually vouchsafed, Satan makes his own power to be felt by them. And this he has been permitted by Almighty God to do, particularly in the earlier ages of the Church, by physical distempers and plagues. Hence St. Paul declares that the sicknesses with which the Corinthians were visited, were chastisements for their sins in desecrating the Lord's House and the Lord's Table. (1 Cor. xi. 30—32.) "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you." And corporal pains were the consequences of Excommunication pronounced by the Apostles of Christ. Cp. Augustine c. Epist. Parmenian. iii. 2. Jerome, ad Heliodor. Epist. i.

(4) But St. Paul adds, that these bodily chastisements were permitted by God, for wise and merciful purposes, even for a spiritual benefit. "When we are (thus) judged, we are chastened by the Lord, in order that we should not be punished with the world."

This is what St. Paul states to be the aim and end of the sentence of Excommunication, here pronounced by himself against the incestuous Corinthian, who is delivered by him to Satan, in order that by the punishment of the flesh, in which he had sinned, "his spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord."

And in like manner he says that he delivered Hymenæus and Alexander to Satan, with a salutary intention towards them, i. e. that they might learn not to blaspheme (1 Tim. i. 20); and he says generally that his spiritual weapons are given him "for edification, and not for destruction." (2 Cor. x. 8; xiii. 10.) Cp. Chrys. here, and Theodoret.

The examples of Ananias and Sapphira often cited hereupon, are not relevant, because their punishment was not inflicted on them by the Apostle, but only pre-announced (see on Acts v. 5); nor could death have been ministered to that spiritual edification, which is the aim and end of Excommunication and of all Church Discipline.

(5) If it be asked, how excommunicated persons, being cut off from fellowship with the Church, could be moved to Repentance (which is a work of the Holy Ghost), by bodily sufferings, and not rather be hardened by them as Pharaoh was, it must be remembered, "that the act of excommunication neither shutteth out from the mystical Church, nor clean from the visible, but only from fellowship with the visible in holy duties." Hooker, III. i. 13.

There is still the holy seed of Baptism—which is not to be repeated—in the heart of the person excommunicated; and that seed, though it have been choked by sin, may germinate afresh, when the gracious motions of the Spirit which bloweth where it listeth, are pleased to visit it, and those motions are cherished in the soul, which is humbled by the chastisement of the flesh, and is taught by suffering, how evil and bitter a thing it is to depart from the living God. (Jer. ii. 19.)

There is also that natural residue of Divine goodness which makes itself felt and heard in Human Nature by the Voice of Conscience when awakened by suffering, and which gave vent to the penitential confession of the Prodigal Son: "Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee." (Luke xv. 18.)

(6) Thus Excommunication itself, though doubtless it is a cutting off from participation in ordinary means of Grace, yet is to be considered as one of the means of Grace; one which, if rightly used, God Himself, Who appointed it, will bless; and which ought never to be forfeited by a Church. Just as the severe discipline of the bodily physician is not to be foregone, though it may deprive the patient of food and exercise, which are ordinary means of health, yet is salutary and necessary, in order that he may enjoy them, and is itself one of the appointed means of health.

Compare Chrys., Theophyl., and Œcum. here, and the statements of Hammond, in his note, and in his Letter to Bp. Sanderson (Sanderson's Works, v. p. 344, 345), from which the following words may be cited:

There is the withdrawing all the outward ordinary means of Grace, the preaching of the Word and Sacraments, which, if it be done by the censures of the Church, is called the delivering up to Satan. And of those Church censures it is said expressly by the Apostle that the end of inflicting them is for edification, that men may be disciplined, and taught not to blaspheme. (2 Cor. xiii. 10. 1 Tim. i. 20.)

This supposes continuance of Grace to them that are thus punished, and that sufficient to make use of this punishment to their amendment; nay, the punishment, though it be the withdrawing of one instrument of Grace, is itself another, and therefore purposely chosen and allowed in exchange for the former, because it is looked on as the more probable to produce the effect.

They that see so great a benefit withdrawn from them for their unworthiness, will be thereby excited to reflect on their provocations, and bewail them, and contend by all regular means to regain what they have forfeited, and to repair their neglects some other way. And this being the very end to which this punishment is by God designed, it is not imaginable He doth yet, till this method also be despised, withhold that degree of Grace from such, which is necessary for the producing of the effect.

6. καύχημα] The matter or subject of your glorying is not good; not "your glorying is not good," which would be καύχησις. (Meyer.)

7. Ἐκκαθάρατε] Purge out. An allusion to the command of God to the Israelites to remove all leaven from their houses before the Passover or days of unleavened bread. Exod. xii. 15.

The Holy Spirit here teaches the Church by St. Paul what was the moral and spiritual meaning of the ceremonial Law in this respect. Compare his further instruction on this subject, 1 Cor. x. 1—5.

S. Ignatius (ad Magnes. c. 10) seems to have had St. Paul's words in his mind when he wrote, ὑπέρθεσθε τὴν κακὴν ζυμὴν τὴν παλαιωθεῖσαν καὶ ἐνοξίσασαν, καὶ μεταβάλεσθε εἰς νέαν ζύμην, ὅ ἐστιν Ἰησοῦς Χριστός.

On this and the following verse, see Bp. Andrewes, Sermons ii. 290.

— καθώς ἐστε ἄζυμοι] as ye are unleavened, that is, by the very terms of your Christian profession. Photius (in Cat. p. 96).

— καὶ γὰρ τὸ πάσχα ἡμῶν] Probably these words were written by St. Paul a little before Easter, and were read by the Corinthians for the first time at that season; and they would gain in force by that circumstance. See above, Introduction to this Epistle, ii. § 4, p. 77.

— καὶ γὰρ τὸ πάσχα ἡμῶν ἐτύθη Χριστός] for our Passover also was sacrificed, which is Christ. After ἡμῶν Elz. adds ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, which is not in A, B, C, D, E, F, G. Nor is it found in Appendix to Irenæus, p. 932, ed. Stieren, and Tertullian, c. Marcion. v. 7, "Pascha nostrum immolatus est Christus."

Remark the order of the words, and the aorist ἐτύθη. The sense is, For the Passover of us also (καί), as well as of the Jews, was sacrificed at the Passion of Christ. And as the leaven was removed from the houses of the Jews before the sacrifice of the Paschal Lamb, and no leaven might be found in their houses from the first day until the seventh day of the Paschal Week (Exod. xii. 15), and since our Paschal Lamb, which is Christ, has been sacrificed once for all, and the sacrifice is never to be repeated, the whole of the Christian Life is to be, as it were, a perpetual Holy Week. We are by our baptism ἄζυμοι, unleavened (v. 7). Chrys. Therefore, let the leaven which now contaminates you be put away.

It has been recently alleged (e. g. by Meyer here) that St. Paul here regards Christ as the Antitype of the Paschal Lamb in respect of the day of His Passion; and that therefore the account of the first three Evangelists is erroneous, which says that Christ ate the Paschal Lamb with his disciples at the Passover of His own Passion. And it has been also alleged that St. Paul agrees with St. John in differing from those three Evangelists, and in representing the Paschal Lamb as not sacrificed at Jerusalem till the day of the Passion of Christ.

The allegation of this supposed discrepancy has been already examined in the notes on John xviii. 28, and on Luke xxii. 7. And from the considerations there stated it will be seen that Christ may well be called our Paschal Lamb, not only as the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world (John i. 29. 36), and by whose precious blood-shedding we are delivered from the bondage of our sins, and from the sword of the destroying Angel, and are enabled to escape from the Egyptian captivity of our ghostly Enemy, and to pass through the baptismal sea in the way to our heavenly Canaan (see 1 Cor. x. 1, 2), but also even as to the time of His Passion. For He not only ate the Passover at the right legal time with His disciples, but even then on that day, His Passion, which was consummated on the Cross on Calvary on the following day, might well be said to have begun, when He uttered those solemn words by which He transfigured the Levitical Passover into the Christian Sacrament, "This is My Body which is being broken for you," 1 Cor. xi. 24. Cp. Luke xxii. 20; "This is My Blood which is being shed for you." And His Passion was continued when He was in His Agony at Gethsemane, and when He said, "Mine hour is come." (Matt. xxvi. 45. John xii. 27; xiii. 1.)

8. ἑορτάζωμεν] let us keep the Feast. Christ had called false doctrine by the name of leaven (Matt. xvi. 6), and Paul dwells on the metaphor, reminding them of the ancient history of the Passover, and of the Blessings then received and now, and also of the Judgments then executed. And when he says, "Let us keep the feast," he shows that all time is the season of the Festival to Christians, on account of the immensity of the gifts they have received. For what blessing have they not? The Son of God has become man for thy sake. He has delivered thee from death, He has called thee to His Kingdom. Therefore thou oughtest to keep the Feast all thy life long. (Chrysostom.)

This Text is specially applicable to a consideration of the privileges and duties of Christians as recipients of the Holy Communion; and in this sense it is well expounded, as follows, by one of the most learned and holy Bishops of the Church;

In the Institution of the Holy Eucharist, two things Christ gave us in charge,

1. ἀνάμνησις, 'remembering,' and
2. λῆψις, 'receiving.' (Luke xxii. 17. 19.)

The same two St. Paul, but in other terms,

1. καταγγελία, 'showing forth;'
2. κοινωνία, 'communicating.'

Of which, 'remembering' and 'showing forth' refer to celebremus; 'receiving' and 'communicating' to ἑορτάζωμεν, or epulemur, here.

The first in remembrance of Him, Christ. What, of Him? Mortem Domini, His Death, saith St. Paul; "to show forth the Lord's death." Remember Him? That we will and stay at home, think of Him there. Nay, show Him forth ye must. That we will by a sermon of Him. Nay, it must be Hoc facite. It is not mental thinking nor verbal speaking. There must be actually somewhat done to celebrate this memory. That done to the holy symbols, that was done to Him, to His body and His blood in the Passover; break the one, pour out the other, to represent κλώμενον, how His sacred body was "broken," and ἐκχυνόμενον, how His precious blood was "shed." And in corpus fractum and sanguis fusus there is immolatus. This is it in the Eucharist that answereth to the sacrifice in the Passover, the memorial to the figure. To them it was Hoc facite in mei præfigurationem, "Do this in prefiguration of Me:" to us it is "Do this in commemoration of Me." (Luke xxii. 19. 1 Cor. xi. 26.) To them prænuntiare, to us annuntiare; there is the difference.

By the same rules that theirs was, by the same may ours be termed a Sacrifice. In rigour of speech neither of them; for, to speak after the exact manner of Divinity, there is but one only sacrifice, veri nominis, 'properly so called,' that is Christ's death. (Heb. x. 4.) And that sacrifice but once actually performed at His death, but ever before represented in figure from the beginning; and ever since repeated in memory to the world's end. That only absolute, all else relative to it, representative of it, operative by it. The Lamb but once actually slain in the fulness of time, but virtually was from the beginning, is, and shall be to the end of the world. That the centre in which their lines and ours, their types and our antitypes, do meet. While yet this offering was not, the hope of it was kept alive by the prefiguration of it in theirs. And after it is past the memory of it is still kept fresh in mind by the commemoration of it in ours.

So it was the will of God that so there might be with them a continual foreshowing, and with us a continual shôwing forth, "the Lord's death till He come again."

Hence it is that what names theirs carried, ours do the like; and the Fathers make no scruple at it, no more need we. The Apostle, in the tenth chapter, compareth this of ours to the immolata of the heathen (1 Cor. x. 21, &c.); and to the Hebrews, habemus aram, matcheth it with the sacrifice of the Jews. (Heb. xiii. 10.) And we know the rule of comparisons, they must be ejusdem generis.

Neither do we stay here, but proceed to the other, Epulemur (let us keep the feast). For there is another thing yet to be done, which doth present to us that which celebremus doth represent. For the Sacrament is the applying of the Sacrifice. The Sacrifice in general, pro omnibus. The Sacrament in particular to each several receiver, pro singulis. Wherein that is offered to us that was offered for us; that which is common to all, made proper to each one, while each taketh his part of it; and made proper by a Communion and union, like that of meat and drink, which is most nearly and inwardly made ours, and is inseparable for ever. There celebremus passeth with the representation; but here epulemur, as a nourishment, abideth with us still. In that we "see," and in this we "taste," how gracious the Lord is and hath been to us. (Ps. xxxiv. 8.)

And so much for these two as two means to partake the benefit, and we to use them; and as duties required of us, and we to perform them.

Will ye mark one thing more, that Epulemur doth here refer to immolatus? To Christ, not every way considered, but as He was offered. Christ's body that now is. True; but not Christ's body as now it is, but as then it was when it was offered, rent, and slain, and sacrificed for us. Not as now He is glorified, for so He is not, so He cannot be immolatus, for He is immortal and impassible; but as then He was when He suffered death, that is passible and mortal. Then in His passible estate did He institute this of ours, to be a memorial of His passible and Passio both. And we are in this action not only carried up to Christ (sursum corda), but we are also carried back to Christ as He was at the very instant, and in the very act of His offering.

So and no otherwise doth this text teach; so and no otherwise do we represent Him. By the incomprehensible power of His eternal Spirit, not He alone, but He, as at the very act of His offering, is made present to us, and we incorporate into His death, and invested in the benefits of it. If an host could be turned into Him, now glorified as He is, it would not serve. Christ offered is it, thither we must look; to the Serpent lift up, thither we must repair, even ad cadaver (see note above on Matt. xxiv. 28); we must, hoc facere, do that is then done. So, and no otherwise, is this epulari to be conceived. Bp. Andrewes (Serm. vii. on the Resurrection).

— εἰλικρινείας] purity. Εἰλι-κρίνης is that which being held up to the sunshine (πρὸς εἵλην), and so (κρίνεται) is tested, is found to be transparent, without flaw, speck, or blemish (Etym. M.). Cp. 2 Cor. i. 12; ii. 17. Phil. i. 10. 2 Pet. iii. 1.

This Etymology, confirmed and illustrated with much erudition by Ruhnken and Hemsterhuis (in Timæum, p. 264, v. ὑπ' αἰγὰς), ought not, it would seem, to be abandoned, even after the remarks of a recent learned English Editor of the Epistle to the Philippians, i. 10.

9. Ἔγραψα ὑμῖν ἐν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ] I wrote to you in my Epistle.

(1) St. Paul had now been absent from Corinth for three years. It is probable, therefore, that some communication had been made from him by letter during that time.

(2) He refers here to something as written by him which is not found in any extant Epistle to the Corinthians. Origen (in Caten. p. 97).

(3) He contrasts his present writing with some former writing, and explains what he wrote then by what he writes now. See v. 11, where νυνὶ δὲ ἔγραψα is contrasted with ἔγραψα ἐν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ.

(4) Therefore the reference here is to some Epistle of St. Paul, which is not now extant.

(5) This conclusion is perfectly consistent with the position that "No Canonical Book of Holy Scripture has been lost."

For what is meant by the word 'Canonical?' That which forms a part of those Writings which constitute the Κανὼν or Rule of Faith of the Church, and has been received as such by the Universal Church, which is the Body of Christ, and to which He promised His presence and that of the Holy Ghost. In a word, whatever writing has been acknowledged by Christ and by the Holy Ghost, dwelling in the Church, and making their consent heard and seen by the reception and reading of the said writing as Canonical Scripture in the public assemblies of the Universal Church throughout the World, that must be acknowledged to be Canonical Scripture.

But the Epistle to which St. Paul refers, was not so read by the Church Catholic, which never received more than two Epistles of St. Paul to the Corinthians as Canonical Scripture; and these two Epistles are the Epistles which are now received as the First and Second Epistles of St. Paul to the Corinthians.

(6) So far from being perplexed by such a conclusion as this, we may rather derive instruction from it, as bringing out clearly the true grounds on which our belief in the Inspiration of the Canonical Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments rests.

We do not receive these Books merely because they were written by Prophets, Apostles, and Evangelists; for some of the Canonical Books were written by persons who were not Prophets, Apostles, or Evangelists, and whose very names are unknown to us, as the Books of Job and Judges. And no one can imagine that every thing that was ever written by all the Prophets, Apostles, and Evangelists, is contained in the Bible. Nor do we receive them because they were written by men who claim to be inspired by the Holy Ghost; for men may claim to be inspired, who are not so; and in some of those books no such claim is made.

But we receive them because they are sealed by the Seal of Christ. He, during His personal presence upon Earth, received all the Books of the Old Testament as the Inspired Word of God. He by His Spirit enabled the Apostles to avouch by miracles their authority to deliver and to sanction the Books of the New Testament as of equal authority with the Old. (See below on 2 Tim. iii. 15, 16. 2 Pet. iii. 15, 16.) And by the consentient voice of the Church Universal, which is His Body, and which receives as Canonical Scripture every Book of the New Testament, and joins both Testaments together, as written by the same Divine Hand, and making together the perfect Written Word of God, to which nothing can be added, and from which nothing can be taken away, Christ Himself avouches the Canon of Holy Scripture with His Divine Authority, and delivers it to us as the Rule of Faith.

This universal external testimony is, doubtless, confirmed particularly and internally by what we ourselves feel in hearing and reading the Holy Scriptures, and by the witness of the Spirit within us, that what we hear and read is from God. And it is corroborated by what we know of the beneficial effects produced in the world by the agency and influence of Holy Scripture. It is strengthened by all the researches which we are enabled to make into Evidences of their Truth and Inspiration. And so by the co-operation of our own internal and particular persuasion with the external and universal Testimony of the Church, we are settled and stablished in the belief that the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament are the complete Word of God.

On this subject the reader may compare the remarks above on Mark xvi. 9.

As to the opinion that St. Paul is referring to his present Epistle, the reader may see what is to be said in its favour in Bp. Middleton's note here, and Dr. Peile's, and Blunt on the Early Fathers, p. 437.

10. πόρνοις] He dwells on this word here and in vv. 2, 3, putting it in the forefront of his catalogue of sins. A remarkable proof of his courage and freedom. For πορνεία was scarcely accounted a sin by the Gentile World, and at Corinth it was even consecrated as a part of Religion. See the note above on Acts xv. 20.

11. Νυνὶ δὲ ἔγραψα] But now I write. See on v. 9. As to the meaning of νυνὶ, now, see St. Paul's speech, Acts xxii. 1. Rom. xv. 23. 25. Philem. 5. 9. 11. On this use of ἔγραψα, like the Latin scripsi, see ix. 15. Gal. vi. 11. Philem. 19. 1 Pet. v. 12.

The νυνὶ, now, removes all ambiguity which might otherwise have arisen from the same word ἔγραψα used in v. 9 with reference to the former letter.

There is no retractation here of what had been said in that former letter, but only an explanation.

— μηδὲ συνεσθίειν] not even to eat together; "nec cibum sumere," Iren. (iv. 4.)

This precept is not to be applied only to the sacred feasts, the agapæ, but is general. Cp. 2 John 10. 2 Thess. iii. 6. 14. 2 Tim. iii. 5. Rom. xvi. 17. Matt. xviii. 17, passages which show that great circumspection is to be used by Christians in the intercourse of society, and in the interchanges of hospitality. See the narrative in Eusebius concerning St. John's behaviour to Cerinthus (Euseb. iii. 28), and S. Polycarp's to Marcion (Euseb. iv. 14), and Bp. Fell's note here, who observes from S. Aug. Conf. iii. 11, that "S. Augustine's mother would not diet with him, perverted by the Manichæans."

12. καὶ τοὺς ἔξω] even those that are without the pale of the Church, as well as those that are within.

Christ sent me as an Apostle and Minister of the Churches. And therefore I meddle not with them that are without, i. e. the Heathen. But if any man that is within the Christian Church, if any man that is called a brother, be a fornicator, or drunkard, or railer, or otherwise stain his holy profession with scandalous living, I know how to deal with him: let the censures of the Church be laid upon him, let him be cast out of the assemblies of the brethren, that he may hereby be brought to shame and repentance. Bp. Sanderson (i. p. 70). See also Vol. v. 307; vi. 394, on the relations and duties of a Christian state toward οἱ ἔξω in matters of Religion.

13. Ἐξάρατε] Cast ye out. So the best MSS., a reading which, by its abrupt brevity, brings out in a bold, authoritative tone, the judicial sentence of the Apostle. See below on vi. 20. Elz. has καὶ ἐξαρεῖτε, which is literally from LXX, Deut. xvii. 7, but may well have been modified in its application by St. Paul. Cp. Bengel here; and Tertullian, in quoting this passage, has "Auferte malum ex vobis;" and so Vulg., Gothic, Syriac, Æthiopic, and Arabic Versions; and so Theodoret.

CH. VI. 1. Τολμᾷ τις—κρίνεσθαι] Does any one of you venture to go to law? He passes by a natural transition from the question he has just handled, of spiritual jurisdiction and Church censures, to reprehend their practice in carrying their lawsuits before Heathen Tribunals.

Besides the scandal of such a proceeding, as exposing their internal differences to the eyes of the Heathen, there were certain formularies to be gone through in the Heathen Law Courts, such as adjurations by heathen Deities, which would involve them in idolatrous practices. See Blunt's Lectures, p. 96. 110.

— τὸν ἕτερον] his neighbour, a brother Christian—not a heathen.

2. Ἢ] Omitted by Elz., but in the best MSS.

— οὐκ οἴδατε] know ye not?—a question which occurs no less than ten times in this Epistle (iii. 16; v. 6; vi. 2, 3. 9. 15, 16. 19; ix. 13. 24), and only twice (Rom. vi. 16; xi. 2) in the rest of St. Paul's Epistles. The interrogation "Know ye not?" was a very fit form of expostulation and remonstrance on the ignorance of that Church which vaunted itself most of its knowledge.

— ἐν ὑμῖν] 'apud vos judices,' or 'coram vobis judicibus.' See Winer, Gr. Gr. § 48, p. 344.

— κριτηρίων ἐλαχίστων] the most trivial causes. See v. 4.

2, 3.] οἱ ἅγιοι τὸν κόσμον κρινοῦσι—ἀγγέλους κρινοῦμεν] the Saints will judge the World—We shall judge Angels. These two statements may be considered together;

(1) These words of St. Paul are referred to by S. Polycarp (ad Philipp. c. 11), "An nescimus quia sancti mundum judicabunt?" where the learned Editor quotes a passage from Dionysius, Bishop of Alexandria (ap. Euseb. vi. 42), in which the Martyrs are described as witnesses assisting and taking part as πάρεδροι, or assessors, in the great judicial transactions of the Last Day. See also Chrys. and Theodoret here, and Bp. Fell's note.

If we examine what Holy Scripture has revealed on this subject, and bearing in mind that all Scripture is to be expounded according to the proportion of faith (Rom. xii. 6), and by "comparing spiritual things with spiritual" (1 Cor. ii. 13), we may interpret the Apostle as affirming

(2) That the Saints of God will condemn the world at the Great Day, because they will have proved by their own holiness, the fruit of God's grace, and by their own sufferings, endured patiently and joyfully unto the end, for Christ's sake, at the hands of the world, and by the rewards of infinite bliss and glory which they will then receive, that the World has been guilty of base ingratitude and blind infatuation in rejecting God's gracious offers, and choosing the service of sin, which will then bring with it the wages of eternal Death. See the Wisdom of Solomon v. 1—23.

The Saints shall also stand up in the Judgment and condemn Satan and his Angels. "Hi sunt Angeli quos judicaturi sumus," says Tertullian (de Cultû Fœmin. § 11), and so Chrys. and other ancient Expositors here. The Saints will judge them by proving that since they, men on earth, compassed with weakness, stood firm in their allegiance to God, therefore the fall of celestial beings, who enjoyed God's presence, was due to their own sin. Thus they will judge Angels.

It must be borne in mind that the evil Angels have not yet been fully and finally judged; but are "reserved for the Judgment of the Great Day," when their sentence will be pronounced. See above on Matt. viii. 29.

Our Lord uses the word condemn in a similar sense concerning the men of Nineveh and Queen of Sheba, Matt. xii. 41, 42. Luke xi. 32. Cp. Heb. xi. 7, and see further on Rev. xx. 4, and so Chrysostom here, and Photius (in Caten.).

(3) It is, indeed, alleged by some, that since St. Paul is speaking of actual judicial processes in temporal matters, he must also be referring to some judicial functions to be exercised hereafter at the Great Day by the Saints of God; and it has also been said by some recent Expositors that the word Angels here used without any epithet can only mean Good Angels.

But the testimony of Holy Scripture is clear, that the Father hath committed all Judgment to the Son (John v. 22; cp. Acts xvii. 31), and this, because He is the Son (John v. 27); and the chief Saints of the Church, the Apostles, declare that they themselves will be among those who are to be judged (1 Cor. iv. 4. Rom. xiv. 10. 2 Cor. v. 10).

And the Good Angels who kept their first estate are now elect (1 Tim. v. 21), and are not hereafter to be judged, but they will form a part of Christ's glorious retinue when He comes hereafter to Judgment; and Christ will come with them to Judgment, and they will separate the evil from the good (Matt. xiii. 41; xvi. 27; xxv. 31). And it is not probable that the Angels, who are appointed to gather the Elect to judgment, will be judged by them.

As to the opinion that Angels here can only mean good Angels, it might have some ground if St. Paul had said τοὺς ἀγγέλους, the Angels; but he does not say this, but ἀγγέλους, Angels, i. e. some Angels out of the whole number of beings called Angels. Cp. Winer, p. 113, note.

(4) The Saints of God, after that they themselves have been judged and admitted to glory, will, it appears from Scripture, be allowed to sit near to Christ, as assessors of His dread Tribunal. See Matt. xix. 28, and Luke xxii. 30, where the sitting on Thrones is mentioned after the sitting at the Table; and they will hear the sentence pronounced by Christ against evil Angels. Cp. Barrow's Serm. xxxiii., "The Saints being themselves first approved shall become assessors there." See above (1).

of a judicial sentence by the Saints is supposed in St. Paul's comparison of what is done by a Judge in a Law Court with what the Saints will hereafter do, it is observable that he does not compare two sets of persons, but he compares the act of judging the world with acts of judging in worldly things (βιωτικά). And his argument is, If by their righteousness, wisdom, and courage the Saints will condemn the world hereafter, surely they have the requisite qualifications for adjudicating between Christians on secular matters here.

3. μήτι γε βιωτικά] 'ne dicam sæcularia;' to say nothing of worldly things. See Meyer and Alford.

Cod. Aug. and Boern. have πόσῳ μᾶλλον, and quanto magis, and so Vulg.; and this is the sense given in the Syriac, Arabic, and Æthiopic Versions.

4. βιωτικὰ μὲν οὖν κριτήρια ἐὰν ἔχητε, κ.τ.λ.] If however ye have secular causes to decide, do you set up as judges in the Church those who have been superseded by it?

In order to understand this passage, the sense of which has been much controverted, it must be remembered,

(1) That for the settlement of all differences among Christians, our Lord Himself had said, "Tell it to the Church." (Matt. xviii. 17.) He had made her the Arbitress of such disputes. He had placed her on the seat of Judgment. And thus He had superseded the use of Heathen Tribunals among Christians.

(2) That St. Paul uses the perfect tense here, he does not say ἐξουθενουμένους, despised persons, but ἐξουθενημένους, persons who have been rejected, and, as it were, reduced to nought (εἰς οὐδὲν), and exploded (ἐξ) by the Church.

(3) The pronoun τούτους, these, as used here, is emphatic, and is uttered with a tone of surprise and indignation (cp. the examples in Winer, § 23, p. 144), and marks the strange absurdity of setting up those very persons who, as far as Christian use of them was concerned, had themselves been brought down, and, as it were, disfranchised, dethroned, and deposed; and whom he himself had just called τοὺς ἔξω (those who are without,—the heathens), and whom he himself did not pretend to judge (v. 12). And shall they who are within the Church (οἱ ἔσω), and who ought themselves to be qualified to judge those who are within (see v. 12), shall they dare to pull down the Tribunal which Christ has set up for settling disputes among Christians,—namely, the Church herself, to whom, as a final court of appeal, Christ Himself refers them (Matt. xviii. 17) for the settlement of such questions? and shall they introduce the Heathen into the Church, and set up those whom she has superseded, and establish them as Judges in the Church?

5. ἔνι] i. e. ἔνεστι. So B, C, I, and many cursive MSS.—Elz. has ἔστιν.

7. Ἤδη μὲν οὖν ὅ. ἥττημα] However there is altogether already a wrong here. Ἤδη denotes that antecedently to the question of the manner and place in which their lawsuits are to be tried, there is another prior consideration, viz. that of the uncharitableness of going to law at all.

— ἥττημα ὑμῖν] So the best MSS. and Editions.—Elz. has ἥττημα ἐν ὑμῖν. But the Apostle means to say, that by doing injustice they inflict injury on themselves as well as on others; and so a loss accrues to themselves as well as a wrong to others. By their πλεονέκτημα, or covetousness, they suffer an ἥττημα, or loss; according to the ancient apophthegm, οἱ αὐτῷ κακὰ τεύχει ἀνὴρ ἄλλῳ κακὰ τεύχων,—a sense which is obscured by the interpolation of ἐν. See Rom. xi. 12, where ἥττημα is opposed to πλοῦτος.

He also corrects their spirit of vain-glory in their spiritual wealth, by thus reminding them that they are spiritually poor.

— Διατί οὐχὶ μᾶλλον ἀδικεῖσθε ;—ἀποστερεῖσθε ;] Why do ye not rather suffer yourselves to be wronged and defrauded?

8. τοῦτο] So A, B, C, D, E,—a reading which gives force and clearness to the sense. "Ye do wrong; and this ye do to your own brethren." So Cicero (de Offic. i. 1) uses 'idque.'—Elz. has ταῦτα.

9. Μὴ πλανᾶσθε] A formula adopted by S. Ignatius, ad Ephes. c. 16.

— οὔτε πόρνοι] Referred to by S. Polycarp, ad Phil. c. 5, and by Irenæus, iv. 46; v. 11.

— μαλακοὶ] On the prevalence of those sins, for which Sodom and the Canaanitish nations were destroyed, even in the most celebrated and so-called civilized cities of Greece and Italy in the age of the Cæsars and the Apostles, see Rom. i. 27, and the passages quoted by Wetstein here.

11. ἀλλά] Thrice repeated, in order to exhibit more boldly the moral contrast between their ante-baptismal and post-baptismal state. For similar repetitions see i. 20; iv. 8; xiv. 24. 2 Cor. vii. 2. Winer, p. 537.

The force of the contrast is strengthened by the ἀλλὰ non-elided by the vowels following it.

— ἀπελούσασθε] Observe the Aorist here and Middle Voice. Properly, ye washed yourselves, or procured yourselves to be washed from your sins, at your Baptism. See x. 2. And so Chrys. and Theodoret, who says here, "The Apostle declares here the equality of the Son and the Spirit, and joins the Name of the Father; for by the Invocation of the Holy Trinity the Nature of Water is sanctified, and the Remission of Sins is freely bestowed (χορηγεῖται) thereby. And St. Paul comforts them with the consideration of their Baptism, lest when they recollect the sins they committed before their baptism, they should despair of salvation." And so Augustine, "according to whom there is no Justification ordinarily before or without Baptism. It was a fixed principle with him that Justification commenced with Baptism, and not otherwise." Waterland, on Justification, Vol. ix. p. 449.

These words of St. Paul, be it remembered, are addressed to the Corinthians generally; among whom, as this Epistle clearly shows, were many persons who were very deficient in the graces and virtues of Christian Faith and Practice;

Thus these words of St. Paul present two important articles of Christian Doctrine;

(1) St. Paul speaks of Justification as an act already done, and connects it with Baptism. In the words of an English Theologian, who has treated this subject with great fulness and precision,—The Justification which St. Paul discourseth of, seemeth, in his meaning, only or specially to be that act of grace which is dispensed to persons at their Baptism, or at their entrance into the Church; when, they openly professing their faith, and undertaking the practice of Christian duty, God most solemnly and formally doth absolve them from all guilt, and accepteth them into a state of favour with Him.

In several places Justification is coupled with Baptismal Regeneration and Absolution: Such were some of you; but ye have been washed, ye have been sanctified, ye have been justified in the name of Christ Jesus. Again, He saved us by the laver of regeneration, that having been justified by His grace, we may be made heirs of everlasting life. (Tit. iii. 5. 7. Heb. x. 22, 23.)

St. Paul, in expressing this act as it respecteth the faithful, commonly doth use a tense referring to the past time. He saith οἱ δικαιούμενοι, being justified (Rom. v. 1. 9. Tit. iii. 7. 1 Cor. vi. 11), but δικαιωθέντες, having been justified; not δικαιοῦσθε, are justified, but ἐδικαιώθητε, ye have been justified,—namely,

12 [g] Πάντα μοι ἔξεστιν, ἀλλ' οὐ πάντα συμφέρει· πάντα μοι ἔξεστιν, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐγὼ ἐξουσιασθήσομαι ὑπό τινος. 13 [h] Τὰ βρώματα τῇ κοιλίᾳ, καὶ ἡ κοιλία τοῖς

h Matt. 15. 17. Rom. 14. 17. vv. 15, 19, 20. 1 Thess. 4. 3.

at some remarkable time; that is, at their entrance into Christianity.

St. Paul, in the sixth to the Romans, discourseth thus: "Seeing we in baptism are cleansed and disentangled from sin, are dead to it, and so justified from it" (Rom. vi. 2—7), God forbid that we should return to live in the practice thereof, so abusing and evacuating the grace we have received; which discourse seemeth plainly to signify, that he treateth about the Justification conferred in baptism.

Although Justification chiefly signifieth the first act of grace toward a Christian at his baptism, yet (according to analogy of reason and affinity in nature of things) every dispensation of pardon granted upon Repentance may be styled Justification; for as particular acts of repentance upon commission of any particular sins, do not so much differ in nature as in measure or degree, from that general conversion practised in embracing the Gospel; so the grace vouchsafed upon these penitential acts is only, in largeness of extent and solemnity of administration, diversified from that; especially considering that Repentance after Baptism is but a reviving of that first great resolution and engagement we made in Baptism; that remission of sin upon it is only the renovation of the grace then exhibited; that the whole transaction in this case is but a reinstating the covenant then made (and afterward by transgression infringed) upon the same terms which were then agreed upon; that consequently, by congruous analogy, this remission of sins, and restoring to favour, granted to a penitent, are only the former Justification reinforced.

Now, according to each of these notions, all good Christians may be said to have been justified; they have been justified by a general abolition of their sins, and reception into God's favour in Baptism; they so far have enjoyed the virtue of that gracious dispensation, and continued in a justified state, as they have persisted in faith and obedience; they have, upon falling into sin, and rising thence by repentance, been justified by particular remissions. So that having been justified by faith, they have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. (Rom. v. 1.) Dr. Barrow (Serm. v. Vol. iv. p. 137.)

(2) St. Paul regards all those whom he addresses, however blameworthy they may be in their present spiritual condition, as having been already washed from their sins by Baptism, as having been already justified by Christ; and consequently, not to be called upon to become regenerate persons, but to remember that they have been regenerated, and to rise from sin by Repentance, and to walk in newness of life.

Here also we cannot do better than cite the words of the judicious author just quoted, Dr. Barrow:

In one of his Sermons on Universal Redemption, arguing against the Calvinistic tenets, he observes (Serm. lxxi. Vol. iii. p. 369):

The Apostles at first, and the Church ever since, after them (except some heterodox people of late), have professed readily to confer holy Baptism, and therein to dispense Remission of sins, together with other evangelical graces and privileges to every man professing his faith in Christ, and resolution to obey Christ's law, upon this supposition, that Christ is the Saviour of all such persons, and by his salutary passion hath purchased that remission for them.

That in thus doing, the Church proceeds upon a persuasion that Christ is truly the Saviour of all its visible members, duly admitted and incorporated thereinto, the thing itself plainly signifies; the tenor of its practice makes palpable; the forms of speech used in its holy administrations, of Prayers, of Sacraments, of Exhortations, do suppose or express.

For how can each member singly be asserted in Holy Baptism, to be washed from his sins and sanctified to God, and made regenerate, or adopted into the family of God's children, and made partaker of Christ's death? How can thanksgiving in the common name, in most general terms be offered up for Christ's saving performances? or the holy Cup and Bread be imparted to each Communicant as symbols and pledges of Christ's charity and mercy towards him? How can every Christian be instigated to obedience in gratitude to Christ; and those who transgress Christ's laws, upbraided for their ingratitude toward Him; their rejecting, or renouncing, despising, or abusing Him and His salvation? How can such things be said and done with any truth or consistency,—yea, without forgery and mockery,—if every baptized Christian have not an interest in our Lord's performances; if Christ be the Saviour only of an uncertain and unknown part of the Church?

(3) And therefore it is rightly said by Waterland (on Justification, ix. p. 442), commenting on this present text, "Here are three concurrent causes of Justification mentioned together (by St. Paul),—

"The meritorious cause, 'the Lord Jesus.'

"The efficient and operating cause, 'the Spirit of our God.'

"The instrumental rite of its conveyance, Baptism;"

To these may be added,—

The receptive condition on our side, Faith working by love. (See ibid. p. 451.) And, above all,

The prime, original and moving cause of all, the infinite love and free grace and favour of God the Father towards us, and bestowing Justification on us, in Christ.

See further below, Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans, "On the doctrine of Justification."

12. Πάντα μοι ἔξεστι] All things are lawful to me. After speaking of the sin of covetousness, which had produced litigiousness, and exposed the Christian character to disgrace in the eyes of the Heathen at Corinth, and having stated the future punishments due to other sins of the flesh (vv. 9, 10), and having reminded the Corinthians what privileges they had received, and what sins they had renounced, and what pledges they had made, at their Baptism, he now proceeds to examine and confute an argument raised by some of the Gentile Christians at Corinth, who, in the presumptuous spirit of Greek Philosophy, pleaded, in behalf of Fornication, and of eating meats offered in sacrifice to idols, that man is the measure of all things (πάντων μέτρον ἄνθρωπος),—a principle in which both the greatest Schools of Greek Philosophy, with which St. Paul had disputed at Athens, agreed, though they applied it in different ways (see on Acts xvii. 18),—and that all the creatures were his, and that all things were lawful to him; a tenet which they imagined had received some countenance from the Gospel itself, which promised to them universal Liberty and even universal Dominion in Christ, a doctrine which, when properly stated and understood with due cautions, is productive of that genuine Independence which is the best security for self-control, and had therefore been placed in its proper light by St. Paul in the earlier part of his Epistle. See above on iii. 21, "All things are yours."

With true oratorical skill St. Paul therefore adopts this principle, "All things are lawful to me." He "transfers by a figure" (iv. 6) what the Corinthian Teachers had alleged, and applies it to himself, and examines that proposition, true in itself, but falsely applied by them.

This use of the first person is thus rightly explained by Bp. Sanderson (Serm. xi. Vol. i. p. 293).

There is an opinion taken up in this last age, grounded upon one misunderstood passage in this Epistle (1 Cor. iii. 21—23), but is indeed both false in itself and dangerous in the consequents, namely this, that the godly regenerate have a full right to all the creatures, but wicked and unregenerate men have right to none, but are malæ fidei possessores, intruders and usurpers of those things they have, and shall at the Day of Judgment be answerable, not only for their abusing of them, but even for their very possessing of them.

Possibly some may imagine, yet none but they whose judgments are forestalled with that fancy, that these words of our Apostle look that way, and that there lieth an emphasis in the pronoun to this sense, All things are lawful for me, but not so for every man. Being a godly and regenerate man, and engrafted into Christ by faith, I have a right and liberty to all the creatures, which every man hath not.

But to feign such a sense to these words doth indeed quite overthrow the Apostle's main purpose in this part of his discourse, which is to teach the Corinthians and all others to yield something from their lawful Liberty for their brethren's sakes, when they shall see it needful so to do, either for the avoiding of private scandal or for the preservation of the public peace. So that the Apostle certainly here intended to extend our liberty to the creatures, as far and wide in respect of the persons as of the things; as if he had said, All things are lawful for all men. The interlinear Gloss is right here, "Quod sibi dicit licere, innuit de aliis."

We know it is an usual thing, as in our ordinary speech so in the Scriptures too, in framing objections in putting cases and the like, to make the instance personal where the aim is general, as Rom. iii. 7, "If the truth of God have abounded through my lie unto His glory, why am I also judged as a sinner?" that is,

1 Acts 2. 24. Rom. 6. 5, 8. & 8. 11. 2 Cor. 4. 14.

βρώμασιν· ὁ δὲ Θεὸς καὶ ταύτην καὶ ταῦτα καταργήσει. Τὸ δὲ σῶμα οὐ τῇ πορνείᾳ, ἀλλὰ τῷ Κυρίῳ, καὶ ὁ Κύριος τῷ σώματι· [14] ὁ δὲ Θεὸς καὶ τὸν Κύριον through my lie or any man's else: Why either I or any man else? So 1 Cor. x. 29, 30, Why is my liberty judged? and why am I evil spoken of? mine, or any man's else? I, or any man else? And so in a hundred places more. (Bp. Sanderson.)

Bengel well observes on this point, "Sæpe Paulus primâ personâ eloquitur quæ vim habent gnomes, in hâc præsertim Epistolâ." (vi. 15; vii. 7; x. 23. 29, 30; xiv. 11.) Cp. on 1 Thess. iv. 17, Gal. ii. 18, and Rom. vii. 7.

As to the meaning of the word ἔξεστι, two different opinions have been entertained.

It signifies either—

(1) All things are in my power by reason of my free will (and this is the opinion of Theodoret, who says, "All things are in thy power by reason of thy free will, but it is not expedient for thee to use in all things thy free will; for when thou doest what is sinful, thou losest thy freedom, and becomest the slave of sin"),

Or it means—

(2) All indifferent things are lawful to me, but all indifferent things are not expedient. This is the interpretation of Ambrosiaster and Theophyl.

But this second explanation seems rather weak and tautologous, and hardly justified by the original.

The first interpretation seems more in harmony with the original, and with what St. Paul has said above, iii. 22, "All things are yours," and with the application of these words to πορνεία, which he could not regard as indifferent.

The sense therefore is, It is true that your body is your own, you are free to use it; but take care lest by your ill use of your freedom you become the slave of your body. And this sense of ἔξεστι is confirmed by the following cognate word, ἐξουσιασθήσομαι.

It is an excellent observation of S. Chrysostom, of frequent application in this Epistle, that St. Paul, with genuine rhetorical dexterity and power, drives back his adversary's arguments upon him (εἰς τὸ ἐναντίον περιτρέπει τὰς ἀντιθέσεις), and that he shows the Corinthians in various places that by abusing their liberty in indifferent things they, who were lords of all things in Christ (iii. 22, 23), made themselves to be slaves, both in soul and body, of the worst masters, namely, of their own carnal lusts and appetites, and of Satan.

A salutary warning to all who "use their liberty for a cloke of maliciousness!"

— οὐκ ἐξουσιασθήσομαι] I will not be subjected by —. I will not allow any thing to have ἐξουσίαν or dominion over me, who have dominion over all things.

On the sense of ἐξουσιάζω, see St. Paul's words, vii. 4.

The Christian, by virtue of his Incorporation in Christ, the Creator and King of all the Creatures, may well say πάντα μοι ἔξεστι, "I am lord of all things" (see above note on 1 Cor. iii. 23); but by reason of the universal charity and unspotted purity of Him into Whom he is engrafted, he will add—

(1) οὐ πάντα συμφέρει, all things are not expedient, and I will therefore moderate my use of my liberty by considerations of regard for the salvation of those whom Christ loves, and for whom He died. And

(2) οὐκ ἐγὼ ἐξουσιασθήσομαι ὑπό τινος, I will not be lorded over by any thing. I have dominion over all, but will not be domineered over by any. I will not be tyrannized over and enslaved by the creature (be it my own body or any other created thing) through my own abuse of my liberty in the use of the creature.

The considerations which ought to regulate our conduct in the exercise of our Christian Liberty, as to the use of God's creatures, cannot be better stated than in the following paragraphs from one of the best interpreters of St. Paul;

Our Christian Liberty extendeth to all the creatures of God.

This ariseth clearly from the testimonies of Scripture, All things are pure (Rom. xiv. 20); All things are lawful (1 Cor. x. 23); All are yours (1 Cor. iii. 22); and Nothing to be refused (1 Tim. iv. 4).

Our Christian Liberty equally respecteth the using and the not using of any of God's creatures. There is no creature but a Christian man by virtue of his liberty, as he may use it upon just occasion, so he may also upon just cause refuse it. All things are lawful for me, saith St. Paul, but I will not be brought under the power of any thing. (1 Cor. vi. 12.) Where he establisheth this Liberty in both the parts of it. Liberty to use the creatures, or else they had not all been lawful for him; and yet Liberty not to use them, or else he had been under the power of some of them.

Whence it followeth, that all the creatures of God stand in the nature of things indifferent; that is, such as may be indifferently either used or not used, according as the rules of godly discretion, circumstances duly considered, shall direct.

Our Christian Liberty for the using or not using of the creature may, without prejudice, admit of some restraint in the outward practice of it, "Ab illicitis semper: quandoque et à licitis." I think it is S. Gregory's. A Christian must never do unlawful, nor yet always lawful, things. St. Paul had liberty to eat flesh; and he used that liberty, and ate flesh: yet he knew there might be some cases wherein to abridge himself of the use of that liberty, so far as not to eat flesh while the world standeth. (1 Cor. viii. 13.)

But what are those restraints, and how far they may be admitted without prejudice done to that liberty?

(1) Sobriety may and ought to restrain us in the outward practice of our Christian Liberty,—for our diet, likewise for our apparel.

(2) Charity also may and ought to restrain us in the outward exercise of our Christian Liberty. Charity, I say, both to ourselves and others. First to ourselves, for regular Charity beginneth there. If we are to cut off our right hand, and to pluck out the right eye, and to cast them from us when they offend us (Matt. v. 29, 30), much more then ought we to deny ourselves the use of such outward lawful things as by experience we have found, or have otherwise cause to suspect to be, hurtful either to our bodies or souls. So a man may and should refrain from meats which may endanger his bodily health. But how much more then from any thing that may endanger the health of his soul!

But Charity reacheth to our brethren, of whom we are to have a due regard in our use of the creatures; an argument wherein St. Paul often enlargeth, as in Rom. xiv. and 1 Cor. viii. the whole chapters throughout, and in a great part of 1 Cor. x. The resolution every where is, that all things be done to Edification (1 Cor. xiv. 26); that things lawful become inexpedient when they offend rather than edify (1 Cor. x. 23); that though all things indeed are pure, yet it is evil for that man which useth them with offence (Rom. xiv. 20); that, albeit flesh, and wine, and other things be lawful, yet it is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor to do any thing whereby a man's brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak. (Rom. xiv. 21.)

(3) There is yet one restraint more, which ariseth from the duty we owe to our superiors, and from the bond of civil obedience, which if it had been by all men as freely admitted as there is just cause it should, how happy had it been for the peace of this Church!

The determination of superiors may and ought to refrain us in the outward exercise of our Christian Liberty. We must submit ourselves to every ordinance of man, saith St. Peter (1 Pet. ii. 13. 15, 16); and it is necessary we should do so, for so is the will of God. Neither is it against Christian Liberty if we do so, for we are still as free as before; rather, if we do not so, we abuse our liberty for a cloke of maliciousness, as it followeth there. (1 Pet. ii. 16.) And St. Paul telleth us we must needs be subject, not only for fear, because the magistrate carrieth not the sword in vain, but also for conscience sake, because the powers that are, are ordained of God. (Rom. xiii. 5. 4. 1.) Bp. Sanderson (iii. p. 164).

13. ὁ δὲ Θεὸς—καταργήσει] In the world to come, God καταργήσει, i. e. will reduce to a state of ἀέργεια, ἀργία, or uselessness—or render void the office of—will make as nought, both the one and the other.

The κοιλία, the seat of craving appetite, and of γαστριμαργία (see Luke xv. 16, and Chrys. here), and the βρώματα, or meats which now are used to satisfy it, will then have no more any functions to perform.

Hence our Lord calls the meat of this world, "the meat that perisheth." (John vi. 27.) And of the Saints it is said, they shall "hunger no more, neither thirst any more." (Rev. vii. 16.)

It must be remembered, that our Lord ate in the presence of His Disciples after His Resurrection,—not because He had need of food, but in order to convince them that He had taken again His human body. See on Luke xxiv. 43, and on Acts x. 41.

From the perishable nature of the functions of the κοιλία and of its βρώματα, he shows the debasement of those who suffer themselves to be enslaved by those beggarly elements, and do not consider the dignity of the body, which will, if rightly used, be raised to a glorious immortality, as Christ's Body has been raised.

But it would be a perversion of the Apostle's meaning to use these words as an argument against a bodily resurrection. See Theodor. Mopsuest., Chrys., and others, in Catená, p. 110.

14. ἐξεγερεῖ] Lach. reads ἐξεγείρει, from A, D*, but see 2 Cor. iv. 14; and 'suscitabit' is in Tertullian adv. Marcion. v. 7, and De Pudicit. 16; and so Iren. v. 6, and S. Polycarp ad Philipp. 2.

These arguments for temperance and holiness, from the consideration of the future Resurrection of the Flesh, and of the Body being made the Temple of God (v. 19) by Baptism, are stated in the Second Epistle ascribed to S. Clement, c. 9, in similar words, μὴ λεγέτω τις ὑμῶν ὅτι αὕτη ἡ σὰρξ οὐ κρίνεται οὐδὲ ἀνίσταται, γνῶτε ἐν τίνι ἐσώθητε ἐν τίνι ἀνεβλέψατε, εἰ μὴ ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ ταύτῃ ὄντες; δεῖ οὖν ὑμᾶς ὡς ναὸν Θεοῦ φυλάσσειν τὴν σάρκα· ὃν τρόπον γὰρ ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ ἐκλήθητε, καὶ ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ ἐλεύσεσθε.

And Tertullian adv. Marcion. v. 7: "Avertens nos a fornicatione manifestat corporis Resurrectionem. Corpus Domino ut Templum Deo. Qui Dominum suscitabit et nos suscitabit."

The whole passage of Tertullian is very interesting, as showing the uses to be made of the Doctrines here stated concerning the Body, and the dangerous consequences arising from a denial of them, as seen in the History of the Heresy against which he is writing, that of Marcion.

15. μέλη Χριστοῦ] Ye have all been made members of Christ, who have been knit together with Him by the Regeneration of the Holy Ghost, in the hope of the Resurrection in His likeness. Theodor. Mops.

Have ye not been espoused as a Bride to one Husband, Christ? Theodoret.

Here is the strongest argument for holiness of life. And it shows the practical character of that Teaching which grounds the duty of holiness on the doctrine of the Incarnation, and on the engrafting of Christians into the Body of Christ by means of the Sacrament of Baptism.

By the operation of the Holy Ghost in the Incarnation of the Son of God, we have become partakers of the Divine Nature. He is our Emmanuel, "God with us," "God manifest in our flesh." Thus we have been brought near to God. Christ has married our Nature, He has espoused Humanity, and reconciled God to Man. Divine Wedlock! profound Mystery! How should we rejoice in this our glorious exaltation in Christ! How should we fear also and tremble at the pure and holy Presence into which we have been thus brought! How earnestly should we watch, how fervently should we pray, that we may be enabled by His grace to purify ourselves "even as He is pure;" so that we who have been made "partakers of the Divine Nature" in Him, may also through Him have the fruition of the glorious Godhead hereafter, for evermore!

— Ἄρας—ποιήσω] Ἄρας is emphatic, marking the double sin of Fornication, taking away from Christ what is His, purchased by His blood on the Cross, and giving it to a Harlot!

16. εἰς σάρκα μίαν] into one flesh; i. e. joined into: a more forcible expression than in. See on Matt. xix. 5. Hence Tertullian (de Pudicit. 16): "Erunt enim duo in unam carnem."

18. Πᾶν ἁμάρτημα, κ.τ.λ.] Every sin that a man commits is without the body (cp. 2 Cor. xii. 2. 3, where the same expression occurs), but he who is committing fornication sins against his own body.

The distinction here drawn by the Apostle is best illustrated by what he says below, xii. 14—20, where he distinguishes the body in its corporate character as a whole from particular members of it. So here; other sins which men commit may be committed by means of particular members of the body; but he who is guilty of fornication, sins with his body, as a whole, and against his body as a whole; for he makes himself one flesh with a harlot.

Hence S. Jerome (ad Amandum, Vol. iv. 161) thus expounds the passage: "Other sins are committed externally (forinsecus); but Fornication not only defiles the Conscience, but the Body of him who commits it; for he makes himself one body with a harlot, and sins against his own body in making that which is the temple of Christ to become the body of a harlot." See also S. Augustine, Serm. 161: "Corpus tuum membrum est Christi. Parce in te Christo. Agnosce in te Christum. Hæc corpora nostra, quæ dicit Apostolus membra esse Christi, propter corpus Christi quod ex genere nostri corporis suscepit; hæc ergo corpora nostra dicit Templum esse in nobis Spiritûs Sancti quem habemus à Deo. Quid horum in te contemnis? Christum, Cujus membrum, an Spiritum Sanctum, Cujus Templum es?" And see Serm. 162, where he considers the difference here made by St. Paul between Fornication and all other sins of the flesh; and says that in the former, "totus homo absorbetur ab ipso, et in ipso corpore, ut totus homo dici possit quod caro sit."

See also Origen, Theodor. Mops., Severian, and others, in Catená, p. 113, and Primasius; and Bengel says well, "Is qui aliter peccat, quàm per fornicationem, peccat quidem cum corpore et per corpus, sed non in corpus, non terminatur peccatum ejus in corpus; et lædit quidem sed non alienat corpus; magis peccat in κοιλίαν ventrem, quàm in corpus, ut distinguit Apostolus."

19. ναὸς τοῦ ἁγίου Πν.] a temple of the Holy Ghost, who is in you. On the argument hence derivable for the Divinity of the Holy Spirit, see iii. 16, 17.

20. ἠγοράσθητε γὰρ τιμῆς] ye were purchased at a price,—the blood of Christ, Who redeemed you from the captivity of sin; and therefore ye are not your own, but His. On this use of the word ἀγοράζω in this sense of buying, in order to redeem from captivity by paying a λύτρον, or ransom, see below, vii. 23. 2 Pet. ii. 1, compared with 1 Pet. i. 18, 19; and Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. VI. p. 680, note.

On this argument the following excellent remarks are made by Bp. Sanderson (Serm. vii. Vol. i. p. 192): "The consideration of Christ's right over us should bind us to do Him service. We were His before, for He made us; and we owed Him service for that. But now we are His more than before, and by a new title, for He hath bought us and paid for us, and we owe Him more service for that. The Apostle therefore urgeth it as a matter of great equity, you are not your own, but His; therefore you are not to satisfy yourselves by doing your own lusts, but to glorify Him by doing His will. When Christ redeemed us by His blood, His purpose was to redeem us unto God, and not to ourselves, and to redeem us from our vain conversation, and not to it. And He therefore delivered us out of the hands of our enemies, that we might the more freely and securely, and without fear, serve Him in holiness and righteousness all the days of our life." (Luke i. 75.)

Thus our redemption is done effectually. It is also done freely; not for price nor reward, but freely and without money. The meaning is, not that there was no price paid at all, but that there was none paid by us; we laid out nothing toward this great purchase. But otherwise, that there was a price paid, the Scriptures are clear. Ye are bought with a price, saith St. Paul (1 Cor. vi. 20), and he saith it over again (ch. vii. 23). He that paid it calleth it λύτρον, a ransom (Matt. xx. 28); that is as much as to say, a price of redemption; and his Apostle somewhat more, ἀντίλυτρον (1 Tim. ii. 6), which implieth a just and satisfactory price, full as much as the thing can be worth. Yet not paid to Satan, in whose possession we were; for we have found already that he was but an usurper, and his title naught. He had but bought of us; and we by our sale could convey unto him no more right than we had ourselves, which was just none at all. Our Redeemer therefore would not enter into any capitu-

(Ps. xcviii. 2.) Bp. Sanderson.

Compare Tertullian's remarks on this passage (c. Marcion. v. 7), where he proves the reality of Christ's human body from it against the Marcionites,—"Empti sumus pretio magno. Plane nullo, si Phantasma fuit Christus." An argument not unnecessary in these days when the doctrine of the Atonement is undermined by Pantheistic theories, and by doubts concerning the historic reality of the sufferings of Christ.

See also above on Matt. xx. 28, and below on 1 Tim. ii. 6, on the Vicarious Atonement made, and the sufficient Ransom paid, by Christ for all mankind.

— ὑμῶν] Elz. adds καὶ ἐν τῷ πνεύματι ὑμῶν ἅ τινά ἐστι τοῦ Θεοῦ, words which are not found in the best MSS. and Versions, and many of the Fathers (see for example Tertullian, de Pudic. 16, who recites a great portion of this chapter there, and c. Marcion. v. 7), and which weaken the effect of the argument by drawing off the mind from the main topic which the Apostle is inculcating, viz. the sanctification of the Body.

It is observable, that he sums up his reasonings here, and above, ch. v. 13, with a brief and pointed sentence in the form of a command, which would be easily remembered, and which he designed to leave as a κέντρον ἐν τοῖς ἀκροωμένοις. Here it is "Glorify God in your body;" there it is "Take out the wicked one from among you" (v. 13).

So again vii. 24, ἕκαστος ἐν ᾧ ἐκλήθη μενέτω. Cp. vii. 38; viii. 13; x. 31, 32; xiii. 13; xiv. 40; and cp. note above on 1 Thess. v. 13, and below, Heb. xiii. 5.

Indeed, it deserves to be remarked, that the various topics of this Epistle are finished off with didactic and dogmatic Apophthegms, which if collected together would form a series of Christian Maxims for instruction in faith and practice.

CH. I. 1. Περὶ δὲ ὧν ἐγράψατέ μοι] St. Paul now proceeds to consider the several questions proposed to him in the Letter which he had received from the Corinthians.

It is observable that each of his Replies to these Questions is introduced by the preposition περί. See

2. διὰ τὰς πορνείας] On account of the fornications; i. e. of the different kinds of illicit intercourse which St. Paul is not willing to specify more particularly, having mentioned them in vi. 9. See also Romans i. 26.

3. ὀφειλήν] So the best MSS. and Editions. And so Origen (in Catenâ), and Tertullian de Pudic. 16. "Vir uxori et uxor viro debitum reddat. Castâ hac locutione Paulus debitum conjugale exprimere voluit." (Valck.) Elz. has ὀφειλομένην εὔνοιαν, an expository gloss. Compare the readings in v. 5.

4. οὐκ ἐξουσιάζει] has not dominion, or authority over. See vi. 12.

5. σχολάσητε τῇ προσευχῇ] So the best MSS. and Editions. Elz. has σχολάζητε τῇ νηστείᾳ καὶ τῇ προσευχῇ.

The aorist does not mark any extraordinary seasons of urgent supplication, but ordinarily recurring times of prayer and devotion, such as that of the Lord's Day and Holy Communion. See Winer, p. 257.

— ἦτε.] So A, B, C, D, E, F, G. Elz. συνέρχησθε.

— ἀκρασίαν] Some Expositors and Lexicographers derive this word from ἀκρατὴς, incontinens, and so Theodor. Mops. (in Catenâ) here: an etymology which suits the meaning very well as to the sense, but not as to the structure of the word, which can hardly have any other derivation than κρᾶσις, κεράννυμι, and answers well enough to the Latin intemperans and Engl. intemperate; properly one who does not dilute his wine with water, as was usual in ancient times (whence the common word now used in Greece for wine, κρασί), but drinks it ἄκρατον.

6. κατὰ συγγνώμην] by permission, or indulgence to you. "Secundum indulgentiam, non secundum præceptum," Iren. (iv. 15), who also has, as to the first clause, "secundum ignoscentiam," by way of allowance. A proof of St. Paul's authority. He is empowered to give an ἐπιταγὴ, or precept, and also to bestow a συγγνώμη, or indulgence. Cp. Lee on Inspiration, p. 293, note.

7. θέλω] Compare 1 Tim. v. 14, where he says βούλομαι νεωτέρας γαμεῖν.

— δέ] So A, B, C, D*, F, G. Elz. has γάρ.

8. κἀγώ] namely, unmarried. See ix. 5. Whether St. Paul had ever been married, is doubtful; if so, he was now a widower. That he had been married is asserted by many of the early Fathers. See the testimonies in Origen (in Rom. i.), who leaves the point doubtful, and Methodius (Conviv. p. 45), who speaks of him as a widower. Clem. Alex. Strom. iii. p. 448, ap. Euseb. iii. 30. And, as Tillemont observes (Mémoires i. p. 243), the expressions of St. Paul here addressed to widows, as well as virgins, and coupled with ἐὰν μείνωσιν—if they remain as I do—seem to give some countenance to the opinion.

Some moderns (Selden and others) have argued from the fact of his having been probably a member of the Sanhedrim, that he had been married. See on Acts xxvi. 10, and Howson (Life, &c., of St. Paul, i. p. 87).

Tertullian (de Monog. c. 3) and Jerome (Epist. 22) assert that he was never married.

The personal history of the Apostles seems purposely to have been left in obscurity by the Divine Providence of God, Who called them to their sacred office in order that the Church might not contemplate them as men, but as chosen vessels of God. See Introduction to the Acts of the Apostles, p. xiii.

10. οὐκ ἐγὼ, ἀλλ' ὁ Κύριος] Not I, but the Lord. That case has been already determined by Christ Himself, as is recorded in Mark x. 12, where He says, "If a woman put away her husband, and marry another, she committeth adultery."

He says, "Not I, but the Lord," because He was about to quote the Law given expressly by Christ Himself, that a man should not put away his wife save for fornication. (Chrysostom.)

And since this case had been so determined by the Lord, it is superfluous (he implies) for him to say any thing upon it.

There is no opposition in this and the following words between Ἐγὼ and Κύριος, as to degrees of authority; nor do they give any sanction to the notion that St. Paul intimates γυναῖκα ἀπὸ ἀνδρὸς μὴ χωρισθῆναι. 11 ἐὰν δὲ καὶ χωρισθῇ, μενέτω ἄγαμος, ἢ hereby that the precepts he himself, the inspired Apostle of God (see above, ii. 13), delivers at the dictation of the Holy Ghost (see v. 40), rest on lower authority, or are less binding on the Church than what the Lord Himself had delivered on earth.

Indeed, in order to guard us against this erroneous notion, and that you may not imagine that the precepts which he here delivers are mere human commands, he closes his whole discourse with saying (v. 40), "I wot (δοκῶ) that I also have the Spirit of God." Chrysostom.

But in a spirit of reverence to what Christ had spoken, he refers his hearers to it, and will not weaken it by repeating it.

Thus, also, the Apostle—inspired by the Holy Ghost—is a divinely accredited witness to the sayings of Christ, and sets the seal of the Spirit upon them.

The following remarks on this subject are made in the valuable work of Dr. W. Lee on Inspiration, Lect. vi. pp. 291—298,—

In 1 Cor. vii. 10, St. Paul writes, "Unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord," words in which he places his own injunction on a perfect equality with that "of the Lord," and which, therefore, supply another proof of his inspired authority.

So far, it is plain, no objection arises. But the Apostle, continuing his subject, shortly afterwards adds, "To the rest speak I, not the Lord;" observing further, with reference to a third class, "I have no commandment of the Lord, yet I give my judgment;" by which language he is supposed to intimate that in certain parts of Scripture the author may write according to his own uninspired human judgment, although guided in other portions of his work by the Holy Ghost.

Such an inference, however, is altogether at variance with St. Paul's design, whose words in this place can only be distorted into the form of an argument against his Inspiration, by overlooking his object and his meaning. The first of the three expressions which have been quoted, "I command, yet not I, but the Lord," refers to the re-institution by Christ (as St. Mark has recorded the circumstance) of the original Law of Marriage, and relates to an ordinance revealed from the very first, and obligatory on every occasion, and in every age; while by the two latter passages St. Paul intends to convey that Christ had not directly provided for those particular cases in which His Apostle now pronounces his inspired and authoritative opinion.

In the former of these passages, the very nature of the question, respecting which the Apostle issues his directions, namely, "If any brother hath a wife that believeth not"—an exceptional case which arose from the state of society then existing (at Corinth)—explains why our Lord had not Himself promulgated an express law respecting it. Here, as in other matters of discipline, the Holy Ghost was to guide the Apostles into "all the truth," and the decisions at which they arrived, are therefore equally binding with those of Christ Himself. This, indeed, is clear from St. Paul's own words when summing up the question, "So ordain I in all churches." And, accordingly, he is so far from representing his "judgment," delivered in the various aspects of the temporary exigency which he discusses in this chapter, as a mere human and fallible opinion, that he closes his remarks by the assertion, "I think also that I have the Spirit of God."

Cp. Chrysostom's remarks below on v. 12.

11. ἄνδρα γυναῖκα μὴ ἀφιέναι] A husband may not put away his wife. Another command given by the Lord when on earth. See on Matt. xix. 9. Luke xvi. 18.

St. Paul states here the general will and desire of Christ that a man should not put away his wife for any reason whatever; and contents himself with doing so—as two of the Evangelists, St. Mark (x. 11) and St. Luke do (xvi. 18)—without reciting the parenthetic qualification which is recorded by St. Matthew (xix. 9), and which declares that whosoever putteth away his wife, save for fornication, and marrieth another, committeth adultery; or, as it is in the same Gospel (v. 32), whosoever putteth away his wife, save for fornication, causeth her to commit adultery. Cp. Origen here, in Catenâ, p. 128.

The reasons which actuated the two Evangelists, St. Mark and St. Luke, in their recital of Our Lord's command (and which have been suggested above on Matt. v. 32), probably influenced St. Paul. He refers to what the Lord had said. And the "Sermon on the Mount," in which Our Lord had spoken on the subject, and in which the qualification is given, would supply what they needed. And it might truly be said, that the Lord—who has declared that a man who puts away his wife, save for fornication, is guilty of adultery, and makes her to commit adultery; and who says, "What God hath joined together let not man put asunder" (Matt. xix. 6)—gives a solemn charge to a husband not to put away his wife.

12. Τοῖς δὲ λοιποῖς] To the rest,—of different religions, one party being a Christian the other being a heathen,—for whom the Lord had not legislated when on earth.

— λ. ἐγὼ, οὐχ ὁ Κύριος] I, an Apostle of Christ, and inspired by the Holy Ghost, supply the answer on this case, which was not determined by the Lord when on earth.

When the Apostle was about to recite the Law enacted by Christ, that a man should not put away his wife save for fornication, then he says not I. The things which he had declared before, although they had not been commanded expressly by Christ, yet they are approved by Christ also; but this command, which he recites, had been expressly promulgated by Christ, so that the words I and not I are thus to be distinguished. For, in order that you may not imagine that the Apostle's own commands are human injunctions, he adds, "I am persuaded that I also have the Spirit of God." Chrysostom.

When he says, "I and not the Lord," he means that he has not found this Law in the Gospel, but he now lays down the Law; and the Laws which are laid by the Apostle are Laws of Christ. Theodoret.

— αὕτη] Elz. αὐτὴ, but see v. 13.

— μὴ ἀφιέτω αὐτήν] let him not divorce her. Ἀφιέναι, in Athenian Law, was expressed by ἀποπέμπειν or ἐκβάλλειν, and the woman who deserted her husband was said ἀπολείπειν. Thom. Mag. v. ἀπολείπειν.

The Christian Scriptures have adopted the words ἀπολύειν, and ἀφιέναι, and χωρίζεσθαι for the more classical terms, which did not sufficiently mark the severance of the bond contracted by Marriage.

S. Chrysostom says here, "He that putteth away his wife for fornication is not condemned, because he that is one body with her who is a harlot is polluted; and the marriage bond is broken by fornication, but not so by unbelief. Therefore it is permitted to put away a wife for the former sin, but not for the latter."

And again, "If he that is joined with a harlot is one body, so he who is joined with an idolatress is one body. True, he is one body with her, but is not polluted by her. The holiness of the faithful husband prevails over the unholiness of the unbelieving wife. They are joined together in that respect in which she is not unholy; and though she be an unbeliever, yet her husband's right in her, and her duty to him, has not been cancelled by her unbelief, and the children of such a wedlock are holy. But this is not so in the case of an adulteress: he who is one flesh with her is joined with her in that respect in which she is unholy; her unholiness prevails over his holiness, and he is polluted by her: the children of such a union are not a holy seed." See also Origen here, in Catenâ, p. 128, and Photius in p. 136, and Hammond on Divorce, i. p. 606, Bp. Cosin on Divorce, Works, iv. p. 496, and the notes above on Matt. v. 32; xix. 9, and the full discussion of the subject in Gerhard, Loci Theologici, Vol. vii. p. 692—743.

E, F, G. And this word has a special force here; the wife, who is a heathen, is sanctified in and by her union with the Christian. See above, v. 12, εἴ τις ἀδελφὸς γυναῖκα ἔχει ἄπιστον. Elz. has ἀνδρὶ, which does not bring out this point so clearly.

15. χωρίζεται] depart, namely, is guilty of desertion.

— οὐ δεδούλωται ὁ ἀδελφός] the Christian has not been made a slave by his Christianity in these respects. Observe the article. St. Paul is careful to maintain the true dignity, and genuine liberty, and spiritual royalty of the Christian character.

Although a Christian may not put away his wife, being an unbeliever, yet if the wife desert her husband (χωρίζεται) he may contract a second marriage.

Hence even Romish Divines declare that in this case Marriage is not indissoluble. Thus A Lapide says here, "Nota, Apostolum permittere hoc casu non tantùm thori divortium sed etiam matrimonii; ita ut possit conjux fidelis aliud matrimonium inire. Alioqui enim servituti subjectus esset frater, aut soror, id est, Christianus aut Christiana. Magna enim servitus est teneri matrimonio et obstrictum esse infideli ut alteri nubere non possis, sed, etiamsi discedat infidelis, continere debeas et vivere cœlebs." And in support of this opinion he refers to S. Augustine, de Adulteriuis Conjugiis, c. 13 and c. 19, S. Thomas, and Ambrosiast., who says, "Non debetur ei reverentia conjugii, qui horret Auctorem conjugii, sed potest alteri se jungere." And so the Canon Law, Cap. "Quanto" et "Gaudemus" in Tit. "De Divortiis." Decretal. Greg. IX. lib. iv. tit. xix. capp. 7 and 8, and in the Decreti Secunda Pars, causa 28, quæst. 2, "Si Infidelis," Vol. i. p. 946, and Vol. ii. p. 695, ed. Lips. 1829, where will be found some valuable materials on a question necessary to be considered in the Colonial Dioceses of Great Britain, viz. "What rule is to be followed with regard to Heathen Polygamists after their Conversion to Christianity?"

16, 17. τί γὰρ οἶδας] After all that has been written on these difficult verses, which have been construed by some into a reason and plea for conjugal separation in the case supposed (see Meyer, Conybeare, and Alford), the true meaning seems to be that which had been suggested by some ancient Interpreters, as Chrys., Theodoret, and Photius (in Cat.), as follows:—

But God has called us in peace. This is our calling, in which we ought to abide, a peaceable calling; and therefore, although a Christian partner is not bound in slavery to a heathen, and if that heathen partner departs, let it be so, yet the Christian, whose calling is peace with all, ought not to be hasty to break off any connexion formed by wedlock, or otherwise. For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou will save thy unbelieving husband (i. e. by converting him to the true faith. Cp. σώσεις, 1 Tim. iv. 16)? or what knowest thou, O Christian husband, whether thou wilt save thy heathen wife? What knowest thou as to any of these things except (εἰ μὴ) only this one thing which thou dost know, that thy calling is peace, and that accordingly, as the Lord allotted to every one his condition in life, and in that state in which God hath called every man, in that let him walk.

Therefore, whatever the heathen partner may do, the Christian husband or wife ought not to depart from his or her partner though a heathen. (Primasius.)

Other things are uncertain; you cannot tell whether you may save your partner or no. But it is a clear duty for every one to abide in that state of life to which the God of peace has called him. And so I command in all the Churches.

Therefore, here is my answer: Choose what is a clear and certain duty, and leave the rest to God, Who will bless your charitable efforts, if you do your duty to Him. If you do what you know to be your duty, He will order what is best as to that which you cannot know, viz. the result of your efforts for the salvation of the partner who has been assigned to your lot by the providence of God.

18. Περιτετμημένος—μὴ ἐπισπάσθω] "Non adducat præputium." (Jerome ad Isa. liii.) "Ne attrahat ferro præputium." See Theophyl., Phot., and the medical writers, e. g. Celsus, vii. 25. And this was done by apostate Jews in the time of the Maccabees in the persecutions under Antiochus Epiphanes. 1 Macc. i. 18. Joseph. Antiqq. xii. 6. Epiphan. de Ponder., who relates that Jews who went over to Samaritanism, or vice versâ, underwent a second circumcision. (See A Lapide and Wetstein here.)

— ἐν ἀκροβυστίᾳ] "ἀκρόβυστος proprie dicitur, cui summitas tecta est, seu obturata. Nam βύειν obturare significat. In Exod. vi. 12. ubi vox ἀπερίτμητος legitur, in sua versione posuit vocem ἀκρόβυστος Theodotion, qui nativitate Gentilis se tradiderat circumcidendum, Moysis sacra amplexus." (Valck.)

21. Δοῦλος ἐκλήθης;] Wast thou called (to Christ) a slave? Probably in answer to a question from the Corinthians, "Whether on the ground of the promises of universal liberty under the Gospel (Luke iv. 18. Isa. lxi. 1), a Greek slave did not become ipso facto free by embracing Christianity?"

St. Paul's answer, "Let every one abide in the calling in which he has been called into the Church," presents a striking evidence of his disinterestedness and courage, and of the truth of his mission, as showing that he would not beguile any one to embrace the Gospel by temporal allurements.

How different is this conduct from that of an enthusiast and deceiver. How many political and military adventurers have speculated on the advantages they might derive from inflaming the passions of a servile population by promises of freedom. And how many temptations were there to such an enterprise as that in the cities of Greece and Rome, where so large a portion of the population consisted of slaves. If St. Paul had followed their examples, he might have been a Spartacus.

22. ἀπελεύθερος Κυρίου] a Freeman of the Lord, the King of Kings—Libertus Domini; a nobler title than Libertus Cæsaris, as Aug. says, "Libera semper est servitus apud Deum, cui non necessitas servit, sed Caritas." "Aurea gnome" (A Lapide).

— ὁ ἐλεύθερος κ. δοῦλός ἐ. Χριστοῦ] He gives dignity to the slave by calling him the Lord's freedman; and inspires the Master with charity by reminding him that he is the slave of Christ. Thus he unites Masters and Slaves as brethren in Christ. The true principle of Slave-Emancipation. See below, Introduction to the Epistle to Philemon.

23. Τιμῆς ἠγοράσθητε] Ye were bought with a price. Whether Masters or Slaves, ye were all purchased by one and the same price, paid for you all—the blood of Christ. Observe the aorist. The words are reiterated, on account of their solemn importance, from above vi. 20, where see note.

— μὴ γίνεσθε δ. ἀ.] Do not become slaves of men (observe γίνεσθε), for ye are servants of Christ, Who has made you His own by the price of His blood.

24. Ἕκαστος ἐν ᾧ ἐκλήθη—ἐν τούτῳ μενέτω] See Bp. Sanderson's Sermon on this Text, and on the doctrinal and practical instruction to be derived from it.

25. ἐπιταγὴν Κυρίου οὐκ ἔχω] precept of the Lord I have none on this subject. The Lord gave no express injunction on this matter when He was on earth, nor has He imparted to me any special revelation on this subject; but I declare my judgment as one who has obtained mercy from Christ to be faithful in preaching His Word, and worthy of credit: "misericordiam consecutus a Domino ut fidelis sim" (Iren. iv. 15), i. e. my faithfulness is due to His grace (see 2 Cor. iv. 1), and therefore my judgment is to be received as coming from Christ Himself, Who has given me the Holy Spirit. (v. 40.)

28. γήμῃς] B has γαμήσῃς, which has been received by some Editors. A has γαμήσῃ.

— ἐγὼ ὑμῶν φείδομαι] I spare you by not laying on you the burden of celibacy by way of obligation, even in these times, when, by reason of the perils of persecution to which Christians are and will be exposed, it is unseasonable for them to contract Marriage.

If St. Paul did not venture to impose that burden on the conscience in those days, it cannot be consistent with the spirit of the Gospel, which St. Paul preached, to impose the burden as a vow of perpetual celibacy on any. And it is no little presumption for uninspired men to venture to do what was not then done by the Apostle of Christ.

29. ὁ καιρός] Our season, our opportunity. See 2 Cor. vi. 2, νῦν καιρὸς εὐπρόσδεκτος. See on Eph. v. 16, ἐξαγοραζόμενοι τὸν καιρὸν, retrieving the opportunity. Rev. i. 3, ὁ καιρὸς ἐγγύς.

— συνεσταλμένος] Properly, wrapped up, or folded together (see Acts v. 6), or furled and reefed as a sail. Cp. Valck. here.

Hence the early Latin Fathers translate this Christian maxim thus: "Tempus in collecto est." See Tertullian, c. Marcion. v. 7, De Exhort. Castitat. c. 4, de Pudicit. c. 16.

St. Paul, writing now from Ephesus, where he was in almost daily peril for his life (I die daily, 1 Cor. xv. 31), might well speak of the present necessity (ἀνάγκης, angustia), and of the contraction of the season for working the work of God, and bringing forth fruit; and he speaks in the language of prophecy concerning coming troubles and calamities; but it would be illogical and irreverent to argue from these words that he supposed that the Last Day was near at hand. Cp. 2 Thess. ii. 1—3.

— τὸ λοιπόν ἐστιν, ἵνα—] The season, in fine, is made short, in order that—. A, B have ἐστι τὸ λοιπὸν, which is adopted by Scholz., Lachm., Tisch., Alf.

Lachmann points the sentence thus: "Tempus breve est: reliquum est, ut—."

But the reading and punctuation adopted in the text seems preferable. The words ἵνα καὶ οἱ ἔχοντες mark the design of God in shortening the time; and the moral result of such an abbreviation (as ὅπως ἄν in Rom. iii. 4), and the use to be made of it, namely, that men's hearts may be weaned from earthly things, and that they may seek those things which are above. See 2 Cor. iv. 7, and cp. Winer, p. 408, § 53.

And so the earliest Fathers understand it, e. g. Tertullian, de Pudicit. 16, "Cæterum tempus in collecto constituit, ut qui habent uxores sic sint tanquam non habentes," and de Exhort. Castit. 4, "Tempus in collectum esse adjicit quò oporteat etiam habentes matrimonia pro non habentibus agere;" and so the Syriac and Æthiopic Versions.

Tertullian, in another place, says (Ad uxorem, i. 5), "Tempus in collecto est: Superest ut qui matrimonia habent tanquam non habentes agant." And so Vulg., "Tempus breve est. Reliquum est, ut qui." And so S. Leo, quoted by A Lapide. In favour of which it may be said—

(1) That ὁ καιρὸς συνεσταλμένος stands emphatically as a Christian maxim;

(2) That St. Paul usually places λοιπὸν and τὸ λοιπὸν at the beginning of a paragraph, Eph. vi. 10. Phil. iii. 1; iv. 8. 2 Thess. iii. 1. But we have τὸ λοιπὸν placed as the second word, Matt. xxvi. 45. Mark xiv. 41.

But, on the whole, the other interpretation, as stated above, appears to be the best.

— ἵνα καὶ οἱ ἔχοντες] In order that even they who are married should be as unmarried, and much more, that the unmarried should so abide.

31. χρώμενοι τῷ κόσμῳ τούτῳ] A, B, D*, F, G have τὸν κόσμον, and D*, F, G add τοῦτον, which is not in A, B; and the reading of A, B, χρώμενοι τὸν κόσμον, has been received by Lachm., Tisch., Alf. If the accusative were only rare after χρᾶσθαι, this reading might be preferable; but it seems to be without an example in the LXX or New Testament. We may not, therefore, venture to adopt it. It is found in C, H, in Acts xxvii. 17, where see Bornemann, p. 22, and in some passages of a later Græcism, cited by Schaefer (ad Gregor. Corinth. p. 691).

It is probable that the accusative ΚΟΣΜΟΝ originated in the common confusion of O and Ω (see 1 Cor. xv. 49), and of the N and I ascript, ΚΟΣΜΩΙ.

— μὴ καταχρώμενοι] too much using; cleaving to the use, and doting upon it, and becoming the slave of it. Compare the similar expression, 1 Cor. ix. 12, οὐκ ἐχρησάμεθα τῇ ἐξουσίᾳ ταύτῃ, (v. 15) οὐδενὶ ἐχρησάμην τούτων, (v. 18) εἰς τὸ μὴ καταχρήσασθαι τῇ ἐξουσίᾳ.

As to the preposition κατὰ in this sense, cp. καταφιλέω de-osculor, valdè osculor, Matt. xxvi. 49, κατακλαίω, valdè ploro, καταμανθάνω, studiosè perdisco, κατεσθίω de-voro. It denotes a downward affection of the mind, which shows itself by a riveted devotion to its object, and may be illustrated by the attitude and temper of the men of Gideon who fell down on their knees to gulp down the water, in contradistinction to the three hundred who only lapped it, and passed on (Judges vii. 6). This was the trial and test prescribed by God (vii. 4). They who lapped were chosen; the others were rejected. The one were χρώμενοι, the other καταχρώμενοι. And the Apostle advises here, to lap the water of life's flowing stream, but not to kneel down and drink it.

It is well said by an ancient Father of the Western Church, "In æternis bonis inseparabiliter est inhærendum, temporalibus verò transeunter utendum; ut peregrinantibus nobis, et ad patriam redire properantibus, quicquid de prosperitatibus mundi hujus occurrerit, viaticum sit itineris non illecebra mansionis. Ideò Apostolus prædicat, dicens Tempus breve est: Reliquum est, &c. Præterit enim figura hujus mundi. Sed quod de specie blanditur non facile declinatur, nisi in illâ visibilium pulchritudine Creator potius quam creatura diligatur. . . . Beati enim mens quæ peregrinationis suæ tempora castâ sobrietate transcurrit, et in iis per quæ necesse est eam ambulare non remanet, ut hospita magis quam domina terrenorum, nec affectibus sit innexa humanis, nec promissionibus desit divinis." S. Leo (quoted by A Lapide), and S. Bernard (ibid.), "Noli amare præsentia, quæ possessa onerant, amata inquinant, amissa cruciant."

— παράγει τὸ σχῆμα] the form of this world is passing by, as a pageant in a procession, or on a stage. "Præterit figura hujus mundi," Iren. iv. 3, and v. 35, "præterit habitus hujus mundi," and 36, quoting Ps. ci. 26. Isa. lxvi. 22, and Matt. xxvi. 35, and Rev. xxi. 5, 6.

34. μεμέρισται καὶ] So A, B, D, F, G, I, K, and Theodoret. Also A, B have καὶ before μεμέρισται, and have ἡ ἄγαμος after γυνὴ and after παρθένος. Elz. has no καὶ before μεμέρισται, or after it.

Lachmann has καὶ μεμέρισται, and joins it with the pre- ceding sentence, and applies it to the man, according to the Latin Vulgate, "et divisus est," he is divided, and so Jerome (adv. Jovinian. lib. i.) and the Æthiopic Version.

The true meaning of this controverted passage appears to be this: Both (καί) the wife has been assigned to her appointed lot or special portion (μερίδα) in life, and the unmarried woman to here, and God has allotted to each their appointed duties. Hence μεμέρισται in the perfect tense.

St. Paul had been speaking of the different callings which God has allotted or apportioned (ἐμέρισεν, vii. 17; see also 2 Cor. x. 13) to various persons in life. And he had said, "Let every one abide in the state of life to which God has called him" (v. 24). And he here describes the characteristics of the several μερίδες or portions (compare Luke x. 42, τὴν ἀγαθὴν μερίδα) which the married and unmarried women have assigned to them respectively. He does not depreciate the one in comparison with the other; but states the fact that they have special lots or portions in life.

Μεμέρισται may mean either she has been assigned as a lot, or a lot has been assigned to her, and the sense is much the same in both cases. As to the latter construction, compare πτωχοὶ εὐαγγελίζονται, the Poor have the Gospel preached to them, Matt. xi. 5. Luke vii. 22, and δογματίζεσθε, Col. ii. 20, and see Winer, § 39, p. 233, Matth. Gr. Gr. § 421.

The interpretation in the English Version has good authority in its favour, the Syriac and Arabic Versions, and Tertullian de Virg. Vel. c. 4, "Divisa est et mulier et virgo" (the translation in Cod. Augiensis and Boerner.), which Tertullian expounds by "constituere differentiam inter virginem et mulierem." Probably this exposition proceeded from the literal rendering of the original; and may be an inference from St. Paul's words; but it does not seem to be the point which he desires here to bring prominently forward; and the original words μεμέρισται καὶ ἡ γυνὴ καὶ ἡ παρθένος, can hardly signify "there is a difference between the wife and the virgin;" but their sense is, the married woman has her part assigned to her, and the virgin has hers.

On the sense of the words μερίζω and μεμέρισται, as used by St. Paul, see above note on i. 13, μεμέρισται ὁ Χριστός.

35. εὐπάρεδρον τῷ Κυρίῳ ἀπερισπάστως] Add to these, the words μεμέρισται, and μεριμνᾷ here, and it might almost be supposed that St. Paul had St. Luke's language concerning Mary of Bethany in his mind when he wrote this, Luke x. 40, ἡ Μαρία παρακαθίσασα παρὰ τοὺς πόδας τοῦ Κυρίου· ἡ Μάρθα περιεσπᾶτο ... Μάρθα Μάρθα, μεριμνᾷς κ.τ.λ. Μαρία δὲ τὴν ἀγαθὴν μερίδα ἐξελέξατο... Elz. has εὐπρόσεδρον here.

36. ἐπὶ τὴν αὐτοῦ παρθένον] his Virgin, that is, his virgin daughter (Severian, Photius, Œcumenius).

It is observable, that throughout this discourse concerning marriage (vv. 36—40), St. Paul, in that spirit of holy restraint and reverent reserve which mark his treatment of this subject, does not bring forth the Virgin herself from her maiden retirement, and converse with her on the subject; but he addresses his discourse to her Parent—not as if he supposed that the maiden herself was not to have a principal part in determining the matter, but in order to spare her modesty and delicacy, and because he supposes that her wishes and feelings will be confidentially and unreservedly communicated to her Parent, whom she will consider as, under God, her natural guardian and adviser, and whom, therefore, the Apostle identifies with her. He thus teaches Parents and Children their duties to each other and themselves in this solemn matter, the entrance into the Holy Estate of Matrimony.

The beautiful language of the Ancient Father last quoted, may find a proper place here,—

What human words can suffice to express the felicity of that Marriage which the Church knits together, the Holy Eucharist confirms, and the Benediction seals, which Angels announce in heaven, and the Father of all ratifies? For neither on earth do children rightly and lawfully marry without the consent of Parents.... How blessed is the yoke of such a pair joined together by one hope, by common vows, common discipline, and common service. They are like brother and sister in Christ, fellow-servants of God, joined together in body and mind. Truly they twain are one flesh. They pray together, fast together; they are together in the Church of God, and are together at the Banquet of God. Psalms and Hymns sound between them. Christ hears and sees these things, and rejoices; and sends to them His Peace. Tertullian (ad Uxor. ii. 8).

— οὕτως ὀφείλει γίνεσθαι] So it ought to be done. Because his daughter's affections are engaged, and the marriage will be contracted "reverently, discreetly, advisedly, soberly, and in the fear of God."

— γαμείτωσαν] let them marry: that is, let his daughter, and the person who desires her in marriage, be united together in wedlock. Cp. Winer, § 67, p. 555.

37. Ὃς ἕστηκεν ἑδραῖος] who stands stedfast. The Virgin daughter's resolves are blended in one with the Parent's; but the Parent gives expression to them. The Parent is regarded throughout by St. Paul as the party who gives effect to the wishes of his child, and through whom the matter is decided, either in the affirmative or negative, and therefore he uses the masculine gender here. See above on v. 35.

38. καὶ ὁ] So A, B, D, E, F, G. Elz. ὁ δὲ. The reading adopted in the text is preferable, because St. Paul does not so much desire to contrast the one thing with the other, as to state the superiority of the latter.

39. δέδεται] νόμῳ is added by Elz., but is not in A, B, D*, F, and is cancelled by Griesb., Scholz., Lachm., Tisch., Alf., who suppose it to have been imported from Rom. vii. 2.

This sentence appears to be a reply to a question from the Corinthians, "whether a Wife could be severed from her Husband by Divorce?"

Our Lord had said, that whosoever putteth away his wife, except for fornication, committeth adultery (Matt. xix. 9; cp. Matt. v. 32). Hence the question would naturally arise, whether a Wife might put away her Husband for fornication, or adultery?

Our Lord had made no such exception on the side of the Wife. In no case had He permitted her to put away her Husband.

But yet it might be said, that He had not expressly forbidden her to put away her husband, if guilty of that sin. St. Paul here determines that matter, and decides that the wife is bound to her husband as long as he liveth, and therefore cannot contract another marriage in his lifetime. See S. Jerome ad Amandum (tom. iv. p. 162), who, commenting on this text, says, "Quamdiu vivit vir, licet adulter sit... et ab uxore propter hæc scelera derelictus, maritus ejus reputatur, cui alterum virum accipere non licet."

The Gospel has, it is true, placed woman on a par with man as to spiritual privileges (Gal. iii. 28). But it is a great error to imagine that it has disturbed the natural superiority of man over woman. On the contrary, the Gospel teaches, that the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ is of the Church, and as the Church is subject to Christ, so should wives be to their husbands (Eph. v. 23). The Gospel does not give power to a Wife to divorce her Husband, any more than it gives power to Subjects to dethrone their Rulers; to whom they are bound to be subject always; though if a Ruler command what is unlawful, they must "obey God, rather than man." See on Rom. xiii. 1—5.

40. δοκῶ] I suppose; I wot, said with a feeling of conscious dignity, indignant at the very idea of any doubt being felt on the subject: He rebukes all such doubts by the word δοκῶ. I suppose,—whatever any one else may do. See above on iv. 9, and vii. 12, the use of the verb in Æschyl. S. C. T. 611, 647.

As Augustine says on this passage (in Joann. Tract. 37), "Qui dicit puto, dubitare videtur, sed Apostolus increpabat, non dubitabat."

He affirms that he is giving a precept from the Holy Ghost. True it is that all the faithful have the Spirit of God. But all the faithful are not Apostles. The Apostles had the Spirit in prophecy, and miracles, and tongues; and when St. Paul speaks here, he gives not a counsel only of the Spirit, but a command proportioned to His Majesty. Tertullian (de Exhort. Castitatis, c. 4).

CH. VIII. 1. Περὶ δὲ τῶν εἰδωλοθύτων] Concerning the meats that have been offered in sacrifice to heathen idols, and whether it is lawful for a Christian to eat them; a question propounded to St. Paul in the Letter from the Corinthians. See vii. 1.

On Christian abstinence from idolothyta, see the Decree of the Council of Jerusalem, Acts xv. 29. Cp. Rev. ii. 14. 20, and Concil. Gangrens. can. 2; and Blunt's Lectures, p. 97.

It is observable, that in dealing with the question of the unlawfulness of eating idolothyta, St. Paul never refers to the Decree of the Council of Jerusalem (Acts xv. 29) in support of his own decisions.

The reason doubtless is, that what is written by him in the Epistles which have been received as Canonical Scripture by the Church of Christ, is written by Inspiration of the Holy Ghost; and what the Holy Ghost commands in them, claims dutiful respect and obedience on His Divine and Independent Authority. See above, on vii. 40, and on Gal. ii. 1.

As to the drift of what follows in this chapter, it is well observed by S. Chrysostom, that "many of the Corinthian Christians, having learnt from the Gospel that 'not whatsoever goeth into the mouth of a man defileth a man' (Matt. xv. 11), and that idols are mere wood and stone, abused this knowledge, in a vain conceit of superior intelligence, to the scandal of others, and their own spiritual injury."

2. ἐγνωκέναι] So A, B, D, E, F, G.—Elz. εἰδέναι. τι is emphatic, something.

3. ἔγνωσται ὑπ' αὐτοῦ] is known by Him. Human knowledge puffeth up; but he who ἀγαπᾷ Θεὸν, loves God, he is the true Gnostic. For only ἀγάπη οἰκοδομεῖ, Love builds up. He (viii. 1) who loves God, not only has laid the true foundation of knowledge, but is also himself the object of the highest knowledge, viz. the Divine knowledge. He is known by God, and is loved by Him (Theodoret, who quotes Exod. xxxiii. 12, and see on Acts xv. 18), and is endued with true wisdom by Him.

The Mother of true knowledge is Love. (See on John vii. 17.) In order to know God, we must be known of God. And God knows those who love and obey Him (John x. 27). Therefore all true knowledge is grounded on obedient Love and loving Obedience.

4. οἴδαμεν ὅτι οὐδὲν εἴδωλον] There seems to be a contrast between οἴδαμεν and εἴδωλον. An εἴδωλον is a mere εἶδος, ἰδέα, an ideal phantom, or simulacrum; and so distinguished from those things which are proper objects of knowledge; and there is something of alliterative force in the words οἴδαμεν ὅτι οὐδὲν εἴδωλον. This passage is quoted by Iren. iii. 6, who omits ἕτερος and ἐν κόσμῳ.

5. ἐν οὐρανῷ—ἐπὶ γῆς] Local Deities, not like our God, who is universal.

6. εἷς Θεός] one God. Here we find Father and Son equally opposed to the gods many and lords many. There is but one Lord to us, viz. Jesus Christ. Is then the Father (Who also is the Lord by Whom are all things, Rom. xi. 34. 36) excluded among the lords many? God forbid. But Father and Son are one Lord. So likewise to us there is but one God, viz. the Father. Is then the Son excluded among the gods many?—the Son, who, as the same St. Paul testifies, is over all, God blessed for ever? (Rom. ix. 5.) No, certainly; or otherwise he himself has infallibly shown us, that there are to us two Gods and two Lords, at the same time that he intended to prove (see v. 4) that to us there is but one God and one Lord. The truth is, St. Paul has not only hereby insinuated to us that Father and Son are one God and one Lord, but he has likewise intimated the reason why they are one. It is because all things whatsoever, arise or flow from both. There is nothing of the Father but by the Son; nor any thing by the Son, but what is also of the Father. Waterland (Works, ii. p. 31).

The Father is here emphatically styled one God; but without design to exclude the Son from being God also: as the Son is emphatically styled one Lord; but without design to exclude the Father from being Lord also. Reasons may be assigned for the emphasis in both cases. The discourse there (vv. 4, 5) is about idols, and nominal gods and lords, which have no claim or title to religious worship. These the Father and Son are both equally distinguished from; which may insinuate at least to us, that the texts of the Old or New Testament, declaring the Unity and excluding others, do not exclude the Son, "by Whom are all things." Another passage is Eph. iv. 6: "One God and Father of all, Who is above all, and through all, and in you all." A famous passage, which has generally been understood by the Ancients of the whole Trinity. Above all, as Father; through all, by the Word; and in all, by the Holy Ghost. Waterland (Defence of Queries, Vol. i. qu. 2, p. 7.)

— ὁ πατὴρ, ἐξ οὗ τὰ πάντα] God the Father, from Whom (as from, ἐξ, a source) are all things.

This priority doth properly and naturally result from the Divine paternity; so that the Son must necessarily be second unto the Father, from Whom He receiveth His origination. Neither can we be thought to want a sufficient foundation for this priority of the First Person of the Trinity, if we look upon the numerous testimonies of the ancient doctors of the Church, who have not only stuck to call the Father the origin, the cause, the author, the root, the fountain, and the head of the Son, or the whole Divinity.

For by these titles it appeareth clearly,—first, that they made a considerable difference between the person of the Father, of Whom (ἐξ οὗ) are all things (1 Cor. viii. 6), and the person of the Son, by Whom (δι' οὗ) are all things. Secondly, that the difference consisteth properly in this,—that as the branch is from the root, and the river from the fountain, and by their origination from them receive that being which they have; whereas the root receiveth nothing from the branch, or fountain from the river; so the Son is from the Father, receiving His subsistence by generation from Him; the Father is not from the Son, as being what He is from none. Bp. Pearson.

On the doctrine of the origination of all things to man from God the Father, see note below on 2 Cor. xiii. 13. Tit. iii. 5.

which you have. All do not know that there is but one God, and that the gods which the heathen worship are no gods; and when they eat what is offered in sacrifice to them, they eat it ἐν τῇ συνειδήσει ἕως ἄρτι τοῦ εἰδώλου, with the yet abiding consciousness of the idol (see Winer, § 54; and Phil. i. 26, τῆς παρουσίας πάλιν); i. e. with the consciousness which the Gentiles have of its existence, and they eat it as meat offered to an idol (ὡς εἰδωλόθυτον); i. e. as offered in worship to it, and with that feeling of reverence towards it which is shown by participation in sacrifices offered in its temple and at its altar.

— μολύνεται] is polluted by participation in meats offered to idols, believed by it to exist and to be Divine. Theodoret.

8. Βρῶμα ἡμᾶς οὐ παρίστησι τῷ Θεῷ] Meat does not commend us to God. You erroneously imagine (says the Apostle to those who boasted of their knowledge) that by eating all meats without scruple or difference, you prove the strength of your faith, and do honour to God the Creator of all things. You know that there is no other God but one, and that an idol is nothing; i. e. the gods to whom these meats are offered have no existence, and you show your belief that they have no existence by eating freely what has been offered to them. But be not deceived, meats do not commend us to God; for neither if we eat freely all things, are we the better, nor yet if we decline to eat any meats, even those offered to the idol, are we the worse. Chrys., Theodoret.

In fact, the eating or not eating is, in itself, a thing indifferent. And if the question were to be considered in the abstract, you might truly eat or abstain, as you think best. But the question is not to be argued in the abstract. You must consider it also with reference to the effect which your eating will produce upon others, your fellow-men and fellow-members in Christ; and therefore he adds, Take heed lest this liberty of yours become a stumbling-block to the weak. See above, on 1 Cor. vi. 12.

For παρίστησι here, A B have παραστήσει, which has been adopted by Lachm., Tisch., Meyer, Alford, who have also placed ἐὰν μὴ φάγωμεν as the first clause of the sentence, but do not agree as to the verb which is to follow it. Lachm. has περισσεύομεν. Tisch. and Alf. have ὑστερούμεθα, and reserve περισσεύομεν for the end of the sentence, after ἐὰν φάγωμεν.

9. ἀσθενέσιν] So A, B, D, E, F, G.—Elz. ἀσθενοῦσιν.

10. Ἐὰν γάρ τις κ.τ.λ.] For if any one see thee, the man who has knowledge, reclining at meat in the idol's temple (1 Macc. i. 47; x. 83. 3 Esdr. ii. 10, as was usual with the heathen votaries at a sacrifice), will not the conscience of him who is weak be edified to eat the meats that have been offered to idols?

There is a gentle irony in the words, "the man who has knowledge," and in the word "edified," as in other expressions of St. Paul's argument here (e. g. in δοκῶ, vii. 40); and it has been imitated by Tertullian (de Virg. Vel. c. 3): "Scandalum malæ rei exemplum est, ædificans ad delictum;" and again in his Præscr. Hæret. c. 8: "Solent infirmiores a quibusdam personis ab hæresi captis ædificari ad ruinam."

11. ἀπόλλυται—ἀπέθανεν] he who is weak perisheth, the brother for whom Christ died. A strong passage against the Calvinistic tenet of Reprobation. They for whom Christ died may be lost. They who are lost will not fail of salvation because Christ did not die to save them, and because He rejected them eternally as Reprobates, but because they did not profit by the salvation which He died to procure for them. See on Rom. xiv. 15, where nearly the same words occur; and St. Peter's expression, "denying the Lord that bought them." (2 Pet. ii. 1.)

Elz. has ἀπολεῖται, and adds ἀδελφὸς after ἀσθενῶν, but that word is placed as in the text in A, B, D, E, F, G.

— ἐν] So the best MSS.—Elz. ἐπί. Ἐν conveys a stronger and clearer meaning than ἐπί, viz. that the perdition of thy brother will be entailed and involved in thy knowledge.

12. τύπτοντες—ἀσθενοῦσαν] smiting it when sick, instead of endeavouring to heal it.

13. εἰ βρῶμα σκανδαλίζει τὸν ἀδελφόν μου, οὐ μὴ φάγω κρέα εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα] if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no meat to the world's end.

A text which has been much perverted in modern times.

It has been alleged by some, on the ground of this declaration, that men ought to abstain from wine because some are tempted to abuse it; and that men ought to resolve, and even to make vows, not to drink wine or other fermented drinks, in order that they may not, by their use of them, give occasion to others to abuse them.

St. Paul's assertion is,—that he would abstain entirely from meats, if his eating of them were the cause of sin to any.

He does not say that it is or can be the cause of sin to any; but that if it were the cause of sin, he would even abstain from meat for ever.

So, if our drinking of wine be the cause of sin to any, we ought to abstain from it,—but otherwise, we are not obliged of necessity so to do.

It is not enough to say that some persons may take occasion from our drinking to abuse wine. There is a great difference between scandal taken and scandal given. Many were offended at Christ Himself. (Matt. xi. 6; xv. 12; xxvi. 31.) Men take occasion from the preaching of the cross to blaspheme the cross. But "the scandal of the cross" is not therefore to cease. (Gal. v. 11.) And St. Paul says, "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of Christ." (Gal. vi. 14.) It has been well said, that "good things offend none but evil men." If the thing is good, let them acknowledge their own evil in being offended by it. Tertullian (de Virg. Vel. 3).

Wine is a creature of God, and every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused (1 Tim. iv. 4, where see note) if it be rightly used. And to condemn its use (as distinguished from its abuse) is to wrong its Creator, and to approach the Manichæan Heresy, which rejected it and other creatures of God, as made by an Evil Principle, and so did dishonour, not only to God our Creator, but to God our Redeemer also. See on 1 Tim. iv. 3.

And it would not be amiss to consider, that as the element of water has been sanctified by Christ's Baptism in the river Jordan, so the creature of wine has been consecrated by its use in the other Sacrament; and it cannot be right to take or impose a vow to abstain entirely from it, when Christ has given it new dignity by the first miracle that He wrought at Cana, and by saying at the Last Supper, Drink ye ALL of THIS. (Matt. xxvi. 27.)

Some interesting particulars concerning the feeling of the Primitive Church on the subject of total abstinence from certain of God's creatures, may be seen in Euseb. iv. 3, and v. 3.

CH. IX. 1. ἐλεύθερος—ἀπόστολος] Am I not free? am I not an Apostle? This is the order of the words in the best MSS., and of Vulg., Syriac, and Æthiopic Versions. And it serves best to mark the connexion between what St. Paul had just said and what he is now going to say.

As the ancient Expositors (especially S. Chrysostom) have observed, the Apostle's reasoning is as follows. Do not suppose that by what I have said, enjoining abstinence from idolothyta, known to be such, I have abridged your liberty without being prepared to abate any thing of my own. No. Am I not free? am I not an Apostle? Am I not your Apostle? and yet I have not used my liberty as such to exact wages from you. No; I have forborne to do so. I have waived my claims in order to your edification. Thus I have set you an example. As I have begun with abating my liberty, that I might edify you, my children, so ought you to curb your appetites, and forbear the use of your liberty, and abstain from meats offered to idols, in order to edify your brethren. See on v. 4.

— οὐχί—Κύριον ἑώρακα] Have I not seen the Lord? An answer to those who disparaged St. Paul in comparison with the Twelve, who had seen the Lord, and had been sent by Him.

As to the fact, see on Acts ix. 5.

4. ἐξουσίαν] authority. This word is the clue which connects the reasonings of this chapter with the last (see on v. 1), and with his general declaration, πάντα μοι ἔξεστιν, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐγὼ ἐξουσιασθήσομαι ὑπό τινος. The Corinthians were vain of their ἐξουσία, and doubtless often had the word ἐξουσία in their mouths. Accordingly, St. Paul reiterates the word frequently in this chapter (vv. 4, 5, 6. 12. 18); and by his own example teaches them how to use that authority and liberty in which they gloried.

— φαγεῖν καὶ πιεῖν] i. e. at the charge of my Christian flock, παρὰ τῶν μαθητευομένων. Chrys.

5. μὴ οὐκ ἔχομεν κ.τ.λ.] Is it so that we have not? "Num non habemus?"

— ἀδελφὴν γυναῖκα] a Christian woman. See ἀδελφὴ used in this sense, vii. 15. If he had used ἀδελφὴ alone here, he would have been understood to mean a sister by blood; and he adds, therefore, γυναῖκα, a general term, including a wife or some other female relative.

That γυναῖκα does not mean only a wife, but is to be extended to other female companions (e. g. sister, sisters-in-law, and other relatives, or matrons of venerable age, or widows), may be inferred from the circumstance that St. Paul speaks of "the rest of the Apostles, and the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas," as having this power.

So Chrysostom interprets the passage.

And though it is true that St. Paul does not say that they all used their power, yet his argument would have little force, if for the most part this power was not used as well as possessed by them. In distinguishing himself and Barnabas as working with their own hands for their livelihood (v. 6), he leads us to suppose that the other Apostles not only had the power not to work, but that they used the power which they had. So here. But we never hear of the Apostles travelling through the world with wives and children. If it had been so, St. Paul could hardly have said to ordinary Christians, that it was better for them to remain unmarried on account of the present necessity (vii. 26). And it was never supposed by Christian Antiquity that all the Apostles were married. Tertullian (de Monogam. c. 8), says, "Petrum solum invenio maritum, inter Apostolos," which is also S. Jerome's opinion (adv. Jovinian. 1). And though other accounts vary from this (see on Euseb. iii. 30), yet the ancient writers, who had this passage of Scripture before their eyes, never imagined St. Paul to suggest here that the Apostles generally were married, and carried their wives with them in their missionary tours; but that he intimates that they had faithful Christian women, whether wives or others, of suitable age and character, as companions in their journeys, as was the case with our Blessed Lord Himself. (Luke viii. 3.) So Tertullian (de Monog. 8), who, referring to this passage, says that St. Paul does not here say that "uxores ab Apostolis circumductas sed simpliciter mulieres, quæ, illos eodem instituto quo et Dominum comitantes, ministrabant." And so Augustine (de Opere Monach. c. 5) explains the words of St. Paul, "Ostendit sibi Paulus licere quod cæteris Apostolis, id est ut non operatus manibus suis, sed ex Evangelio vivat. Ad hoc enim et fideles mulieres, habentes terrenam substantiam, ibant cum eis, et ministrabant eis de substantiâ suâ."

The example of St. Paul's wise forbearance in not "leading about" a Christian woman with him on his missionary tours, would have special significance at Corinth, where, as this Epistle shows, he had to preach with sternness against the deadly sin which was associated with the name of that city.

— οἱ ἀδελφοὶ Κυρίου] the cousins of our Lord, and sons of Cleophas or Alphæus. See on Matt. xii. 46; xiii. 55. Acts i. 13.

He means James, the Bishop of Jerusalem, and Joses, and Simon, and Jude. (Chrys.)

6. Βαρνάβας] This mention of Barnabas seems to intimate that he was known to the Corinthians. (See Theodoret and others on 2 Cor. viii. 18, 19.) By this reference to the example of Barnabas, St. Paul shows that he harboured no ill-will to him after the differences which he recounts (Gal. ii. 13), and which St. Luke records in Acts xv. 39. Cp. Col. iv. 10.

But there seem to have been other special reasons for the mention of Barnabas in this address to the Corinthians, viz.:

St. Paul might be charged with vain-glory, and with an invidious disparagement of the other Apostles in comparison with himself, and with casting a slur on them, in order to magnify himself, if he had mentioned himself alone as preaching the Gospel freely and without charge. If he did so, why was it that they did not also do the same? If it was right for him to preach without charge, was it not also for them? Was he not thus attempting to gain popularity for himself at the cost of the other Apostles? He therefore does not mention himself alone here, but associates Barnabas with himself in this commemoration of the free preaching of the Gospel.

But why Barnabas?

Because Barnabas was set apart specially by the Holy Ghost together with St. Paul at Antioch, the centre of Gentile Christianity, as the Apostle to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles, of whom the Corinthians were part. See Acts xiii. 4. Gal. ii. 9: "We should go to the heathen, and they unto the Circumcision."

These considerations also prepare us for St. Paul's argument in vv. 16—18, and open out some interesting views of the history of the Missionary progress and settlement of the Church, and of its Temporalities; and of the peculiar difficulties with which St. Paul had to contend in preaching the Gospel.

This may appear as follows:—

The other Chief Apostles, who went to the Circumcision (Gal. ii. 9), took wages for their work of those to whom they preached. And, it is needless to say, that what they did, they did well in doing.

Their case was different from that of the Great Apostle to the Gentiles.

For, be it remembered, that by the good Providence of Almighty God, a system of Ministerial Maintenance by Tithes and Oblations had been established from time immemorial among those of the Circumcision; and in passing by a natural transition from the Law into the Gospel, the Jews would carry with them the habits which they had formed under the teaching of the Old Testament, and be as ready to provide for their Ministers under the Gospel, as they had been under the Law.

Hence the generous fervour of the primitive Christians at Jerusalem, who sold their possessions, and brought their price, and laid it at the Apostles' feet. (Acts iv. 35.)

And it is mentioned, not without special significance, by the Sacred Historian, that Barnabas, a Levite, of Cyprus did this. He, as one of the Circumcision, paid this deferential respect to the Apostles, as the representatives of the Evangelical Hierarchy. But, as St. Paul assures us here, the same Barnabas, who preached as an Apostle to the Gentiles, did not make claim of ministerial maintenance for himself.

But what was the case with the Jews, was not so with the Gentiles. They had no Tithe-System; no regular code of ministerial maintenance for their Priests. The Priesthood of Heathen cities was annexed to high public offices, and was enjoyed by persons of rank and wealth in the state. Their Priests did, indeed, partake of the sacrifices offered at their altars. But Christianity had no victims to sacrifice; and the Gentiles were not prepared to set apart other oblations for the maintenance of Ministers of Religion. Hence the two Apostles to the Gentiles (Paul and Barnabas) had peculiar difficulties to contend with.

We see from the present chapter with what divine wisdom St. Paul met those difficulties, and converted them into occasions of permanent good to the Church. He asserts in strong terms the claims of Christ's Ministers to receive maintenance from their flock. He proves this by arguments from human Reason, because he is writing to Gentiles, and from divine Inspiration because he is writing to Christians. He proves it from the Law of Moses; from its ceremonial institutions, and from its humane provisions even for cattle. (vv. 9—14.) He thus justifies the Jewish Christians in supplying maintenance to their Clergy, as has been observed by S. Chrysostom (on v. 12). He is careful not to disparage the other Apostles (μὴ καταισχύνειν τοὺς ἀποστόλους τοὺς λαμβάνοντας), and he justifies them in taking maintenance from their flock. And he teaches the Corinthians and all other Gentile Churches to imitate the Church of the ancient Dispensation in this respect, and to regard the commandments of Almighty God, requiring a provision for His Ministers at the hands of the People, as addressed to themselves.

An interesting confirmation of the above remarks will be found in the third Epistle of St. John, where he mentions, as a special commendation of certain brethren, that they "went forth for His Name's Sake (Christ's), taking nothing of the Gentiles," μηδὲν λαμβάνοντες (St. Paul's words, 2 Cor. xi. 20) ἀπὸ τῶν ἐθνικῶν.

Lastly, we may say, that in this respect the teaching and practice of the blessed Apostle St. Paul has been the means, under God's Providence, of the establishment of the Tithe-System in Gentile Christendom, and of the spiritual blessings that have been and are derived from it; and that wherever the Gospel is obeyed, there those principles, which the Holy Spirit has taught the world by St. Paul's mouth, will be joyfully accepted and stedfastly maintained, and will bring forth their proper fruits in the growth of the Christian life, and in the advance of the kingdom of God.

9. Οὐ φιμώσεις βοῦν ἀλοῶντα] Thou shalt not muzzle the ox while treading out the corn. (Deut. xxv. 4, LXX.) See on Luke iv. 35.

— Μὴ τῶν βοῶν μέλει τῷ Θεῷ;] Are oxen the special object of God's care in this precept? This precept is also applied in the same way by St. Paul in Tim. v. 18.

10. δι' ἡμᾶς] for the sake of us Preachers of the Gospel. St. Paul specially aims in this Epistle to show the spiritual, moral, and figurative character of the Mosaic Law. See x. 2, and compare Tertullian (c. Marcion. iii. 16) vindicating the Divine origin of the Law, and showing its connexion with the Gospel.

As Bengel observes, this is an instructive specimen of the true mode of dealing with the Mosaic Law, even as to animals. Compare note above on Acts x. 14.

— ἐπ' ἐλπίδι—τοῦ μετέχειν] So A, B, C, and Griesb., Scholz., Lach., Tisch., Alf. Elz. has τῆς ἐλπίδος αὐτοῦ μετέχειν ἐπ' ἐλπίδι with D, E, J, K. And perhaps the true reading may be a combination of the two, viz., ἐπ' ἐλπίδι τοῦ μετέχειν τῆς ἐλπίδος αὐτοῦ. The sense is that he that plougheth ought to plough in hope, and he that thresheth ought to thresh in hope, of partaking, together with him that ploughed, in that which he who ploughed had hoped for.

12. πάντα στέγομεν] We endure and support all things; properly, like vessels which are water-tight, and do not allow any thing to leak in or out. See above, 1 Thess. iii. 1. Compare 1 Cor. xiii. 7, ἡ ἀγάπη πάντα στέγει, and the passages in Wetstein here.

13. παρεδρεύοντες] assiduously attending on. So the best MSS. Elz. προσεδρεύοντες. As to the fact of this participation, see Levit. vii. 31, 32. Num. xviii. 9.

14. οὕτω καὶ ὁ Κύριος] The Levites lived of the holy portion or revenue of the Temple as their ὀψώνιον or wages; even so the Ministers of the Gospel must live by their calling. The Priests were maintained out of the share they had of the offerings of the Altar; even just so the Ministers of the Gospel must live by their function of preaching the Gospel. Joseph Mede, book i. Disc. xxi. on this text. See also Barrow, Serm. xii. Vol. i. p. 265.

It also hence appears that by God's command (οὕτω καὶ ὁ Κύριος διέταξε) the maintenance to be provided for Ministers under the Gospel must not be less ample and liberal than it was under the Law. And to defraud them of their due is to rob God. (Mal. iii. 8, 9.) What the maintenance of the Levitical Priesthood was, may be seen in Num. xviii. Levit. vi. vii., and other passages quoted in one of the Editor's Occasional Sermons "On Tithes and Offerings," No. xxxviii. p. 118.

In S. Chrysostom's expositions of, and homilies on, this chapter, will be found much interesting material bearing on the question of Ministerial Maintenance, and on the Collections of the Offertory in the Church.

15. Ἐγὼ δὲ οὐ κέχρημαι οὐδενὶ τούτων] But I have used none of these things. I have not availed myself of any of these pleas in my own particular case. St. Paul was content to waive all his claims to ministerial maintenance, and to labour with his own hands, in order to silence all imputation of self-interest, and to set an example of Christian self-control in the exercise of Christian liberty, with a view to the salvation of others, and the edification of the Church; and also in order that—providing for the benefit of the Church in all future ages—he might urge with greater force the claim of the Christian Priesthood to that ministerial maintenance which he himself waived in his own person, and therefore would not be charged with self-interested designs in stating it, as he does in many of his Epistles. (1 Cor. ix. 4. 6. 12. 1 Thess. ii. 6. 2 Thess. iii. 8, 9. Gal. vi. 6. 1 Tim. v. 17.)

16. καύχημα] matter for glorying. (See 2 Cor. xi. 10.) Observe the emphatic place of the personal pronoun μοι in this sentence, and v. 18, I who am a signal monument of God's grace, I who have had a special call from heaven, I who have been sent by Christ, and ordained by the Holy Ghost, have nothing to boast of, if I preach the Gospel, for I am under a strong necessity to do so. And woe is me if I do not preach the Gospel.

— ἀνάγκη μοι ἐπίκειται] necessity is laid upon me. The obligation of Conscience is here described by the Apostle, who owns himself a debtor to the Greeks and Barbarians (Rom. i. 14), because he knew himself to be set apart by God to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles. And in 2 Cor. v. 14 he acknowledged himself to be constrained (συνέχεσθαι), as persons are who are bound by chains (see on Acts xviii. 5), to perform this duty. And in 1 Cor. ix. 16 he says that necessity is laid upon him, so that it is not free for him to live at ease; but woe is me (he says) if I preach not the Gospel. The same obligation was felt and expressed by the two Chief Apostles, Peter and John (Acts iv.

20), who said, "we cannot but speak." Bp. Sanderson (de Oblig. Conscient. iv. c. 23).

17. Εἰ γὰρ ἑκὼν κ.τ.λ.] If of my own accord I do this (i. e. preach the Gospel) I have wages, μισθὸν (Matt. xx. 8. Luke x. 7. 1 Cor. iii. 14. 1 Tim. v. 18), although I receive none from you. But if, not of my own accord, I do it, then I have been entrusted with a stewardship; that is, in that case I reduce myself to the condition of a domestic servant in a household, who does his duty merely because he is hired and obliged to do so.

In the former case I act with the loving alacrity of a son, in the latter with the faithful obedience of a slave. In the former case I act because I rejoice in my duty, and because it is "my meat and drink" to do it; in the other case I act because I am constrained to do it. And according to the spirit and temper with which I do my duty here, will be my everlasting reward hereafter. Cp. Origen and Chrysostom.

Hence it is evident that the character of the same act varies much with the dispositions of the doer; and the Apostle teaches the blessedness of a free and cheerful spirit in doing the service of God. Cp. 2 Cor. ix. 7.

As to the accusative after πεπίστευμαι, see above, 1 Thess. ii. 4. Rom. iii. 2, ἐπιστεύθησαν τὰ λόγια, and 1 Tim. i. 11, ὃ ἐπιστεύθην ἐγώ.

The interpretation of some Expositors (Meyer, De Wette, and others), who understand the great Apostle to say that he himself did not preach ἑκών, voluntarily, but was forced to preach, and was therefore not entitled to a μισθός, or ministerial maintenance from man, and could not rightly claim it, seems at variance with his own argument here, that all Ministers, and he himself among them, who preach the Gospel, are entitled to live of the Gospel (ix. 14).

And the assertion which St. Paul makes, that he for special reasons did not use his power in this respect (ix. 12) and enforce his claim, is a sufficient proof that he had the power, and might have enforced the claim; and the strength of his appeal to his own practice in this respect, as exemplary to the Corinthians, lies in the fact that he had the power, but chose voluntarily to waive it for their edification, and that they also ought to act in a similar spirit for the sake of their brethren.

The other interpretation specified above is grounded on a fallacy in Morals, viz., that a person cannot do ἑκών, or voluntarily, that which he would be obliged to do under fear of condemnation; whereas it is the high privilege and noble faculty of the human will, when sanctified by grace, to transmute fear into love, and to make duty a delight, and to rejoice in doing freely and joyfully that which, without the aid of the Holy Ghost, it would do only in a servile spirit.

18. Τίς οὖν μοί ἐστιν ὁ μισθός;] What then are my wages? Observe again μοί placed emphatically before its verb, and not enclitically after it. (See v. 16). What wages then have I, who receive none from you? My wages are that I will receive no wages, but in preaching the Gospel will make (θήσω) the Gospel without charge to those to whom I preach, so as not to strain my power (καταχρήσασθαι, see vii. 3) in preaching the Gospel, and set them an example, and teach them with what forbearance and love towards others, and with what regard to the general edification of the body of Christ, they also ought to use their liberty.

19. τοὺς πλείονας] the most possible. "Articulus habet vim relativi ad omnes; quàm plurimos eorum." Bengel.

20. τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις ὡς Ἰουδαῖος] to the Jews as a Jew. As the Corinthians might well know from the fact of his having shorn his head at their own harbour, Cenchreæ, because he had a vow when he had last quitted them for Ephesus. See on Acts xviii. 18, also on Acts xvi. 3, concerning what Paul did to Timothy, with whom he had been at Corinth, and whom he had now sent to Corinth. Compare also Acts xxi. 26 as to his assumption afterwards of the Nazarite Vow at Jerusalem.

In all these respects St. Paul displayed an example of that Charity which condescends (συγκαταβαίνει) and accommodates itself to the weaknesses of others, at the same time that it never surrenders any thing that is true, or makes any compromise with, or connivance at, what is false.

Elz. omits μὴ ὢν αὐτὸς ὑπὸ νόμον, which is in A, B, C, D, E, F, G, and has Θεῷ and Χριστῷ in v. 21.

22. ἀσθενής] Elz. prefixes ὡς, which is not in A, B, and weakens the sense. And cp. 2 Cor. xi. 29, τίς ἀσθενεῖ, κἀγὼ οὐκ ἀσθενῶ;

The argument is, If, in my regard for the scruples of the weak, I have thus forborne to use my Liberty, not merely by abstaining from what I might otherwise have been glad to do, but also by doing what I otherwise would not have done, ought not you much more to exercise a charitable self-restraint in abstaining from meat offered in sacrifice to idols?

— πάντα] Elz. prefixes τὰ, which is not found in the best MSS., and seems to contravene the sense. St. Paul did not become totally and at once, but severally and singly, not absolutely but respectively, all things to all men.

23. Πάντα] So A, B, C, D, E, F, G. Elz. τοῦτο.

24. Οὐκ οἴδατε] He sums up this part of the argument by referring them not only to his own example, but even to that of heathen competitors in the Games celebrated at their own Isthmus and in other places in their neighbourhood, Nemea and Olympia. They, in their preparations for their race, exercise self-denial; they abstain for many months together from luxurious diet; they practise continual continence and temperance. Cp. Horat. A. P. 412, "Qui studet optatam," &c., and the numerous similar illustrations in Wetstein, p. 137.

And yet they contend only for a mere fading chaplet of pine-leaves, parsley, or wild olive, which one only can obtain. How much more ought you to restrain your fleshly appetites (which excite you to indulge in eating sacrificial meats and in fornication), in order that you may be able to run with vigour your Christian race; in which none who runs well can fail of that immortal crown which Christ, the supreme Agonothetes, will give to all who love His appearing? (2 Tim. iv. 8.)

Compare the conclusion of Tertullian's Treatise de Spectaculis, and his eloquent language addressed to the Christian Martyrs, and grounded on this passage of St. Paul (ad Martyros, c. 3): "Proinde vos, benedicti, quodcunque hoc durum est, ad exercitationem virtutum animi et corporis deputate. Bonum agonem subituri estis, in quo Agonothetes Deus vivus est, Xystarches Spiritus Sanctus, Corona æternitatis, bravium angelicæ substantiæ, politia in cœlis, gloria in sæcula sæculorum. Itaque Epistates vester Jesus Christus, qui vos spiritu unxit, et ad hoc scamma produxit. . . . Nempe enim et athletæ segreganiur ad strictiorem disciplinam, ut robori ædificando valeant, continentur a luxuriâ, a cibis lautioribus, a potu jucundiore . . . et illi, inquit Apostolus, ut coronam corruptibilem consequantur. 600 Greek feet long = 612 English (cp. "Athens and Attica," chap. xx.). The βραβεῖον ("bravium," Iren. iv. 7, whence English bravo), or prize assigned by the βραβεύς, βραβευτής, or Agonotheta. Soph. (Elect. 692, 713). Cp. And as to the continence and discipline of ancient foot-races, &c., see the authorities in Wetst. and Valck.

26. Ἐγὼ τοίνυν] I, therefore—who am convinced of the truth of what I have now said, and do not merely preach it, but practise it in my own person—so run, not as uncertainly, as those heathen racers do; for one only of them receives the prize. I so fight, as a Boxer, not as one who beats the air, in a σκιαμαχία, as one who fences with a shadow or imaginary adversary. Eustath. (ad Iliad. ή. p. 530), ἐν σκιαμαχίᾳ μαχόμενος, ὃ φασιν ἀέρα δέρων.

27. ὑπωπιάζω μοῦ τὸ σῶμα] I chasten my own body. ὑπωπιάζω is an athletic and pugilistic word; literally, I make black and blue with my fists, as a boxer does his adversary with ὑπώπια, or bruises under the eyes, "lividum facio corpus meum, et in servitutem redigo" (Iren. iv. 7). See on Luke xviii. 5, and cp. Lucian. de Gymnas. 3 (quoted by Wetstein), αἰσχύνοντες τὰ κάλλη τοῖς ὑπωπίοις ὡς κοτίνου ἐγκρατεῖς γένοιντο· νικήσαντες, εἰπέ μοι, πάντες αὐτὸ λαμβάνουσιν; οὐδαμῶς, ἀλλ' εἷς ἐξ ἁπάντων· εἶτ' ἐπὶ τῷ ἀδήλῳ τῆς νίκης τοσαῦτα πονοῦσι, κ.τ.λ.

— δουλαγωγῶ] I reduce my body to slavery. The Corinthians had pleaded their ἐξουσία, or power, to indulge their bodies by gluttony and fornication. St. Paul had said that he would show his own liberty by not allowing his body to have power over himself (1 Cor. vi. 12), and by bringing it into captivity, and by exercising lordship over it. This, he had taught them, is true Liberty; not to be the slave of the body, but to rule it as a slave. And he amplifies this assertion by saying that he reduces his own body to slavery (δουλαγωγῶ), and beats it, as an antagonist in a pugilistic combat (cp. Rom. viii. 13. 1 Pet. ii. 11), in which he bruises it by self-discipline.

— μήπως ἄλλοις κηρύξας—ἀδόκιμος γένωμαι] lest I, having preached to others, should myself become reprobate, be rejected, fail of the prize: ἀδόκιμος, "vocabulum agonisticum" (Bengel), as not having contended lawfully (2 Tim. ii. 5).

God's Predestination is secret to us. He alone knows who are, and will continue to be, His own to the end. St. Paul himself, the most signal example of free grace that ever the world saw, intimates that he might have been disobedient to the heavenly call he had received (Acts xxvi. 19, where see note); and therefore Grace is not irresistible; and he tells us here that he, who had been called in that supernatural manner, and had obeyed the call, was not assured in his own mind of his own salvation, and that he did not know but that he himself might fall away from grace given, and become reprobate. Cp. Phil. iii. 11, where see note.

Consequently, no one can be fully assured of his own final acceptance with God; and it is, therefore, a dangerous and deadly error to make personal assurance to be the essence of a Justifying Faith. See on Rom. ix. 22, and above on 1 Cor. iv. 4, and Barrow on Justifying Faith, Vol. iv. p. 105, Serm. iv.

It is true that we should endeavour so to repent, and to perform whatever God requires of us, that we may thence acquire a good hope concerning our state; we should labour, that our hearts may not condemn us of any presumptuous transgressing our duty (Col. i. 23. Heb. iii. 6. 1 John iii. 21); and, consequently, that we may become, in a manner, confident of God's favour toward us. But, when we have done the best we can, even when we are not conscious of any enormous fault or defect, yet we may consider, with St. Paul, that we are not thereby justified (1 Cor. iv. 4), but abide liable to the more certain cognizance and judgment of God, who seeth not as man seeth (1 Sam. xvi. 7); that we are not capable or competent judges of ourselves; nor are we ever the better for thinking well of ourselves; since, as St. Paul tells us again, he is not approved that commends himself, but whom the Lord commendeth (2 Cor. x. 18): for that, delicta sua quis intelligit (Ps. xix. 12)? who can thoroughly understand and scan his own errors? who can say, I have made my heart clean, I am purged of my sin? (Prov. xx. 9.) Barrow (iv. p. 105).

Justifying Faith does not consist in our being persuaded that our sins are pardoned, or our persons just in God's esteem, and that we are acceptable to God and possessed of His favour. For Faith is represented in Holy Scripture as precedaneous to God's special benevolence, accepting and justifying our persons. It is a previous condition, without which (as the Apostle teaches us) it is impossible to please God (Heb. xi. 6).

Much less is that notion of Faith right, which defines it to be a firm and certain knowledge of God's eternal good-will toward us particularly, and that we shall be saved. Cp. Barrow (ibid. p. 107, 108).

CH. X. 1. Οὐ θέλω γὰρ ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν] For I would not have you ignorant. He continues the argument against indulgence of the bodily appetites in surfeiting and lust, by reference to the warnings supplied by the History of the Israelites in the wilderness, which is figurative of the Christian History, in spiritual Gifts and Privileges, and also in Divine Warnings and Judgments.

The same argument is treated in the Epistle to the Hebrews, iii. 7—19; iv. 1—6.

2. ἐβαπτίσαντο] literally, "ii se baptizandos præbuerunt" (see Valck. and Winer, p. 228), or had themselves baptized, "baptismum susceperunt" (Bengel), a more appropriate and significant term than the reading of many uncial MSS. ἐβαπτίσθησαν, which was not likely to have been altered by the Copyists if it had been used by the Apostle, Acts xxii. 16, ἀναστὰς βάπτισαι καὶ ἀπόλουσαι τὰς ἁμαρτίας σου. Compare ἀπελούσασθε, 1 Cor. v. 11. The middle voice shows here the free-will and act of the recipient of baptism.

The sense is—The Israelites all offered themselves for baptism into Moses, that is, with a pledge of obedience to him and to the Law of which he was the minister (Gennadius, Photius), Exod. xiv. 31. Compare Matt. xxviii. 19, εἰς τὸ ὄνομα. So you Christians have been baptized into Christ. They received manifold special gifts from heaven, as ye have. But yet they many of them rebelled, and were destroyed. Be ye, therefore, warned by them.

— ἐν τῇ νεφέλῃ] In the Cloud. Moses baptized in the Cloud and the Sea. But figuratively: the Sea foreshadowed the Water of Baptism; the Cloud, the Spirit; the Manna, the Bread of Life; the Drink, the Cup of Salvation (Greg. Nazian. Orat. 39, p. 688). Cp. S. Basil, de Spir. Sancto, cap. xiv. Vol. iii. p. 26, where he says that "the sea severing the Israelites from their enemies, Pharaoh and his host, figured Baptism delivering us from the tyranny of the Devil." So the Baptismal Office of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND; "Almighty and Everlasting God, Who didst safely lead the Children of Israel, Thy People, through the Red Sea, figuring thereby Thy Holy Baptism."

S. Augustine considers the Red Sea as typical of Baptism in another respect, viz. as introductory to the other Sacrament (in Johann. Tract. xi.), as the passage of the Red Sea led to the feeding on the Manna.

"Mare autem rubrum quid significet, audi Apostolum: Nolo autem vos ignorare, fratres, quia omnes patres nostri sub nube fuerunt, et omnes per mare transierunt. Utquid per mare transierunt, quasi quæreres ab illo; secutus ait, Et omnes per Moysen baptizati sunt in nube et in mari. (1 Cor. x. 1, 2.) Si ergo figura maris tantum valuit, species Baptismi quantum valebit? Si quod gestum est in figura, trajectum populum ad manna perduxit; quid exhibebit Christus in veritate baptismi sui, trajecto per eum populo suo? Per baptismum suum trajicit credentes, occisis omnibus peccatis, tanquam hostibus consequentibus, sicut in illo mari omnes Egyptii perierunt. Quo trajicit, fratres mei? quo trajicit per Baptismum Jesus, cujus figuram tunc gerebat Moyses, qui per mare trajiciebat? quo trajicit? Ad manna. Quod est manna? Ego sum, inquit, panis vivus, qui de cœlo descendi. (John vi. 51.) Manna accipiunt fideles, jam trajecti per mare rubrum. Quare mare rubrum? jam mare, quare et rubrum? Significabat mare illud rubrum baptismum Christi. Unde rubet baptismus Christi, nisi Christi sanguine consecratus?

πνευματικὸν ἔφαγον, [4] [c] καὶ πάντες τὸ αὐτὸ πνευματικὸν ἔπιον πόμα· ἔπινον γὰρ ἐκ πνευματικῆς ἀκολουθούσης πέτρας, ἡ δὲ πέτρα ἦν ὁ Χριστός.

c Exod. 17. 6. Num. 20. 11. & 21. 16. Ps. 78. 15.

Quo ergo perducit credentes et baptizatos? Ad manna. Ecce dico manna: notum est quid acceperint Judæi, populus iste Israel, notum est quid illis pluisset Deus de cœlo; et nesciunt catechumeni quid accipiant Christiani. Erubescant ergo, quia nesciant; transeant per mare rubrum, manducent manna: ut quomodo crediderunt in nomine Jesu, sic se ipsis credat Jesus."

3. πάντες τὸ αὐτό] All of them had the same privileges, but did not all make the same use of them. Some Expositors have supplied ἡμῖν after τὸ αὐτὸ, i. e. the same with us; but this seems to be incorrect.

— πνευματικόν] spiritual. The food here, and the drink in v. 4, are called spiritual, because they were Christ's body and blood in types. Bp. Fell.

Those things were representations, 'a parte ante,' of Christ's Body and Blood to be given for men; our Sacraments are representations, 'a parte post,' of Christ's Body and Blood actually given for men.

See above on 1 Cor. v. 7, 8.

4. ἔπινον γὰρ ἐκ πνευματικῆς ἀκολουθούσης πέτρας] for they were drinking from a spiritual, following, Rock. They were drinking, i. e. habitually; bibebant, something more than biberunt. "Bibebant de spiritali consequente eos petrâ." Irenæus, iv. 27, and iv. 14. Cp. Winer, p. 240.

(1) Some Expositors interpret these words by reference to the rabbinical tradition (see the authorities in Wetstein,) that the Rock itself, which was smitten by Moses at God's command at Horeb, and from which the water flowed (Exod. xvii. 6), followed the Israelites in their wanderings through the desert, and supplied them with water.

(2) Others suppose that the stream, which gushed from the Rock, followed them in their journeyings; and that St. Paul, in saying that the Rock followed them, means that what issued from it accompanied them in a perennial river, flowing with them in their march. See Lightfoot here, and Mede's Essay, Discourse xliv. p. 246.

(3) But there does not seem to be any Scriptural authority for either of these two opinions; nor does either of them appear probable.

The former of them would be disproved at once, if, as some learned men affirm, the Rock of Rephidim smitten by Moses is still standing at Horeb. See the authorities in Kitto's Illustrations, pp. 122—125.

And the second opinion seems to be inconsistent with the sacred narrative, that they murmured for want of water, after the giving of water from Horeb. (Num. xx. 2—4; xxi. 5—17.) If they had a river flowing with them, this could hardly have been the case. Theodoret.

The testimony of Holy Scripture is uniform to the effect, that in their wanderings through the wilderness, the Israelites were fed with a constant supply of Bread from heaven, and of Water from the Rock. See Exod. xvi. 4; xvii. 1—7. Deut. viii. 15. Ps. lxxviii. 15. 20; cv. 41; cxiv. 8. Nehem. ix. 15.

The impression produced by those passages is,—that as there were clouds wherever they went, from which the manna fell, so likewise there were Rocks from which the waters flowed. There was what Tertullian calls (de Pat. 5), "Mannæ escatilis pluvia et petræ aquatilis sequela." Hence we find rocks mentioned (in the plural, צֻרִים, tsurim) as giving water to the people. (Ps. lxxviii. 15.) And the word πέτρα is used generically in the New Testament for rocky soil, as in Luke viii. 6. 13, concerning the seed falling on rocky ground.

Wherever the Israelites were, there was a Rock,—not moving from place to place, which is contrary to the nature of a Rock, but one ready to supply them with water, by the Divine inwardly-working power of the ever-present spiritual agency and virtue of Christ which followed them, and made the material rock to gush out with water.

Hence the order of the words in this passage. St. Paul does not say ἐκ τῆς πνευματικῆς πέτρας τῆς ἀκολουθούσης, from THE spiritual rock that followed them; but he says ἐκ πνευματικῆς ἀκολουθούσης πετρᾶς, from a spiritual following rock; and that Rock was Christ.

It was not any natural property of the material rock which sent forth the water to the Israelites. If it had been so, it would have sent forth water before that time. But it was another and spiritual Rock which wrought the whole work, and that was Christ, ever present with them, and working miraculously for them. Chrys. It was indeed a visible Rock which sent forth the water; it did not however do this by its own power, but by the virtue of the spiritual Rock, which was ever present in its energy, and supplied the needs of the thirsting multitude. Photius, in an excellent Scholium in Caten., p. 188, where read ἀναστμούσης, in l. 12.

It was not the material rock that followed them; but it was the Divine Grace which made the material rock pour forth water wherever they went. Theodoret.

Observe also the preposition used by St. Paul; it is not ἀπὸ, but ἐκ. What they drank, they drank not from the material rock (which was incapable of yielding water), but they drank out of (ἐκ) a spiritual Rock, which was Christ. It was Christ, the spiritual Rock, Who gave them the water from the material rock; as it was Christ in the Brazen Serpent Who healed them when bitten by serpents. As the wise man says, "He that turned himself toward it, was not saved by the thing that he saw, but by Thee that art the Saviour of all." (Wisdom xvi. 7.)

This spiritual Rock might well be said ἀκολουθεῖν, to follow them. For, its Virtue, which was Christ, appeared wheresoever they went; just as signs and wonders are said to have followed the first Preachers of the Word of God (Mark xvi. 20), because Miracles appeared, in order to confirm it, wherever it was preached.

This Exposition is also illustrated by what St. Paul here declares, viz. that these things were τύποι ἡμῶν, figures of what now takes place in the Journey of the Christian Church through the wilderness of this world to her heavenly Canaan.

"The Rock was Christ." Therefore it was to be smitten only once,—smitten by the Rod of Moses,—smitten by God's command. So Christ was once smitten with the curse of the Law (Gal. iii. 10), of which the Rod was the instrument; and smitten for our sakes (Isa. liii. 4—6),—smitten, in order that all true Israelites, in every age of the Church, may drink the living waters of salvation from His wounded side. See John iv. 14. Mede, p. 248. Mather on the Types, p. 143.

And after that He had been once smitten, He was to be smitten no more. Christ, having died once, dieth no more (Rom. vi. 9), and He was offered once for all (Heb. ix. 28). He offered one sacrifice for sin (Heb. x. 12); and by one offering He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified (Heb. x. 10), and there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins. (Heb. x. 26.)

Therefore the Rock in the wilderness was smitten but once. We hear of no more smiting of the Rock by God's command after Horeb. But still, wherever the Israelites were, they were to be refreshed by water from the Rock. How then was it to be educed? The Rock was to be spoken to (Num. xx. 8), but not to be smitten. The water was to be brought out by the Word, and not by the Rod, of Moses. And, because, when the people murmured at Kadesh for lack of water, Moses "spake unadvisedly with his lips" (Ps. cvi. 33), and said, "Must we fetch you water out of this Rock?" (Num. xx. 10)—arrogating to himself the power of producing the water; whereas he was only an instrument in God's hands for its production; and because he smote the rock twice instead of speaking to it, therefore he was not permitted to enter the promised Land. (Num. xx. 12.)

It is necessary to observe carefully that all these things were figures of us.

Christ was once smitten. He, Who is the Rock, the Rock of ages, was smitten once, and there came forth from His wounded side blood and water.

Those sacrificial and sacramental streams which were poured forth once for all on Calvary, are ever ready to flow from the Rock in every age of the pilgrimage of the Church to her heavenly Rest.

But how are they to be educed? How are they to be applied?

They are not to be had by smiting the Rock again. This is the error of the Church of Rome, which feigns that Christ is ever being smitten, ever being sacrificed. This is an error worse than that which excluded even Moses from the promised land. Those streams of living water are not to be rightly had by smiting the Rock, but by speaking to the Rock, which has been smitten once for all for our sakes, and which is ever present, ever following us, by virtue of the divine energy of Christ, ever ready to pour forth living streams for the cleansing and refreshing of our souls.

But how are these streams to be had? What is the instrumentality which God has appointed for making them flow? The Ministry of the Word; "accedit Verbum ad Elementum, et fit Sacramentum."

The Christian Minister does not smite the Rock, but speaks to it, when he uses the divinely appointed words, "I baptize thee," and applies the sacramental water, which derives all its virtue from Christ's death, and flows, as it were, from His side, opened once for all, for the mystical washing away of sin.

He does not smite the Rock, but he speaks to it, when he uses the divinely appointed words, "This is My Body, this is My Blood," and exhibits that bread and dispenses that blood which derives its virtue from Christ's death, and flows from the Rock smitten once for all, for our sakes.

Thus the punishment of Moses affords a double warning to Christ's Ministers;

(1) That they should not imagine that they themselves are sources of divine Grace. They are only channels. Let them not say, Shall we fetch you water out of the Rock? The spiritual water which they supply is not the gift of men, but of Christ.

(2) That they should not smite the Rock which has been once smitten. They are not to suppose that Christ is to be again slain, or that the ever to be repeated Sacrament of the Altar repeats or continues the One Sacrifice of Calvary. But they must continually speak to the Rock which has been once smitten. Their office is to elicit the streams of living water by the Ministry of the Word, and to dispense them for the cleansing and refreshing of the souls of all true Children of Abraham in every stage of the journey of the Church through the wilderness of the world.

Thus discharging the duties of their Ministry they may escape the Massahs and Meribahs of controversy, and find a place of rest for their own souls in their heavenly inheritance.

On the figurative character of the pilgrimage of the Israelites in the wilderness, see particularly the interesting Letter of S. Jerome to Fabiola, De xlii. Mansionibus Israëlitarum in Deserto, Vol. ii. p. 586—605. See also S. Macarius (Homil. 47, p. 227, of Greg. Thaumaturg. Opera) for a valuable exposition and application, in a Christian sense, of the deliverance of the Israelites from Egypt by the passage of the Red Sea, the Paschal Lamb, the bitter herbs, the spoiling of the Egyptians, the spring-time of the Passover, the attitude of those who ate it, the darkness of the night in which they escaped from Egypt, the passage of the sea, the song of deliverance, the change of the bitter waters of Marah into sweet, by the casting in of wood, and other circumstances of the Exodus containing materials for Homilies at Easter.

He concludes with saying, All these things that happened to the Israelites were figures of what is now vouchsafed to us. The ancient Dispensation was a shadow of the Gospel. Their Circumcision, the Tabernacle, the Ark, the Pot of Manna, the Priesthood, the Incense, the Ablutions, and whatever else was done under Moses and the Prophets, was done for the sake of the human soul, which, having been created in God's image, fell into bondage and darkness, and has now been espoused to Christ.

Persecutores Ægyptii et Pharao persequuntur exeuntes de Ægypto Judæos: persequuntur populum Christianum peccata ipsorum, et Diabolus princeps peccatorum. Sed sicut Judæos usque ad mare persequuntur Ægyptii; sic Christianos usque ad Baptismum persequuntur peccata.

Intendite, fratres, et videte: liberantur per mare Judæi, obruuntur in mari Ægyptii: liberantur Christiani in remissione peccatorum, delentur peccata per Baptismum. Exeunt post mare Rubrum, et ambulant per eremum: sic et Christiani post Baptismum nondum sunt in terra repromissionis, sed sunt in spe.

Sæculum autem hoc eremus est; et verè Christiano est eremus post Baptismum, si intelligat quod accepit. Si non solùm signa corporalia in illo fiant, sed si etiam in corde spiritualis effectus, intelligit sibi eremum esse istum mundum, intelligit in peregrinatione se vivere, patriam desiderare. Quamdiu autem desiderat, in spe est.

Audi Apostolum, quia ista figuræ nostræ fuerunt. Nolo enim, inquit, vos ignorare, fratres, quia omnes patres nostri sub nube fuerunt. Si sub nube fuerunt, sub caligine fuerunt. Quid est, sub caligine fuerunt? Non eis intelligentibus spiritualiter, quæ cum eis corporaliter agebantur. Et omnes per mare transierunt, et omnes in Moyse baptizati sunt, et omnes eumdem cibum spiritualem manducaverunt. Datum est enim illis manna in deserto (Exod. xvi. 13), sicut nobis datur dulcedo Scripturarum, ut duremus in ista eremo vitæ humanæ. Et norunt quale manna accipiunt Christiani, quibus dixit ipse Psalmus, Gustate et videte, quàm suavis est Dominus (Ps. xxxiii. 9). Et omnes, inquit, eumdem cibum spiritualem manducaverunt. Quid est, eumdem? Idem significantem. Et omnes eumdem potum spiritualem biberunt. Et attende quomodo unam rem exposuit, et cætera tacuit: Bibebant enim de spirituali sequente petrâ; petra autem erat Christus. Hæc autem figuræ nostræ fuerunt. (1 Cor. x. 1—6.) Illis sunt exhibitæ, sed figuræ nostræ fuerunt: quia illis corporaliter exhibebantur, nobis spiritualiter significabantur. Ergo illi qui corporaliter ea tenuerunt, ad vetus Testamentum pertinuerunt.

7. Ἐκάθισεν — παίζειν] Exod. xxxii. 6, literally from LXX. Παίζειν describes the wanton dancing round the Idol. The text is cited to show that Idolatry is often a consequence of Gluttony, and that in eating meats offered to idols the Corinthians might easily be tempted to Idolatry, and also to Fornication, which at Corinth was associated with Idolatry. The word παίζειν, to play, includes both sins. See the authorities in Wetstein here.

15. κρίνατε ὑμεῖς] judge ye. A precept showing that divine Grace does not exclude, but rather presumes, the use of Human Reason. As Hooker observes against those who would annul the office of Reason in matters of Religion (Pref. E. P. c. 3):—

The first mean whereby nature teacheth men to judge good from evil, as well in laws as in other things, is the force of their own discretion. Hereunto, therefore, St. Paul referreth oftentimes his own speech, to be considered of by them that heard him. "I speak as to them which have understanding, judge ye what I say" (1 Cor. x. 15). Again, afterward, "Judge in yourselves, is it comely that a woman pray uncovered?" (1 Cor. xi. 13). The exercise of this kind of judgment our Saviour requireth of the Jews. (Luke xii. 56, 57.) In them of Berea the Scripture commendeth it. (Acts xvii. 11.) Finally, whatsoever we do, if our own secret judgment consent not unto it, as fit and good to be done, the doing of it to us is sin, although the thing itself be allowable. St. Paul's rule, therefore, generally is, "Let every man in his own mind be fully persuaded of that thing which he either alloweth or doth" (Rom. xiv. 5).

16—21.] For an exposition of these verses, with a special reference to the Romish, Lutheran, Calvinistic, and Zwinglian interpretations of them, see Waterland on the Doctrine of the Eucharist, chap. viii. Vol. vii. p. 196 - 234.

16. Τὸ ποτήριον] The Cup. St. Paul proceeds to confirm his argument against fornication and participation in idolatrous meals, by considerations drawn from the institution, administration, and reception of the Holy Communion; thus showing, by an example, the important bearing of that Holy Sacrament on Christian life and practice.

It is remarkable that here and v. 21 St. Paul introduces the mention of the Eucharistic Cup before that of the Bread.

Why was this?

(1) Perhaps there was more danger of those immoral and lascivious consequences, against which he is writing, from excesses in the Wine at the idolatrous feasts than in the Meats; and therefore even more danger of an unworthy reception of the Holy Communion from participation in the Cup of devils than in the table of devils.

(2) The Apostle has also thus shown the essential independence of the Cup, as a necessary part of the Holy Communion, and supplies a caution against the Romish Error that as blood is contained in the human body, so Christ's blood, as well as body, is exhibited in one kind in the Holy Eucharist (Concil. Tyid. Sess. xiii.), and consequently the Cup may be withheld from the faithful.

(3) As in the various Scriptural passages which mention the Three Persons of the Ever-blessed Trinity, each is severally put first in order to show their equality, so in the Scriptural passages which mention the Eucharistic elements, each is severally put first to show their equal dignity, and the equal necessity of receiving each.

On this passage, compare notes below on xiv. 13.

— Τὸ ποτήριον τῆς εὐλογίας] The cup of the Blessing. The Genitive is used according to a Hebrew idiom (see Vorst. de Hebraism. N. T. pp. 252. 573, and Note on Matt. xxiv. 15, and Luke xiii. 27; xviii. 6. Acts ix. 15) with a pregnant significance; the Cup which received the blessing from Christ at the institution of the Holy Supper, and which is consecrated with a blessing from us at its administration, and which is one of the appointed means for conveying a blessing to those who receive it worthily.

The following important passage describes the primitive use of the Christian Church in the Administration of the Holy Communion; Justin Martyr (Apol. § 84, 85), προσφέρεται τῷ προεστῶτι τῶν ἀδελφῶν ἄρτος, καὶ ποτήριον ὕδατος καὶ κράματος, καὶ οὗτος λαβὼν αἶνον καὶ δόξαν τῷ Πατρὶ τῶν ὅλων διὰ τοῦ ὀνόματος τοῦ Υἱοῦ καὶ τοῦ Πνεύματος Ἁγίου ἀναπέμπει, καὶ εὐχαριστίαν ὑπὲρ τοῦ κατηξιῶσθαι τούτων παρ' αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ πολὺ ποιεῖται· οὗ συντελέσαντος τὰς εὐχὰς καὶ τὴν εὐχαριστίαν πᾶς ὁ παρὼν λαὸς ἐπευφημεῖ λέγων, Ἀμήν. Εὐχαριστήσαντος δὲ τοῦ προεστῶτος καὶ ἐπευφημήσαντος παντὸς τοῦ λαοῦ, οἱ καλούμενοι παρ' ἡμῖν διάκονοι διδόασιν ἑκάστῳ τῶν παρόντων μεταλαβεῖν ἀπὸ τοῦ εὐχαριστηθέντος οἴνου καὶ ὕδατος, καὶ τοῖς οὐ παροῦσιν ἀποφέρουσι. Καὶ ἡ τροφὴ αὕτη καλεῖται παρ' ἡμῖν Εὐχαριστία. For an English translation of portion of the above, see below on xiv. 15.

Having stated that no one is admitted to partake of the Holy Eucharist who does not believe the Articles of the Faith, and has not been baptized in "the laver for the remission of Sins and Regeneration," and who does not live a holy life as Christ has commanded, S. Justin Martyr adds,—We do not receive this bread as common bread, and this drink as common drink; but, as Jesus Christ our Saviour, being Incarnate by the divine Word, had flesh and blood for our salvation, so we are taught that the food which has been blessed with thanksgiving (εὐχαριστηθεῖσαν) by means of the Prayer of the Word received from Him, and from which by transmutation our blood and flesh are nourished, is the flesh and blood of that Jesus Who was incarnate. For the Apostles in their records, which are called Gospels, deliver, that Jesus commanded, and that when He had taken bread and given thanks, He said, "Do this in remembrance of Me. This is My Body."

See also S. Cyril Hierosol. Catech. Myst. v. c. 7, who says, "We beseech the all-merciful God to send the Holy Ghost upon the Elements, that He may make the bread Christ's body, and the wine Christ's blood." As to the sense of these words, see Waterland on the Eucharist, chap. x. Vol. vii. p. 294; and on the Prayer of Invocation in the Holy Communion, see Bingham xv. 3. 11, Brett's Collection of the principal Liturgies, A.D. 1720, Daniel's Codex Liturgicus, iv. p. 69, 411, 572, Lips. 1853, and Neale's Ancient Liturgies, 1858.

It is observable that two of the Evangelists, Matthew (xxvi. 26) and Mark (xiv. 22) use the word εὐλογήσας in their description of Christ's action at the institution of the Lord's Supper, before the consecration of the Bread; and St. Luke (xxii. 19) and St. Paul (1 Cor. xi. 24) use the word εὐχαριστήσας; but in the benediction of the Cup, St. Matthew (xxvi. 27) and St. Mark (xiv. 23) use the word εὐχαριστήσας, whereas St. Paul uses the word εὐλογία here.

This appears to be an example of the agency of Divine Inspiration giving a fuller and clearer view of what was in the Divine Mind of Christ, by means of variety of expression. See Preface to the Gospels, p. xxii.

The action of Christ in the institution of the Lord's Supper was eucharistic and also eulogistic; it was one of Thanksgiving, and one of Benediction; and in the application of each of the terms to each of the elements by the writers of Holy Scripture, we learn more fully and clearly what the true character of the Holy Communion is, and what are our duties in its administration and reception.

On this subject see further on 1 Cor. xi. 24, 25.

— κοινωνία τοῦ αἵματος] St. Paul supplies by the word κοινωνία, which he uses twice in reference to the Holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, an important article of doctrine as to its true nature and use. It is the Communion of the Body and Blood of Christ, the divinely appointed means for communicating His Body and Blood. And thus he explains our Lord's words as recorded in the sixth chapter of St. John (vi. 51—56).

S. Chrys. asks well, "Why does not St. Paul use the word μετοχή (participation) here? why does he use the word κοινωνία (communion)? In order to show the intimacy of our union herein. For we communicate not only by participation (μετοχή), but by union (τῷ ἑνοῦσθαι). We are united to Christ by this Bread, as that Body has been united to Him—and He has given us His Body in order that by communion with it, we may be delivered from the body of death, and be attempered (ἀνακεραθῶμεν) by it to everlasting life." See on v. 17.

S. Chrysostom dwells here, and more at length on v. 24, on the important doctrine that communion with Christ's body in the Holy Eucharist is the appointed means to the faithful for the sanctification, and for the preservation, of their bodies, as well as of their souls, to everlasting life: a doctrine happily embodied by the CHURCH of ENGLAND in the prayer of her Communicants, that their sinful bodies may be made clean by His body, as well as their souls washed by His most precious blood, and in the words with which she distributes both the elements to her Communicants. "The Body of our Lord Jesus Christ, which was given for thee, preserve thy body and soul unto everlasting life." A doctrine too little regarded by many, who neglect the divinely appointed means offered them for the happiness of the body in a glorious Resurrection and a blissful Immortality. Cp. Irenæus v. 2, 3.

Some false teachers, in ancient times, took upon them to reject the doctrine of the Resurrection of the body, conceiving that the disembodied soul only had any concern in a life to come. Here, again, the Sacrament of the Eucharist was a kind of armour of proof against the seducers. For as the consecrated Bread and Wine were the authentic symbols of Christ's Body and Blood, and were, in construction and certain effect (though not in substance) the same with what they stood for, to all worthy receivers; it was manifest, that bodies so incorporated with the body of Christ, must of course be partners with it in a glorious Resurrection. Thus was the Eucharist considered as a sure and certain pledge to all good men of the future Resurrection of their bodies, symbolically fed with the Body of Christ. For like as the branches partake of the vine, and the members of the head, so the bodies of the faithful, being by the Eucharist incorporate with Christ's glorified body, must of consequence appertain to it, and be glorified with it. This is the argument which the Christian Fathers insisted upon, and with this they prevailed (Ignat. Epist. ad Ephes. cap. xx. p. 19. Irenæus, lib. iv. cap. 18, p. 251; lib. v. cap. 2, p. 294. Tertull. de Resurr. Carnis, cap. viii. p. 330, Rigolt. Conf. Athanas. Epist. iv. ad Serap. p. 710, edit. Bened.) Waterland on the doctrinal use of the Sacraments (Vol. viii. p. 132).

The reader's attention is invited to the words of Hooker on this important subject, as quoted in the note on John vi. 25, especially the paragraphs beginning, "Thus much they knew."

On the doctrine of the HOLY EUCHARIST, the reader may see what has been already offered to his consideration in the notes on John vi. 52—63, and the "REVIEW" at the end of that chapter. Compare notes above, 1 Cor. v. 7, 8; x. 4. 16—20, and below, notes on Heb. x. 12; xiii. 10.

With regard to the unspeakable mystery of the manner of the communication of the Body and Blood of Christ to us in the Holy Eucharist, the more learned and wise, the more devout and holy a man is, the less will he be disposed to indulge in curious speculations and presumptuous dogmatism, and the more ready he will be to adopt the wise and reverent language of Hooker, as quoted in the note below on Eph. v. 30, to which may be added what the same Author writes,—

There are but three Expositions made of "This is my body;"

The first, this is in itself before participation really and truly the natural substance of my body, by reason of the coexistence which my omnipotent body hath with the sanctified element of bread, which is the Lutheran's interpretation;

The second, "This is itself, and before participation, the very true and natural substance of my body, by force of that Deity which, with the words of consecration, abolisheth the substance of bread, and substituteth in the place thereof my Body," which is the Popish construction.

The last, "This hallowed food, through concurrence of divine power, is in verity and truth unto faithful receivers, instrumentally a cause of that mystical participation, whereby as I made myself wholly theirs, so I give them in hand an actual possession of all such saving grace as my sacrificed body can yield, and as their souls do presently need, this is to them and in them My Body."

Of these three rehearsed interpretations, the last hath in it nothing but what the rest do all approve and acknowledge to be most true, nothing but that which the words of Christ are on all sides confessed to enforce, nothing but that which the Church of God hath always thought necessary, nothing but that which alone is thought necessary for every Christian man to believe concerning the use and force of this Sacrament; finally, nothing but that wherewith the writings of all Antiquity are consonant, and all Christian Confessions agreeable. And as truth in what kind soever is by no kind of truth gainsayed, so the mind which resteth itself on this, is never troubled with those perplexities which the other do both find, by means of so great contradiction between their opinions and true principles of reason grounded upon experience, nature, and sense.

Such as love piety will, as much as in them lieth, know all things that God commandeth, but especially the duties of service which they owe to God. As for his dark and hidden works, they prefer, as becometh them in such cases, simplicity of faith before that knowledge, which, curiously sifting what it should adore, and disputing too boldly of that which the wit of man cannot search, chilleth for the most part all warmth of zeal, and bringeth soundness of belief many times into great hazard.

Let it, therefore, be sufficient for me, presenting myself at the Lord's Table, to know what there I receive from Him, without searching or inquiring of the manner how Christ performeth His promise. Let disputes and questions, enemies to piety, abatements of true devotion, and hitherto in this cause but overpatiently heard, let them take their rest. Let curious and sharp-witted men beat their heads about what questions themselves will. The very letter of the word of Christ giveth plain security that these mysteries do as nails fasten us to His very cross, that by them we draw out, as touching efficacy, force, and virtue, even the blood of His gored side; in the wounds of our Redeemer we there dip our tongues, we are dyed red both within and without, our hunger is satisfied, and our thirst for ever quenched; they are things wonderful which he feeleth, great which he seeth, and unheard of which he uttereth, whose soul is possessed of this Paschal Lamb, and made joyful in the strength of this new wine; this Bread hath in it more than the substance which our eyes behold; this Cup, hallowed with solemn benediction, availeth to the endless life and welfare both of soul and body, in that it serveth as well for a medicine to heal our infirmities, and purge our sins, as for a sacrifice of Thanksgiving; with touching it sanctifieth, it enlighteneth with belief, it truly conformeth us unto the image of Jesus Christ; what these elements are in themselves it skilleth not; it is enough that to me which take them they are the Body and Blood of Christ; His promise in witness hereof sufficeth, His word He knoweth which way to accomplish. Why should any cogitation possess the mind of a faithful communicant but this, O my God, Thou art true, O my soul, thou art happy? (Hooker.)

— τὸν ἄρτον] the bread. He still calls it bread, even after consecration. And so 1 Cor. xi. 26. And so the ancient Canon of the Mass,—still retained in the Missal as a witness against Transubstantiation (see on Matt. xxvi. 26), and yet it is the communion of the Body of Christ.

17. εἷς ἄρτος] one bread—marking Unity among many: wherein many grains are kneaded together. See on Matt. xxvi. 26. As Augustine says, in Johann. Tract. 27, "Dominus noster Jesus Christus corpus et sanguinem suum in eis rebus commendavit, quæ ad unum aliquid rediguntur ex multis. Namque aliud in unum ex multis granis confit, aliud in unum ex multis acinis confluit." Some translate ἄρτος here loaf: but they could not all partake of one loaf.

— μετέχομεν] we are partakers. We must distinguish between μετέχειν and κοινωνεῖν. μετέχειν is properly to take a part of a thing with others who have also their several shares. But κοινωνεῖν is to partake in common with others in one undivided thing. See Chrys. and Waterland vii. 127. The Holy Eucharist is a Communion to us of the one body and blood of Christ. And we are all joint partakers with each other of that one Body and Blood. See above on v. 16.

18. τὸν Ἰσραὴλ κατὰ σάρκα] Consider the example of Jews, who are the mere carnal Israel, for the Christian Church is the true Jerusalem, the spiritual Israel. They who eat of the Levitical Sacrifices are communicants of the altar in the Temple. So you, if you eat of idolatrous sacrifices, communicate in the worship, and are subject to the influence, of the deity to whom they are offered.

20. δαιμονίοις—οὐ Θεῷ] to Devils—not to God; from LXX of Deut. xxxii. 17, ἔθυσαν δαιμονίοις καὶ οὐ Θεῷ, said of Israel worshipping idols in the wilderness. Cp. Acts vii. 43.

Nos unum Deum colimus: cæteros ipsi putatis Deos esse quos nos dæmonas scimus. Tertullian (ad Scap. 3).

Worship offered to any but the One True God, is accounted by God to be offered to Devils who do exist, although it be offered by man to idols (e. g. Jupiter, Venus, Bacchus, &c.) which do not exist.

— κοινωνοὺς τῶν δαιμονίων] He had spoken of the Communion of the Body and Blood of Christ (v. 16); meaning thereby a Communion of His Body broken, and of His Blood shed on the Cross. He now speaks of a Communion of Devils; meaning thereby a Communion of devilish influences infused into those who are guilty of acts of idolatrous worship. See Tertullian, de Spectac. 25, 26, speaking of a woman who became possessed of an Evil Spirit while present at a heathen theatre. Cp. Waterland, vii. p. 218.

21. Οὐ δύνασθε] Ye cannot morally do so. See 1 Cor. iii. 11, "Other foundation can no man lay." And Glass. Phil. Sacr. p. 361; and on Mark vi. 5.

— ποτήριον δαιμονίων] the cup of devils, with libations from which the sacrificial meats were polluted. See on v. 28.

— τραπέζης] table. There were sacred tables in almost all the Heathen Temples of ancient Greece. See Valck. here, who quotes Cic. de Nat. Deor. iii. 34, "Mensas argenteas (Dionysius) de omnibus delubris jussit auferri."

23. Πάντα ἔξεστι] So the best MSS. Elz. inserts μοι after πάντα.

24. ἑτέρου] Elz. adds ἕκαστος, not in the best MSS.

25. ἐν μακέλλῳ] Lat. in macello, 'the shambles.' It may be a word of Greek origin from μάκελλα (cp. 'abattoir'), but seems rather to have been introduced by intercourse with Rome. See Valck. In the Greek Glossaries it is explained by κρεοπωλεῖον. Much of the sacrifices offered in the temples was sold by the Priests to those who traded in the shambles.

— διὰ τὴν συνείδησιν] On account of the conscience of the seller, and of others who may be tempted to idolatry, or confirmed in it, by seeing that you eat what has been offered to idols, and is known to you as such.

One of the modes devised by heathen persecutors (e. g. the Emperor Maximin), in order to tempt the Christians of primitive times, was to slaughter all animals at heathen altars before they were offered for sale in the shambles, and to sprinkle them with libations from the altars. Lactant. (de Mort. Persec. c. 37). Euseb. (de Martyr. Palæst. 9).

26. τοῦ Κυρίου γὰρ—αὐτῆς] Verbatim from LXX. Ps. xxiii. 1. Every thing is God's and Christ's, and therefore yours. See on iii. 21.

27. διὰ τὴν συνείδησιν] See v. 25.

28. Τοῦτο εἰδωλόθυτον] This is idolothytum, as you would call it. Even a Heathen might so speak, adopting, with something of an ironical sneer, the phrase of the Christian. Or the words may be supposed to be from the mouth of a brother Christian guest, warning his friend not to eat of the meat in question. The reading ἱερόθυτον, adopted by some Editors from A, B, H, against the testimony of C, D, E, F, G, I, K, seems to be a correction of the copyists.

— συνείδησιν] Elz. adds τοῦ γὰρ Κυρίου ἡ γῆ καὶ τὸ πλήρωμα αὐτῆς, which is not in the best MSS. and Editions, and disturbs the flow of the sense, and has been probably imported from v. 26.

29. τοῦ ἑτέρου] the other, i. e. τοῦ μηνύσαντος.

29, 30. Ἱνατί γὰρ—εὐχαριστῶ] This has been explained thus by some learned Expositors: For why shall I so use my liberty as to be condemned by another man's conscience? And although I give thanks for what I eat, why should I expose myself to be censured as an Idolater for those meats which I receive with thankfulness?

But this exposition of the words does not appear to be satisfactory; and it seems that they ought rather to be regarded as a recital of an objection made by a Corinthian Christian interlocutor, expressing his surprise at the Apostle's restriction of the liberty and power in which he so much gloried. What! Is then my Christian liberty to be condemned under the influence of the weak scruples of another man's conscience! Let him scruple at my eating if he will; but if I receive with thankfulness God's creatures (which have been offered to mere phantoms that have no existence; see 1 Cor. viii. 4), why am I evil spoken of for that for which I give thanks to God? (cp. Rom. xiv. 6.)

It is very usual with St. Paul to adopt as his own the objections of an adversary (see on vi. 12), and then to refute them.

As to this mode of arguing, and as to the elliptical use of γὰρ in the first clause here, and also the sense of κρίνομαι, compare the parallel passage in Rom. iii. 7, where an objection is suddenly introduced in a similar manner: εἰ γὰρ ἡ ἀλήθεια τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν τῷ ἐμῷ ψεύσματι ἐπερίσσευσεν εἰς τὴν δόξαν αὐτοῦ, τί ἔτι κἀγὼ ὡς ἁμαρτωλὸς κρίνομαι;

31. Εἴτε οὖν] St. Paul does not vouchsafe to give a direct answer to the objection recited in the previous verse, but contents himself with stating a general maxim which involves a reply. The particle οὖν frequently introduces the summing up of the whole, particularly after a digression. (See xv. 11.) And this is precisely what he does in the parallel passage Rom. iii. 8, where he only says briefly, ὧν τὸ κρῖμα ἔνδικόν ἐστιν. See note there.

If this is your principle of action, as it ought to be, and if you are really zealous for the honour of God as the Lord of all the creatures, you will not feel any indignation that the exercise of your liberty is to be regulated and controlled by considerations of regard for the conscience of your brother, created by God and redeemed by Christ. You will glorify God by restraining yourself in the exercise of your liberty, for the sake of the everlasting salvation of a fellow-member in Christ; and thus you will enjoy the noble freedom of serving God.

— πάντα εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ ποιεῖτε] do all things to the glory of God. A text which has been strained too far by some, and has been perverted to dangerous consequences;

That "all things be done to the glory of God," the blessed Apostle exhorteth. The glory of God is the admirable excellency of that virtue divine, which being made manifest, causeth men and angels to extol His greatness, and in regard thereof to fear Him. By "being glorified," it is not meant that He doth receive any augmentation of glory at our hands, but His name we glorify when we testify our acknowledgment of His glory. Which albeit we most effectually do by the virtue of obedience; nevertheless, it may be perhaps a question, whether St. Paul did mean that we sin as oft as ever we go about any thing without an express intent and purpose to obey God therein. He saith of himself, "I do in all things please all men, seeking not mine own commodity, but" rather the good "of many, that they may be saved." (1 Cor. x. 33.) Shall it hereupon be thought that St. Paul did not move either hand or foot, but with express intent even thereby to further the common salvation of men? We move, we sleep, a number of things we oftentimes do, only to satisfy some natural desire, without present, express, and actual reference unto any commandment of God. Unto His glory even these things are done which we naturally perform, and not only that which morally and spiritually we do. For by every effect proceeding from the most concealed instincts of nature His power is made manifest. But it doth not therefore follow that of necessity we shall sin, unless we expressly intend this in every such particular. Nor is there any law of God whereunto He doth not account our obedience His glory. "Do therefore all things unto the glory of God," saith the Apostle; "be inoffensive both to Jews and Grecians and the Church of God: even as I please all men in all things, not seeking mine own commodity, but many's, that they may be saved." In the least thing done disobediently toward God, or offensively against the good of men, whose benefit we ought to seek for as for our own, we plainly show that we do not acknowledge God to be such as indeed He is, and consequently that we glorify Him not. This the blessed Apostle teacheth. Hooker (ii. 11. 1).

32. Ἀπρόσκοποι γίνεσθε] Become inoffensive; ἀσκάνδαλοι (Hesych.); i. e. cease to give any occasion of stumbling, as ye now do.

When a man doth something which in itself is not evil, but indifferent, and so according to the rule of Christian liberty lawful for him to do, or not to do, as he shall see cause, yea, and perhaps otherwise commodious and convenient for him to do, yet whereat he probably foreseeth that another will take scandal, and be occasioned thereby to do evil,—in such case, if the thing to be done be not in some degree prudentially necessary for him to do, but that he might without very great inconvenience or prejudice to himself or any third person leave it undone, he is bound, in charity and compassion to his brother's soul, for whom Christ died, and for the avoiding of scandal, to abridge himself in the exercise of his Christian liberty for that time, so far as rather to suffer some inconvenience himself by the not doing it, than by the doing of it to cause his brother to offend. This is what is so often, so largely, and so earnestly insisted upon by St. Paul. See Rom. xiv. 13 21; xv. 1—3. 1 Cor. viii. 7—13; ix. 12. 15. 19—22; x. 23—33. Here the rule is,—Do nothing that may be reasonably forborne, whereat scandal will be taken. Bp. Sanderson, v. 51. See also ibid. Vol. i. p. 347.

33. τῶν πολλῶν] the many—all.

Ch. XI. 1. Μιμηταί μου γίνεσθε] Become imitators of me, especially in what I have just mentioned, viz., in not pleasing myself, and foregoing personal comfort and convenience for the sake of the salvation of others, as I have done in imitation of Christ, Who pleased not Himself (Rom. xv. 3), but gave Himself for us. (Eph. v. 2.)

On what grounds St. Paul inculcates the duty of imitating himself here and elsewhere (1 Cor. iv. 16. Phil. iii. 17. 1 Thess. i. 5, 6. 2 Thess. iii. 7—9. Phil. iv. 9), see Barrow, Serm. xxxiv. Vol. ii. p. 269. St. Paul's practice herein teacheth us that we be careful to give, and ready to follow, a good example. And also that we are bound especially to study the examples of the Holy Apostles, who were vouchsafed to the Church by God, and who were filled with supernatural gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost, and whose actions and teaching have been recorded by Him in Holy Scripture for our learning; and it is He Who, by their mouths, commends us to imitate their practice.

It is requisite to note this, in order that we may be fully satisfied of the necessity of following Apostolical precedents in matters of perpetual spiritual import, i. e. Regimen and Polity, as well as in Christian Doctrine. See Preface to the Acts, p. xxv—xxx.

The ground of this imitation is to be found in their authentic representation of the mind of Christ.

St. Paul points to his own example, as showing the thing, which he recommends to others, to be feasible, being done by a man subject to infirmity, like themselves, but assisted by the grace of God; and he refers to Christ's example as giving guidance and authority to human examples, and making them fit for imitation. See Bp. Sanderson, i. p. 223.

3. Θέλω δέ] Having answered their questions, he now proceeds to specify things on which he had not given special injunctions and precepts, viz.,

(1) Veiling of women in Churches, v. 5.
(2) The ordering of the agapæ, v. 17.
(3) Spiritual Gifts, chap. xii.
(4) As to objections concerning the Resurrection, chap. xv.
(5) Collection for the poor brethren at Jerusalem, chap. xvi.

— παντὸς ἀνδρὸς ἡ κεφαλὴ κ.τ.λ.] Christ is the Head of every man, as being the Second Adam, the Head of the Church. Man is the head of the woman, formed out of man. God is the Head of Christ, the Eternal Word, the Everlasting Son of the Everlasting Father. Cyril (in Caten.).

4. προφητεύων] preaching (see above on 1 Thess. v. 20. Rom. xii. 6); and sometimes foretelling the future, as below, xiii. 8.

— κατὰ κεφαλῆς ἔχων] having any thing falling down on or over his head. Cp. Mark xiv. 3, κατέχεεν κατὰ τῆς κεφαλῆς.

There were different customs at Corinth in this respect, arising probably from the different usages of the various classes of which the Church was formed;

The Jewish women were veiled in the presence of men. Cp. Gen. xxiv. 65, and the Rabbinical authorities in Wetstein here, p. 144, 145, and Jahn, Arch. § 27.

The male Jewish Christians would be disposed to cover their heads with a profession of reverential shame, as they had done in the synagogues with the tallith. See Lightfoot, p. 769. Jahn, § 396.

Not so the Greeks, who never wore a covering on the head except on a journey or in sickness. See Eustath. Homer Odyss. α'. p. 30. Valck.

The Roman Colonists of Corinth would be also inclined to veil the head in worship. (See the passages quoted by Grotius here.) Tertullian, in his Apology for the Christians (c. 30), which is addressed to Romans, marks it as a characteristic of the Christians that they prayed "nudo capite, quià non erubescimus."

Hence arose a confusion of dress for men and women, which had been expressly forbidden by Almighty God. (Deut. xxii. 5.)

(1) St. Paul brings back the question to first principles, as grounded on the history of Creation and the Origin of Mankind, and the primeval relation of Man to Woman and Woman to Man; and then

(2) He proceeds to argue the question on the ground of the Second Creation, i. e. the Incarnation of the Son of God. (v. 7.)

He pursues a similar method, 1 Tim. ii. 13—15.

5. προφητεύουσα] St. Paul does not here allow women to prophesy or preach. Indeed, he forbids them to do so. (xiv. 34, where see note, and 1 Tim. ii. 12.)

But this was not the question now before him. He may, indeed, be disposed to include here the case of some women who might have a special gift of prophecy, as Anna (Luke ii. 36) and the daughters of Philip (Acts xxi. 9); and then what Tertullian says of St. Paul here will be true: "Mulieri etiam prophetanti velamen imponit" (c. Marcion. v. 8).

These Corinthian Women gloried in their self-display in preaching; but he tells them that even in their outward demeanour in doing so they disgraced their heads.

False Teachers have generally flattered women. (Cp. Hooker, Preface, iii. 13.) St. Paul reproves publicly those of Corinth who were vain of their spiritual gifts, and censures them in that respect in which they would feel the censure most keenly—their personal appearance—a remarkable proof of the Apostle's courage and honesty.

— ἀκατακαλύπτῳ τῇ κεφαλῇ] with her head uncovered. On this dative, casus modalis, cp. Winer, p. 194, and above x. 30.

— καταισχύνει τὴν κεφαλὴν ἑαυτῆς] dishonours her own head by her own act. See on v. 10.

God has prescribed certain laws of dominion and subjection respectively to man and woman. If men or women confound these laws, they sin against God, Who, in order that both may be reminded of these laws, has forbidden man to wear the apparel of woman, and woman that of man. (Deut. xxii. 5). Chrysostom.

— τὸ αὐτὸ τῇ ἐξυρημένῃ] the same thing with her that is shaven. On the Dative, see Winer, § 22. 135. Matthiæ, § 386.

6. κείρασθαι ἢ ξυρᾶσθαι] to have her hair cropped, or to be shaven. (Cp. Micah i. 16.) A great ignominy to women, both among Jews and Greeks. See the Rabbis on Num. v. 18, and Aristoph. Thesm. 845.

On the difference of meaning of these verbs, see above on Acts xviii. 18; "κείρειν simpliciter notat partes capillorum summas demere, ξυρεῖν vel ξυρᾶν ad cutem usque novaculâ detondere, decalvare."

It was not usual for free men or women to cut their hair short except in mourning, but slaves were obliged to wear their hair short. See Valck. here.

7. εἰκών] Image (Gen. i. 26, 27); not corporeally but intellectually, and specially by reason of dominion over the creatures.

— δόξα] splendor, reflection of brightness. See 2 Cor. iii. 7.

— ὑπάρχων] Being such by priority of his creation, and by the manner of his creation, as compared with woman. Ὑπάρχων is more significant than ὤν. See Acts xvii. 24, οὐρανοῦ καὶ γῆς Κύριος ὑπάρχων. Phil. ii. 6, ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ ὑπάρχων. It is observable that this word is used frequently by St. Paul and by St. Luke, but by no other Evangelist.

8. οὐ γάρ ἐστιν—ἀνδρός] For man is not formed out of woman, but woman is formed out of man. He refers to the formation of Eve from Adam. (Gen. ii. 21—23.)

9. καὶ γάρ] For man (Adam) was not formed for the woman, already existing, but woman (Eve) was formed for the man (Adam), already created; and she was formed out of him. The reference to the history of the Creation removes all the difficulty to which Bp. Middleton adverts, p. 454, as to the article.

10. ἐξουσίαν ἔχειν] to have a badge of her own dignity and power on her head. Compare Ezek. vii. 27, ἄρχων ἐνδύσεται ἀφανισμὸν, 'the ruler will put on the badges of desolation;' and Num. vi. 7, εὐχὴ Θεοῦ ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς, 'the signs of a vow are on his head.'

Similarly, the Crown worn formerly by the Roman Emperors of the West, and that which is now worn by the Bishop of Rome, is called 'Regnum' in Latin, in Italian 'Triregno.'

The Apostle dwells on the fact that woman was formed out of man. This he had said v. 8, οὐκ ἔστιν ἀνὴρ ἐκ γυναικὸς, ἀλλὰ γυνὴ ἐξ ἀνδρὸς, and he repeats it v. 12, ἡ γυνὴ ἐκ τοῦ ἀνδρός. She is out of man; she exists from him. Her οὐσία or being ἐστὶν ἐξ ἀνδρὸς, is out of man.

Grounding his argument on this fact, he takes advantage of the happy coincidence furnished by the Greek word ἐξουσία (cp. ex-istence), and says that woman, ἐξ ἀνδρὸς οὖσα, ought to have ἐξουσίαν on her head.

This is not a mere play upon words, for the word ἐξουσία, or Authority, as distinguished from mere δύναμις, Power, properly represents that moral strength and dignity which grows out of the essence of things. A lawful Ruler has always ἐξουσίαν, or Authority, by reason of his essential nature and constitution as being the deputy of God (see Rom. xiii. 1—4), and as deriving his authority from God, ἐκ Θεοῦ ὢν ἔχει ἐξουσίαν, but he may not always have δύναμις or physical power to enforce the execution of what his Authority commands. And his dominion over men is grounded on his own subjection to God, from Whom his authority flows. "Dis te minorem quod geris, imperas."

Woman, being in her origin a natural extract of Man, who is the image of God, and deriving her being from Man, ought to wear the emblem of her derivative authority on her head. That authority and dignity, derived to her through man from God Himself, is her glory; for man is the δόξα, or reflected splendor, of God Himself. The covering of her head is therefore a crown of glory.

Hence the Apostle says that she dishonours her head (v. 5) if she appears in public with her head uncovered. Her covering is, indeed, a mark of reverence and submission to man, and is therefore called "humilitatis sarcina" and "jugum" by Tertullian (de Coron. c. 14, de Vel. Virg. c. 17), and "insigne subjectionis" by the Council of Gangra (c. 17); but it is also an ἐξουσία, or emblem of authority, which she derives through man from God; and by throwing off her covering she throws away her ἐξουσίαν, or the mark of her own authority, which consists in the essential derivation of her being through man from God. She forfeits her own claim to reverence by breaking that link of connexion which binds her through man even to the throne of God.

The notion of the Rabbis, therefore, that a woman who casts off the covering of her head, casts off her dignity, and her safeguard, and exposes herself to the injurious influence of Evil Spirits, is not altogether fanciful, but involves a moral truth. "If a woman's head is bare (they say, Sota 43, Wetstein, p. 147) evil spirits come and sit upon her head, and destroy what is in her home." The evil spirits of vanity and immodesty immediately assail her, and impair that moral power which she possesses in the eyes of men, and destroy that domestic influence which she exercises by her modesty, which is her strength.

In the Apostolic Constitutions (ii. 17) it was expressly commanded that the women should have their heads covered in the Church.

It is St. Paul's manner in this Epistle to show that by a licentious abuse of liberty men gain nothing, but rather injure themselves. And he now teaches the Corinthian women, who more than any women in the world needed such instruction, that by obtrusive boldness and wanton effrontery, and by presumptuous shamelessness and flaunting immodesty in public in the House of God, they gained nothing, but forfeited that dignity, power, and grace which God had given to woman, especially under the Gospel.

Thus the divine Apostle has left a lesson to women in every age, a lesson which in the present age deserves special attention, when the attire of some among them seems to expose them to the reproof of the Apostle.

That lesson is, that the true power of woman is in modest submission; her most attractive grace and genuine beauty is in modest retirement and delicate reserve; her best ornament that of a meek and quiet spirit, which in the sight of God is of great price. (1 Pet. iii. 4.)

— διὰ τοὺς ἀγγέλους] on account of the Angels of God. "Nudo capite videri non debet propter Angelos." Tertullian (de Coron. 14). She ought to have dignity and authority on her head on account of the Angels;

Because the Angels rejoice in contemplating the order and symmetry of God's creatures, which is disturbed by any thing that breaks the divinely constituted series of dependence which connects woman through man with God;

Because also the Angels minister to the faithful (Heb. i. 14), and are specially present at the public assemblies of the Church of God (see Isa. vi. 1. Ps. cxxxviii. 1, 2); and because they know the mind of God, and because they love to see that peace and harmony, which they know that God loves, in His Church (1 Tim. v. 21); and consequently are grieved by whatever deranges and disorganizes the framework of God's Creation, in that sacred society, which ought to be an earthly reflection of the peace and harmony of heaven. See Cyril in Cat. here.

It has been well said by Hooker (V. xxiii. 1) that—

Between the throne of God in heaven and of His Church upon earth here militant, if it be so that Angels have their continual intercourse, where should we find the same more verified than in these two ghostly exercises, the one Doctrine, and the other Prayer?

And again (V. xxv. 2):—

Concerning the place of assembly, although it serve for other uses as well as this, yet seeing that our Lord Himself hath to this as to the chiefest of all other plainly sanctified his own temple by entitling it "the House of Prayer" (Matt. xxi. 13), what pre-eminence of dignity soever hath been, either by the ordinance or through the special favour and providence of God, annexed unto His Sanctuary, the principal cause thereof must needs be in regard of Common Prayer. For the honour and furtherance whereof, if it be, as the gravest of the ancient Fathers seriously were persuaded, and do oftentimes plainly teach, affirming that the House of prayer is a Court beautified with the presence of celestial powers, that there we stand, we pray, we sound forth hymns unto God, having His Angels intermingled as our associates, and that with reference hereunto the Apostle doth require so great care to be had of decency for the Angels' sake (1 Cor. xi. 10), how can we come to the house of prayer and not be moved with the very glory of the place itself, so to frame our affections praying, as doth best beseem them, whose suits the Almighty doth there sit to hear, and His Angels attend to further?

He quotes Chrysost. Hom. xv. ad Hebr. et xxiv. in Act. t. iv. 516: Ἄκουε δὲ ὅτι ἄγγελοι πάρεισι πανταχοῦ, καὶ μάλιστα ἐν τῷ οἴκῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ παρεστήκασι τῷ βασιλεῖ, καὶ πάντα ἐμπέπληνται τῶν ἀσωμάτων ἐκείνων δυναμέων. And p. 753, l. 40: Ἕστηκας ἀτάκτως, οὐκ οἶδας ὅτι μετ' ἀγγέλων ἕστηκας; μετ' ἐκείνων ᾄδεις, μετ' ἐκείνων ὑμνεῖς· καὶ ἕστηκας γελῶν; And in 1 Cor. xi. 10: Εἰ γὰρ τοῦ ἀνδρὸς καταφρονεῖς, φησι, τοὺς ἀγγέλους αἰδέσθητι.

Again (I. xvi. 4):—

Would the Apostles, speaking of that which belongeth unto saints as they are linked together in the bond of spiritual society (1 Pet. i. 12. Eph. iii. 10. 1 Tim. v. 21), so often make mention how Angels are delighted, if in things publicly done by the Church we are not somewhat to respect what the Angels of heaven do? Yea, so far hath the Apostle Paul proceeded, as to signify that even about the outward orders of the Church, which serve but for comeliness, some regard is to be had of Angels, who best like us when we are most like unto them in all parts of decent demeanour. See also Tertullian (de Orat. § 13), Chrys. in Ps. iv. and cxxxiv., and on St. Matt. Hom. 19, and the excellent remarks of Joseph Mede on this subject, Disc. xlvii. p. 261, and Valck. p. 276, "Angelos fidelium cœtibus interesse antiquissima fuit Christianorum primo sæculo opinio;" and Hammond here, and Bp. Bull's Sermon xii. "On the office of the holy Angels towards the Faithful," p. 322, where he considers this text of St. Paul.

It may, however, be asked, "Why this reference to the Angels here, as present in Christian Churches, in connexion specially with this topic,—the veiling of the head of women in the public worship of God?"

The reason seems to be,

Because the Angels themselves are described in Scripture as "covering their face" in reverence in the Temple of God. (Isa. vi. 2.) What they do, women ought to do from a like feeling.

Also, St. Paul alludes perhaps to the opinion current among the Jews, that women, who uncovered their heads in public worship, exposed themselves to evil suggestions from bad Angels (see preceding note); and so he teaches them that by covering their head with modesty and reverence in the Church of God, they do what is pleasing to good Angels, who are their fellow-worshippers in His House.

11. Πλὴν οὔτε γυνὴ—γυναικός] Such is the order of the words in the best MSS., A, B, C, D*, D, E, F, G, and in many cursives. Elz. inserts the order thus, οὔτε ἀνὴρ χ. γ., οὔτε γυνὴ χ. ἀνδρὸς, which does not so well represent the Apostle's argument, which is, But although woman is dependent on man, as being formed out of man at the beginning, yet woman is not separate from man, nor man separate from woman, in the Lord.

For as woman (Eve) was made out of the man (Adam), so also the Man Christ was born by the woman, being the Woman's Seed; but all things are ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, i. e. poured forth from God. All ἐξουσία or authority flows from Him. (See on viii. 6.) Let not Man then lord it proudly over Woman, as if he had an independent ἐξουσία, but let him remember that though, at the first Creation, Woman was formed out of the First Man, as the Book of Genesis records, yet, as the Gospel records, at the new Creation, the Second Man, Christ Jesus, came by the Woman.

13, 14. Ἐν ὑμῖν κρίνατε] See on x. 15.

The common sense of mankind in this matter had shown itself in various usages of Antiquity, e. g. in giving a covering to the head of the slave on his manumission, when he was said, "pileo donari," to be presented with a cap of liberty; and in the bridal "flammeum" or veil; and in the word describing Marriage on the part of woman, "nubo" (to veil the head), said of the νύμφη, as distinguished from man.

14. οὐδὲ ἡ φύσις αὐτή] So A, B, C, D, H, "Does not even Nature of her own accord teach you?" A better reading than Elz., ἡ οὐδὲ αὐτὴ ἡ φύσις.

16. δοκεῖ] presumes. Cp. Matt. iii. 9, and Winer, p. 540. On this text, see Bp. Andrewes' Sermons, ii. p. 404.

17. Τοῦτο δὲ παραγγέλλω οὐκ ἐπαινῶν] So A, B, C*, F, G, Lachm., Tisch., Alf., Meyer. Elz. has παραγγέλλων—ἐπαινῶ. The sense is, I give you this precept concerning behaviour in public worship, not, however, as if I approved the purpose for which you come to the place appointed for worship. And why do I not approve it? Because you come together, not for the better, but for the worse;

I do not praise your religious assemblings together (although the assembling together for worship is in itself laudable), because you pervert them into occasions of evil. (Photius.)

19. δεῖ γάρ] See on Luke xvii. 1.

— αἱρέσεις εἶναι] Αἵρεσις, properly a choice, hence a private party or opinion chosen, independently of, or in opposition to, God's will or public lawful authority. See Acts v. 17; xv. 5; xxiv. 5. 14; xxvi. 5; xxviii. 22. Gal. v. 20. 2 Pet. ii. 1, αἱρέσεις ἀπωλείας. *S. Titus iii. 10, where see note.

The Church has been constrained by the rise of Heresies to search Scripture more carefully; and thus Heresies have served as occasions for bringing forth more clearly and fully the Articles of Faith in her Creeds. In the Apostolic age the Heresies which arose in the primitive Churches supplied the Apostles with reasons for declaring the sound Faith. The Epistles to the Corinthians afford remarkable instances of this power by which they overcame evil with good, and made error to be subservient to Truth. See above, the Introduction to these Epistles. And on the moral and spiritual uses educed under God's grace from Heresies and Schisms, see Chrys. Vol. v. p. 362, and other authorities quoted in the Editor's Occasional Sermons, No. i., on this text. and cp. Hooker, V. xlii. 6, and V. lii.

20, 21. οὐκ ἔστι Κυριακὸν δεῖπνον φαγεῖν] when you meet together in the church, it is not, as you suppose, in order to eat the Lord's Supper. For each of you (ἐν τῷ φαγεῖν) in the eating which then ensues, takes his own private supper before the Lord's Supper; "præsumit ante synaxim." Aug. Epist. 118. Cp. Sozomen, vii. 29, and A Lapide here, and Sedulius and Primasius in Lightfoot; and one man is hungry and another is surfeited.

The abuses therefore here reproved were manifold;

The Lord's Supper was made a subordinate thing, instead of being the principal cause of the meeting in the church; and the purpose of church-assemblies was frustrated. The Supper, instituted by the Lord for the general spiritual refreshment of all united together in a holy and loving communion in Him, was supplanted by private and separate repasts, in which the bodily appetites were pampered, and intemperate excesses were committed by the rich, and from which their poorer brethren were excluded, and the sacred place in which they met was profaned. And thus they who had met together in the Lord's house with a professed intention of partaking there in the Lord's Supper, dishonoured the Lord in His house and in His Supper, and disqualified themselves from doing that very act for which they professed to have come together into His presence.

It is not improbable (as Lightfoot suggests) that the Jewish Christians, looking back at their own Passover on which the Holy Communion had been engrafted, regarded the Eucharist as an appendage to a domestic religious meal, such as the Passover was, in which households of about twelve partook together, by families; and that hence arose those separate δεῖπνα which the Apostle condemns, in which it is likely the Gentile Christians would not be disposed, or admitted, to partake before the Holy Communion.

It is worthy of remark, as an evidence of the Catholicity of the Gospel when contrasted with Judaism, that the Christian Passover combined all men in one Κυριακὸν δεῖπνον, or Lord's Supper, in the One Church of God, whereas the Jewish Passover was only a private repast eaten in separate households.

— Κυριακὸν δεῖπνον] The non-insertion of the definite article τὸ, shows that by habitual use in the Church, Holy Communion had now attained the force of a proper name.

The adjective Κυριακὸς, Dominicus (from Κύριος, Dominus) is connected in Holy Scripture with two substantives,—the Lord's Supper here, and the Lord's Day in Rev. i. 10. And it is observable, that the Syriac Version here renders Κυριακὸν δεῖπνον a "meal proper for the Lord's Day." (See Michaelis, and Middleton, p. 456.) And Christian antiquity has associated the word Κυριακὸς with another object, viz. the Lord's House; whence we have the word Church. (Casaubon, Exc. Baron. xiii. Hooker, V. xiii. 1. Pearson on the Creed, Art. ix.) Hence we have a memento of the duty and privilege of assembling together, as the ancient Christians did in the Apostolic age (see on Acts xx. 7) on the Lord's Day in the Lord's House, to eat the Lord's Supper.

21. τὸ ἴδιον δεῖπνον] his own private supper, in opposition to the Lord's Supper, and this in the Lord's House, and not in his own private house. A double profanation.

The abuse seems to have grown out of the primitive practice of sometimes annexing the Agapæ, or Love-feasts, to the Holy Communion. But properly the Agapæ followed, and not preceded the Holy Communion, when they were connected with it, and did not therefore supplant it, as these private feasts in the Church at Corinth did. See Plin. Ep. x. 27. Tertullian, Apol. 39. Chrys., Theodoret, and others here; and particularly Acts xx. 7, where, it is evident, the purpose of assembling was to break bread, i. e. to receive the Communion; and a meal followed, v. 11, and cp. Bingham, XV. vii. 6—9. In course of time the Agapæ were not permitted to be held in the Church. (Concil. Carth. iii. c. 30.)

— ὃς μὲν—ὃς δέ] See Matt. xxi. 35. Mark xii. 5. Acts xxvii. 44. Rom. ix. 21. Winer, § 17, p. 96.

22. Μὴ γὰρ οἰκίας οὐκ ἔχετε;] Is it that you have not houses to eat in? On the uses of μὴ see ix. 9; x. 22; xii. 29, 30.

— τῆς ἐκκλησίας τοῦ Θεοῦ καταφρονεῖτε] A proof of the setting apart of places for God's worship, in primitive times, and of reverence due to them as such. See the evidence collected by Joseph Mede in his Essay on this text, pp. 319—350, and above on Acts ii. 1, 2.

Out of those the Apostle's words, "Have ye not houses to eat and drink in?" (1 Cor. xi. 22)—albeit temples, such as now, were not then erected for the exercise of the Christian religion, it hath been nevertheless not absurdly conceived, that he there teacheth what difference should be made between house and house; that what is fit for the dwelling-place of God, and what for man's habitation, he showeth; he requireth that Christian men at their own home take common food, and in the House of the Lord none but that food which is heavenly; he instructeth them, that as in the one place they use to refresh their bodies, so they may in the other learn to seek nourishment of their souls; and as there they sustain temporal life, so here they would learn to make provision for eternal. Christ could not suffer that the Temple should serve for a place of mart, nor the Apostle of Christ that the Church should be made an inn. Hooker, V. xii. 5.

23. Ἐγὼ παρέλαβον] by special revelation. Cp. xv. 3. Gal. i. 12. St. John's Gospel, written after the publication of the other three Gospels, and after the circulation of this Epistle, says nothing concerning the institution of the Holy Eucharist. He had nothing to add to those previous accounts, and he canonizes them as complete, by his silence.

— ᾗ παρεδίδοτο] was being betrayed. Observe the imperfect tense. Christ did this, while, as He well knew, men for whom He did it were conspiring against Him and betraying Him.

24. εὐχαριστήσας] See on 1 Cor. x. 16.

— εἶπε] Elz. adds λάβετε, φάγετε, which are not in the best MSS.

— Τοῦτο μού] On these words see notes, Matt. xxvi. 26—28. Luke xxii. 19.—Μού is emphatic. Cp. Matt. xvi. 18.

— κλώμενον] So Elz., with C*, D, E, F, G, I, K. D* has θρυπτόμενον. Some Versions represent διδόμενον, probably from Luke xxii. 19. A, B, C*, and one or two Cursives, omit the participle, and so Lachm., Tisch., Alford, Meyer.

The common reading κλώμενον ought, it would seem, to be retained, for many reasons.

(1) The words τὸ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν without any participle are bald and inexpressive;

(2) κλώμενον has high MS. authority, and cannot have been interpolated from any of the narratives in the Gospels, of the institution of the Holy Eucharist;

(3) It is likely that the copyists who wrote those MSS., or the original of them, which omit the word κλώμενον, may have scrupled at that word, as not found in any of those narratives, and also as containing a strong, and to them a perplexing assertion of the body being broken, whereas "not a bone of it was broken." (John xix. 36.) And this assertion was made by Christ before His Crucifixion, i. e. before His Body was wounded by suffering. But He breaks the bread, and says, This is My Body which is being broken for you; in order to intimate, that as the bread (ὁ ἄρτος) is being broken in order to be distributed to all, so in the Holy Eucharist there is a communication of His Body sacrificed once for all (cp. 1 Cor. v. 7, and x. 16), and a bestowal of all the benefits, purchased for all by His death on the cross.

The word κλώμενον is important also as a warning against the error which feigns a carnal presence in the Holy Eucharist. At the institution of the Holy Sacrament of His most blessed Body and Blood, Christ took bread and brake it, and said, This is My Body which is being broken for you. If the bread being broken is really His flesh, and not the "communion of His Body" (1 Cor. x. 16), His Body ought to have been broken,—which it was not.

The words τοῦτο—κλώμενον, and ὡσαύτως—δειπνῆσαι, and τοῦτο—εἰς ἐμὴν ἀνάμνησιν, and ὁσάκις—καταγγέλλετε, are found, with slight variations, in the Liturgy of St. Mark.

— εἰς τὴν ἐμὴν ἀνάμνησιν] See on Luke xxii. 19. The accounts given of the institution by St. Paul and St. Luke, have a special interest as marking their personal intercommunion, by coincidence in language, as well as in the details of the record.

St. Paul and St. Luke are the only two of the sacred writers who recite the commemorative sentence, "Do this for a remembrance of Me;" and St. Paul recites it twice, as being of great importance against all profanation of the Lord's Supper.

The ancient sacrifices were repeated for a continual memorial of sin. (Heb. x. 3.) The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper is repeated for a continual memorial of the sacrifice once offered for sin. See below on Heb. x. 12.

25. μετὰ τὸ δειπνῆσαι] after having supped. Therefore you ought to separate the Eucharist from your common meals. (Bengel.)

26. τὸν ἄρτον] See on 1 Cor. x. 16.

— ποτήριον] Elz. adds τοῦτο here, and in v. 27, τοῦτον after ἄρτον: but these pronouns are not in A, B, C, F, G.

— καταγγέλλετε] ye declare. See Acts iii. 24, where the word is applied to the Prophets proclaiming and preparing the way for the First Advent of Christ. He does not say, ye repeat the sacrifice of Christ's Death; nor does he say, ye continue the sacrifice of Christ's Death; but he says, "Ye declare Christ's Death." Ye proclaim and represent a fact, which has taken place, once for all. See on Heb. x. 12.

— ἄχρις οὗ ἂν ἔλθῃ] till the Lord Himself shall come—when you will need no memorial or representation of Christ, for He will be with you visibly in Person. Therefore Maranatha (1 Cor. xvi. 22) is a solemn warning against neglect or abuse of the Lord's Supper.

27. ἢ] or. A, and some few Cursives and Fathers, have καί: but ἢ is doubtless the true reading. For it is necessary to receive both elements with devotion and reverence.

Further, ἢ, or, has a peculiar significance here, because, as the context shows, St. Paul is censuring the Corinthians for two several sins, opposed respectively to the two several elements of the Lord's Supper. The first sin is that of eating meats offered to idols, and of gluttony generally, and particularly at the meals before the Communion (v. 21), a sin specially opposed to Communion in the Eucharistic Bread (see 1 Cor. x. 21); the second sin, that of drinking the Cup of Devils, or false deities (1 Cor. x. 21), and of intemperance in the meals before the Communion (v. 21), a sin specially opposed to participation in the Eucharistic Cup.

He therefore says, whosoever, by eating idolatrous meats and gluttony, eats this Bread unworthily, or by idolatrous drink and intemperance, drinks this Cup unworthily, is guilty of the Body and Blood of the Lord.

It is hardly necessary, therefore, to notice the allegations grounded on these words by the Church of Rome in defence of her corrupt practice in mutilating the Holy Communion.

It may be added, that even if in some special cases one element might be administered without the other, it would by no means follow that it is allowable to withhold one element altogether; and to anathematize those who affirm that both ought to be administered. See above on Luke xxiv. 30, and 1 Cor. x. 16.

— ἀναξίως] in an unworthy manner; as the context shows, "Alia est indignitas edentis, alia esûs." Bengel. St. Paul does not exclude these Corinthians, except the one incestuous person (v. 4, ὃ), from the Holy Communion, unworthy though they were; but exhorts them to examine themselves, and so come to it worthily (v. 28), "We are not worthy so much as to gather up the crumbs under Thy Table, O Lord;" "We are not worthy to offer Thee any sacrifice;" and because we are not worthy, and Thou art all worthy, therefore we come to Thee, in order that "our sinful bodies may be made clean by Thy Body, and our souls washed through Thy most precious blood."

— ἔνοχος ἔσται τοῦ σώματος καὶ τοῦ αἵματος] ἔνοχος is a forensic word, properly said of a person convicted as guilty of a crime, and liable to punishment; and so ἔνοχος, held or bound, in a double sense.

The substantive in the genitive case after ἔνοχος signifies not only,

(1) the crime by which the culprit binds himself, and of which he is convicted, as in 2 Mac. xiii. 6, ἱεροσυλίας ἔνοχον, and James ii. 10, πάντων ἔνοχος,

But it signifies also,

(2) the penalty by which he is bound for his sin; so Matt. xxvi. 66, ἔνοχος θανάτου, Mark iii. 29, κρίσεως. And here St. Paul means, that he who commits the sin here described, incurs the guilt and punishment of one who sins against, and is punished by, the body and blood of Christ.

(3) There seems also to be a special significance in the word ἔνοχος, as used here;

All are invited to the Holy Communion. They come together for that purpose. Christ offers His own Body and Blood to them all. He says, "Take eat, this is My Body." "This is My Blood, shed for you; Drink ye all of this" (Matt. xxvi. 26, 27. Mark xiv. 22, 23); and all who come with repentance, faith, and love, receive what He gives. They are all μέτοχοι, partakers of His Body and Blood.

But they who come without those requisites, and do not discern the Lord's body (v. 29), but treat it with profane irreverence, as common food, and disqualify themselves for participation in it, as the Corinthians did, by intemperance and uncharitableness, they are not μέτοχοι—that is, they are not partakers of the Lord's body and blood, but they are ἔνοχοι, they are sinners against, and punished by it; they are there caught in a sin, and are caught by a punishment; and that very thing against which they sin, becomes, through their sin, the instrument of their punishment.

There is a similar paronomasia in Heb. ii. 14.

These considerations throw light on the question, "What the wicked receive in the Lord's Supper?"

St. Paul here says that they eat the bread and drink the cup (v. 27), but he does not say that they are partakers of the body and blood; but he says that they are ἔνοχοι of it, i. e. they sin against it, and are punished by it.

Christ Himself distinctly says, "He that eateth My Flesh, and drinketh My Blood, dwelleth in Me, and I in him" (John vi. 56). The wicked therefore do not eat His flesh: they do not partake of His body and blood, because they have not that organ by which alone it can be received, namely, Faith.

But it is not nothing that they receive. No: all God's gifts are something, either for weal or woe, either for blessing or bane. Christ is every where set for the fall of some, and the rising up of others (Luke ii. 34). He is the corner-stone to some, and the stone to grind others to powder (Luke xx. 18); a savour of life to some, and of death to others (2 Cor. ii. 16). The blessings against which the wicked sin, become their curse. Their Gerizims become Ebals. If they do not accept God's grace, it recoils upon them, and binds them fast in their sin, and in punishment for it. If they are not μέτοχοι, they are ἔνοχοι.

The case of the wicked in the Holy Communion appears to be like that of the men of Nazareth, who rejected Jesus, and would have cast Him down headlong from the brow of the hill on which their city was built (Luke iv. 29). He passed through the midst of them, and escaped. Yet they, though they could not hold Him, were held by Him; they were guilty of His Body and Blood; and were punished by Him for their sins. He never visited them more.

The case of the wicked in the Holy Communion is like that of the Jews, who twice took up stones to cast at Him, but He went through the midst of them, and passed by, and escaped out of their hands (John viii. 59; x. 31). They could not touch Him, but they were guilty of His Body and Blood, and were punished by Him for their sins. They were not able to hold Him, but they were caught in their own snare; held as prisoners by their own sin, and imprisoned as captives in order to suffer punishment for it. He never returned to Jerusalem after the second outrage, except to pronounce judgment upon her (Matt. xxiii. 27. Luke xix. 42).

The case of the wicked in the Holy Communion resembles that of the crowd who pressed profanely and irreverently upon Christ, but did not touch Him; whereas, on the other hand, the faithful woman, who came reverently, and humbly, and devoutly, and ventured only to touch the hem of His garment, she only it was who touched Him; because she had the spiritual organ of faith, by which alone He can be touched; and therefore virtue went out of Him to heal her, and He said, "Daughter, be of good comfort, Thy faith hath made thee whole" (Matt. ix. 20—22. Mark v. 27—34. Luke viii. 43—48). She was indeed μέτοχος of Christ's divine virtue, and is a beautiful picture of the faithful soul in the worthy participation of His most blessed Body and Blood.

Therefore the Church of England well teaches in her Catechism that "the Body and Blood of Christ are verily and indeed taken and received by the faithful in the Lord's Supper;" and in her 28th Article that "the means whereby the Body of Christ is received and eaten in the Supper is Faith." Well does she say in her Office for the Holy Communion, "The Body of our Lord Jesus Christ which was given for thee, preserve thy body and soul unto everlasting life; take and eat this in remembrance that Christ died for thee, and feed on Him in thy heart by faith with thanksgiving."

The following clear statement of S. Augustine (Tract. in Joann. xxvi.) appears to have been regarded with approval by the Church of England in the construction of her XXXIX Articles;

Exponit Christus quomodo id fiat quod loquitur, et quid sit manducare corpus ejus, et sanguinem bibere. "Qui manducat carnem meam, et bibit meum sanguinem, in me manet, et ego in illo." Hoc est ergo manducare illam escam, et illum bibere potum, in Christo manere, et illum manentem in se habere. Ac per hoc qui non manet in Christo, et in quo non manet Christus, procul dubio nec manducat carnem Ejus, nec bibit Ejus sanguinem; sed magis tantæ rei Sacramentum ad judicium sibi manducat et bibit. [Some other words are introduced into the earlier editions of S. Augustine in this passage, but they are not inserted here, because they are not found in the great body of MSS. of that Father. See note to p. 987 of the last Benedictine edition, Vol. iii. pt. ii. Paris 1837.] Hujus rei Sacramentum, id est, unitatis corporis et sanguinis Christi, alicubi quotidie, alicubi certis intervallis dierum in dominicâ mensâ præparatur, et de mensâ dominicâ sumitur, quibusdam ad vitam, quibusdam ad exitium: res vero ipsa, cujus sacramentum est, omni homini ad vitam, nulli ad exitium quicumque ejus particeps fuerit.

Nos hodie accipimus visibilem cibum: sed aliud est Sacramentum, aliud virtus Sacramenti. Quam multi de altari accipiunt et moriuntur, et accipiendo moriuntur! Unde dicit Apostolus, Judicium sibi manducat et bibit. (1 Cor. xi. 29.) Non enim buccella Dominica venenum fuit Judæ. Et tamen accepit, et cum accepit, in eum Inimicus intravit; non quia malum accepit, sed quia bonum malè malus accepit. Videte ergo, fratres, panem cœlestem, spiritualiter manducate, innocentiam ad altare apportate. Peccata etsi sunt quotidiana, vel non sint mortifera. Antequam ad altare accedatis, attendite quid dicatis: Dimitte nobis debita nostra, sicut et nos dimittimus debitoribus nostris. (Matt. vi. 12.) Dimittis, dimittetur tibi; securus accede; panis est, non venenum.

28. Δοκιμαζέτω δὲ ἑαυτὸν ἄνθρωπος] Let every one examine himself. St. Paul had excommunicated one person for flagrant and notorious sin (v. 1—5), but in a Church abounding with sundry corruptions in faith and manners as Corinth did, he sufficeth himself with a general proposal of unworthy communicating, and remitteth every other particular person to a self-examination. Bp. Sanderson (iv. 442).

And this he does without exacting, as necessary, previous confession to the Priest, as the Church of Rome does; or giving orders to Lay-Elders to examine and exclude, as did the Puritans.

29. κρῖμα] punishment, judgment, first temporal (see vv. 30—32); but, if this is slighted, then eternal.

— μὴ διακρίνων] Not distinguishing it from common food. (Photius.)

30. Διὰ τοῦτο] Who, but an inspired writer, would have ventured to assert this? Who would have dared to say that an epidemic is sent from heaven for a particular cause, unless he had been himself instructed to this effect by a revelation from heaven?

— κοιμῶνται] He does not say κεκοίμηνται, the term which he uses to describe the rest of the Saints who have fallen asleep in Jesus (see xv. 20. 1 Thess. iv. 13), but κοιμῶνται, a tense which (though sometimes used to signify a state of sleep, see Callimachus quoted on Acts vii. 60, and Matt. xxviii. 13. Acts xii. 6, where the present participle is thus used) is less expressive of a permanent condition of rest than κεκοίμηνται. Perhaps κοιμῶνται here may mean simply are dying, obdormiunt (see Bengel and Winer, p. 339); and this Christian euphemism describes the mortality then prevailing at Corinth, and does not pronounce an opinion as to their state after death.

S. Chrysostom has some excellent remarks here, showing the practical bearing of the reception of the Holy Communion on the daily duties of life, especially as to the right use of those members of the body which are instrumental to its reception. How canst thou defile that hand, and those lips, and that mouth, with which thou hast received the body and blood of Christ? How canst thou pollute them with surfeiting, with foolish talking, and profane jesting, or with words of calumny and slander? Let every one hallow his right hand, his tongue, and his lips, which have been made in the Holy Eucharist to be, as it were, a vestibule for the entrance of Christ.

31. δέ] So A, B, D, E, F, G. Elz. γάρ.

— οὐκ ἂν ἐκρινόμεθα] we should not have been judged.

32. κρινόμενοι κ.τ.λ.] See on v. 5.

33. ἀλλήλους ἐκδέχεσθε] Receive, entertain one another, with your provisions. Do not grudge a share of them to your poorer brethren. This seems to be the meaning of ἐκδέχομαι here. (Cp. ἐκδοχή.) It may, indeed, have also the meaning commonly assigned to it, Wait for one another before you begin to eat of them yourself. But it appears to imply more than this. Wait for one another, and entertain one another in a sacred ἔρανος, or common repast, to which each contributes his σύμβολον according to his means.

This is a precept for the rich, that which follows is for the poor.

34. εἴ τις πεινᾷ] Let not the poorer brethren imagine that the Church is a place to which they may resort to satisfy the cravings of bodily hunger, and that the Holy Eucharist was instituted for other causes than for spiritual sustenance and refreshment from communion in the Body and Blood of Christ. If they are hungry, let them eat at home, ἐν οἴκῳ, distinguished here from the Church, as in xiv. 35, that they may not come together unto condemnation.

— ὡς ἂν ἔλθω] when I shall have come. St. Paul, therefore, was meditating a visit to Corinth when he wrote this Epistle. See below, xvi. 2, ὅταν ἔλθω, 3, ὅταν παραγένωμαι, and v. 5, where he says that he will come to them when he shall have passed through Macedonia, which he is intending to visit after the approaching Pentecost (v. 8), and then to spend some time at Corinth, which he accordingly did. See Acts xx. 1, 2, and Introduction to this Epistle.

CH. XII. 1. τῶν πνευματικῶν] the spiritual gifts (χαρίσματα) in which you are richly endowed (i. 7), and which some of you are prone to abuse for an occasion of self-display.

2. ὅτι] A, B, C, D, E, I, add ὅτε. Probably the true reading is οἴδατε ὅτε (without ὅτι), Ye remember when ye were Gentiles being led. Or the construction may be, οἴδατε ἀπαγόμενοι, like the Latin "sensit delapsus in hostes;" and, perhaps, copyists not understanding that construction inserted ὅτι.

— πρὸς τὰ εἴδωλα τὰ ἄφωνα] Who, though dumb themselves, yet had their oracles, and prophets, and soothsayers, who professed to have spiritual gifts, such as the Pythia at Delphi; but do not be deceived, their gifts may easily be distinguished from ours. Chrys.

3. Ἀνάθεμα Ἰησοῦς—Κύριος Ἰησοῦς] This is the reading of A, B, C, and several Cursives, and Fathers, and Versions. Doubtless, the former was a common Jewish heathen exclamation, and the latter a Christian reply, and both were heard often in the streets of Corinth. See Justin M. Tryphon. c. 96, "Ye Jews in your Synagogues curse all who are made Christians by Him, and the Heathen do the same; and thus ye fulfil the prophecy concerning Christ, 'Cursed is he that hangeth on a tree.'" See on Gal. iii. 13.

Elz. has the accusative, which weakens the sense.

As to the word ἀνάθεμα, "res diris devota," distinguished from ἀνάθημα, "res consecratione dedicata," see Acts xxiii. 14. Rom. ix. 3. Hesych. explains ἀνάθεμα by ἐπάρατον.

It is probable that the former words were uttered by the Jews at Corinth, and also by persons possessed with Evil spirits. When St. Paul was present at Philippi and Ephesus, the Evil Spirit put cozening words into the mouth of the Pythoness there, and attempted to disarm him, and delude others by flattery. See on Acts xvi. 16—18; xix. 15.

But now, in St. Paul's absence, he appears to have shown himself in his true colours at Corinth, and to have instigated his emissaries to utter blasphemous words against Christ, ἀνάθεμα Ἰησοῦς, and to terrify Christians by imprecations.

St. Paul teaches the Corinthians not to be deluded or daunted by these fiendish maledictions; and he teaches also that the true method of encountering those diabolical assaults of the Evil Spirit, is by the power of the Holy Spirit. No one can say "Jesus is Lord" but by the Holy Ghost. No one can maintain the κύριότης or lordship of JESUS against the "lords many" (viii. 5) of Polytheism except by supernatural grace given by the Holy Ghost.

This precept would remind the Christians, in the days of persecution and martyrdom, where their true strength lay, when, for a trial of their Christianity, they were commanded by heathen Magistrates "Christo maledicere" (as Pliny relates, Ep. x. 27).

4. τὸ δὲ αὐτὸ Πνεῦμα] "It is plain (says Bp. Middleton, p. 457) that Πνεῦμα must here be taken in the Personal sense (the Holy Ghost), nor do I see how it is possible to elude the observation of Markland, that in this and the two following verses we have distinct mention of the three Persons of the Trinity," an observation made by many of the Ancient Fathers. See the passages from S. Cyril and others in the Catena here, and Petavius (Dogmat. lib. ii. de Trinitate, c. xiii. and c. xv.), and by Bp. Andrewes in his Sermon on this text (Vol. iii. p. 379):—

The text (he says) is truly tripartite, as standing evidently of three parts, every one of the three being a kind of Trinity. A Trinity, 1. personal, 2. real, and 3. actual.

I. Personal, these three: 1. "the same Spirit," 2. "the same Lord," 3. "the same God."

II. Real, these three: 1. "gifts," 2. "administrations" or offices, 3. "operations" or works.

III. Actual, these three: 1. dividing, 2. manifesting, 3. and profiting.

Three divisions from three, for three.

The three real, they be the ground of all; the 1. gifts, 2. offices, and 3. works. The three personal, 1. "the Spirit," 2. "Lord," and 3. "Lord," are but from whence those come. The three actual are but whither they will: 1. divided; 2. so divided, as made manifest; 3. so made manifest, as not only 1. to make a show, but πρὸς, to some end; 2. that end to be συμφέρον, the good; 3. the good, not private, of ourselves, but common, of all the whole body of the Church.

First, we find here, and finding we adore the holy, blessed, and glorious Trinity; the Spirit in plain terms, the other Two in no less plain, if we look but to the sixth verse of the eighth chapter before, where the Apostle saith, "To us there is but one God, the Father, of Whom are all things, and we of Him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by Whom are all things, and we by Him." So by "God" is intended the Father, the first Person; by "Lord" the Son, the second; by "the Spirit" the third, the usual term or title of the Holy Ghost. These three as in Trinity of Persons here distinct, so in Unity of essence one and the same.

1. Once are these Three known thus solemnly to have met, at the creating of the world. 2. Once again, at the Baptism of Christ, the new creating it. 3. And here now the third time, at the Baptism of the Church with the Holy Ghost. Where, as the manner is at all Baptisms, each bestoweth a several gift or largess on the party baptized, that is, on the Church; for whom and for whose good all this dividing and all this manifesting is. Nay, for whom and for whose good the world itself was created, Christ Himself baptized, and the Holy Ghost visibly sent down.

From this Trinity personal, comes there here another, as I may call it, a Trinity real, of 1. "Gifts," 2. "Administrations," and 3. "Operations."

1. By "Gifts" is meant the inward endowing, enabling, qualifying, whereby one, for his skill, is meet and sufficient for aught. 2. By "Administrations" is meant the outward calling, place, function, or office, whereby one is authorized lawfully to deal with aught. 3. By "Operations" is meant the effect of work done, wrought, or executed by the former two, the skill of the gift and the power of the calling. Bp. Andrewes.

6. ἐνεργημάτων] in-wrought works. Ἐνέργημα is more than ἔργον. For ἐνέργημα is not every work, it is an in-wrought work; a work wrought by us so as in us also. And both it may be. For ἐνέργεια and συνέργεια take not away one the other. So then by ourselves, as by some other beside ourselves; and that is God, Who is said here to "work all in all." Of all our well-wrought works we say not only, "We can do none of them without Him" (John xv. 5), but further, we say with the Prophet, "Thou hast wrought all our works in us" (Isa. xxvi. 12). In them He doth not only co-operate with us from without, but even from within, as I may say, in-operate them in us, "working in you" (Heb. xiii. 21). If our ability be but of gift, if our calling be but a service, if our very work but an ἐνέργημα, "a thing wrought in us," cecidit Babylon, pride falls to the ground; these three have laid it flat. But besides this, there are three more points in ἐνέργημα. 1. "In us" they are said to be "wrought," to show our works should not be wound out of us with some wrench from without, without which nothing could come from us by our will, if we could otherwise choose,—ἐξεργήματα these properly; but ἐνεργήματα, from within, have the principium motûs, there and thence; and so are natural and kindly works. 2. Next, from within, to show they are not works done in hypocrisy; so the outside fair, what is within it skills not. But that there be "truth in the inward parts" (Ps. li. 6), that there it be wrought, and that thence it come. 3. And last, if it be an ἐνέργημα, it hath an energy, that is, a workmanship such as that the gift appears in it. For energy implies it is workmanlike done. Bp. Andrewes (iii. p. 392).

τοῦ Πνεύματος πρὸς τὸ συμφέρον· [8] [h] ᾧ μὲν γὰρ διὰ τοῦ Πνεύματος δίδοται λόγος σοφίας, ἄλλῳ δὲ λόγος γνώσεως κατὰ τὸ αὐτὸ Πνεῦμα, [9] [i] ἑτέρῳ δὲ πίστις ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ Πνεύματι, ἄλλῳ δὲ χαρίσματα ἰαμάτων ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ Πνεύματι, [10] [j] ἄλλῳ δὲ ἐνεργήματα δυνάμεων, ἄλλῳ δὲ προφητεία, ἄλλῳ δὲ διακρίσεις πνευμάτων, ἑτέρῳ δὲ γένη γλωσσῶν, ἄλλῳ δὲ ἑρμηνεία γλωσσῶν. The word Spirit, in this place, I conceive to be understood directly of the Holy Ghost, the third Person in the ever blessed Trinity. Which yet ought not to be so understood of the Person of the Spirit, as if the Father and the Son had no part or fellowship in this business. For all the actions and operations of the divine Persons (those only excepted which are of intrinsical and mutual relation) are the joint and undivided works of the whole three Persons, according to the common known maxim, constantly and uniformly received in the Catholic Church. Opera Trinitatis ad extra sunt indivisa. And as to this particular concerning gifts, the Scriptures are clear. Wherein, as they are ascribed to God the Holy Ghost in this chapter, so they are elsewhere ascribed to God the Father: "Every good gift and every perfect giving is from above, from the Father of Lights" (St. James i. 17). And elsewhere to God the Son: Unto every one of us is given grace, according to the measure of the gift of Christ (Eph. iv. 7). Yea, and it may be that for this very reason, in the three verses next before, these three words are used, Spirit in verse 4, Lord in verse 5, and God in verse 6, to give us intimation that these spiritual gifts proceed equally and undividedly from the whole three Persons; from God the Father, and from His Son Jesus Christ our Lord, and from the eternal Spirit of them both, the Holy Ghost, as from one entire, indivisible, and co-essential Agent.

These spiritual gifts are the manifestations of the Spirit actively, because by these the Spirit manifesteth the will of God unto the Church, these being the instruments and means of conveying the knowledge of salvation unto the people of God. And they are the manifestations of the Spirit passively too; because where any of these gifts, especially in any eminent sort, appeared in any person, it was a manifest evidence that the Spirit of God wrought in him. As we read in Acts x. 45, 46, They of the Circumcision were astonished when they saw that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost. If it be demanded, But how did that appear? it followeth in the next verse, For they heard them speak with tongues, &c. The spiritual gift then is a manifestation of the Spirit, as every other sensible effect is a manifestation of its proper cause. Bp. Sanderson (iii. 77).

— δίδοται] is being given. Whatsoever spiritual abilities we have, we have them of gift, and by grace. The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man. We may hence take two profitable directions: the one, if we have any useful gifts, whom to thank for them; the other, if we want any needful gifts, where to seek for them. Whatsoever manifestation of the Spirit thou hast, it is given thee; and to whom can thy thanks for it be due but to the Giver? Sacrifice not to thine own nets (Hab. i. 16) either of nature or endeavour, as if these abilities were the manifestations of thine own spirit, but enlarge thine heart to magnify the bounty and goodness of Him who is Pater Spirituum, the Father of the spirits of all flesh (Heb. xii. 9), and hath wrought those graces in thee by communicating His Spirit unto thee. If thou shinest as a star in the firmament of the Church, whether of a greater or lesser magnitude, as one star differeth from another in glory (1 Cor. xv. 41), remember thou shinest but by a borrowed light from Him who is Pater Luminum, the Father and Fountain of all lights (James i. 17), as the Sun in the firmament, from Whom descendeth every good gift, and every perfect giving. Whatsoever grace thou hast, it is given thee: therefore be thankful to the Giver.

But if thou wantest any grace, or measure of grace, which seemeth needful for thee in that station and calling wherein God hath set thee, herein is a second direction for thee where to seek it, even from His hands Who alone can give it. If any man lack wisdom, saith St. James (James i. 5), let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally; and it shall be given him. A large and liberal promise; but yet a promise most certain, and full of comfortable assurance provided it be understood aright, viz., with these two necessary limitations: if God shall see it expedient, and if he pray for it as he ought.

Here, then, is your course. Wrestle with God by your fervent prayers, and wrestle with Him too by your faithful endeavours; and He will not, for His goodness' sake, and for His promise' sake He cannot, dismiss you without a blessing. But omit either, and the other is lost labour. Prayer without study is presumption, and study without prayer Atheism: the one bootless, the other fruitless. You take your books in vain into your hand if you turn them over and never look higher; and you take God's name in vain within your lips if you cry Da, Domine, and never stir further. The ship is then like to be steered with best certainty and success when there is Oculus ad Cœlum, manus ad Clavum; when the pilot is careful of both, to have his eye upon the compass, and his hand at the stern. Remember, these abilities you pray or study for, are the gifts of God, and as not to be had ordinarily without labour (for God is a God of order, and worketh not ordinarily but by ordinary means), so not to be had merely for the labour, for then should it not be so much a gift as a purchase. It was Simon Magus his error to think that the gift of God might be purchased with money (Acts viii. 20); and it hath a spice of his sin, and so may go for a kind of Simony, for a man to think these spiritual gifts of God may be purchased with labour. You may rise up early, and go to bed late, and study hard, and read much, and devour the fat and the marrow of the best authors, and when you have all done, unless God give a blessing unto your endeavours, be as thin and meagre in regard of true and useful learning, as Pharaoh's lean kine were after they had eaten the fat ones. (Gen. xli. 21.) It is God that both ministereth seed to the sower, and multiplieth the seed sown. The principal and the increase are both His. Bp. Sanderson (iii. 91).

— πρὸς τὸ συμφέρον] to the common profit. The word here is τὸ συμφέρον, which importeth such a kind of profit as redoundeth to community, such as before, in the tenth chapter, St. Paul professeth himself to have sought after. Not seeking mine own profit (he meaneth not only his own), but the profit of the many that they may be saved (1 Cor. x. 33). The main and essential difference between the graces of sanctification and these graces of edification is that those, though they would be made profitable unto others also, yet were principally intended for the proper good of the owner; but these, though they would be used for the owner's good also, yet were principally intended for the profit of others. You see, then, what a strong obligation lieth upon every man that hath received the Spirit, conferre aliquid in publicum, to cast his gift into the common treasury of the Church, to employ his good parts and spiritual graces so as they may some way or other be profitable to his brethren and fellow-servants in Church and Commonwealth. It is an old received Canon, "Beneficium propter officium." Bp. Sanderson (iii. p. 100).

Συμφέρον properly is collatitium, where there be a great many; bring every one his stock, and lay them together, and make them a common bank for them all. Just as do the members in the natural body. Every one confers his several gift, office, and work to the general benefit of the whole. Even as they did in the Law. Some offered gold, and others silk, others linen, and some goats' hair; and all to the furniture of the Tabernacle. And semblably we too lay together all the graces, places, works that we have, and employ them to the advancement of the common faith, and to the setting forward of the common salvation. (1 Cor. x. 33.)

And into this, as into the main cistern, do all these "divisions," "manifestations," and all, run and empty themselves. All gifts, offices, works are for this. Yea, the blessed Trinity itself, in their dividing, do all aim at this. And this attained, all will be to Pax in terris, the quiet and peaceable ordering of things here on earth; and to Gloria in excelsis, the high pleasure of Almighty God. Bp. Andrewes (iii. p. 400).

8. σοφίας—γνώσεως] "Sapientia magis in longum, latum, profundum et altum penetrat, quam cognitio. Cognitio est quasi visûs. Sapientia visûs, cum sapore. Cognitio rerum agendarum, sapientia rerum æternarum." Bengel.

10. διακρίσεις πνευμάτων] Cp. 1 John iv. 1—3.

— γένη γλωσσῶν] Kinds of foreign tongues. Cp. xii. 28, γένη γλωσσῶν, and xiv. 10, γένη φωνῶν,—the only passages where the word γένος occurs in the plural number in the New Testament.

As to the signification of γένος, kind, see Matt. xiii. 47, where it is applied to kinds of fishes; and Matt. xvii. 21. Mark ix. 29, where it is used to describe a particular sort of spiritual possession and agency; and it is used by the LXX frequently for Heb. מִין (min), as Gen. i. 11, 12. 21. 24, 25.

Γλῶσσαι, as used in the New Testament, are foreign tongues as distinguished from the vernacular language of the speaker.

This is the uniform exposition of all Christian antiquity, here, and Acts ii. 4, where see note, and the excellent remarks of Valck. here, who observes, that wherever the word γλῶσσαι occurs in this Epistle, it signifies foreign or strange tongues ("linguas peregrinas vel barbaras"); and that all St. Paul's reasoning on the subject in ch. xiv. is grounded on this sense of the word. See also note above on Acts x. 44—46.

In the present passage, the words γένη γλωσσῶν are explained by ἰδιότητες διαλέκτων in Glossar. Albert.; and Eustath. (ad Il. α, p. 72) interprets the word γλῶσσα by ἀπεξενωμένη διάλεκτος, a strange dialect. St. Paul (says Valck.) distinguishes here between γένη γλωσσῶν, kinds of foreign tongues, and ἑρμηνείαν γλωσσῶν, interpretation of foreign tongues.

Many of the Corinthian Christians had the χάρισμα, or gift of speaking in foreign tongues. But they abused this divine gift for vain display. St. Paul corrects this abuse, and severely censures their ostentation, particularly in the thirteenth and fourteenth chapters, where he says, v. 2, "If any man (i. e. in his own city) speaks with a γλῶσσα, or foreign tongue, he speaks to God, for no one hears, i. e. understands him;" and in v. 3, St. Paul contrasts such a man with one who προφητεύει, prophesies or preaches,—that is, who expounds in easy, intelligible language, the oracles of God, or declares His will to the hearers.

S. Jerome (ad Hebibiam, Vol. iv. p. 177), commenting on this passage, speaks of the Gift of Tongues here mentioned, as a fulfilment of Christ's promise to His disciples, and as a continuation of the miracle of Pentecost, i. e. of the Gift of Tongues. (See on Acts ii. 4—6.) And he says that the Apostle St. Paul, who preached the Gospel from Jerusalem to Illyricum, and who was eager to travel from Rome to Spain, thanks God that he speaks with tongues more than they all (1 Cor. xiv. 18): "qui enim multis gentibus annunciaturus erat, multarum linguarum acceperat gratiam." See below on Rom. i. 14.

11. ἐνεργεῖ] in-works. The Holy Spirit is from the Father and the Son. Christ sent the Holy Spirit, and the Holy Spirit works in every member of Christ's body, and in the whole body itself. Cyril. See above on v. 6.

— τὸ ἓν καὶ τὸ αὐτὸ Πνεῦμα] the one and selfsame Spirit. The Spirit is said to divide gifts according to His pleasure, which surely is an attribute not merely of a Person, but of one who is Omnipotent. Bp. Middleton, p. 456; and so Chrys., quoted by Pearson on the Creed, Art. viii. p. 587. Cp. Heb. ii. 4.

12—22. Καθάπερ τὸ σῶμα] A passage imitated by Clement, Bishop of Rome, writing soon after St. Paul to the same Church, that of Corinth, c. 37: λάβωμεν τὸ σῶμα ἡμῶν, ἡ κεφαλὴ δίχα τῶν ποδῶν οὐδέν ἐστιν, οὕτως οὐδὲ οἱ πόδες δίχα τῆς κεφαλῆς, (see below, v. 21), τὰ δὲ ἐλάχιστα μέλη τοῦ σώματος ἡμῶν ἀναγκαῖα καὶ εὔχρηστά εἰσιν ὅλῳ τῷ σώματι, ἀλλὰ πάντα συμπνεῖ, καὶ ὑποταγῇ μιᾷ χρῆται εἰς τὸ σώζεσθαι ὅλον τὸ σῶμα· σωζέσθω οὖν ὅλον τὸ σῶμα ἡμῶν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, καὶ ὑποτασσέσθω ἕκαστος τῷ πλησίον αὐτοῦ, καθὼς καὶ ἐτέθη ἐν τῷ χαρίσματι αὐτοῦ.

12. τοῦ σώματος] Elz. adds τοῦ ἑνὸς, not found in the best MSS.

By one Spirit we were all baptized into one body, and were all made to drink into one Spirit. That is to say, by one and the same Spirit before spoken of (vv. 3, 4. 7—9. 11) we are in Baptism made one mystical body of Christ, and we were all admitted to drink of the sacramental cup in the Eucharist, whereby the same Spirit has united us, yet more perfectly, to Christ our Head in the same mystical body.

St. Paul's design was to set forth the invisible union of Christians, and to represent the several ties by which they were bound together. He knew that the Eucharist was a strong cement of that mystical union, as well as the other Sacrament; for he had himself declared as much, by saying elsewhere, we being many are one body, being all partakers of that one bread (x. 17). It was therefore very natural here again to take notice of the Eucharist, when he was enumerating the bonds of union amongst them, particularly the Sacrament of Baptism, which would obviously lead to the mentioning this other Sacrament. Accordingly, he has briefly and elegantly made mention of this other in the words made to drink into one Spirit. Where made to drink but in the Eucharist? He had formerly signified the mystical union under the emblem of one loaf; and now he chooses to signify the same again under the emblem of one cup —an emblem wherein Ignatius, within fifty years after, seems to have followed him (ἓν ποτήριον εἰς ἕνωσιν τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ. Ignat. ad Philadelph. cap. 4); both belonging to one and the same Eucharist, both referring to one and the same mystical Head. Waterland (vii. p. 269).

23. τούτοις τιμὴν περισσοτέραν περιτίθεμεν] we invest them with more especial power: particularly in covering and clothing them, as is suggested by the word περιτίθεμεν. Theophyl.

24. συνεκέρασε] A beautiful expression, intimating the union of all the members fused, and, as it were, mingled, fused together, as liquids, in one compound.

the body, had been made, even by heathens, an argument against discord. See the noted Apologue of Menenius Agrippa, in Livy, ii. 32.

28. πρῶτον ἀποστόλους, δεύτερον προφήτας] See on Acts xiii. 1, and Eph. iv. 11, where the order is, Apostles, Prophets, Evangelists.

For the due understanding of these passages, it must be observed, that St. Paul is speaking of charismata, special endowments or gifts, for the edification of the Church. He is not describing Orders of Ministers appointed to serve permanently in it;

The neglect of this distinction has caused much confusion in the exposition of these passages, and has occasioned much controversy as to the regimen of the Church;

It may therefore be worth while to remind the reader of what has been well said on this point by Richard Hooker (V. lxxviii. 6, 7).

He shows there and elsewhere that there are but three Orders of Ministers in the Church, duly settled and constituted, viz. Bishops, succeeding the Apostles in their ordinary functions (not in their extraordinary gifts), Priests, and Deacons; and he says,

Touching Prophets, they were such men as having otherwise learned the Gospel, had from above bestowed upon them a special gift of expounding Scriptures, and of foreshowing things to come. Of this sort was Agabus (Acts xxi. 10; xi. 27), and besides him in Jerusalem sundry others, who notwithstanding are not therefore to be reckoned with the Clergy; because no man's gifts or qualities can make him a minister of holy things unless Ordination do give him power. And we no where find Prophets to have been made by Ordination, but all whom the Church did ordain were either to serve as Presbyters or as Deacons.

Evangelists were Presbyters of principal sufficiency, whom the Apostles sent abroad, and used as agents in ecclesiastical affairs wheresoever they saw need. They whom we find to have been named in Scripture Evangelists, as Ananias (Acts ix. 17), Apollos (Acts xviii. 24), Timothy (2 Tim. iv. 5. 9. 1 Tim. iii. 15; v. 19; ii. 7), and others, were thus employed.

And concerning Evangelists afterwards in Trajan's days, the history ecclesiastical noteth (Euseb. iii. 38), that many of the Apostles' disciples and scholars which were then alive, and did with singular love of wisdom affect the heavenly Word of God, to show their willing minds in executing that which Christ first of all required at the hands of men, they sold their possessions, gave them to the poor, and betaking themselves to travel, undertook the labour of Evangelists, that is, they painfully preached Christ, and delivered the Gospel to them who as yet had never heard the doctrine of faith. Hooker.

With regard to διδάσκαλοι, mentioned here and in Eph. iv. 11, the word does not describe any separate order in the Church, but denotes a special gift and quality distinguishing some persons in the Church. Thus the Apostle St. Paul himself was eminently a διδάσκαλος, and he is twice called by that title by himself; διδάσκαλος ἐθνῶν, doctor Gentium, 1 Tim. ii. 7. 2 Tim. i. 11, and in both these passages the word διδάσκαλος, or doctor, is associated with ἀπόστολος and κήρυξ. He was sent to do the work of a preacher (κήρυξ), and was ordained to the degree of an Apostle (ἀπόστολος), and was endowed with supernatural gifts and special revelations to be a διδάσκαλος. Compare Acts xiii. 1, where διδάσκαλοι are joined with προφῆται, and where Paul and Barnabas are already reckoned among Prophets and Teachers, προφῆται καὶ διδάσκαλοι, before they had been set apart and empowered by laying on of hands in Ordination to the degree and office of Apostles.

— δυνάμεις] From persons he passes to things: thus intimating that Apostles, Prophets, Teachers, are themselves χαρίσματα, free gifts and graces from God. Hence he uses the word ἔθωκεν, 'God gave some Apostles.' Eph. iv. 11. They are not to be regarded as sources of grace, or to be raised up one against the other as heads of parties; and that none may boast of themselves, whatever may be their graces; for what are these graces but gifts of God, and what hast thou which thou hast not received? (1 Cor. iv. 7.)

— ἀντιλήψεις] helps; e. g. of the feeble, sick, and needy. See Acts xx. 35, ἀντιλαμβάνεσθαι (to take hold of in order to support) τῶν ἀσθενούντων. He thus prepares the way for his appeal in behalf of the poor saints at Jerusalem; and he teaches, that the ἀντίληψις of such persons is not only a duty, but a grace; and so he calls it 2 Cor. viii. 1. 4. 6, 7. 19. Cp. 1 Cor. xvi. 3.

— κυβερνήσεις] governments: as in pastoral charges of diocesan episcopacy (the case of Timothy and Titus), and of the presbyters ordained to settled cures. Acts xiv. 23; xx. 17. Tit. i. 5.

— γένη γλωσσῶν] kinds of tongues. Observe, that gift in which the Corinthians most gloried is placed last.

29. δυνάμεις] The accusative case after ἔχουσι. Have all the power of working miracles?

31. Ζηλοῦτε] covet earnestly. See on Gal. iv. 17.

— καθ' ὑπερβολὴν ὁδὸν δείκνυμι] I am about to point out to you an ὁδὸν ὑπερ-έχουσαν (Theophl.),—a transcendant road; for as S. Clement says, imitating this passage of St. Paul (ad Cor. 49), τὸ ὕψος εἰς ὃ ἀνάγει ἡ ἀγάπη ἀνεκδιήγητόν ἐστιν, 'the height to which charity leads is ineffable.'

On the idiom ἔτι καθ' ὑπερβολήν, see 2 Cor. i. 8; iv. 17. Gal. i. 13. Winer, § 54, p. 2413. Cp. 2 Cor. xi. 23.

— ὑπερβολήν] This word, from ὑπερβάλλω, to shoot beyond, indicates the figure of speech which St. Paul uses. The Corinthians imagined that they could ascend to heaven by a manifestation of spiritual gifts, and they despised the way of Charity as too lowly for their aspirations. They have left it for the devious paths of 'divisions' and dissensions (see i. 10, and xi. 8), and imagine themselves to be spiritual (cp. iii. 1) because they are rich in supernatural gifts, which they love to display in a vainglorious spirit, instead of using that and all other gifts to the one end for which they are given by God,—that of edification. St. Paul teaches them, that their estimate of the respective value of spiritual gifts is very erroneous (xiv. 1—3); that it is a childish vanity to prefer the empty ostentation of speaking foreign tongues in their own domestic assemblies (when no foreigners were present) to the more useful gift of exposition of Scripture; and he therefore exhorts them to covet earnestly the better gifts. (ζηλοῦτε τὰ χαρίσματα τὰ κρείττονα.) He tells them also that he is going to point out to them a loftier way, a Way which transcends all other ways; a Way which they thought to be lowly, but which he shows them to be lofty; a Way which will lead them up to higher degrees of spiritual elevation, and to more glorious spiritual prospects than could be attained by any of those gifts which they most vaunted; a Way which will teach them how to use aright all those spiritual gifts, and without which Way all those gifts are worthless; a Way which will remain when those gifts have vanished; a Way which will lead to Heaven, and abide for ever in Heaven,—the Way of Charity.

CH. XIII. 1. Ἀγάπην] "Dilectio." Tertullian, de Patient. 12, where he well says that this Apostolic description of Charity or Love is uttered "totis Spiritûs viribus;" and compare his treatise contra Marcion. (v. 8). Ἀγάπη is rendered 'Caritas' by the Vulgate, which, however, almost always renders ἀγαπᾶν by diligere, and φιλεῖν by amare. See Buttmann ap. Lachmann, N. T. p. xlv, and above on John xxi. 15.

— γέγονα χ. ἠ. ἢ κ. ἀ.] "factus sum." I have become already, by my own fault, mere brass that rings, or a cymbal that clangs, without soul or sense, "vox et prætereà nihil." The words Δωδωναῖον χαλκεῖον were proverbial, and Apion, the grammarian, was called "Cymbalum orbis," for his garrulity (Sueton. de Grammaticis). The metaphor was suitable to Corinth, famous for its works in brass, "Ephyreïa æra" (Virg. Georg. ii. 464. Joseph. Vit. 13, and Winer, R. W. B. ii. 89). By their empty γλωσσολαλία the Corinthians reduced themselves from rational beings, living instruments (ἔμψυχα ὄργανα) of God, to mere κύμβαλα and κρόταλα (Aristoph. Nub. 448), such as were wrought in their own metallic forges.

2. τὰ μυστήρια πάντα] Although I know the mysteries, all of them, and all the γνῶσις, and have all the faith. On the use of πᾶς, see Winer, § 18, p. 101.

3. ἐὰν ψωμίσω] if I reduce to provisions, ψωμία, fragments (from ψάω) dipped into the dish (John xiii. 25); and because bread was used for this purpose, hence in modern Greek, ψωμί = bread.

ψωμίζω is found in LXX, with the accusative of the thing given to be eaten, as here, in Deut. viii. 3. 16, ψωμίσας τὸ μάννα, Lam. iii. 16, ἐψώμισέ με σποδόν, and in Dan. iv. 22 (Theodot.), χόρτον ψωμιοῦσί σε. Cp. Dan. v. 21. The accusative of the person fed occurs Aristoph. Lysist. 19, and in Rom. xii. 20, ψώμιζε αὐτόν. Cp. Winer, § 2.

— ἐὰν παραδῶ τὸ σῶμά μου] If I give up my body to be burned. So Ignatius (frag. ii. ap. Chrys. Hom. ad Ephes. Epist. xi.; see Jacobson, p. 493), "Not even the blood of Martyrdom can blot out the sin of schism;" and after him, Cyprian (Ep. 55), "quale crimen, quod martyrio non potest expiari." So Augustine (Serm. 138), "Ecce venitur ad passionem, ad sanguinis fusionem, ad corporis incensionem: et tamen nihil prodest, quia Caritas deest. Adde Caritatem, prosunt omnia; detrahe Caritatem, nihil prosunt cætera. Quale bonum est Caritas!" And he says, "Non habent Dei Caritatem, qui non amant Ecclesiæ unitatem." A solemn caution against Divisions and Dissensions in the Church.

— καυθήσωμαι] A, B have καυχήσωμαι, which is worth notice, as showing that the best uncial MSS. are not always to be depended upon, and sometimes are blemished with errors.

— οὐδὲν ὠφελοῦμαι] I am profited nothing. "Qui deseruerit unitatem, violat Caritatem, et quisquis violat Caritatem, quodlibet magnum habeat, ipse nihil est. Si linguis hominum et Angelorum loquatur, si sciat omnia sacramenta, si habeat omnem fidem, ut montes tranferat, si distribuat omnia sua pauperibus, si corpus suum tradat ut ardeat, Caritatem autem non habeat, nihil est, nihil ei prodest. Universa inutiliter habet, qui unum illud, per quod universis utatur, non habet. Amplectamur itaque Caritatem, studentes servare unitatem spiritûs in vinculo pacis (Eph. iv. 3). Non nos seducant, qui corporalem separationem facientes ab Ecclesiæ frumentis toto orbe diffusis, spirituali sacrilegio separantur." Augustine (Serm. 88). A salutary warning, whenever intellectual and spiritual gifts, and religious acts of self-devotion are proposed as objects for admiration and imitation, irrespectively of those principles of Unity and Charity, which are necessary to make them acceptable to Him who is the Author of Peace and Lover of Concord in His Church.

4. οὐ ζηλοῖ] envieth not—as Cain envied Abel; and his brethren envied Joseph. (Origen.)

— οὐ περπερεύεται] "non gloriatur," does not show off itself by word or deed, in a restless and vain-glorious eagerness for display; does not put itself forward with professions of superior knowledge and skill. (Origen.) It is rendered by Tertullian (de Patient. c. 12), "non proterovum sapit." It is used by Cicero (ad Att. i. 14) concerning himself, "Dii boni, quomodo ἐπερπερευσάμην novo auditori, Pompeio;" and Polybius (Exc. Leg. 122) applies the word πέρπερος to a vain, pompous, and loquacious pedant, and Schol. (ad Soph. Antig. 33) connects it with περίλαλος. See Wetstein here; and from the fact of its denoting excess, it may be derived from the root περί, and may be connected with the Latin perperam. (Valck.)

5. οὐ λογίζεται τὸ κακόν] does not reckon up, and impute the evil which it suffers; does not set it down and record it, as in a bill, against the person who does the wrong; but forgets it, and overcomes it with good. Cp. Theodoret, who says, συγγινώσκει τοῖς ἐπταισμένοις. As to this use of λογίζομαι, see 2 Cor. v. 19, μὴ λογιζόμενος αὐτοῖς τὰ παραπτώματα.

6. οὐ χαίρει ἐπὶ τῇ ἀδικίᾳ, συγχαίρει δὲ τῇ ἀληθείᾳ] well rendered by Vulg. (as far as the Latin language allowed), "non gaudet super Iniquitate, congaudet autem Veritate." Charity does not rejoice in the Unrighteousness which prevails in the world—as evil spirits and evil men do (Rom. i. 32. Hos. vii. 3)—but she rejoices with the Truth, especially the saving Truth of Him Who is the Truth. She takes pleasure in all that the Truth achieves and endures now, and in all that she will enjoy hereafter.

As to the contrast here between ἡ ἀδικία and ἡ ἀλήθεια, or Christian Truth, see John vii. 18, and Rom. i. 8, and 2 Thess. ii. 10. 12, ἵνα κριθῶσι πάντες οἱ μὴ πιστεύσαντες τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, ἀλλ' εὐδοκήσαντες ἐν τῇ ἀδικίᾳ.

7. πάντα στέγει] βαστάζει, ὑπομένει (Hesych.), "sustinet, tolerat" (Tertullian, de Pat. 12). See 1 Thess. iii. 1. 5. 1 Cor. ix. 12. And on this verse and the context, compare the description of Ἀγάπη by S. Clement, writing also to the Corinthians (c. 49), Ἀγάπη πάντα ἀνέχεται, πάντα μακροθυμεῖ· οὐδὲν βάναυσον ἐν ἀγάπῃ, οὐδὲν ὑπερήφανον, ἀγάπη σχίσμα οὐκ ἔχει, οὐ στασιάζει, πάντα ποιεῖ ἐν ὁμονοίᾳ· δίχα ἀγάπης οὐδὲν εὐάρεστον τῷ Θεῷ.

8. καταργηθήσονται] they will be reduced to a state of ἀέργεια, or inoperation, because their ἔργον will be done; they will therefore be no more needed. On this use of καταργεῖν, see on Luke xiii. 7. Gal. iii. 17; v. 4. 2 Cor. iii. 7. Rom. iii. 31. The ἔργον of ἀγάπη will remain when all χαρίσματα, and even χάριτες, will be κατηργημένα; and her ἔργον will be τέλειον, and its τελειότης will have no τέλος, or end. The Latin word corresponding to καταργῶ is evacuo. So Tertullian (de Patient. c. 12), "Dilectio nunquam excidit; cætera evacuabuntur;" and so the Latin translation of Irenæus, who says admirably (iv. 12), Paulus inquit, omnibus cæteris evacuatis, manere Fidem, Spem, Dilectionem, majorem autem esse omnium Dilectionem, eam verò perficere perfectum hominem, etenim qui diligit Deum perfectum esse in hoc ævo et futuro: nunquam enim desinemus diligentes Deum, sed quanto plus eum intuiti sumus, tanto plus Eum diligemus.

In Lege igitur et Evangelio quum sit primum et maximum præceptum diligere Dominum Deum ex toto corde, dehinc simile illi diligere proximum sicut seipsum, unus et idem ostenditur Legis et Evangelii conditor. Consummatæ enim vitæ præcepta in utroque Testamento cum sint eadem, eundem ostenderunt Deum, qui particularia quidem præcepta apta utrisque præcepit, sed eminentiora et summa (τὴν καθ' ὑπερβολὴν ὁδὸν τῆς ἀγάπης) sine quibus salvari non est, in utroque eadem suasit.

9. Ἐκ μέρους] ex parte cognoscimus, et ex parte prophetamus. (Iren. v. 7.)

12. Βλέπομεν ἄρτι δι' ἐσόπτρου ἐν αἰνίγματι] We now behold by means of a mirror objects revealed in "ænigma per speculum et per ænigmata." (Iren. iv. 9.) St. Paul alludes to Num. xii. 8, where δι' αἰνιγμάτων is opposed to ἐν εἴδει, and is explained by it, στόμα κατὰ στόμα λαλήσω αὐτῷ (to Moses) ἐν εἴδει καὶ οὐ δι' αἰνιγμάτων.

St. Paul does not use the word δίοπτρον, but ἔσοπτρον, a glass to be looked into, and not a glass to be looked through; and δι' ἐσόπτρου does not mean, through a glass, in the sense of looking through it, unless perhaps it may be said that inasmuch as the object reflected in the glass appears to be behind the glass, so the spectator may be said to see it through the glass. Cp. Winer, p. 340. But it signifies, by means of a looking-glass or mirror (so xiv. 9, διὰ τῆς γλώσσης: cp. Winer, § 47, p. 399), in which heavenly things are represented to us, not distinctly, but dimly and ἐν αἰνίγματι, cp. Eurip. Rhes. 5, i. e. αἰνικτηρίως, αἰνιγματωδῶς, enigmatically opposed to plainly. Æschyl. Prom. 852. 970. Agam. 1154. Compare 2 Cor. iii. 18, τὴν δόξαν Κυρίου κατοπτριζόμενοι, and James i. 23, κατανοοῦνται τὸ πρόσωπον ἐν ἐσόπτρῳ. The metaphor would be well understood by the Corinthians, because the ancient mirrors were (not of glass, but) of polished metal or brass (see Xenophon, Symp. 7, who calls a mirror χαλκεῖον), for working in which the Corinthians were famous. See Winer, R. W. B. art. Spiegel, p. 496, and the Anthology passim.

We now see with the eye of Faith and Hope, and behold the divine Attributes reflected in the mirror of His Works, of His Word, and of His Sacraments, but hereafter we shall see God Himself face to face.

The Present things are a shadow of the Future. In Holy Baptism we see a type of the Resurrection; but hereafter we shall see the Resurrection itself. Now we see the symbols of Christ's Body; hereafter we shall see that Body itself, face to face. Theodoret.

God hath revealed Himself and His good pleasure towards us in His holy Word sufficiently to save our souls, if we will believe; but not to solve all our doubts, if we will dispute. The Scriptures being written for our sakes, it was needful they should be fitted to our capacities; and therefore the Mysteries contained therein are set forth by such resemblances as we are capable of, but far short of the nature and excellency of the things themselves. The best knowledge we can have of them here, is but per speculum (1 Cor. xiii. 12) and in ænigmate, as it were in a glass, and by way of riddle; darkly both God teacheth us by the eye in His creatures: that is, per speculum, as it were by a glass, and that but a dim one, wherein we may read τὸ γνωστὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, some of the invisible things of God (Rom. i. 19, 20), but written in small and outworn characters, scarce legible by us. He teacheth us also by the ear, in the preaching of His holy Word; but that in ænigmate, altogether by riddles, dark riddles. That there should be three distinct Persons in one Essence, and two distinct Natures in one Person; that Virginity should conceive, Eternity be born, Immortality die, and Mortality rise from death to life; that there should be a finite and mortal God, or an infinite and immortal Man; what are all these, and many other more of like intricacy, but so many riddles? Bp. Sanderson (i. 234).

— ἐπιγνώσομαι] more expressive than γνώσομαι. See on Luke i. 4. I shall fully know and love as I have been fully known and loved by Him. Cp. xvi. 18, ἐπιγινώσκετε τοιούτους, Matt. xi. 27, ἐπιγινώσκει τὸν υἱὸν, and see the use of the word ἐπίγνωσις by St. Paul in Col. i. 9, 10; ii. 2; iii. 10. Philem. 6. Eph. i. 17; iv. 13. Tit. i. 1. 2 Pet. i. 2, 3. 8.

13. Νυνὶ δὲ μένει—τὰ τρία ταῦτα] But now, in this present state of being (as contradistinguished from hereafter; see on xiv. 6), abide these Three Graces, that is, these three are permanent in this world, which the supernatural χαρίσματα are not.

This is said to show their dignity. How great, therefore, a fortiori, is the dignity of Love, which will survive the two other Graces (see Rom. viii. 24. Heb. xi. 1, and Chrys. here), which survive those glorious Gifts of Tongues, and Miracles, and Prophecy—when Faith will be swallowed up in Sight, and Hope be absorbed in Fruition!

On the subject of this Chapter, see the affecting Sermon of S. Augustine, delivered by him in his old age (Serm. 350), and forming an appropriate sequel to the narrative concerning the beloved disciple, St. John (S. Jerome in Galat. vi.), that in his old age he was carried to the Church, where his Sermon was, "My dear Children, Love one another."

CH. XIV. 1. Διώκετε τὴν ἀγάπην] Follow after Charity. The metaphor is from the Stadium. Make Charity your aim and end (σκοπός) in the whole race of your Christian life. Cp. Phil. iii. 14.

Having described the character of Charity, St. Paul now proceeds to apply what he has said;

The main principle to be borne in mind throughout this chapter is, that the use of all supernatural χαρίσματα, or extraordinary spiritual Gifts (which were probationary talents and trusts that might be abused, and were often abused, by those who received them), is to be regulated by the great abiding Christian χάρις, or Charity.

The main work of Charity is Edification,—the building up of the Church, or body of Christ. See viii. 1, ἡ γνῶσις φυσιοῖ, ἡ δὲ ἀγάπη οἰκοδομεῖ. And therefore throughout this chapter he is perpetually inculcating the words edify and edification. See vv. 3—5. 12. 17. 26.

With this clue in our hands, we shall find no difficulty in following the Apostle's meaning through the chapter, which otherwise would be intricate and perplexing, and which has been unhappily embarrassed and obscured by novel meanings assigned in some expositions to the word γλῶσσα, Tongue, used by St. Paul; which never means an incoherent jargon, or spasmodic utterance, or confused gibberish, but simply a foreign language not understood by the hearers (see above on xii. 10, and Acts ii. 4; x. 46; xix. 6), but uttered with full consciousness of its meaning by the speaker. See xiv. 2. 14—16.

This is the interpretation of the ancient Expositors;

In primitive times, believers were supernaturally gifted with the power of speaking foreign tongues. But many abused the gift. What was the benefit of speaking at Corinth in the language of Scythia, Persia, and Egypt? He who did this spoke not to man, but to God. St. Paul reprehends this vain-glory, and teaches the right use of the gift. Theodoret. See also Chrysostom on xii. 1.

— ζηλοῦτε δὲ τὰ πνευματικά] Earnestly covet and cherish spiritual gifts. See above, note on 1 Thess. v. 20, and cp. below, v. 39; and on the sense of ζηλοῦτε see Gal. iv. 17.

— ἵνα προφητεύητε] in order that you may prophesy; that is, may declare or expound God's Word. See above, 1 Thess. v. 20. 1 Cor. xi. 4, and below, Rom. xii. 6.

2. Ὁ λαλῶν γλώσσῃ] He that speaketh with a foreign tongue, speaketh not to men, but to God; for no one who is present understands him; but in his spirit, or inner man (see on v. 14) he speaks mysteries,—things hidden, not clear to the hearers.

If a disciple has the gift of speaking to one person in the tongue of the Medes, and to another in that of the Elamites, and then were to go and speak in these tongues to the Jewish Synagogues, or [1] to the congregations of Greeks, concerning which the Apostle is here speaking, what use would it be? who would listen to him? God only, Who knows all things, would understand him. S. Cyril.

ἀκούω, like the Hebrew שָׁמַע (shama), often signifies in the LXX, not simply to hear, but to perceive and understand: as S. Jerome says (in prolog. Ioelis): "Auditus in Scripturis Sacris non est iste qui ad aures sonat, sed qui in corde percipitur."

5. εἰ μὴ διερμηνεύῃ] unless he (the speaker) interpret what he says into the vernacular language of the hearers (see v. 13); as was usually done in reading the Hebrew Scriptures, by means of oral and written translations, Paraphrases, or Targums. See Nehem. viii. 4—8. Hottinger, Thesaur. Philol. p. 251—260.

6. Νῦν δὲ, ἀδελφοί] But now brethren, if I come to you, and by specifying myself I mean any one generally, if any one comes to you (see v. 14, and on vi. 12), now that you are brethren, and have renounced Heathenism, and do not now require to be converted to the faith by the miracle of tongues—.

He therefore means, that those who affected the use of foreign tongues at Corinth now, degraded their hearers to a heathen condition. See on vv. 21, 22.

For νῦν Elz. has νυνὶ here; and so some recent editions; but νῦν is in A, B, D*, F, G, and νυνὶ seems to be due to copyists, not fully understanding the argument of St. Paul; but even νυνὶ itself sometimes is expressive of time, see Rom. vi. 22; vii. 6. 17; xv. 23. 25, above xiii. 13.

— ἐὰν μὴ ὑμῖν λαλήσω] unless I speak to you in some edifying manner, either by revelation, or knowledge, or prophecy, or doctrine. What shall I profit you if I speak with tongues? and what shall I profit you, except I speak to your edification? On the use of ἐὰν μὴ, where the excepted case does not belong to the same class as those which are not excepted, see Luke iv. 26.

7. Ὅμως] Even the lifeless instruments fail of their office, unless they give a διαστολὴ, or distinct articulation of musical notes, by their sounds.

Winer (p. 488) connects ὅμως with ἐὰν, and construes it nevertheless.

St. Paul's argument is, It is required even of lifeless instruments that they should give a distinct utterance, a well-defined rhythm, and clearly expressed notes, ῥυθμὸν, ἐναρμόνιον ἦχον (Photius, Theodoret), by their voices. How else shall it be understood what that is which is designed to be played by their means? How shall it be understood whether it is a strain of Homer or of Pindar, or whether it is intended to be mournful or joyful?

What a tune is to the lifeless instrument, that sense is to the living instrument, the human Tongue.

If then the lifeless instrument ought to have a distinct significance in its utterance, how much more ought the living instrument to give forth intelligible sounds? If the former ought to play a well-defined tune, in order to delight the hearers in the Odëum or the Theatre, how much more ought the latter to utter what can be understood by those who seek for edification in the Church of God? But how can it do this, if it speak in a foreign language to those who understand it not?

8. ἐὰν ἄδηλον φ. σάλπιγξ δ., τ. π. ε. πόλεμον ;] if the trumpet give an unmeaning sound, who shall prepare himself for the battle? If it does not give the war-note, who will obey it? It must be hortatory and practical. It was eminently so in the history of the ancient Church. See the divine injunctions concerning the silver Trumpets, Num. x. 1—9, ἐὰν ἐξέλθητε εἰς πόλεμον, σημανεῖτε ταῖς σάλπιγξι.

Πόλεμος = battle in LXX. Ps. lxviii. 21. Job xxxviii. 23, and in N. T. Rev. ix. 9; xx. 8, and in the modern language of Greece to this day.

So in the spiritual battles of the Church against her ghostly enemies, unless the Preachers of the Gospel, who are commanded to "lift up their voice as a trumpet" (Isa. lviii. 1. Joel ii. 1), speak in a language which the people can understand and feel, who shall prepare for the spiritual conflict?

9. διὰ τῆς γλώσσης] by your tongue. Bp. Middleton.

10. Τοσαῦτα, εἰ τύχοι—ἄφωνον] There is perchance such a multitude of languages in the world (Roman, Scythian, and the rest. Chrysostom, Cyril), and nothing is without a language. Τοσαῦτα intimates that the diversities of languages in the world amount to such or such a number, and that a very great one, which the writer would specify if it could be counted, or if it were requisite for his argument that it should be specified. Compare τοσαῦτα, Luke xv. 29. John xii. 37. As to εἰ τύχοι, perchance, see xv. 37.

The best MSS. have εἰσὶν here. Elz. has ἐστὶν, and adds αὐτῶν without sufficient authority.

11. Ἐὰν οὖν] Since languages differ generally so much from one another, as has been said, if, therefore, I do not know the meaning of the language spoken, I shall be a foreigner to him who speaks, and he will be a foreigner to me.

As to the word βάρβαρος, a stranger, properly one who is not a Greek, see note on Acts xxviii. 2. Rom. i. 14. And with regard to ἐν ἐμοὶ, in my view, relatively to me, see vi. 2. Phil. ii. 7. Winer, § 48, p. 345.

Thus then St. Paul teaches the Corinthian Greeks, who gloried in their country and in their intellectual powers, and regarded all other nations as barbarous, that they degraded themselves into Barbarians, by speaking, in a Greek assembly, strange languages which none could understand.

12. ζηλωταὶ πνευμάτων] ye are zealous in behalf of your own spirits, and covet power over other men's spirits. See the use of πνεύματα, v. 32.

The πνεῦμα here is the higher spiritual element, the inner man (see vv. 14—16. 1 Thess. v. 23); and St. Paul's meaning is, that by speaking in a foreign language in the public assemblies of their own Church, they lost that spiritual communion between their own πνεῦμα, or inner man, and the πνεῦμα, or inner man, of their hearers, for which they professed to be zealous; and that they degraded the relation between themselves and their hearers to that of a mere bodily and carnal intercourse of unmeaning sounds.

On the sense of the word ζηλωτὴς, see on Gal. iv. 17, 18.

13. προσευχέσθω ἵνα διερμηνεύῃ] These words are capable of two senses, viz.

(1) Let him pray that he may be endued with the faculty of interpreting. (Bengel.) So ἵνα is used after προσεύχομαι, Mark xiv. 35. Phil. i. 9, where see the note of Ellicott, and Winer, pp. 299, 300;

(2) Let him pray with the design and purpose (not to display his own gift of speaking in a foreign tongue, but) to interpret. So Winer, § 53, p. 408. The reason of this is given in the following verse.

Accordingly, St. Paul in v. 28 does not allow a man to pray in a foreign tongue in the Church, but commands him to hold his peace (ἐὰν μὴ ᾖ διερμηνευτής), unless he have the faculty of expressing fluently in his own language what he was enabled by a supernatural charisma, or gift, to speak in a foreign tongue.

τὸ πνεῦμά μου προσεύχεται, ὁ δὲ νοῦς μου ἄκαρπός ἐστι. 15 g Τί οὖν ἐστι; προσεύξομαι τῷ πνεύματι, προσεύξομαι δὲ καὶ τῷ νοΐ· ψαλῶ τῷ πνεύματι, ψαλῶ δὲ καὶ τῷ νοΐ. 16 h Ἐπεὶ, ἐὰν εὐλογήσῃς τῷ πνεύματι, ὁ ἀναπληρῶν τὸν τόπον τοῦ ἰδιώτου πῶς ἐρεῖ τὸ ἀμὴν ἐπὶ τῇ σῇ εὐχαριστίᾳ, ἐπειδὴ τί λέγεις οὐκ οἶδε; 17 σὺ μὲν γὰρ καλῶς εὐχαριστεῖς, ἀλλ' ὁ ἕτερος οὐκ οἰκοδομεῖται.

18 Εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ πάντων ὑμῶν μᾶλλον γλώσσαις λαλῶν· 19 ἀλλ' ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ θέλω πέντε λόγους τῷ νοΐ μου λαλῆσαι, ἵνα καὶ ἄλλους κατηχήσω, ἢ μυρίους λόγους ἐν γλώσσῃ. 20 i Ἀδελφοὶ, μὴ παιδία γίνεσθε ταῖς φρεσίν· ἀλλὰ τῇ κακίᾳ νηπιάζετε, ταῖς δὲ φρεσὶ τέλειοι γίνεσθε.

An illiterate person might have a special gift of speaking in a foreign tongue: and the miraculous operation of the Spirit would be more striking in his case. The Apostles, we are expressly told, were ἀγράμματοι καὶ ἰδιῶται (Acts iv. 13), and yet spake in foreign tongues; and the miracle of Pentecost was more striking on that account. And therefore the people asked, "Are not all these who speak Galilæans?" (Acts ii. 7.)

But it would not follow that such a person would have the gift of expressing himself well in his own language, so as to edify such an audience as that at Corinth.

This verse therefore by no means gives any countenance to the notion that they who spake with γλῶσσαι (or foreign tongues) at Corinth were unconscious of what they said. And that notion is further refuted by what is said, v. 16, concerning the pronunciation of the blessing in the Holy Eucharist.

14. γλώσσῃ] in a foreign language. See on v. 1.

— τὸ πνεῦμά μου] my spirit, or the Spirit of any one (vi. 12; above, v. 6) who does what is so absurd.

My Spirit, or inner man, prays, but my understanding is unfruitful; it produces no fruit to others: it is barren.

15. προσεύξομαι] I will pray. He mentions what he himself will do, in order that they may do it.

— τῷ νοΐ] with my understanding: so that it may do its proper work of being fruitful to others. See v. 19, θέλω τῷ νοΐ μου λαλῆσαι, ἵνα καὶ ἄλλους κατηχήσω: and therefore I will pray with my spirit, or inner man (τῷ πνεύματι), i. e. fervently: but I will also pray with my νοῦς, or understanding, whose proper function it is to fructify and fertilize the minds of others by interpretation, and other similar intelligible communications with them.

Therefore I will not pray γλώσσῃ, i. e. in a foreign language.

16. εὐλογήσῃς] In the Holy Communion. This is addressed to a Teacher at Corinth, to a Minister of the Church. See x. 16, and next note.

— ὁ ἀναπληρῶν τὸν τόπον τοῦ ἰδιώτου—εὐχαριστίᾳ] he who fills the place of the private person (see on Acts iv. 13) or layman (Theodoret, Chrys.), as distinct from thee the public λειτουργὸς, or Minister officiating in the Church, particularly at the Εὐχαριστία or Lord's Supper,—how shall he be able to say the Amen at thy Consecration of the Elements?

The Apostle thus intimates that the Laity or faithful have their τόπος, place, or office, to fill in Church-assemblies as much as the Minister has his; and that to pray in a foreign language is an infringement on their rights, as disqualifying them for their duties, and depriving them of their privileges.

Compare the use of τόπος in Clement R. 40, τοῖς ἱερεῦσιν ἴδιος ὁ τόπος ἐπίκειται· ὁ λαϊκὸς ἄνθρωπος λαϊκοῖς προστάγμασιν δέδεται.

The best comment on these words is supplied by S. Justin Martyr, describing the public assemblies of the Primitive Church (Apol. 85), where he says, "Bread is brought to the President (τῷ προεστῶτι) of the Assembly, and a cup of water and wine, and having received it, he puts up praise and thanksgiving to the Father of all, through the Name of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. . . . And when he has finished his prayer and thanksgiving (εὐχαριστίαν) all the people with an acclamation say Amen." And the food itself thus blessed is called the Eucharist; and in chap. 87 he repeats the words as to the putting up of the Prayers by the Minister, and acclamation of the Amen by the people. For the original words, see above on x. 16.

The word Εὐχαριστία is used to signify the Holy Communion also by S. Ignatius, Phil. 4, Smyrn. 6.

On the use of the Amen in the Early Church, see Tertullian de Spectaculis, c. 25, and the observations of Valesius in Euseb. vi. 43, and in vii. 9, which form an excellent exposition of this passage.

The following remarks are from a careful investigator of primitive Christian Antiquity;

On one occasion St. Paul, when speaking of the administration of the Sacrament, uses the phrase, "The cup of blessing which we bless" (1 Cor. x. 16), implying a Prayer of Consecration; and the same inference may be drawn yet more certainly from another passage in the same Epistle, the irreverence of the Corinthians leading the Apostle to touch on the subject repeatedly, and thus to afford us information on it, which but for that might have been lost, "Else when thou shalt bless with the Spirit, how shall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned (τοῦ ἰδιώτου) say Amen at thy giving of thanks (or at thy Eucharist, ἐπὶ τῇ σῇ εὐχαριστίᾳ), seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest?" (1 Cor. xiv. 16,) where the Apostle contemplates the celebration of the Eucharist in a language unknown to the congregation, in which case he says, How is the blessing pronounced by the Minister over the Bread and the Wine to be understood by the People, and the several parts of the Liturgy to be properly recognized, so that they may themselves take their share in it?

For in the terms "when thou shalt bless" and "at thy giving of thanks" there is comprised, almost beyond a doubt, a service of considerable detail. Justin Martyr, who lived so very soon after the Apostles, actually affirms as much; the officiating Minister, according to him, offering up prayers and thanksgivings at much length. And S. Chrysostom evidently supposes this passage of the Apostle to have a reference to such a formulary then in use; "for," says he, in commenting on the text of the Epistle to the Corinthians, "what the Apostle means is this, if you bless in a strange language, the layman not knowing what you are uttering, and not able to interpret it, cannot add the Amen; for, not hearing 'the world without end,' which is the conclusion (of the prayers), he does not repeat the Amen." Professor J. J. Blunt (Lectures, p. 33).

18. Θεῷ] Eliz. adds μου, not found in the best MSS.

— γλώσσαις λαλῶν] speaking with tongues. A, D, E, F, G have the singular, γλώσσῃ, which has been received by some Editors. The plural is found in the Syriac, Æthiopic, and Arabic Versions, and so Origen, Chrys., Theodoret, and other Greek Fathers.

A person speaking on a particular occasion in a foreign tongue, might well be said γλώσσῃ λαλεῖν (as in vv. 2. 13, 14). But the general faculty of speaking in foreign languages, which St. Paul possessed, could hardly be described by that expression. Cp. xii. 30; xiii. 1; xiv. 5, 6. 23. 39.

St. Paul the Apostle of the Gentiles (Rom. xi. 13) had special need of the faculty of speaking in various foreign languages. See Jerome, quoted above, on xii. 10, and notes on Acts xiii. 15, xiv. 11, and xxviii. 4, and Rom. i. 14.

The participle λαλῶν here (which has been altered in some copies to λαλῶ) denotes the cause of his thankfulness. See Acts xvi. 34, ἠγαλλιάσατο πεπιστευκώς. Winer, § 45, p. 309.

The sense is, Do not think that I am disparaging a gift because I do not possess it; I return thanks to God (perhaps there is a reference here to the εὐχαριστία just mentioned), speaking in foreign tongues more than you all. I bless God in more languages than you all. Him I bless, speaking in these languages. I bless Him in speaking, and by speaking, and for the power of speaking in these languages. St. Paul might have celebrated the Eucharist in various languages already in his different Missionary tours in Syria, Asia, and Greece.

Thus the participle λαλῶν seems to have more force and a larger meaning than the indicative λαλῶ.

19. θέλω—ἤ] I had rather—than. Cp. Luke xvii. 2, λυσιτελεῖ—ἤ. Winer, § 35, p. 215, where examples of a similar construction with substantives and adjectives will be found.

— νοΐ] So A, B, D, E, F, G, and several Cursives. Eliz. has διὰ τοῦ νοός.

21. Ἐν τῷ νόμῳ] In a prophetical Book. Isa. xxviii. 11, 12. See on John x. 34, and Surenhus. p. 544.

o ch. 11. 16. 33 o οὐ γάρ ἐστιν ἀκαταστασίας ὁ Θεὸς, ἀλλὰ εἰρήνης· ὡς ἐν πάσαις ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις τῶν ἁγίων.

The words are not from the LXX Version, but from that of Aquila.

The purport of the quotation is to show that a supernatural power of speaking with γλῶσσαι or foreign tongues is a χάρισμα or gift, vouchsafed by God for the conversion of unbelievers; and that it is an abuse of that gift to employ it in congregations of Christians who do not understand the tongue spoken. See above, v. 6.

The words of Almighty God in the passage of Isaiah quoted by St. Paul are prophetic of the outpouring of the Gift of Tongues at Pentecost, and are referred to by St. Luke, recording that event, Acts ii. 4, ἤρξαντο λαλεῖν ἑτέραις γλώσσαις, cp. Acts x. 46; and the Holy Spirit adopting the words ἑτερογλώσσοις καὶ ἐν χείλεσιν ἑτέροις λαλήσω here, and ἑτέραις γλώσσαις there, connects this argument of St. Paul with the event of the day of Pentecost.

The meaning of Isaiah's prophecy is, that God would speak to the Jews in tongues foreign to the speakers (and He did so by the Apostles on the day of Pentecost), and yet that the Jewish Nation would not be converted, but resist God. They did resist the same Apostles, Peter and John, who spake ἑτέραις γλώσσαις (Acts ii. 4), and they shut them up in prison. (Acts iv. 3.)

St. Paul, as his custom is, whenever a divine gift has been abused, brings back the question to its first principles. He here traces the Gift of Tongues to its origin, the Day of Pentecost at Jerusalem, as he had done in the case of the Holy Eucharist, which he traces to its Institution at the Feast of the Passover in the same city (xi. 23). He thus points out the declension of the practice of the Corinthians from the primitive standard, and endeavours to rectify the abuse by reference to the original use. An example of the true principles of genuine Reformation.

He shows them also, that by requiring the use of foreign tongues now in their own city, and by indulging in their display, they degrade themselves from the rank of Christians to that of unbelievers. See v. 6.

23. ἰδιῶται] Ordinary persons who have not the gift of tongues. The word is here distinguished from, and contrasted with, the πάντες, all, in this verse, who have the gift, and are using it together in the Church.

The signification of this word, ἰδιώτης, must always be determined by the context: it is always used πρὸς τί (see Hippocrat. ap. Wetstein), i. e. is put in opposition to something else, and intimates that the person called ἰδιώτης is distinguished by a difference of rank, or other quality, from him or them with whom he is compared. Cp. Tertullian (ad Mart. 1), "Non tantum magistri sed etiam idiotæ," and see the collections of Wetstein here, p. 161, and note on Acts iv. 13. 1 Cor. xiv. 16. 2 Cor. xi. 6. The proper translation therefore of ἰδιῶται here would be persons not so gifted. And St. Paul's argument is that the Corinthians, by their abuse of their superior gifts, expose themselves to the ridicule even of those who have not the gift; and that though they are vain of their intellectual and spiritual powers, they show that they have less common sense than those who have not those powers.

25. τὰ κρυπτά] Elz. prefixes καὶ οὕτω, not in the best MSS.

26. ψαλμόν] Every one has a psalm of his own which he is eager to sing. Psalmody was a part of primitive Christian worship, as appears from Pliny's Epistle to Trajan (lib. x. 97), and see Euseb. v. 28: ψαλμοὶ καὶ ᾠδαὶ ἀδελφῶν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς ὑπὸ πιστῶν γραφεῖσαι τὸν Λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ τὸν Χριστὸν ὕμνουν θεολογοῦντες. Psalms unauthorized by the public sanction of the Church (ψαλμοὶ ἰδιωτικοί), were forbidden to be sung in the Church, by the Council of Laodicea, Can. 59... A rule needed now.

29. διακρινέτωσαν] Let the rest discern or discriminate; let them put to the test and sift that which has been said by the several expositors, and reject what is unsound, and authorize what is right. Cp. xii. 10, διακρίσεις πνευμάτων. Heb. v. 14, πρὸς διάκρισιν καλοῦ τε καὶ κακοῦ.

32. πνεύματα προφητῶν] The Spirits or inner motions of Prophets, who are truly such, are in subjection to Prophets, are controlled and regulated by them; and therefore there is no reason why, on the plea of a prophetic rapture and ecstasy, ye should prophesy in an irregular manner. Ye can (δύνασθε) prophesy in order, as I command you (v. 31). And that which I have enjoined, being, as it is, the command of the Lord (v. 37), can, and will, be obeyed by them who are really Prophets.

They who professed to be moved by the Spirit might allege that they were not and could not be subject to any laws of order and discipline, and therefore the Apostle teaches that this is the very essence of genuine prophecy, as distinguished from that which is spurious, that it is regulated by the person, who has the gift, according to the rules prescribed by God (who is not a God of confusion, but of peace, v. 33), for the good order and edification of His Church.

A principle which, if duly observed, would have checked the aberrations of fanatical pride and lawless enthusiasm, and have prevented the disorders, by which they have disorganized the framework, and marred the efficiency, of the Church.

St. Paul's principle was applied by the orthodox writers of ancient Christendom, who had to contend against the wild ecstasies and rhapsodies of Montanism (as may be seen in Euseb. v. 17, and Routh, Reliq. S. ii. 101), by whom the principle was thus expressed, μὴ δεῖν προφήτην ἐν ἐκστάσει λαλεῖν, "that a Prophet ought not to speak in an ecstasy." Indeed by so doing a Prophet would have confounded his sacred office with the phrenzied ravings of the Pythoness of Delphi, and other oracular rhapsodists of heathen superstition. See Chrysostom, and Vales. ad Euseb. v. 17.

Divine Inspiration acts suaviter as well as fortiter; and whatever acts otherwise is not a genuine emanation from the pure fountain of heavenly Wisdom and Love.

34. Αἱ γυναῖκες—σιγάτωσαν] A precept violated by Priscilla and Maximilla, the followers of Montanus. But, they say, had not Philip the Evangelist four daughters who prophesied? (Acts xxi. 9.) Yes: but not in the public assemblies of the Church. We never hear that Miriam, and Deborah, and Huldah prophesied to the people publicly, as Isaiah and Jeremiah did. It is an unseemly thing for a woman to speak in the Church. Origen in Caten. p. 279.

— οὐ γὰρ ἐπιτρέπεται] So A, B, D, E, F, G, a reading which seems preferable to that of Elz., ἐπιτέτραπται. Οὐκ ἐπιτρέπω is something more than "I do not permit;" it signifies "I forbid." Cp. 1 Tim. ii. 12, γυναικὶ διδάσκειν οὐκ ἐπιτρέπω.

— ὁ νόμος λέγει] The Old Testament by its general tenor, dating from the Creation (Gen. iii. 16; cp. 1 Tim. ii. 11, 12), and by not allowing women to do any ministerial office in the Temple, prescribes silence on their part in the Church.

36. Ἢ ἀφ' ὑμῶν] The concluding argument. Is your practice to overrule that of the other Churches, and of God's commands given through me? The proof of your spirituality will be—not in your independent and irregular action—but in your dutiful submission to the Word of God and to the Order of the Church.

39. ζηλοῦτε τὸ προφητεύειν κ.τ.λ.] On this exhortation compare v. 1, and note above on 1 Thess. v. 20.

It is impossible not to recognize the bearing of St. Paul's argument throughout this Chapter on the practice of the Church of Rome in celebrating divine Service in a "tongue not understood by the People." (See Article XXIVth, "Of speaking in the congregation in such a tongue as the people understandeth.")

St. Paul's words seem like a prophetic protest against that practice. And the adoption of that practice, and the perseverance in it, in defiance of these declarations of the Holy Spirit, speaking by the holy Apostle, is a striking trait of the judicial blindness and reckless infatuation of that Power which exalts itself against human and divine authority, and sets itself in the Temple of God, claiming divine honour for itself (2 Thess. ii. 2—4).

CH. XV. 3. Χριστὸς ἀπέθανεν ὑπὲρ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν] Christ died for our sins. It has been alleged by some, that it is evident from this text, that when it is said in Scripture that Christ died ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, it is not meant that He died in our stead as our proxy.

But this is a groundless assertion. Christ died ὑπὲρ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν, on account of our sins, in order to take them away (John i. 29), and so to save us from their penalty, death. See the use of ὑπὲρ, Heb. v. 1. 3.

But He also died, ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, in our place. On this use of ὑπὲρ, see above i. 13. Mark xiv. 24. Luke xxii. 19, and cp. Winer, § 48, p. 342. Valck. illustrates this use of ὑπὲρ as signifying a vicarious offering, from profane as well as sacred authors. Thus Alcestis is said by Hyginus to have died ὑπὲρ Ἀδμήτου, in his stead. "Tenendum est ἀποθανεῖν ὑπέρ τινος non tantum in N. T. sed et apud scriptores profanos significare mori loco alterius." And this is expressed by ἀντὶ, instead of, Matt. xx. 28. Mark x. 45; and St. Paul combines both prepositions, 1 Tim. ii. 6, δοὺς ἑαυτὸν ἀντίλυτρον ὑπὲρ πάντων. Cp. note below, 2 Cor. v. 15.

4. ἐγήγερται] "excitatus est et nunc vivit."

This contrast of the permanency of the risen body of Christ, is happily marked by the change of tense into the perfect; while the transitoriness of His burial is expressed by the aorist, ἐτάφη. Cp. Winer, p. 243.

5. ὤφθη] appeared to, manifested Himself to. See on John xvi. 16. Acts i. 2.

— τοῖς δώδεκα] Mark xvi. 14. John xx. 26.

6. ἐπάνω πεντακοσίοις] more than five hundred—probably on the Mountain of Galilee. Matt. xxviii. 16.

— καὶ ἐκοιμήθησαν] have also fallen asleep in Jesus: a pathetic introduction to his discourse concerning the hopes of a Resurrection. Observe this word κοιμᾶσθαι, four times repeated in this chapter, concerning the Resurrection of the body (vv. 6. 18. 20. 51). This word does not apply to the soul, for that does not sleep (see on Luke xvi. 22; xxiii. 43) when separated from the body by death. But it describes the state of the bodies of those who fall asleep in Jesus; and therefore is significantly applied to describe the bodily rest of the first Martyr, St. Stephen, who commended his spirit to Jesus (Acts vii. 59, 60). It implies that the bodies of the faithful sleep in peace until the day when they will be awakened. And it is a declaration of a belief in the Resurrection of the Body. Accordingly, from this word S. Jerome (ad Minervium iv. p. 212) infers the Resurrection of the body in its identity, and says "Omnis qui dormit utique expergiscitur." By this word ἐκοιμήθησαν, he affirms the Resurrection, Chrys. and Bengel here, "ἐκοιμήθησαν obdormiverunt, ut resurrecturi."

See the notes above on 1 Thess. iv. 13.

The present chapter, in which St. Paul pleads for the doctrine of the Resurrection of the Body, is a vindication of their hope; it is a divine Apology in behalf of those who are asleep, ὑπὲρ τῶν κεκοιμημένων. (See v. 18. 20.)

7. τοῖς ἀποστόλοις πᾶσιν] to the Apostles, every one of them. It has been inferred by some from this text, compared with v. 5, that 'the Apostles' are not the same as 'the Twelve;'

But this inference does not seem to be a sound one;

Our Lord appeared twice at least to the Twelve, or, as they are sometimes called, 'the Eleven' (John xx. 26. Mark xvi. 14. and Matt. xxviii. 16); and the second manifestation may be referred to by St. Paul here. Or it may be that he is speaking of manifestations made separately to every one of the Apostles, whom he would not, in that case, call τοὺς δώδεκα.

It does not appear in any passage of Scripture that ἀπόστολοι, with the article οἱ, as here, means any thing else than the Twelve Apostles.

Indeed, the force of St. Paul's own modest declaration (in v. 9) that he himself is not worthy to be called an Apostle, would γάρ εἰμι ὁ ἐλάχιστος τῶν ἀποστόλων, ὃς οὐκ εἰμὶ ἱκανὸς καλεῖσθαι ἀπόστολος, διότι ἐδίωξα τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ· [10] [h] χάριτι δὲ Θεοῦ εἰμὶ ὅ εἰμι. Καὶ ἡ χάρις αὐτοῦ ἡ εἰς ἐμὲ οὐ κενὴ ἐγενήθη, ἀλλὰ περισσότερον αὐτῶν πάντων ἐκοπίασα· οὐκ ἐγὼ δὲ, ἀλλὰ ἡ χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ σὺν ἐμοί. [11] Εἴτε οὖν ἐγὼ, εἴτε ἐκεῖνοι, οὕτω κηρύσσομεν, καὶ οὕτως ἐπιστεύσατε.

[12] Εἰ δὲ Χριστὸς κηρύσσεται, ὅτι ἐκ νεκρῶν ἐγήγερται, πῶς λέγουσιν ἐν ὑμῖν τινες, ὅτι ἀνάστασις νεκρῶν οὐκ ἔστιν; [13] Εἰ δὲ ἀνάστασις νεκρῶν οὐκ ἔστιν, be lost, if "an Apostle" is not understood to signify one of the Twelve, or one on a par with them, but only a disciple with no definite rank, or at least with none defined in Holy Writ.

8. ὡσπερεὶ τῷ ἐκτρώματι ὤφθη κἀμοί] Observe the order of the words here, which are rendered in the Latin version of Irenæus i. 8, "Novissime tanquam abortivo visus est et mihi."

St. Paul had just spoken of our Lord's manifestations of Himself to others, particularly to all the Apostles, and then he adds, Last of all, as it were, to the untimely-born-one of the Apostolic family, He appeared also to me. He appeared to me last of all because I am, as it were, the ἔκτρωμα of the family.

The word ἔκτρωμα (from root ἐκτρόω, ἐκτιτρώσκω, violently to eject) = Hebr. נֵפֶל (nephel), what falls or is cast to the ground, "fœtus immaturus, cadivus," the untimely fruit of a woman (Ps. lviii. 7); and it is explained in the Greek Glossaries by παιδίον ἄωρον, ἐκβολή (Hesych.), and ἐξάμβλωμα, i. e. an abortion. Cp. Herod. iii. 32.

The best account of St. Paul's use of the word is supplied by the LXX in Num. xii. 12, where it is said of Miriam, μὴ γένηται ὡσεὶ ἴσον θανάτῳ, ὡσεὶ ἔκτρωμα ἐκπορευόμενον ἐκ μητρὸς, καὶ κατεσθίει τὸ ἥμισυ τῶν σαρκῶν αὐτῆς, where the word implies an injury done to the mother also, by the violence of the birth. Cp. Philo (i. p. 59, ap. Wetstein), Job iii. 16, and Eccles. vi. 3, where ἔκτρωμα is used with the definite article, as it is here, to distinguish the untimely-born-one, from the other naturally formed children,—ἀγαθὸν, ὑπὲρ αὐτὸν τὸ ἔκτρωμα.

(1) Why, then, is St. Paul called ὡσπερεὶ ἔκτρωμα?

(2) And why τὸ ἔκτρωμα?

(3) And what is the connexion between the two things here mentioned, viz. the appearance of Christ after His Resurrection to him, and the fact of his being τὸ ἔκτρωμα?

(1) As to the word ὡσπερεὶ (as it were) it softens the boldness of the figure, ὡσπερεὶ ἰᾶται τὰ τολμηρὰ, says Longinus, sect. 32.

And St. Paul is called an ἔκτρωμα among the Apostles, because he was not regularly born into the Apostleship, as the Twelve were, by a call from Christ when upon earth, but in a violent and untimely manner, and was indeed, in the true sense of the word, a נֵפֶל (nephel), being cast to the ground, πεσὼν ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν (Acts ix. 4) by the vehemence of the concussion from heaven, at his Conversion to Christ.

(2) He was τὸ ἔκτρωμα, the untimely-born-one of the Apostolic family, because he alone of all the Apostles was called in this manner by Christ. (Cp. Winer, § p. 26.)

(3) As to the connexion of the ἔκτρωμα with Christ's appearance to him last of all, it may be observed that an ἔκτρωμα represents a child which is, by the fact of its untimeliness, more diminutive in size, and more feeble in strength than the other children:

> "Appellat pullum, malè parvus
> Si cui filius est, ut abortivus fuit olim
> Sisyphus." Horat. 1 Serm. iii. 46.

In his humility, St. Paul names himself ἔκτρωμα, not only because he was born in an untimely manner, but because in his own opinion he was ἐλάχιστος, the least of the Apostles, as he here calls himself.

Christ appeared to St. Paul last because he was the least. Adopting and explaining St. Paul's word, the blessed Martyr S. Ignatius says of himself (ad Rom. 9), ἐγὼ αἰσχύνομαι ἐξ αὐτῶν (ἐπισκόπων) λέγεσθαι, ὢν ἔσχατος αὐτῶν, καὶ ἔκτρωμα.

(4) We may, perhaps, also be permitted to add, that there is another connexion between Christ's appearance last of all to St. Paul, the ἔκτρωμα of the Apostolic family.

There is (as has been observed by ancient Expositors) a remarkable analogical relation between the Patriarchs of the literal Israel, and the Patriarchs of the spiritual Israel, i. e. the Apostles. See on Matt. x. 1, 2. Acts viii. 17.

It has also been already remarked (on Acts ix. 1) that St. Paul was, as it were, the Benjamin of the Apostolic family. He was of that tribe (Acts xiii. 1). He was like the son of Rachel (Gen. xxxv. 18), at first a Benoni, a child of sorrow, when he persecuted the Church, but he became a Benjamin, a son of the right hand, after his conversion. Indeed in a special manner was St. Paul a son of the right hand, as being the only one who was called by Christ after His Ascension, and when sitting at God's right hand. He was indeed the spiritual son of the Right Hand of the Father.

The Ancient Fathers apply to St. Paul the prophecy of the dying Jacob concerning Benjamin (Gen. xlix. 27). In the morning he shall ravin as a wolf, i. e. at the beginning of his career he shall tear Christ's sheep as a Persecutor, but in the evening he shall divide the prey, i. e. in the sequel he shall distribute spiritual food to them as a Preacher of the Church. See above on Acts ix. 1.

It has been also observed, that Benjamin is called by the Holy Spirit in the Psalms, "little," and yet "a Ruler" (Ps. lxviii. 27). So Saul was Paul, Paulus, Parvulus, little, as Augustine and others observe (and see Wetstein ii. p. 16, and note on Acts xiii. 9). And he calls himself the least of the Apostles here (and cp. Eph. iii. 8), and yet he was a Ruler (cp. Ps. xlv. 17), and not a whit behind the chiefest Apostles (2 Cor. xi. 5; xii. 11). Indeed he had a double portion of labour; he laboured more abundantly than they all (1 Cor. xv. 10); and he had a double portion of grace.

Besides, Benjamin was the last born of all the Patriarchs; so Paul of the Apostles; and Benjamin's birth was sudden, on a journey, and, it seems, violent and untimely. It is said of his mother Rachel (Gen. xxxv. 16) that she σκληρῶς ἔτεκε, καὶ ἐδυστόκησεν ἐν τῷ τοκετῷ, and she called her son, therefore, son of my sorrow; and his birth was the cause of her death. Benjamin might almost be called an ἔκτρωμα.

(5) Now, as to the appearance of Christ risen, to St. Paul, ὡσπερεὶ τῷ ἐκτρώματι:

Joseph, when delivered from the bonds of the prison-house, and raised to eminence in the kingdom of Egypt, has ever been regarded as a signal type of Christ's Resurrection. As Prosper says (de Promiss. i. 29), "Noster Joseph, Christus Dominus, die tertio resurrexit, præsentatur Pharaoni; mundo Resurrectio declaratur." (Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. v. and vi. p. 475. 515.) And Joseph's appearances to his brethren after his deliverance and exaltation, are beautifully typical of Christ's manifestations to His brethren, as He vouchsafes to call them (Matt. xxviii. 10. John xx. 17) after His Resurrection. And as Joseph after his exaltation appeared last of all to the least and youngest of his brethren, Benjamin (Gen. xlv. 14), so Christ, after his Resurrection, to St. Paul. And as Benjamin was a special object of Joseph's favour (Gen. xliii. 34), so, as he here declares, was St. Paul a special subject and monument of Christ's grace, 1 Tim. i. 16.

10. οὐκ ἐγὼ δὲ, ἀλλὰ ἡ χάρις τ. Θ.] Not that St. Paul did not labour, for he has just said that he did labour more abundantly than the rest; but οὐκ here, which denies, is used to bring out more boldly what is affirmed. I laboured more abundantly than the rest; but the superabundance of my labour was as nothing when compared with the far more abundant superabundance of God's grace. On this use of οὐ, derived from the Hebrew idiom, see 1 Cor. x. 23. Acts v. 4, and on Matt. ix. 13, and Winer, p. 439.

12. ὅτι ἀνάστασις νεκρῶν οὐκ ἔστι] That a resurrection of dead bodies has no existence, i. e. is an unreality. The word ἀνάστασις, resuscitatio, is not said of the soul but of the body: τοῦ πεσόντος ἐστὶν ἡ ἀνάστασις. (Chrys.) These false Teachers did not deny the immortality of the soul, but they explained away the divine sayings which had declared the Resurrection of the body, and gave them a mere spiritual meaning, saying that the Resurrection was past already (2 Tim. ii. 18) in the new birth of the Christian soul. In a word, they confounded the First Resurrection (that of the soul) with the Second Resurrection (that of the body).

The Greek disbelief in the Resurrection of the body is expressed by Æschylus, Eum. 655:

> ἀνδρὸς δ' ἐπειδὰν αἷμ' ἀνάσπαστον κόνις,
> ἅπαξ θανόντος οὐκέτ' ἐστ' ἀνάστασις.

οὐδὲ Χριστὸς ἐγήγερται· 14 εἰ δὲ Χριστὸς οὐκ ἐγήγερται, κενὸν ἄρα καὶ τὸ κήρυγμα ἡμῶν, κενὴ καὶ ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν. 15 [i] Εὑρισκόμεθα δὲ καὶ ψευδομάρτυρες τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὅτι ἐμαρτυρήσαμεν κατὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὅτι ἤγειρε τὸν Χριστὸν, ὃν οὐκ ἤγειρεν, εἴπερ ἄρα νεκροὶ οὐκ ἐγείρονται. 16 Εἰ γὰρ νεκροὶ οὐκ ἐγείρονται, οὐδὲ Χριστὸς ἐγήγερται· 17 [k] εἰ δὲ Χριστὸς οὐκ ἐγήγερται, ματαία ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν, ἔτι ἐστὲ ἐν ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις ὑμῶν. 18 [l] Ἄρα καὶ οἱ κοιμηθέντες ἐν Χριστῷ ἀπώλοντο. 19 [l] Εἰ ἐν τῇ ζωῇ ταύτῃ ἐν Χριστῷ ἠλπικότες ἐσμὲν μόνον, ἐλεεινότεροι πάντων ἀνθρώπων ἐσμέν.

Eurip. Alcest. 783:

Cp. Acts xvii. 18.

The popular life at Corinth, where the body was defiled by lusts of the flesh, was very unfavourable to the belief of the doctrine of its Resurrection, preached by St. Paul. Therefore he labours in this Epistle to deliver the body from the shameful debasement to which it was there degraded by sensuality, and specially he does this by means of the doctrine of its Resurrection. See 1 Cor. vi. 13—20.

Tertullian says well, "None live in so fleshly a manner as those who deny the Resurrection of the Flesh. They deny its future punishment, and neglect its present discipline. They despair of its glory hereafter, and debase it in vice here" (de Resurrec. Carnis, 11).

13. οὐδὲ Χριστὸς ἐγήγερται] "Ne Christus quidem resurrexit." Not even has Christ risen.

14. τὸ κήρυγμα ἡμῶν] All that we preach. See i. 21.

17. ἔτι ἐστὲ ἐν ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις ὑμῶν] Ye are yet in your sins, and liable to the penalty of sin,—everlasting death. (Rom. vi. 23.) For though Christ died for your sins (v. 3), yet the proof that His death was accepted by God, as a propitiation for our sins, arises from the fact of His Resurrection. He died for our sins, and He rose again for our Justification. (See on Rom. vi. 23.) If then His body is still in the grave, we are still in our sins. See further on v. 55.

18. Ἄρα καί] Then even. A new argument.

— οἱ κοιμηθέντες ἐν Χριστῷ ἀπώλοντο] They who fell asleep in Christ perished. Observe ἀπώλοντο, the aorist, they then perished, when they died. Heaven forbid! The truth is, their bodies, weary of the labour of this life, then sank into a sweet slumber, from which they will be awakened to a glorious Resurrection and blessed Immortality. They did not therefore perish when they died. No. Death was not loss to them, but great gain, even as to their bodies. How much more as to their souls! Death to them was birth; birth into endless life.

19. ἠλπικότες ἐσμέν] have hoped, and now hope.

20. Νυνὶ δέ] But now. A glorious contrast. The Apostle bursts forth in a strain of exultation, when he compares the state of the World under the Gospel, with that in which Mankind was before Christ's Passion and Resurrection.

Probably also these words were written at or near Easter. See Introduction, p. 76, 77.

— κεκοιμημένων] Elz. adds ἐγένετο, which is not in the best authorities, and weakens the sense, which is, Christ is risen from the dead,—the Firstfruits of them that slept. There is a special emphasis and beauty in the cadence ἀπαρχὴ τῶν κεκοιμημένων.

22. ὥσπερ γὰρ ἐν τῷ Ἀδὰμ—οὕτω καὶ ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ] The definite articles prefixed to the two names, Adam and Christ, bring out the relationship of contrast more strongly, and point to Adam and to Christ as standing severally alone in the world as the two Heads and Representatives, the one of the Old Creation, the other of the New; the one of the natural, carnal, and lost race, the other of the spiritual, regenerate, and saved race; the one the author of death to all, the other the Author of Life to all.

In the first Adam (says Irenæus, v. 17) we fell by disobedience to God's commandment; but in the Second Adam we were restored by becoming obedient even unto death (ὑπήκοοι μέχρι θανάτου γενόμενοι). Christ cancelled the disobedience of Man, which had been shown in the beginning at the tree, by becoming obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross. (Phil. ii. 8.) And thus the disobedience of the first Adam at the tree was healed by the Obedience of the Second Adam on the tree.

Hence it is well said by Augustine (in Joann. Evang. Tract. iii.), "Sicut in Adam omnes moriuntur, sic et in Christo omnes vivificabuntur. (1 Cor. xv. 21, 22.) Qui pertinent ad Adam? omnes qui nati sunt de Adam. Qui ad Christum? omnes qui nati sunt per Christum. Quare omnes in peccato? Quia nemo natus est præter Adam. Non quia voluerunt, nati sunt ex Adam. Omnes qui ex Adam, cum peccato peccatores; omnes qui per Christum, justificati et justi, non in se, sed in Illo. Nam in se, si interroges, Adam sunt: in illo si interroges, Christi sunt. Quare? Quia ille caput Dominus noster Jesus Christus, non cum traduce peccati venit: sed tamen venit cum carne mortali."

23. See Clem. Rom. i. 37.

24, 25. τὴν βασιλείαν—αὐτοῦ] Christ's Mediatorial Kingdom, which He has by virtue of His humility and obedience as Man. This Kingdom is to be carefully distinguished from that Kingdom which will have no end (Luke i. 33), and which Christ has as God, and which He had from everlasting with the Father. See John xvii. 5. 11, and note on Matt. xxviii. 18, and Bengel here, and the excellent statement of the doctrine by Hooker (V. lv. 8), where he says, Christ as Man hath all power in heaven and earth given Him. (Matt. xxviii. 18.) He hath as Man, not as God only, supreme dominion over quick and dead (Rom. xiv. 9); for so much His Ascension into heaven and His Session at the right hand of God do import. The Son of God, which did first humble Himself by taking our flesh upon Him, descended afterwards much lower, and became according to the flesh obedient so far as to suffer death, even the death of the Cross, for all men, because such was His Father's will. The former was an humiliation of Deity, the latter an humiliation of Manhood. (Phil. ii. 8, 9. Heb. ii. 9.)

For which cause there followed upon the latter an exaltation of that which was humbled; for with power He created the world, but restored it by obedience. In which obedience as according to His Manhood He had glorified God on earth, so God hath glorified in heaven that nature which yielded Him obedience, and hath given unto Christ, even as He is Man, such fulness of power over the whole world (Luke xxi. 27), that He which before fulfilled in the state of humility and patience whatsoever God did require, doth now reign in glory till the time that all things be restored. (Acts iii. 21.)

He which came down from heaven and descended into the lowest parts of the earth, is ascended far above all heavens (Eph. iv. 9), that sitting at the right hand of God He might from thence fill all things with the gracious and happy fruits of His saving presence. Ascension into heaven is a plain local translation of Christ, according to His Manhood, from the lower to the higher parts of the world. Session at the right hand of God is the actual exercise of that regency and dominion wherein the Manhood of Christ is joined and matched with the Deity of the Son of God. Not that His Manhood was before without the possession of the same power, but because the full use thereof was suspended, till that humility, which had been before as a veil to hide and conceal majesty, were laid aside. After His rising again from the dead, then did God set Him at His right hand in heavenly places (Eph. i. 20—23), far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not in this world only, but also in that which is to come, and hath put all things under His feet (Ps. viii. 6. Heb. ii. 8), and hath appointed Him over all the Head to the Church, which is His body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all.

The sceptre of which spiritual regiment over us in this present world is at the length to be yielded up into the hands of the Father which gave it (1 Cor. xv. 24); that is to say, the use and exercise thereof shall cease, there being no longer on earth any militant Church to govern. This government, therefore, He exerciseth both as God and as Man; as God by essential presence with all things, as Man by co-operation with that which essentially is present. Hooker.

— ὅταν καταργήσῃ] "quum evacuaverit." When all kingdoms of this world shall have been swallowed up by the Kingdom of Christ (Rev. xi. 15).

25. Δεῖ γὰρ αὐτὸν βασιλεύειν] He must reign till He has put all his enemies under His feet. But now we see not yet all things put under Him (Heb. ii. 8). Therefore He must still continue there; and this necessity is grounded upon the promise of the Father and the expectation of the Son; Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool (Ps. cx. 1). Upon this promise of the Father, the Son sat down at the right hand of God; from henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool. (Heb. x. 12, 13.) Our Mediator, therefore, shall exercise the regal power at the right hand of God till all opposition shall be subdued. Then, when all the enemies of Christ shall be subdued, when all the chosen of God shall be actually brought into His kingdom, when those which refused Him to rule over them shall be slain, that is, when the whole office of the Mediator shall be completed and fulfilled, then every branch of the execution shall cease. As, therefore, there shall no longer continue any act of the prophetical part to instruct us, nor any act of the priestly part to intercede for us, there shall be no farther act of this regal power of the Mediator necessary to defend and preserve us. The beatifical vision shall succeed our information and instruction, a present fruition will prevent oblation and intercession, and perfect security will need no actual defence and protection. As therefore the general notion of a Mediator ceaseth, when all are made one, because a mediator is not a mediator of one (Gal. iii. 20), so every part or branch of that mediatorship as such must also cease, because that unity is in all parts complete.

Now, though the mediatorship of Christ be then resigned, because the end thereof will then be performed; though the regal office, as part of that mediatorship, be also resigned with the whole, yet we must not think that Christ shall cease to be a King, or lose any of the power and honour which before He had. The dominion which He hath, was given Him as a reward for what He suffered; and certainly the reward shall not cease when the work is done. He hath promised to make us kings and priests, which honour we expect in heaven, believing we shall reign with Him (2 Tim. ii. 12), and therefore for ever must believe Him King. The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of the Lord, and of His Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever (Rev. xi. 15), to the complete eternity of the duration of His humanity, which for the future is coeternal to His Divinity. Lest we should imagine that Christ should ever cease to be King, or so interpret this Article, as if He were after the day of judgment to be removed from the right hand of God, the ancient Fathers added those words to the Nicene Creed, Whose kingdom shall have no end, against the heresy which then arose denying the eternity of the kingdom of Christ. Bp. Pearson (on Art. vi. p. 528).

26. Ἔσχατος ἐχθρὸς καταργεῖται ὁ θάνατος] This destruction of Death reacheth no farther than the removing of all power (from Death) to hinder the bringing of all persons redeemed by Christ into the full possession of His Kingdom; for to the reprobate and damned persons, Death will not be destroyed. They will rise again to life, and so the first Death is evacuated (καταργεῖται); but that life to which they rise is a second and a far worse Death. Bp. Pearson (Art. vi. p. 528).

27. ἐκτὸς τοῦ ὑποτάξαντος] It is well observed by Theodoret that this exceptional clause was very necessary as a caution to the Greeks, who might be disposed to imagine, from their heathen Mythology, that when the Apostle spoke of the supremacy of the Son, he was speaking of such a supremacy as was claimed for Jupiter, to the exclusion and dethronement of his Father, Cronus.

28. ὁ Υἱός] The Son will deliver up the kingdom to the Father. Hence the Ancient Fathers argue the distinct personality of the Father and of the Son, against the Noëtian and Sabellian Heretics. See Hippol. c. Noëtum, § 6, 7.

— ἵνα ᾖ ὁ Θεὸς τὰ πάντα ἐν πᾶσιν] On the subjection of Christ as Man, see also S. Jerome's comment on this passage (ad Amandium, Vol. iv. p. 163), who refers to S. Hilary's remarks upon it in his eleventh book against the Arians, who used this passage as an argument in favour of their tenets. And he observes that St. Paul does not say, "that the Father may be all in all," but that "God may be all in all." "Quod proprium nomen est Trinitatis, et tam ad Patrem quam ad Filium et Spiritum Sanctum referri potest; ut humanitas subjiciatur divinitati." Greg. Nyssen., in his homily on this text (i. p. 846), explains the subjection here described by St. Paul to mean the subjection of Human Nature, generally incorporated and summed up in Christ, to God; so that all its desires and affections will be conformed to His will.

29. Ἐπεὶ, τί ποιήσουσιν οἱ βαπτιζόμενοι ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν] Since (if this is so), what will they do (or make) who are baptized for the dead?

St. Paul having already shown that they who denied the Resurrection of the Body were guilty of doing dishonour

(1) to the Saints of God, who had fallen asleep in Christ in the hope of a glorious Resurrection, and

(2) to Christ Himself, who was risen from the dead, and had shown Himself alive to His Disciples after His Passion, and Who is the Second Adam, the Head of the New Creation which is quickened in and by Him, and Who ascended into heaven, where as Man He sits in His Risen Body at God's Right Hand in Glory, and rules the World and the Church; and that they were also chargeable with doing injustice

(3) to all who endure bodily afflictions in the hope of a bodily Resurrection, and who teach the doctrine of the past Resurrection of Christ, and of the future Resurrection of all men, in and through Him,—

Now proceeds to show, that they who deny the Resurrection do injury also, and bring contempt on

(4) all Christians generally, and particularly on themselves, as teaching what is at variance with the universal practice of Christians, and with the first principles of Christianity, which they profess.

His assertion is,—that they reduce themselves to an absurdity, by denying the doctrine of the Resurrection of the Body, since (if that doctrine is not true) what shall they do who are baptized in behalf of the dead (as all Christians are, and as even these Corinthians themselves are, if they are Christians)? why are they even baptized in behalf of the dead?

(5) What then is the meaning of being baptized for the dead? (ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν.)

It cannot mean to be baptized as proxies, in the place of those who have died without baptism.

As far as we know, there was no such usage then practised at Corinth, or any where else in the Church of that age.

Some Heretics indeed, misinterpreting the present passage of St. Paul, grounded such a practice upon it, so misunderstood. (See Chrys. and Tertullian, de Resur. Carnis, c. 48.) The practice was posterior to the words of St. Paul; the words were not produced by the practice. And even if such a practice had existed at Corinth, it would have been unworthy of the Apostle to damage his sacred cause by resorting to a mere argumentum ad hominem, and to build any thing on the unsound foundation of a practice which, if he had mentioned, he could not have failed to condemn. Cp. Rigalt ad Tertullian, de Resur. Carnis, c. 48.

Besides, such imaginary proxies could not be said to be baptized ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν, i. e. for the dead, generally and collectively, but only ὑπὲρ νεκρῶν, for dead persons individually, of whom they were the proxies. Compare Winer, p. 112, on the difference of νεκροὶ, dead persons, and οἱ νεκροὶ, the dead regarded as a whole, and as distinguished from the living.

The preposition ὑπὲρ is used here after βαπτίζονται, in the same sense as after other verbs, such as πρεσβεύω, 2 Cor. v. 20; λαλῶ, xii. 19.

The words "to be baptized for the dead, and in their behalf," are, therefore, it would seem, to be explained as follows:

Every Baptism which is administered in the Church is an argument for the future Resurrection of the Body. It is a public profession of Belief in that Doctrine. "Know ye not," says St. Paul (Rom. vi. 3), "that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into His death? therefore we are buried with Him by Baptism into death, that, like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord." And so Coloss. ii. 12: "Buried with Him by Baptism into death, wherein also ye are risen with Him through the faith of the operation of God." Compare the Collect of the Church for Easter Even.

Besides, in every Baptism administered in the Church, a profession is made, by the person baptized, of Belief in Christ's Resurrection, and in the Resurrection of the Body. Every Baptismal Creed contains these Articles of the Faith. (See Chrys. here, and Rigalt ad Tertullian l. c.) Therefore, every one who is baptized, may be well said to be baptized ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν, in behalf of the dead. And this was specially true at Corinth. There some persons denied the Resurrection (v. 12). They alleged, that those who had fallen asleep in Christ had perished (v. 18). Such unbelieving persons might well be said to speak against the dead, κατὰ τῶν νεκρῶν. They disparaged their condition, impugned their privileges, and derided their hopes. They desecrated the Grave, which had been hallowed by Christ, and were calumniators, revilers, and accusers of the dead. But, in opposition to these heretics, all baptized persons, at their Baptism, pleaded the cause of the dead. Their Baptism was a practical argument ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν, for the dead. They were baptized in behalf of the dead, and in their vindication. They justified them from the charge of folly in grounding their hopes on a vain and false foundation.

Every baptized person was an apologist of the dead; he vindicated them from the calumnies of the sceptic, he was baptized in their behalf. He declared by his public profession before Baptism, that Christ was risen, and that the dead would rise; that their state was therefore a hopeful and a blessed one. His Baptism itself was a public representation of the Resurrection. It was spiritually "a death unto sin, and a new birth unto righteousness." And therefore the Sacrament of the New Birth is called in Scripture the First Resurrection. (See note on Rev. xx. 5, 6.) And the immersion of the catechumen in the water, and his emersion from it, was a visible figure of the Resurrection.

Thus all Christians, even these Corinthians themselves, if they were Christians, were baptized ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν: and if they denied the Resurrection, they denied their own Christianity; they renounced the primary principle by which they had been engrafted into the Christian Church.

Well then might the Apostle say, If there is no Resurrection of the dead, what henceforth will they be able to do (Acts iv. 16; xxii. 10. Matt. xxvii. 22. Mark x. 17. Luke iii. 10; x. 25) who are baptized in behalf of the dead? What other principle of action can they have? Their foundation will have been destroyed. What then will they be able to effect? (Cp. Winer, p. 229, note on the sense of ποιεῖν, and ibid. p. 259.) What other foundation will they be able to lay? What superstructure of Christian faith and practice will they be able to build? Why do they even take the pains to lay a foundation which is to be destroyed as unsound? Why are they even baptized for the dead?

We may confirm what has been here said on this important text by the following words from S. Chrysostom:

When we have instructed the catechumen in the divine Mysteries of the Gospel, and are about to baptize him, we command him to say, 'I believe in the Resurrection of the Body.' And he is baptized in this faith. For, after he has made confession of this article of the faith, he descends to the fountain of those sacred waters. This is what St. Paul recalls to their memory. If there is no Resurrection of the Body, why are you baptized for the dead? Why are you baptized in the profession that they will rise from the grave? You, on your part, proclaim their Resurrection; and the Priest, on his side, represents it. For your immersion into the water at Baptism, and your emersion from it, is a figure of the Resurrection of the Dead. God raises you from the grave of sin by the 'laver of Regeneration' in Baptism; and thus gives you a pledge of the Resurrection which you profess. If then there is no Resurrection of the Body, all that is done in Baptism on behalf of the dead is a mere theatrical show. What then will they do, who are baptized for the dead, and in the profession on their behalf that they will arise from the grave? They will have been cheated by an idle delusion.

31. Καθ' ἡμέραν ἀποθνήσκω] See S. Polycarp, frag. 11, p. 533: "Apostolus Paulus quotidie inquit morior; quoniam ad mortem jugiter erat præparatus."

— νὴ τὴν ὑμετέραν καύχησιν] by my glorying in you (see on Luke xxii. 19) and your faith (Theodoret), as hoping for a future reward at the general Resurrection for my labours endured among you and for you, in body and soul.

This form of speech is sometimes called an adjuration, but improperly; for it is essential to an Oath, that a superior Being, believed to be divine, should be invoked in it as a witness. See Sanderson, De Juram. v. c. 6, and i. c. 4, Vol. iv. pp. 245. 316.

32. κατὰ ἄνθρωπον ἐθηριομάχησα] as far as man was concerned (see on 1 Cor. ix. 8. Rom. iii. 5); as far as my adversaries were able to make me do it, and as far as I myself was concerned, and independently of God's supernatural interposition (κατὰ θεόν) to deliver me, I fought with beasts at Ephesus; which some interpret in a figurative sense, as Ignatius ad Rom. c. 5, says, ἀπὸ Συρίας μέχρι Ῥώμης θηριομαχῶ: and Œcumen. and others here, and Bp. Sanderson, i. p. 225, "he fought with beasts in the shape of men."

But the words may well be taken literally: As far as my human will and agency was concerned, and apart from divine intervention (see 2 Cor. i. 8, 9), I fought with beasts at Ephesus. (See Chrys. here, and Tertullian, de Res. Carnis, c. 48.) The literal sense is also supported by Ignatius: "who fought with beasts at Rome" (Ephes. i.), ἐπιτυχεῖν ἐν Ῥώμῃ θηριομαχῆσαι. Cp. Trall. 10; and Christian Martyrs, contemporaries of Polycarp, fought with beasts at Smyrna. Martyr. Polyc. 3, cp. c. 12; and this sense seems to be confirmed by St. Paul's own history. See on 2 Tim. iv. 17.

There is also more propriety in the literal sense here. The Apostle is pleading for the Resurrection of the Body. Bodily afflictions were endured by him in the hope of a bodily reward. It was very apposite therefore to his purpose to say, that in will, if not in deed, he gave his body to be torn by wild beasts, and his bones to be ground by their teeth, in order that he might have in his body a more glorious Resurrection. Compare the fervent language of S. Ignatius panting for martyrdom, ad Rom. 4: "I beseech you hinder me not, suffer me to be the food of wild beasts, who may send me to God. Corn I am of God. Let me be ground by their teeth, that I may be clean bread of Christ." See also ibid. c. 5.

St. Paul refers to this peril at Ephesus because he was now there, and that was his most recent danger.

— φάγωμεν καὶ πίωμεν] let us eat and drink. "Bibamus, moriendum est," quoted by Seneca, Controv. 14. See other expressions of this Epicurean sentiment in Wetstein, p. 169.

Such language as this shows what the popular feeling was, and gives us some notion of what the world owes to Christianity.

Thais (Meineke, p. 75), and translated into a Latin Iambic verse by Tertullian (ad Uxorem, i. 8), who calls it "a verse sanctified by the Apostle,"—

"Bonos corrumpunt mores congressus mali."

The best MSS. have χρηστὰ, not χρῆσθ'. Cp. Winer, p. 40.

On other like verses quoted in N. T., see on Acts xvii. 28, and Winer, p. 563.

36. Ἄφρον] A reading altered by some editors to Ἄφρων, on the authority of A, B, D, E, G. But in such matters as this, where the similarity of sound and of writing led to confusion, the external evidence of MSS. is of less weight. See v. 49, and above, iv.

St. James uses the same case in a similar manner, ὦ ἄνθρωπε κενέ. (James ii. 20.)

37. γυμνόν] bare, naked seed, not yet clothed with the beauty which it will have after its death when it sprouts in the blade and the ear. Theodoret.

So we ourselves, when we die, are sown in the earth as naked, bare grain. For "naked came we out of our mother's womb, and naked shall we return" (Job i. 21). But we hope to be hereafter clothed-upon with our glorified body, and then we shall not be naked. See 2 Cor. v. 3. Cp. Tertullian, c. Marcion. v. 10, where is an exposition of St. Paul's words; and the vigorous language of Tertullian's Apology (c. 48), "Semina non nisi corrupta et dissoluta fœcundiùs surgunt; omnia pereundo servantur, omnia de interitu reformantur. Tu, homo, tantum nomen, ad hoc morieris, ut pereas?"

The hopes of the Christian, derived from this view of the vegetable world, form a striking contrast to the dreary notions of Heathenism, as expressed in the melodious lines of Moschus on the death of his contemporary pastoral poet, Bion, v. 105:—

αἴ, αἴ, ταὶ μαλάχαι μὲν, ἐπὰν κατὰ κᾶπον ὄλωνται, ἢ τὰ χλωρὰ σέλινα, καὶ εὐθαλὲς ὑγρὸν ἄνηθον, ὕστερον αὖ ζώοντι, καὶ εἰς ἔτος ἄλλο φύοντι,
ἄμμες δ', οἱ μεγάλοι καὶ καρτεροὶ ἢ σοφοὶ ἄνδρες, ὅππότε πρᾶτα θάνωμες, ἀνάκοοι ἐν χθονὶ κοίλᾳ εὕδομεν εὐ μάλα μακρὸν, ἀτέρμονα, νήγρετον, ὕπνον.

See above on 1 Thess. iv. 13.

38. τὸ ἴδιον σῶμα] its own body. Wheat does not become barley, nor is barley changed into wheat. Each single grain among the millions that are sown preserves its identity, and rises to life in a more beautiful form.

39—41.] St. Paul's argument is, If God can create such a variety of animal and vegetable genera, surely He can revivify any one genus in a changed, glorified, form. (Greg. Nyss. i. 842.) If He can create, and has created, bodies terrestrial, and also bodies celestial, He can make the terrestrial body to shine with celestial glory. And this is what our Lord Himself promises when He says, "Then shall the righteous shine as the Sun" (Matt. xiii. 43).

39. ἄλλη—ἰχθύων] So the best MSS., and it is observable this is the Psalmist's order, Ps. viii. 8, κτήνη, πετεινὰ, ἰχθύας. And St. Paul had evidently this Psalm in his mind, and quotes it in v. 27. Elz. has ἰχθύων before πτηνῶν.

41, 42. Ἄλλη δόξα ἡλίου—Οὕτω κ.τ.λ.] This text has been used by many of the Fathers in confirmation of the doctrine that there will be different degrees of glory in heaven. So Aug. (Serm. 132), "Comparata est Resurrectio mortuorum stellis in cœlo lucentibus. Stella a stella differt in gloriâ; splendor dispar, cœlum commune." So S. Jerome. Cp. on Luke xix. 17.

— σπείρεται] "Verbum amœnissimum pro sepulturâ." (Bengel.)

44. ἔστιν καὶ πνευματικόν] a spiritual body. Not a spirit, but a true body with flesh and bones (Luke xxiv. 39), such as Christ's Body is since the Resurrection. See on John xx. 19, 20. 27. Phil. iii. 21. Elz. omits εἰ at the beginning of the sentence, but it is in A, B, C, D*, F, G.

47. χοϊκός] of dust, χοῦς. See Mark vi. 11, ἐκτινάξατε τὸν χοῦν. Rev. xviii. 19, ἔβαλον χοῦν. Compare Gen. ii. 7, where the creation of man is thus described by LXX, ἔπλασεν ὁ Θεὸς τὸν ἄνθρωπον, χοῦν ἀπὸ γῆς. Καὶ ἐνεφύσησεν εἰς τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ πνοὴν ζωῆς, καὶ ἐγένετο ὁ ἄνθρωπος εἰς ψυχὴν ζῶσαν.

This word χοϊκὸς is happily adopted by the Apostle, because it contains an argument in behalf of the doctrine of the Resurrection of the body, for which he is pleading. If God could create man from mere χοῦς, loose, flowing dust (root χέω), surely He can restore the work He has created, however that work may moulder in the ground, or be scattered to the wind, or dissolved in the waves.

— ὁ Κύριος] Omitted by B, C, D*, E, F, G, and some recent Editors; but these two words are found in A, D, I, K, and in many Cursives, Versions, and Fathers; and are certainly as old as the age of Origen and Tertullian, who quotes them, c. Marcion. v. 10, "Primus homo de humo terrenus, secundus Dominus de cœlo." Indeed, the word ὁ Κύριος = JEHOVAH, adds much to the force of the statement. The first man was of the earth, χοϊκός, the second man is the Lord from heaven. The one, the creature; the other, the Creator. Therefore, the one the cause of death, the other of life, to all.

49. φορέσωμεν] So Elz. with B alone of collated uncial MSS., and many Cursive MSS. But this is undoubtedly the true reading, and is generally acknowledged so to be, although another reading, φορέσομεν, is supported by A, C, D, E, F, G, K, and very many Cursive MSS. and Fathers, e. g. Tertullian, p. 356. 474, de Res. Carnis, c. 49; c. Marcion. v. 10.

It has been said by some, that the change to φορέσωμεν is to be ascribed to a desire on the part of the Copyists to improve an assertion into an earnest ethical exhortation; but such suppositions as these have a tendency to destroy the credit of the ancient MSS.; and if such surmises were true, those MSS. would hardly be worth the pains of collating them.

Nothing is more common in MSS. than the confusion of ε

50. σὰρξ καὶ αἷμα—οὐ δύνανται] Flesh and Blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God. On the error derived by some from these words, as if they were at variance with a belief in the Resurrection of the Flesh, see Irenæus, v. 9, where he shows that the Apostle's meaning is, that flesh, as flesh, cannot inherit the kingdom of God; and that fleshly lusts exclude from that kingdom; and that the Flesh needs the regenerating, renewing, and sanctifying influence of the Spirit, in order to qualify it for heaven.

S. Irenæus thence draws this practical lesson: Since we cannot be saved without the Spirit of God, the Apostle exhorts us carefully to keep and cherish (συντηρεῖν) the Spirit, by a sound faith and holy life, in order that we may not be bereft of the Spirit, and so forfeit the kingdom of God (v. 9. 3).

See also ibid. v. 10, where he says, St. Paul teaches us that they who live in the flesh cannot please God (Rom. viii. 8), and that flesh cannot inherit the kingdom of God. The Apostle does not reject the substance of the flesh, but invites the infusion of the Spirit.

And again (c. 11), We were cleansed in Baptism, not from the substance of our bodies and from the image of the creature, but from our former vain conversation: and in the same body as that in which we were dying, when we did the works of corruption, in that body are we made alive, when we do the works of the Spirit.

See also ibid. v. 13, 14. Indeed these chapters of the great work of Irenæus form one of the most interesting early Comments on this portion of St. Paul's Epistle. Compare also Tertullian, c. Marcion. v. 10, "Operibus carnis, non substantiæ carnis, denegatur regnum Dei," and de Resurrect. Carnis, c. 50.

See also S. Jerome in his eloquent Epistle ad Pammachium, Vol. iv. p. 319—329, where he comments on this passage of St. Paul, and shows the necessity of confessing the Resurrection of the Body, "Nos post resurrectionem eadem habebimus membra, quibus nunc utimur, easdem carnes et sanguinem et ossa; quorum in Scripturis opera, non natura, damnantur. Hæc est vera Resurrectionis confessio, quæ sic gloriam carni tribuit, ut non auferat veritatem."

The Resurrection of the Flesh is not due to the Flesh, but to the Spirit dwelling in the Flesh. See on Rom. viii. 11.

— οὐδὲ ἡ φθορὰ τὴν ἀφθαρσίαν κληρονομεῖ] Nor does Corruption inherit Incorruption. Will then the flesh be raised again? Yes; certainly. St. Paul does not say that flesh and blood will not arise from the grave, but that they will not inherit the kingdom of God. "Tamdiu regnum Dei non possidebunt, quamdiu caro tantum sanguisque permanserint. Quum autem corruptivum induerit incorruptionem, quæ prius gravi pondere premebatur in terram, acceptis spiritûs pennis, et immutationis non abolitionis novâ gloriâ, volabit ad cœlum" (Jerome, ad Pammach. Vol. iv. p. 329). See Rom. viii. 11, and the homily of Methodius, de Resurrectione, in Amphilochii Opera, p. 283—336.

51. πάντες μὲν—ἀλλαγησόμεθα] We shall not indeed all die, but we shall be changed. Lachmann has adopted the reading of some ancient MSS. and Fathers, especially Wetstein, πάντες [μὲν] κοιμησόμεθα—οὐ πάντες δὲ ἀλλαγησόμεθα, the evidence for which is given by Wetstein, p. 173, and Dean Alford in his valuable collection of Various Readings. But the received reading is supported by B, D, E, by the Syriac, Coptic, Arabic, and Gothic Versions, and many Cursives and Fathers, and, above all, by the context. And so Tisch., Alford, Meyer, with the omission of μέν.

The objection which was made by some in ancient times to the received reading was, that the wicked would not be changed, namely, glorified; but St. Paul is here speaking only of the Resurrection of the Just. See vv. 42—49. 53.

See note above on 1 Thess. iv. 17, and the excellent remarks on the various readings of this passage in Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. vii. p. 564, where, after summing up the evidence on the subject, he says, "we have no reason to doubt or question the received reading."

52. ἐσχάτῃ σάλπιγγι] S. Jerome (ibid.) connects this Trumpet with the seventh Trumpet in the Apocalypse (viii. and ix.), "In Apocalypsi Joannis septem describuntur Angeli cum tubis; Novissimo, i. e. septimo claro tubæ strepitu, mortui suscitantur." And so Theodor. Mopsuest. and Severian, who observe that the Apostle speaks of the last trumpet, with some reference to the other trumpets.

54. Κατεπόθη ὁ θάνατος εἰς νῖκος] The word in Isa. xxv. 8 for νῖκος, victory, is נֵצַח (netsah), eternity, as prevailing over time, and conquering all things, and sometimes used to signify victory (1 Chron. xxix. 11); and therefore the representation of the word by νῖκος, victory, was natural and easy. See Surenhusius, καταλλ. p. 552.

55. Ποῦ σοῦ, θάνατε, τὸ κέντρον;] Where, O Death, is thy sting? The sting of Death, which is sin (v. 56), has been taken away by the obedience and passion of Christ. The sting of the old Serpent of fire has been healed by the lifting up of the Serpent of brass, looked at with the eye of Faith. See on John iii. 14.

— ᾅδη] B, C, D, E, F, G have θάνατε repeated here, which has been received by some Editors, who suppose that ᾅδη is a correction of the copyists to suit the Septuagint Version of the passage here cited of Hosea xiii. 14.

But copyists might have been inclined to alter ᾅδη also, as appearing to give countenance to the heathen notion of a personal Deity bearing the name of Hades. The Latin Fathers, such as Tertullian, who repeated the word Mors (c. Marcion. v. 10), would have shrunk from the use of Orcus, or Dis. And the form of this eloquent appeal and magnificent pæan of victory seems to be weakened by the repetition of the word θάνατε. And an assertion of victory over the Grave, Ἅιδης, שְׁאוֹל (Sheol), seems specially appropriate in this divine plea for the Resurrection of the Flesh.

We find a similar combination in the Apocalypse, xx. 13, ὁ θάνατος καὶ ὁ ᾅδης. And again, xx. 14.

And ᾅδη is found here in A, J, K, and in most of the Cursive MSS., and as early as Origen, and also in the Syriac, Gothic, and Arabic Versions. It is, therefore, retained in the text.

56. ἡ δὲ δύναμις τῆς ἁμαρτίας ὁ νόμος] The strength of sin is the Law. For, where no Law is, there is no sin, for sin is the transgression of Law (see on Rom. iv. 15; vii. 7. 1 John iii. 4), and the nature of Law is to impose and exact a penalty for disobedience to it. Law does not make sin, but declares it; and no child of Adam is without some Law (see on Rom. i. 18; ii. 9), and no one lives up to the Law under which he lives. Every one, therefore, is by nature subject to condemnation, and under a curse. But Christ by His perfect obedience to the requirements, and by His submission to the penalties of Law in our Nature, has delivered us from the curse of the Law (Gal. iii. 13), has given us new powers of obedience, and has promised us infinite rewards for it. See below, Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans.

But why was mention made in this place by St. Paul of the Law, as the strength of sin? What is its connexion with his subject?

He is arguing against those who denied the Resurrection of the Body, and he had already said that if dead bodies cannot rise again, neither is Christ risen (v. 16), Christ's Body is still in the grave. And if that is so, then ye are still in your sins (v. 17). And why? Because the Resurrection of Christ is the proof that His sacrifice for your sins has been accepted by God. His Resurrection is the evidence of your Justification. (See on v. 16, and below on Rom. iv. 25.)

If then there is no such thing as a Resurrection of the body, then your sins yet live and prevail; then the Law, which is the strength of sin, rises up against you with all its curses for disobedience.

But, God be praised, there is a Resurrection. Christ is risen. Ye have been justified. Thanks be to God Who giveth us the Victory through Jesus Christ our Lord!

This argument of the Apostle is a proof of the Resurrection. For, if Sin was the cause of Death, and if Christ loosed the bonds of Sin, and delivered us from it in our Baptism, and has taken away the curse of the Law, in the transgression of which is the essence of Sin, why should we doubt of the Resurrection? How can Death have any power over us? From the Law? No; Christ has destroyed its curse. From Sin? No; Christ has taken it away. Chrys.

57. Τῷ δὲ Θεῷ χάρις τῷ διδόντι ἡμῖν τὸ νῖκος διὰ τοῦ Κ. ἡ. Ἰ. Χ.] Christ has conquered Death, and enables us to conquer it. S. Athanasius argues for the triumph of Christ over death, from the joy with which Christian Martyrs, even young women and boys, have welcomed the most agonizing deaths for Christ, as contrasted with the fear with which men recoiled from Death before the Incarnation and Passion of Christ. See his Treatise de Incarnat. § 27—30, p. 56, and cp. Clem. Rom. § 6, where for γυναῖκες, δαναΐδες, καὶ δίρκαι we may read γυναῖκες, νεανίδες, παιδίσκαι, so Athanas. l. c. οἱ ἐν Χριστῷ παῖδες καὶ νέαι κόραι παρορῶσι τὸν ἐνταῦθα βίον, καὶ θανεῖν μελετῶσι, and Aug. Serm. 143, p. 999.

58. ἐν τῷ ἔργῳ] The practical result of the Doctrine of the Resurrection, and of God's Grace in Christ, is the duty of abounding in the work of the Lord.

CH. XVI. 1. Περὶ δὲ τῆς λογίας τῆς εἰς τοὺς ἁγίους] Concerning the collection of alms for the poor Christians at Jerusalem, suffering then under special privations (cp. on Acts ii. 44) from the hatred of the Jews and the distresses of that age of afflictions which preceded the Fall of Jerusalem. See Gal. ii. 10. 2 Cor. ix. 1, 2. 12.

After St. Paul had written his two Epistles to the Corinthians, he came through Macedonia to Corinth, whence he wrote to the Church of Rome on the same subject, when he was on the point of setting out to Jerusalem through Macedonia, and by Philippi and Troas, and so along the coast of Asia to Jerusalem (Acts xx. 4—xxi. 17) with the contribution. See Rom. xv. 25, where he says I am now going unto Jerusalem to minister unto the Saints; for it hath pleased them of Macedonia and Achaia to make a certain contribution for the poor Saints at Jerusalem.

On the occasion of that visit he was arrested by some of the Asiatic Jews in the Temple, and so eventually came to Rome. See Acts xxiv. 17, 18.

— ὥσπερ διέταξα—Γαλατίας] probably in a recent visit to the Galatian Churches.

— ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις τῆς Γαλατίας] to the Churches of Galatia —who had therefore now been retrieved from their disaffection to the Apostle. See above, Introduction to the Epistle to the Galatians.

2. σαββάτου] So A, B, C, D, E, F, G. Elz. has σαββάτων. For the use of the singular σάββατον, in the sense of week, see Mark xvi. 9. Luke xviii. 12.

As to the primitive observance of the First Day of the week, see on Acts xx. 7.

And on this text, as regarded in primitive times as an authority for the Weekly Offertory on the Lord's Day, see Joseph Mede's Works, p. 273. Cp. Justin Martyr, Apol. i. 88, where he says, "Each of those who are willing, gives according as he is minded, and offers what is contributed to the Minister; and he succours therewith the orphan and widow, and those who are sick and in prison, and strangers, and in a word, is the guardian of those who are in need."

3, 4. οὓς ἐὰν δοκιμάσητε] whom ye may have approved. St. Paul himself was desired by the Churches of Achaia and Macedonia to go with their alms to Jerusalem (see on v. 1). A practical proof of their confidence and affection; the more honourable to him and to the Corinthians, after the stern rebukes of his two Epistles to them.

— δι' ἐπιστολῶν] by your letters to the Church at Jerusalem. The Corinthians were to certify their own sanction of the parties sent with the alms, in order that those parties might not seem to have taken the office upon themselves, and in order that their mission might have proper credentials and due authority.

5. Μακεδονίαν γὰρ διέρχομαι] I am now intending to pass through Macedonia. He had not yet left Ephesus, nor would do so before the ensuing Pentecost (v. 8).

As to the Chronology of this time, see the "Chronological Table," and the Introduction to this Epistle.

7. οὐ θέλω] it is not my will. On St. Paul's desires and designs in regard to a visit to Corinth, see on 2 Cor. i. 16—23.

12. Περὶ δὲ Ἀπολλώ] concerning Apollos. Do not imagine, therefore, from my language in this Epistle (i. 10), that there is any rivalry between us.

17. ἐπὶ τῇ παρουσίᾳ Στεφανᾶ κ. Φ. κ. Ἀ.] who, it is probable, brought the letter of the Corinthians (vii. 1), and carried back this reply. (Theodoret.) The name of a Fortunatus occurs in the Epistle of S. Clement (c. 59) as one of the bearers of it to the Church of Corinth.

— ὑμέτερον] So the best authorities. Elz. ὑμῶν. Cp. Phil. ii. 30.

— αὐτοί] So the best MSS., a reading preferable to that of Elz. οὗτοι.

St. Paul means that Stephanas and the others, αὐτοὶ 'ipsi,' i. e. in their own persons, of their own accord and free-will, supplied what was lacking on the part of the Corinthian community.

Though St. Paul did not exact maintenance from the Corinthians, yet he did not excuse them for not offering to supply it. See on Acts xviii. 5, and cp. 2 Cor. xi. 8, 9, which is the best commentary on this passage, παρὼν πρὸς ὑμᾶς (i. e. at Corinth) καὶ ὑστερηθεὶς οὐ κατενάρκησα οὐδενός· τὸ γὰρ ὑστέρημά μου προσανεπλήρωσαν οἱ ἀδελφοὶ ἐλθόντες ἀπὸ Μακεδονίας.

This interpretation is confirmed by the character here given to Stephanas and his companions, that they gave themselves to acts of Christian beneficence, εἰς διακονίαν τοῖς ἁγίοις.

Some expositors interpret ὑστέρημα as absence; but this is a sense in which it is not used in N. T. And cp. Luke xxi. 4. 2 Cor. viii. 13, 14. Phil. ii. 30. 1 Thess. iii. 10.

18. ἀνέπαυσαν γὰρ τὸ ἐμὸν πνεῦμα καὶ τὸ ὑμῶν] They refreshed my spirit, and yours. Observe the aorist here. St. Paul does not say that Stephanas and his friend have now done so by their visit to him; but he refers to their former conduct, i. e. to what they did when he was at Corinth.

They were benevolent and charitable persons; and they were something more, they were fellow-labourers in preaching the Gospel, συνεργοῦντες καὶ κοπιῶντες (see v. 16). Hence he might well say, they refreshed my spirit by acts of kindness, and they refreshed yours by spiritual comfort. Hence St. Paul exhorts the Corinthians, ἐπιγινώσκειν, to acknowledge and love them—a duty to be paid specially to Pastors. See 1 Thess. v. 12.

19. Ἀκύλας καὶ Πρίσκιλλα] Aquila and Priscilla. See on Acts xviii. 18. Rom. xvi. 3. 2 Tim. iv. 19.

— τῇ κατ' οἶκον αὐτῶν ἐκκλησίᾳ] the Church that is in their house. See Rom. xvi. 5. Col. iv. 15.

20. ἀσπάσασθε ἀλλήλους] Salute one another with a holy kiss.

The words ἀσπάσασθε ἀλλήλους were uttered by the Deacon in the Ancient Liturgies. See the Liturgy of St. Mark, p. 15 (ed. Neale), and note above, 1 Thess. v. 26, and below, 2 Cor. xiii. 12. Rom. xvi. 16.

21. Ὁ ἀσπασμὸς τῇ ἐμῇ χειρὶ Παύλου] The salutation by the hand of me Paul. Having dictated the former part of the Epistle to an amanuensis, he now takes the pen into his own hand, and concludes it. See above on 1 Thess. v. 28.

22. οὐ φιλεῖ τὸν Κύριον] Observe the word φιλεῖ. Φιλῶ is rarely, if ever, applied to Almighty God in the New Testament; and yet the words οὐ φιλεῖ are not equivalent to μισεῖ. See 2 John 10, and Winer, § 55, p. 425. And φιλῶ here represents the love which Christians are permitted, and encouraged, and even required, to pay to Christ, who is Man as well as God.

And yet, lest any one should presume on this love, and pervert it into an occasion of familiarity and irreverence, the Apostle adds the solemn words Maran-atha. See on John xxi. 15—17. Matt. x. 37.

There is something therefore remarkable in the word φιλεῖ, expressive as it is of tender affection, and to a Greek ear signifying to kiss (Luke xxii. 47, 48), and therefore so rarely and reverently used by the Evangelists in regard to the Divine Being, and yet introduced here in relation to Christ immediately after the exhortation to salute one another, as the primitive Christians did, especially at the Holy Eucharist (see v. 20, and 1 Thess. v. 26, and Rom. xvi. 6), with an ἅγιον φίλημα, a holy kiss. These words were full of meaning to the men and women of Corinth, and were fraught with warning against unholy sins. Shall I take the members of Christ, and make them the members of a harlot? (1 Cor. vi. 15.) Shall I pollute the lips which have been sanctified by the eucharistic reception of His most Blessed Body and Blood?

— ἤτω ἀνάθεμα· μαρὰν ἀθά] let him be Anathema: the Lord cometh. On the form ἤτω for ἔστω, see James v. 12. Winer, p. 73.

A pause is to be made after "Anathema." Let him be accursed (Acts xxiii. 14; Rom. ix. 3. Gal. i. 8, 9. 1 Cor. xii. 3): not, however, by man. For, the Lord, מָרָן (maran), אָתָה (atha), cometh to execute judgment on him. Cp. Jude 14, 15.

Perhaps the Apostle uses two Aramaic or Syro-Chaldaic words here, maran, atha, in this imprecation, and joins them to the Greek, Anathema, in order to remind the Greeks that there were treasures of divine Knowledge in other languages, which they regarded as barbarous (cp. Chrys. here), and that Greek and Jew are accountable to Christ the Lord and Judge of all. Compare the notes on the combination of the words Ἀββᾶ, πατὴρ in Mark xiv. 36. Gal. iv. 6. Rom. viii. 15.

Perhaps also he does it with an allusion to the Hebrew form of Cherem, or Imprecation, uttered in the Name of God: and called Shem-atha, i. e. "the Name," the ineffable Name (viz.)

a Rom. 16. 20.

23 a Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μεθ' ὑμῶν. 24 Ἡ ἀγάπη μου μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. ἀμήν.

JEHOVAH, "cometh" to execute judgment (see Lightfoot); thus reminding his readers that our Lord Jesus Christ, Whom they are required φιλεῖν, to love as man, is no other than God, in whose Name Blessings and Curses are pronounced, and that He will come hereafter to execute Judgment on all Nations and Tongues.

Subscription to the Epistle.

In the Gothic Version of Ulphilas, it is rightly noted that although some persons say that this Epistle was written from Philippi in Macedonia, yet, according to the Apostle's own intimation, it was rather written from Asia.

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

SECOND EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

On the Date of Time and Place of the SECOND EPISTLE to the CORINTHIANS.

THE Second Epistle to the Corinthians was written soon after the First Epistle. This appears from the language in chapter ii. 13, where St. Paul describes his disappointment at not finding Titus, whom he expected from Corinth, to report what impression had been made on the Corinthians by the First Epistle; and also from chapter viii. 6—13, where he describes the joy he felt at the coming of Titus to him in Macedonia, with a good report of the salutary effect produced at Corinth by that Epistle.

The First Epistle was written in the Spring of A.D. 57. See above, Introduction to that Epistle.

St. Paul had announced in that Epistle his intention to winter at Corinth (1 Cor. xvi. 6). It appears from Acts xix. 21, 22, that St. Paul, when at Ephesus, where he wrote his First Epistle to the Corinthians, "purposed in his spirit to pass through Macedonia and Achaia, and thence to go to Jerusalem," with the alms which he had collected for the poor Christians.

It appears also, from Acts xix. 21, that he sent Timothy and Erastus from Ephesus into Macedonia.

He himself remained some time longer at Ephesus, and there wrote his First Epistle to the Corinthians, in which he announces to them that he had sent Timothy to them (1 Cor. iv. 17; xvi. 10).

Then arose the tumult excited by Demetrius the silversmith (Acts xix. 24—41). After which St. Paul left Ephesus and came by Troas (2 Cor. ii. 13) into Macedonia, and passed through those regions (Acts xx. 2), and preached the Gospel in a westerly direction, as far as Illyricum (see note on Acts xx. 2, Rom. xv. 19).

Soon afterwards he came to Corinth, and spent there three months; and thence returned by Macedonia and Troas, and came by Miletus to Cæsarea and Jerusalem, where he arrived at the Pentecost of A.D. 58. (See Acts xx. 2; xxi. 17.)

The Second Epistle to the Corinthians was written soon after the First Epistle, and it was written before this latter visit to Corinth.

For, it is evident (from 2 Cor. i. 23; ii. 1) that he had not been at Corinth after the date of the former Epistle, and that he was in Macedonia when he wrote this Second Epistle, and was intending shortly to come to Corinth. (See 2 Cor. ix. 1—4.)

From these facts it may be concluded that the Second Epistle to the Corinthians was written by St. Paul late in the summer or in the autumn of A.D. 57, when he was in Macedonia.

Hence he reports, in this Second Epistle to the Corinthians, what the Churches of Macedonia had done and were doing towards the collection of alms which he was about to carry to Jerusalem (2 Cor. viii. 1—6; ix. 2), and to which the Corinthians had already contributed (2 Cor. ix. 2). And he announces to them as probable that some Christians of Macedonia will come with him to Corinth (2 Cor. ix. 4); which proved to be the case, as we find in the Acts (xx. 4). These Macedonians who accompanied St. Paul to Corinth were Aristarchus and Secundus, of Thessalonica (Acts xx. 4). Perhaps the Epistle was written from that city, or from Philippi.

Had St. Paul been more than once at Corinth when he wrote this Epistle?

This question has been answered in the affirmative by some learned recent expositors, who suppose that he had crossed over from Ephesus to Corinth in the interval of the three years mentioned Acts xx. 1. The arguments in behalf of this opinion are derived from 2 Cor. ii. 1, ἔκρινα μὴ πάλιν ἐν λύπῃ ἐλθεῖν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, and from 2 Cor. xiii. 1; and it will be examined in the notes on those passages.

Πρὸς Κορινθίους Β΄.] So A, B, and several Cursive MSS.

Ch. I. 1. Τιμόθεος ὁ ἀδελφός] Timothy our brother, who had been with St. Paul on his first visit to Corinth (Acts xviii. 5. 2 Cor. i. 19), and had lately been sent by him from Ephesus to Corinth (1 Cor. iv. 17), whence he had now returned to St. Paul.

How was it then, that Timothy had not brought back a report to St. Paul of the impression made at Corinth by his first Epistle? Or if he had brought back a report, how is it that St. Paul does not refer to him, but only to Titus, as his intelligencer in this respect? 2 Cor. vii. 6 - 13.

The reason seems to be, that Timothy rejoined St. Paul in Macedonia soon after Titus had come to him, or they may have come back together; and he does not refer to Timothy for this report, but associates Timothy with himself in writing the Epistle; and thus the report is virtually adopted by Timothy. And the Corinthians in reading this Epistle, to which Timothy's name is prefixed, would understand that he had concurred with Titus in the favourable representation there given of the manner in which the former Epistle of St. Paul had been received by them.

Silas and Timotheus are represented in the Acts of the Apostles as St. Paul's associates at Corinth. (Acts xviii. 5.) In harmony with this statement, we find Silas and Timotheus mentioned as his fellow-labourers there in this chapter (v. 19), and here he associates Timothy's name with his own in the address of this Epistle.

— ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ Ἀχαΐᾳ] in all Achaia. See 1 Cor. i. 2.

3. ὁ Πατὴρ τῶν οἰκτιρμῶν] the Father of mercies; the most merciful Father (Theophyl.), according to the Hebrew idiom, in which the genitive case expresses the quality, and the plural number indicates abundance. See on Luke xvi. 8, 9, and Vorst. de Hebr. N. T., p. 248. And the definite article of the Greek language denotes the special mercy, which exceeds all other mercy. Οἰκτιρμὸς = Hebr. רַחַם (rechem); literally σπλάγχνα, the bowels, hence pity and love; and is used in this sense in the plural in numerous places by the LXX; e. g. Isa. lxiii. 15. Dan. ix. 9.

5. τὰ παθήματα τοῦ Χριστοῦ] The afflictions which Christ endures in His members, who suffer for Him. See on Acts. ix. 4, and Col. i. 24. Phil. iii. 10. Heb. iv. 15. Chrys., Theoph., Œcum.; and so Winer, p. 170.

It is indeed alleged by some interpreters here, that this exposition is inconsistent with the doctrine of Christ's exaltation. But this is erroneous. See Heb. vi. 6, where men are said to crucify afresh the Son of God. All things are not yet put under His feet. (1 Cor. xv. 25.) He has enemies who rebel against Him, even though He is seated in glory at God's right hand. (Ps. ii. 9—12.) And so intimate is His union with His members, by reason of His Incarnation, and their baptismal Incorporation into Him, that whatever may be predicated of His members in the way of suffering, may, by virtue of that mystical union, be said of Him, even though He is exalted to the Right Hand of God.

Still it must be remembered (by way of caution against the Romish doctrine, which makes the sufferings of the Saints to be meritorious, and associates them in this respect with the sufferings of Christ), that Christ our Head made a plenary satisfaction on the cross for the sins of the whole world, and He no longer suffers as our Head, but He suffers in His members. But their sufferings are not propitiatory, as His own proper sufferings were. See on Col. i. 24.

6. Εἴτε δὲ θλιβόμεθα—ἐλπὶς ἡμῶν βεβαία ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν] If we are afflicted, it is for your sake. We might escape afflictions, if we did not preach the Gospel; but we preach it, in order that you may be saved; and in preaching it we endure affliction for your sake, and this salvation which we preach operates in you in the patience which it produces in you, who bear similar afflictions for the Gospel which you receive. Theophyl.

The reading in the text is that of the greatest number of uncial and cursive MSS. and best Editions.—Elz. has καὶ ἡ ἐλπὶς —ὑμῶν after σωτηρίας.

8. ὑπέρ] concerning. As Latin super, Hebr. עַל. See 2 Thess. ii. 1, ὑπὲρ τῆς παρουσίας: below, viii. 23, ὑπὲρ Τίτου. Winer, p. 342. Some MSS. have περὶ here, but this is probably a correction of the copyists.

— ἐν τῇ Ἀσίᾳ] in Asia. See Rom. xvi. 3, where he speaks of Aquila and Priscilla—who were at Ephesus when he wrote his First Epistle to the Corinthians (1 Cor. xvi. 19)—as having laid down their necks for his own life.

Whether the peril to which he here refers was consequent on the popular tumult excited by Demetrius against him (Acts xix. 26), as Theodoret and others suppose, is not certain. Tertullian (de Resur. Carnis, c. 28) connects this passage with 1 Cor. xv. 32, "I fought with beasts at Ephesus."

9. ἀλλὰ—τὸ ἀπόκριμα τοῦ θανάτου] but (ἀλλά), more than this, we not only were in an ἀπορία, or extremity, without means of life, but we had also in ourselves the sentence of death; ἀπόκριμα = ψῆφον. Theodoret, Chrys. When we asked ourselves the question, whether we had any hope of life in ourselves, we ourselves pronounced ourselves to be lost.

Ἀπόκριμα differs from Ἀπόκρισις. Ἀπόκριμα is that which is the substance of the ἀπόκρισις.

— ἐσχήκαμεν] we have had; a stronger word than ἔσχομεν, as showing duration of suffering, and intimating that its moral effect would be more permanent. We have had this trial and distress, and are still exposed to it, in order that we may feel our own weakness and dependence, and may rely wholly on God. See below, vii. 5.

In order to understand fully the force of the perfect tense as used here, it must be remembered, that wherever St. Paul was, he was exposed to plots and persecutions from the Jews. Cp. Acts xx. 3; below, iv. 8.

— ἵνα] in order that. He thus marks the providential reason for which he was permitted by God to give himself up as lost. See 1 Cor. i. 15. 2 Cor. iv. 7, and below on Rom. iii. 4.

11. συνυπουργούντων—ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν] You also succouring us by your prayers, in order that the free gift (of God) to us, evoked by many persons, may be acknowledged on our behalf by means of many; and so God may be more glorified by public praise for His goodness to me.

A precept that we should not only pray God for blessings on others, but also praise Him for them. Theoph.

12. καύχησις] glorying (not καύχημα, or subject-matter of glorying). Our glorying is nothing more than the witness of our conscience, that we have not preached to you with the wisdom of the world, but with the simplicity and sincerity of God. The genitive Θεοῦ indicates the author and source from which it comes. See 1 Cor. iii. 6. Col. ii. 19, αὔξησις τοῦ Θεοῦ.

— ἁπλότητι] simplicity. A, B, C, K, have ἁγιότητι, which is perhaps due to want of right apprehension of the meaning of ἁπλότης Θεοῦ. Compare 2 Cor. xi. 3. Eph. vi. 5, for this use of ἁπλότης, which is more direct opposition to σοφία σαρκικὴ than ἁγιότης, and is confirmed by the authority of D, E, F, G, J, and Vulg., Syriac, and Arabic Versions, and Chrys., Theodoret, and others.

13. Οὐ γάρ] For we have practised no disguise or reserve in our preaching. Cp. Acts xx. 27. We are not like the Philosophers of your ethical Schools, who make a difference between their exoteric and esoteric teaching. We preach one and the same Gospel to all. We have no secret correspondence with any; we write nothing to you that you do not read publicly in the Church, or that you do not openly acknowledge in your public professions of faith.

14. ἀπὸ μέρους] in part. See below, ii. 5. Rom. xi. 15. Winer, p. 376. I say 'in part;' for although you have complied generally with my commands, yet some of you have not recognized my Apostolic authority, and you have not altogether rejected those who impugn it. Theodoret.

— καύχημα] subject-matter of boasting. I Cor. v. 6; ix. 25. 2 Cor. v. 12; ix. 3. Gal. vi. 4. Phil. i. 26; ii. 16.

15. ἐβουλόμην] I was desirous. He does not say that it was his settled purpose, βούλευμα, nor yet his θέλημα, or will, to do so. See on v. 17, and below, Philem. 13, where ἐβουλόμην in like manner signifies a wish, which is controlled and overruled by the will; and see note above, 1 Thess. ii. 18.

He does not say, I wrote to you, saying that I was resolved to pass through you to Macedonia, but only I was wishing (imperfect) to do so.

— ἵνα δευτέραν χάριν ἔχητε] That you may have a second benefit, by a second visit from me. See below on xiii. 1.

17. βουλόμενος] wishing. So A, B, C, F, G.—Elz. βουλευόμενος. But St. Paul does not say that he purposed, ἐβουλεύσατο, after mature deliberation and counsel, to come; but that only he had a wish to come.

In fact, there is a contrast here between βούλομαι and βουλεύομαι: and he defends himself from the charge of levity, by asserting that his wishes were controlled by his will, which was regulated by right reason and by the will of God; so that his βουλήματα were duly subject to his βουλεύματα. Cp. ii. 1, where his resolve is expressed by ἔκρινα κ.τ.λ.

— τῇ ἐλαφρίᾳ] did I therefore at all act with the fickleness and lightness (κουφότητι, Hesych.) which some of you impute to me, as veering from one purpose to another, altering my plans merely from caprice or fear?

— ἢ ἃ βουλεύομαι] He answers here a second and very different imputation, and says: or, as to those things which I purpose (i. e. resolve, βουλεύομαι distinguished from βούλομαι, I desire), do I purpose them with carnal wilfulness, in order that with me (and not with God) the yea should be yea, and the nay should be nay: that is, so that my determinations to do or not to do a thing, should be decided by my own fleshly will, irrespectively of God's guidance, and the directions of the Holy Spirit?

Do I so determine matters, that (whatever may be the providential order of circumstances subsequent to my determination) I will make my own will to be of more account than the will of God? Am I so obstinately fixed in my own purposes, or so vainly enamoured of my own resolves, as, in a headstrong spirit, to arrogate to myself the determination of my own conduct, and the shaping of my own plans, without any regard to the divine disposition of events? Do I say, "Sic volo, sic jubeo; stet pro ratione voluntas?"

No: God forbid! I not only subject my own wishes to my reason, and frame my resolves accordingly; but I submit my resolves also to God's good pleasure, as intimated to me by the illuminations of His Holy Spirit. Cp. Chrys., Theophyl., who rightly point to Acts xvi. 6, 7, for evidence that St. Paul's wishes were controlled by the Holy Ghost.

Thus the Apostle in these two verses disposes of two objections;

The first, charging him with capricious fickleness in his wishes;

The second, imputing to him arbitrary imperiousness of will.

St. Paul's uniform resolve was, to conform his own will to God's will, and to make his actions subservient to God's glory and the salvation of others. And in this resolve he never wavered. As Theodoret well explains the passage, St. Paul's conduct is exemplary, in that he neither wavered in his mind, nor yet was resolved to follow his own choice at any rate. See above on 1 Thess. ii. 18.

18. Πιστὸς δὲ ὁ Θεός] But God is to be believed that, &c. If you do not believe me, believe Him, Whose Son is preached by me, and Who has accredited my word, and has given us His Spirit. See vv. 19—23.

— ἐστὶν] So the best authorities.—Elz. ἐγένετο.

19. ναὶ ἐν αὐτῷ γέγονεν] Observe the perfect γέγονεν. It has become yea, and remains yea in Him. There may be changes in the ordering of my own purposes to preach the Gospel; for my purposes are human. But there is no variableness in the Gospel, which is the subject of our preaching, for that is divine. It is fixed for ever in Christ, the Rock of Ages. It is not sometimes "yea and sometimes nay;" but it is an eternal yea, and an everlasting Amen, in Him.

He thus obviates another objection, viz. that his own avowal of a modification in his purposes of preaching implied also a possibility of change in the substance of what he preached. (Theophyl., Œcumen.)

20. διὸ καὶ δι' αὐτοῦ] So A, B, C, F, G. Elz. καὶ ἐν αὐτῷ. The sense is, How many and great soever are the promises of God, their Yea (i. e. their confirmation of them) is in Him, i. e. in Christ, wherefore through Him is the Amen (or verification of them) for God's glory, through the instrumentality of us His Ministers, and through our Ministry. Therefore, since we are the appointed Ministers of God's Truth to men, you may be sure that the promises made by us, who have been sent by Christ, and are guided and strengthened by Him Who is the Word and Truth of God, are not fickle or illusory.

22. ἀρραβῶνα] from Heb. עֵרָבוֹן, Gen. xxxviii. 17, 18. 20, where LXX have ἀρραβών. It is cited from Menander by Etymol. M. See authorities in Wetstein. The root is Heb. עָרַב (arabh), to give in pledge. Hence the Latin arrha and the modern word arrhes, an earnest, something given as a πρόδομα (Hesych.), as present and part payment, and as a pledge for future and full payment, or for the performance of a covenant. Cp. Eph. i. 14, where the gift of the Holy Spirit is called the arrhabon, or present earnest of the future heavenly inheritance.

If the part of the payment has been given us by God, He will not fail to give the whole. Εἰ τὸν ἀρραβῶνα ἔδωκεν ἡμῖν ὁ Θεὸς, καὶ τὸ πᾶν δώσει πάντως. Theophyl.

23. τὸν Θεὸν ἐπικαλοῦμαι] I call God to witness. A solemn adjuration. "Jurat Apostolus" (Bengel). See Bp. Sanderson, as quoted on 1 Cor. xv. 31.

In two places in this Epistle St. Paul calls God to witness; here, and xi. 31. And with good reason. For in both places he is speaking of what God only knew, viz., the inner workings of his own heart.

24. οὐχ ὅτι] depends on φειδόμενος, sparing you, I say, not thereby implying that I am lord of your faith, but am a helper of your joy. (2 Cor. iii. 5.)

— τῇ γὰρ πίστει ἑστήκατε] for by Faith ye stand. By it ye hold fast to Christ, your only foundation (1 Cor. iii. 11). Do not think then that I tamper with that because I make changes in my plans of preaching to you. See v. 19.

CH. II. 1. Ἔκρινα δέ] The δὲ connects this sentence with ἐβουλόμην, i. 15. I was wishing (imperfect) to come by a direct course to you from Ephesus, and to pass by you to Macedonia; but, knowing in what an unhappy state you were, and not knowing what effect my Epistle would produce upon you, I ἔκρινα, resolved (aorist) not to come to you again while I was in grief on your account. Therefore, as I said before, it was because I would spare you (i. 23) that I came not as yet (οὐκέτι ἦλθον) to you.

He was wishing to come to them, but was restrained from coming to them by considerations of love towards them (Chrys.), and by the guidance of the Holy Spirit. See i. 17.

St. Paul had announced to the Corinthians this resolve in his former Epistle. (See 1 Cor. xvi. 5.) I will come to you when I have passed through Macedonia, for I am now going to pass through Macedonia.

But he had not disclosed to the Corinthians the inner workings of his own mind and heart (see here i. 23), which led him to frame this resolve.

— πάλιν ἐν λύπῃ πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἐλθεῖν] So A, B, C. And some MSS. (D, E, F, G) have ἐν λύπῃ ἐλθεῖν πρὸς ὑμᾶς. Elz. has ἐλθεῖν ἐν λύπῃ πρὸς ὑμᾶς.

The words πάλιν ἐν λύπῃ ἐλθεῖν do not mean (as has been alleged) that he had already come once to them in sorrow, and that therefore he had been already twice at Corinth before he wrote his first Epistle.

It is clear, and is generally allowed, that he did not come to them in the interval between the writing of his First and of his Second Epistle. See below, vii. 5—8, and Introduction to this and to the First Epistle;

As Theodoret says, πάλιν is not to be construed with ἐν λύπῃ, but with ἐλθεῖν;

No such second visit, as is supposed by some to have taken place before the date of the First Epistle, is mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles. Only one visit before that date is recorded there, the visit described Acts xviii. 1—18. Besides, if the Apostle had been with the Corinthians in sorrow, before he wrote his first Epistle, he would have referred to that visit in his first Epistle, and would not have grounded his censures of them on information received from others, e. g. those of Chloe (1 Cor. i. 11), and common hearsay (1 Cor. v. 1; xi. 18), but on his own personal observations.

If, also, he had been recently there, it is by no means probable that such excesses and abuses would have grown up in the Corinthian Church, or that such heresies would have been propagated there as he describes in his first Epistle;

Further; there is not the least intimation in that Epistle of any recent visit to them, or of any other visit than that one which he had paid to Corinth four years before, viz. A. D. 53, 54, and is described in Acts xviii. 1—18;

On the contrary, the whole tenour of that Epistle is in harmony with the conclusion that he had not been at Corinth since that first visit;

He also says in the present Epistle (2 Cor. i. 15) that he had been desirous to come to them, that they might have a second benefit, i. e. from a second visit, and not a third benefit from a third visit.

Besides, the abuses and excesses to which he refers in his Epistle, were notorious and inveterate. He could not but have heard something of them when at Ephesus. And the same reasons which restrained him from visiting them in grief now, would have restrained him from visiting them in grief then.

His mode of dealing with them was to try first what could be done by a Letter, and then to come in person.

"In tristitiâ antè scripserat, non venerat." Bengel.

Compare the remarks on the similar case of the Galatians above, Introduction to that Epistle, § 19—23.

On the objections from 2 Cor. xiii. 1, τρίτον τοῦτο ἔρχομαι, see note there.

As to the position of πάλιν, see Bengel here, and cp. σχεδόν, in Heb. ix. 22; and εὐθέως, Mark i. 10; ix. 15. And see Winer, p. 488. These adverbs are to be combined, as πάλιν here, with the principal word in the sentence, generally the verb or participle; and so πάλιν seems to be used in 2 Cor. xii. 21, μὴ πάλιν ἐλθόντα με ταπεινώσῃ με ὁ Θεός μου πρὸς ὑμᾶς.

2. εἰ μὴ ὁ λυπούμενος] he who is hurt by me, i. e. you yourselves.

5. ἀλλὰ ἀπὸ μέρους—ὑμᾶς] He has not grieved me (i. e. not so much me personally and individually, or me only or mainly; cp. Luke x. 20. Acts v. 4. 1 Cor. xv. 10. Winer, p. 439) but in part, i. e. in my relation to you, and in the share which I take in your griefs, in order that I may not lay the load of grief on you all (for what has been done by one among you), and yet take no share of the sorrow's burden on myself, your spiritual Father.

No; do not suppose on the one hand, that in my reproofs I vented the bitter feelings of a personal grief; nor yet imagine on the other, that I would lay the whole burden on you all for the sin of one among you, and not bear any part of it myself.

The sinner, the incestuous person mentioned above, 1 Cor. v. 1—5, who was excommunicated for his sin, and has been now brought to repentance, has indeed grieved me by his sin in particular, as distinguished from the rest of you, to whom he belongs; and he has grieved me in part as sharing in your sorrow for the sin of one of your members.

Thus the words ἀπὸ μέρους, in part, appear to have a twofold relation; first, to the sinner as regarded with reference to the πάντες, of whom he was a part; and next to the Apostle as participating in all that concerned his spiritual flock. And this double relation of ἀπὸ μέρους is brought out by the words ἵνα μὴ ἐπιβαρῶ πάντας ὑμᾶς.

The passage is rightly rendered by Tertullian, de Pudicit. c. 13, "Non me contristavit, sed ex parte, ne vos onerem omnes."

10. ὃ κεχάρισμαι, εἴ τι κεχάρισμαι] So A, B, C, F, G. Elz. has εἴ τι κ. ᾧ κεχ.

St. Paul does not here rest his pardon on the grounds of regard and relation to the party pardoned; he had considered that point in v. 7; but he now says, that whatsoever pardon he has granted, he has granted it for the sake of all.

Tertullian (l. c.) rightly renders the words, "Ego si quid donavi, donavi in persona Christi."

11. ὑπὸ τοῦ Σατανᾶ] by Satan, to whom he had been delivered, in order that by the exercise of godly discipline he might be delivered from Satan. 1 Cor. v. 5. See note there.

12. δέ] This conjunction marks the end of the parenthesis (vv. 5—12), and connects what follows with the narrative in v. 4, interrupted by it. Cp. Meyer here, and Winer, p. 402.

— οὐκ ἔσχηκα ἄνεσιν] I have not had rest. The Perfect takes the reader back to the time specified, and makes it present to him, and marks a longer duration than the aorist εἶχον would have done. Cp. above i. 9, and below vii. 5.

— Τίτον] Titus, whom I expected to come from you.

14. θριαμβεύοντι] rendered by some, making us to triumph. Similarly other neuter verbs are sometimes used in an active sense, as Ps. cxviii. 49, 50, μνήσθητι τῶν λόγων σου ὧν ἐπήλπισάς με . . . ὅτι τὸ λόγιόν σου ἔζησέ με. So μαθητεύειν ἔθνη, Matt. xxviii. 19; and 1 Sam. viii. 22, βασίλευσον αὐτοῖς βασιλέα. See Winer, p. 22, and Meyer here.

But St. Paul uses the word θριαμβεύειν in another place, Col. ii. 15, θριαμβεύσας αὐτούς, where the sense is, to display them publicly in triumphal pomp and pageantry in that very thing, the cross, which was the instrument of shame. As the Fathers say, The Cross of Christ became to Him like a Triumphal Car, in which He rode as a Conqueror, and exhibited to the world His glory, by the subjection of His foes, and by the glorious rewards which He procured for, and distributed to, His faithful soldiers, the partners of His Victory and Triumph. See Barrow's words (vi. p. 595) as quoted below on Col. ii. 15.

This being the sense in which St. Paul uses the word θριαμβεύω in Col. ii. 15, it seems most probable that it is employed in a not dissimilar meaning here;

Thanks be to God, Who displays us to the world as trophies of His Triumph in Christ.

St. Paul does not lay any stress here on the hostile character of those who were led in triumph by earthly conquerors, of whom they were said θριαμβεύειν. See Plutarch, Romul. p. 38, D; Coriolan. p. 231, A; Arat. p. 1052, C; and other passages quoted by Wetstein here. And see also the leading incidents of a Triumph, to which the Apostle here refers, in Plutarch, Æmil. § 32; Josephus, B. J. vii. 5; Juvenal, Sat. x. 38—45; Grævius, Thesaurus Ant. Vol. xxx.; Dr. Smith's Dict. of Antiq. p. 1008.

Indeed, it may rather be said, that there is a contrast here between the savage barbarity of earthly Conquerors toward ὀσμὴν τῆς γνώσεως αὐτοῦ φανεροῦντι δι' ἡμῶν ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ. 15 [m] Ὅτι Χριστοῦ εὐωδία ἐσμὲν τῷ Θεῷ ἐν τοῖς σωζομένοις καὶ ἐν τοῖς ἀπολλυμένοις, 16 οἷς μὲν [n] ὀσμὴ θανάτου εἰς θάνατον, οἷς δὲ ὀσμὴ ζωῆς εἰς ζωήν.

o ch. 4. 2. & 11. 13—15. Jer. 5. 31. & 23. 27—32. Matt. 24. 24. 1 Tim. 1. 19, 20. & 4. 1—3.

those whom they lead in triumph, and the mild yoke which Christ places on the neck of those whom He subdues to Himself. Earthly Victors lead their captives in triumph, in order to put them to death, but Christ leads us in triumph, in order that we may have everlasting life. Our Heavenly Conqueror, Christ, in His infinite love to us, leads us in triumph in order that we, His captives, may become His soldiers, partners of His Victory.

St. Paul's thoughts are absorbed in contemplating the Triumph of Him Who rides on the White Horse, going forth conquering and to conquer (Rev. vi. 2); and he exults in regarding himself as an instrument used for the display of Christ's triumphal glory in the march of His Gospel through the world.

This is the sense which, with more or less clearness, is assigned to these words by ancient Expositors. Thus Theodoret, "In all things we sing hymns to God (does he refer to the triumphal pæan?), Who leads us hither and thither, displaying us to the world, and diffusing by us the knowledge of His truth." So Chrys., "The Apostle has been speaking of his afflictions. But do not think, he says, that I am distressed by them. No; they are my glory. These trials are our triumphs. Thanks be to God, Who triumphs us, that is, makes us illustrious (περιφανεῖς) in the eyes of all. Our persecutors are the trophies which we erect in every land. We triumph in Christ, and in His Gospel. And since we are engaged in a triumph, we must bear the trophy aloft, the Cross, in the eyes of the world."

And so Theophyl. And so Jerome, ad Hebib. qu. 11, "Triumphat nos Deus in Christo. Triumphus enim Dei passio Martyrum pro Christi nomine, cruoris effusio, et inter tormenta lætitiæ." And thus he well connects this verse with what follows: "Cum enim viderit quis tantâ perseverantiâ stare Martyres, et in suis persecutionibus gloriari, odor notitiæ Dei disseminatur in gentes, et subit tacita cogitatio, quòd, nisi verum esset Evangelium, nunquam sanguine defenderetur."

St. Paul, in writing these words, doubtless refers to the fact in his mind, that he himself had once been, in a special degree, an Enemy of Christ (indeed, who had not been an Enemy once? see Rom. v. 10), and that he had formerly taken up arms against Christ, and that he had been thrown prostrate on the ground, as a soldier in a field of battle, by Christ's victorious power and glory, in his mad career to Damascus, and that he had been led by Him in triumph as a captive by a Conqueror. His mind is also filled with an awful sense of Christ's majesty, and with joy and gratitude that he himself, once the furious enemy of Christ, and proud rebel against Him, is now one of His soldiers, accompanying Him always, and in every place (πάντοτε, and ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ), in the triumphal progress of the Gospel (as the laurelled legions of the Roman Cæsars followed them on their victorious career through the streets of the cities of the world), and showing forth His praise, and chanting a sacred "Io TRIUMPHE" to Christ, and proclaiming peace and safety to all who receive Him, and submit to His victorious sway.

Hence the Metaphor which follows;

14—16. τὴν ὀσμὴν τῆς γνώσεως αὐτοῦ φανεροῦντι—εἰς ζωήν] These verses may best be considered together.

Ὀσμὴ = odor, smell; εὐωδία, sweet smell, fragrance, perfume.

Some MSS. (A, B) prefix ἐκ to θανάτου and to ζωῆς, which is received by some Editors. But the reading in the text seems preferable, and is found in D, E, F, G, I, K; and is confirmed by Vulg., Syriac, Gothic, and Æthiopic Versions, and Cod. Augiens. and Boerner., and by the majority of Ancient Interpreters.

The sense is, we diffuse the odour of His knowledge in every place. They who follow an earthly conqueror in his triumphal march through the cities of this world, cause the citizens of those cities to kindle incense on the altars of those cities, in sacrificial praise, on the approach of the conqueror, and so a perfume is every where diffused by his arrival, and ascends in a fragrant cloud to heaven. See Plutarch, Æmil. § 32, p. 272 (quoted by Macknight here), Dio Cassius, lxxiv. 1, who speaks of the streets as full of θυμιάματα, or aromatic exhalations from the altars; and Horat. Od. iv. 2. 50,

> "Tuque dum procedis, Io Triumphe!
> Non semel dicemus, Io Triumphe!
> Civitas omnis, dabimusque Divis
> Tura benignis."

So we, the preachers of the Gospel, cause the incense of prayer and praise to be kindled on sacred altars erected to God, which breathe forth a sacrificial odour, and waft a sweet perfume to heaven. Cp. Rev. viii. 3, 4.

The ὀσμὴ, or odour, diffused by the incense on the altars in the streets of the cities of this world at the approach of the earthly Victor in his triumph, was a signal of death to some, and of life to others.

It was a signal of death to those who had rebelled against the victor, and would not submit to him, and who were then slaughtered. See Josephus, B. J. vii. 24. Livy xxvi. 13.

It was a signal of life to others, whom he delivered by his Victory, and who welcomed the Victor with joy.

So the Gospel which we preach in our progress through the world; so the incense which we cause to be kindled on Christian altars. It is an odour of death unto death to those who reject Christ, and it is an odour of life unto life to all who receive Him.

Compare what he had said 1 Cor. i. 18, where the preaching of the Gospel is described as foolishness to them that perish (ἀπολλυμένοις, as here), but the power of God to the σωζόμενοι. See also below, iv. 3, If our Gospel is hid, it is hid τοῖς ἀπολλυμένοις.

On this use of σωζόμενοι, see Acts ii. 47. St. Paul adopts and improves upon a mode of expression which was common to Jewish Teachers, who called the Law an "aroma vitæ" to the good, and "aroma mortis" to the evil. See the passages quoted from the Talmud by Wetstein.

St. Paul's words, "an odour of death unto death, and of life unto life," are to be explained by reference to the regenerating power of the Gospel, "à parte antè," and to the immortality which it bestows, "à parte post." Christ gives the vivifying odour of the new birth in Baptism; and the new life, then bestowed, will, if duly cherished in the soul, lead on to life eternal: and so the Gospel is an odour of life to life—of life spiritual to life immortal.

But to those who reject it, it is an odour of death, that is, of the death of sin, which the Gospel declares, and in which it finds all men; and this state of spiritual death will lead those who refuse the Gospel to what is called in Scripture the second death, viz. death eternal (Rev. ii. 11; xx. 14; xxi. 8).

And therefore S. Irenæus says (iv. 28), "Quibus est odor mortis ad mortem nisi qui non credunt neque subjecti sunt Verbo Dei? . . . Qui autem sunt, qui salvantur (οἱ σωζόμενοι) et accipiunt vitam æternam? Nonne hi qui diligunt Deum et pollicitationibus ejus credunt et malitiâ parvuli effecti sunt?"

In this statement of St. Paul we have an inspired declaration of the Freedom of the human Will. As S. Jerome says (ad Hebibiam iv. p. 183), The name of Christ is ever fragrant: but because men are left to their own freedom of will,—in order that if they believe they may be saved, and if they reject Him, they may be lost,—therefore the fragrance of our preaching of Christ, which in itself is sweet, is rendered either deadly, or else "salvific," by the sin or faith of those who reject or receive it. So Christ Himself was "set for the fall of some, and for the rising up of others in Israel" (Luke ii. 34).

Indeed we may add here, that in the Christian scheme nothing that God has done is indifferent. Every thing is as a two-edged sword. All Christian privileges, all the means of Grace, Scriptures, Sermons, Sacraments, Sundays, Churches, Chapels, Liturgies, and all things that Christ's ministers do and teach in His Name, are—according as they are used—either blessings or banes, either physic or poison; either for weal or woe, either an odour of life unto life eternal, or of death unto death eternal, to the souls of all to whom they come. Cp. Aug. Serm. 4 and Serm. 273.

16. τίς ἱκανός] who is sufficient? See iii. 5, where he answers this question.

17. οἱ πολλοί] The many, at Corinth, as distinguished from the few who do not so. Cp. Titus i. 11. Phil. ii. 21. 1 Tim. vi. 5, where St. Paul deplores the practice of many among Christian Teachers to seek their own personal ends in preaching the Gospel, and to adulterate it for the sake of advantage or to accommodate it to the taste of men, for popular applause, or for lucre's sake (2 Pet. ii. 3).

This might be expected to be a prevalent practice at Corinth from the example and influence of Greek Philosophers, Rhetoricians, and Sophists in that city. See next note.

(1) To deal by retail.

(2) To make a gain of.

(3) To adulterate—especially wine. See LXX, Isa. i. 22, οἱ κάπηλοί σου μίσγουσι τὸν οἶνον ὕδατι, and Greg. Nazian. Orat. 2. p. 34, οὐ γάρ ἐσμεν ὡς οἱ πολλοὶ καπηλεύειν δυνάμενοι τὸν λόγον τῆς ἀληθείας καὶ ἀναμιγνύναι τὸν οἶνον ὕδατι, ὥστε αὐτοί τι παρακερδαίνειν ἐκ τῆς καπηλείας ὁμιλοῦντες πᾶσι πρὸς χάριν, ὡς ἂν μάλιστα εὐδόκιμοι μὲν παρὰ τοῖς πολλοῖς.

Cp. Bentley's excellent remarks on the word at the beginning of his Sermón on this text (Works iii. p. 242), "καπηλεύειν, besides the sense of adulterating, has an additional notion of unjust lucre; and here signifies to corrupt the word of God for gain."

Thus Plato speaks of those Teachers who go like pedlars from city to city, and sell and huckster their sciences to any one who has an appetite for them (καπηλεύοντες τὰ μαθήματα τῷ ἀεὶ ἐπιθυμοῦντι): and Lucian (Hermotim. c. 59) says, the Philosophers retail their theories like chapmen (καπηλοί), the most of them having mixed them up together, and adulterating them, and fraudulently measuring them out.

See other similar passages concerning the Greek Sophists in Wetstein.

The reference to this subject, as illustrated by Greek Philosophy, and as treated with reference to Christian Doctrine by the Apostle St. Paul here, can hardly fail to inspire the English reader with feelings of thankfulness to God, that through the provision of settled endowments by the piety of his Christian Forefathers, for the maintenance of Christian Teachers in the Parishes of England and in her Seats of Learning, He has delivered the Clergy of England, and her Academic Instructors, from that fascinating lure and dangerous temptation to which some are exposed, of vending paradoxical speculations and heterodox novelties for the sake of popular applause and personal emolument, and of adulterating the purity of the Gospel by corrupt admixtures, in order to gratify a vicious appetite and diseased taste, and of retailing poison to the People instead of saving their souls.

CH. III. 1. Ἀρχόμεθα] Are we beginning again to commend ourselves (as some charge us with doing), if indeed, forsooth, we do not even require, as certain others do (and as some may think that we also do) commendatory letters from you! We, your Apostle and Teacher, from you, our flock! An answer to an objection; and also a censure on the false teachers who sent themselves, and commended themselves. See xi. 4.

Εἰ μὴ is the reading of A, B, I, K, and so Meyer. Cp. 2 Cor. xii. 13, where εἰ μὴ introduces similarly an hypothesis put ironically, as here, only to be exploded as absurd. See also xiii. 5.

C, D, E, F, G, have ἢ μὴ, which has been received by Griesb., Scholz., Lach., Tisch., Alford. But the ἢ seems to be a confusion from similarity of sound with εἰ. See 2 Cor. xii. 1.

— ὑμῶν] Elz. adds συστατικῶν, not in A, B, C.

This sentence obviates an objection, supposed to proceed from a Corinthian hearer or reader of what the Apostle had been saying concerning himself.

Do not imagine, from what I have stated concerning my afflictions and the success and integrity of my ministry, that I am conscious of any need of commendatory letters to you or from you. No; we dare not commend ourselves. (2 Cor. v. 12; x. 12.) You yourselves are our testimonial; you are our letter of recommendation. (Chrys.) Cp. 1 Cor. ix. 1, 2, "The seal of my Apostleship are ye in the Lord."

There is also an emphasis on ἑαυτούς. Do we commend ourselves? No; but we do magnify our office. Cp. Rom. xi. 13. See what follows.

2. Ἡ ἐπιστολὴ ἡμῶν ὑμεῖς ἐστε] Cp. S. Polycarp ad Philipp. c. 11: "Nihil tale sensi in vobis in quibus laboravit beatus Paulus, qui estis in principio Epistolæ ejus." The original is lost here. S. Polycarp probably wrote οἵ ἐστε ἐν ἀρχῇ ἐπιστολαὶ αὐτοῦ. See on Phil. iv. 15; and above, 2 Thess. i. 3.

3. ἐστὲ ἐπιστολὴ Χριστοῦ] ye are an Epistle of Christ, written by Him with the finger of the Holy Ghost, who has engraven His Law on your hearts by the instrumentality of our Ministry, which He has blessed to you, and so made you to be the credentials of our Apostleship, and to be our Letter of recommendation.

— καρδίαις] A, B, C, D, E, F, G, have καρδίαις here, received by Lachmann and others. Another proof that the most ancient MSS. are sometimes disfigured by blemishes, and agree in erroneous readings.

The reading in the text is authorized by the early testimony of Origen, Irenæus (v. 13), and Hilary, and by the great body of Cursive MSS. and ancient Versions, and is adopted by Tisch. and Meyer.

But how are we to account for καρδίαις here in so many uncial MSS.?

It is not impossible that the true reading may be simply ἐν πλαξὶ σαρκίναις, and that the substantive καρδίαις was only an explanatory gloss, imported from v. 2, ἐγγεγραμμένοι ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ὑμῶν, and that this was corrected by other copyists into καρδίας.

Though the theory of explanatory interpolations of marginal glosses into the text of the New Testament has been sometimes carried too far (e. g. by Wassenberg in Valcken. Scholæ in N. T. tom. i.), yet probably this has been the most fertile source of error in some MSS. of the Sacred Volume.

— καινῆς διαθήκης, οὐ γράμματος, ἀλλὰ Πνεύματος—γράμμα ἀποκτείνει,—Πνεῦμα ζωοποιεῖ] Of a New Covenant (as distinguished from the Old); not of letter, but of Spirit; for the letter (as far as it is the letter, and is without the Spirit) killeth.

Καινὴ διαθήκη here does not signify the "New Testament" (it is hardly necessary to say) considered as a Book, and as distinguished from the "Old Testament" (i. e. the Hebrew Scriptures), called by that name by St. Paul here (v. 14).

For this is a name posterior to the Apostolic age; and when St. Paul wrote to the Corinthians, only a portion of the New Testament was as yet in existence.

Besides, the words καινὴ διαθήκη stand here without the definite article ἡ, and mean a New Covenant, with an allusion to the words of Jeremiah, xxxi. 31 (or as it is in LXX, xxxviii. 31), διαθήσομαι διαθήκην καινὴν, οὐ κατὰ τὴν διαθήκην ἣν διεθέμην τοῖς πατράσιν αὐτῶν . . . . δώσω νόμους εἰς τὴν διάνοιαν αὐτῶν, καὶ ἐπὶ καρδίας αὐτῶν γράψω αὐτούς. And Ezekiel, xi. 19: δώσω αὐτοῖς καρδίαν ἑτέραν, καὶ Πνεῦμα καινὸν δώσω ἐν αὐτοῖς, καὶ ἐκσπάσω τὴν καρδίαν τὴν λιθίνην τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτῶν, καὶ δώσω αὐτοῖς καρδίαν σαρκίνην, ὅπως ἐν τοῖς προστάγμασί μου πορεύωνται, καὶ τὰ δικαιώματά μου φυλάσσωνται, καὶ ποιῶσιν αὐτὰ . . . . And see St. Paul's own words, Heb. viii. 8 - 10.

The connexion of the sentences therefore is: I do not need letters of commendation. Ye are my Apostolic credentials. Your conversion to Christianity wrought by my instrumentality, and the gifts of the Holy Spirit poured upon you, through my ministry, are my testimonials, "known and read" by the eyes of all. Ye are Christ's Epistle ministered by me,—an Epistle written by the hand of the Holy Ghost, who has inscribed the Gospel by my means, not on tables of stone, but on your hearts. Not that I therefore claim any honour to myself. I am a mere διάκονος, a servant. Christ is the Master; He the only Source. I am a mere channel; He is the divine Agent. I am a mere instrument. But He has been pleased to employ and enable me to fulfil His promises and prophecies, and to write by me a New Covenant, not of Letter, but of Spirit; that is, not of a Law written on stone, but of a Spirit writing on the heart; and teaching and enabling you to perform it, by the gracious outpourings of the Holy Ghost, shed upon you through my Apostolic ministry.

Thus, in passing, he reprehends the Judaizers at Corinth (as Chrys. observes), who did not regard the Gospel as the fulfilment of the Law, but only as an appendage to it; and teaches that the Letter of the Law only serves to condemn, unless they who receive it are regenerated by the vivifying Spirit of the Gospel.

On this subject the reader may consult S. Augustine's Treatise, "De Spiritu et Literâ," Vol. x. p. 311—363, where he compares the two Dispensations, and asserts the Dignity of the New, against the Pelagians.

It may be requisite to observe, that there is no disparagement here of the Levitical Law as has been alleged by some in ancient times, e. g. by the Marcionites (see Tertullian c. Marcion. v. c. 11) and the Manichæans (see Augustine contra Adversarium Legis, ii. 24), and by others in modern times; nor any depreciation of the letter of Holy Scripture, as distinguished from the inner working of the Spirit.

One and the same Immutable God wrote the Law on the Tables of Stone, and writes His Law by the Spirit on the Heart (Tertullian l. c.). And the Language of Holy Scripture is from the Holy Ghost. Holy men spake of old as they were moved (φερόμενοι) by the Holy Ghost (2 Pet. i. 21); and St. Paul says that he himself speaks in words which the Holy Ghost teacheth. (1 Cor. ii. 13.) And he declares, that the ἱερὰ γράμματα are the things which are able σοφίσαι εἰς σωτηρίαν, through faith in Christ. (2 Tim. iii. 15.) And as God Himself had proclaimed by the Prophets (see Ezek. xi. 20), to whom he refers here, the very end for which the Spirit was to be given in the New Covenant, was, that they to whom it was given might be enabled to do the moral Law, enounced in the Old Covenant, and explained and spiritualized in the New. See further in next note.

— τὸ γράμμα ἀποκτείνει, τὸ δὲ Πνεῦμα ζωοποιεῖ] the Letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life.

The letter of God's Law,—without the Spirit,—killeth; but the Spirit quickeneth.

This is no disparagement of the Letter of the Law, but only shows the corruption of the Nature of Man, to whom the Law is given, and proclaims the blessedness of the Gospel.

The dignity of the Ministry of the New Covenant as distinguished from the Old, is that it bestows the Holy Ghost, Who enables to fulfil the Law, which is perfectly holy, just, and good in itself (Rom. vii. 12—14), but by reason of man's corrupt nature killeth; i. e. brings with it condemnation (ἀποκτείνει) for man's disobedience to it. See on 1 Cor. xv. 56; and Augustine, de Doctr. Christ. iii. 4; and Chrys. and Theophyl. here.

In this New Covenant, the Holy Ghost, in virtue of Christ's sacrifice for sin, bestows new life in the laver of Regeneration in Holy Baptism (Theoph.), and dispenses gifts of comfort and peace to the penitent; and so quickens those who were morally dead, and raises them by a spiritual Resurrection to a life of Grace here, and to a glorious Immortality hereafter.

The moral Resurrection, of which he speaks, is exactly analogous to the bodily Resurrection, of which St. Paul had spoken in the First Epistle; and St. Paul uses the same mode of speech with regard to both.

In his First Epistle he had said that "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." (1 Cor. xv. 50.) That is, as far as they are flesh and blood, and are not vivified and renewed by the Holy Spirit, Whom God has promised to pour out on all flesh (Joel ii. 28. Cp. Acts ii. 17), they have no hope of heaven;

But yet (as he had there affirmed against all who deny the Resurrection of the Body) the Flesh, when it has been quickened by the Spirit, will arise to Everlasting Glory.

So here, the Letter of the Law taken by itself killeth. Unless it be read by the aid of the same Spirit Who wrote it, and Who alone can enable to understand and to do it, it brings with it, not life, but death; not salvation, but condemnation.

But, if it be so read as it ought to be, if the Spirit acts in the Letter on the heart, then the Word of God is a 'lively oracle,' and brings life to the soul. (Acts vii. 38: James i. 21.)

As our Blessed Lord had said in words which are applicable to both these Resurrections,—"It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the Flesh (i. e. alone) profiteth nothing; the words which I have spoken to you, they are Spirit and they are life." (John vi. 63.)

Here then is a warning against placing confidence on Systems of Education which give instruction in the Letter of Scripture, but do not afford those means of Grace by which the Holy Spirit works on the soul; such as Public Prayer, the Sacraments, the Ministry of Reconciliation, Benedictions, and laying on of Apostolic hands in Confirmation, and writes the Law of God with His divine Finger on the heart. Cp. Theophyl. here.

On this subject the Editor may perhaps be permitted to refer to No. xx. of Occasional Sermons, "On the Office of the Holy Ghost in Education."

7—15.] The words δόξα, δεδόξασται τὸ δεδοξασμένον, κάλυμμα περιαιρεῖται, as used here (vv. 7—15), are derived from the Mosaic narrative in the Septuagint Version of Exodus xxxiv. 29—35, of his own appearance when he came down from Sina, and when he talked with the people, and went in again to converse with God.

Indeed, the language of the Septuagint here, as in many other places, affords the best commentary on that of St. Paul.

For a preparatory illustration of the Apostle's words, let the reader compare the two placed side by side.

below on v. 11; and contrast here the word ἔσται, shall be permanently in glory, spoken of the Gospel.

9. δικαιοσύνης] righteousness. As Chrys. says here, The Ministry of the Law showed men to be sinners, and denounced on them the curse for sin; but the Ministry of the Spirit does not inflict punishment, but imparts righteousness. This is the Gift in Baptism, τοῦτο τὸ βάπτισμα ἐχαρίζετο. See below on Rom. iii. 21—26.

10. ἐν τούτῳ τῷ μέρει] in this respect. See ix. 3. 1 Pet. iv. 16. These words are introduced to guard the reader against the notion that he is disparaging the Mosaic dispensation. Theophyl. That was δεδοξασμένον, glorified; but glorious as it was, it was not glorified in one respect.—that is, it was not glorified relatively to, and in comparison with, the Evangelical Ministry, which far transcends its glory, and absorbs it.

11. τὸ καταργούμενον] that which is now in course of being done away. Cp. 1 Cor. ii. 6.

— διὰ δόξης] If that which is now evanescent (i. e. the Levitical Dispensation) was invested with glory. Διὰ denotes the quality with which a thing is endued, particularly in a state of transition. So δι' ὑπομονῆς, Rom. viii. 25; διὰ πίστεως, 2 Cor. v. 7. See Winer, p. 339. 376, and next note.

— ἐν δόξῃ] in glory, i. e. permanently; and so distinguished from διὰ δόξης, through glory, i. e. transitorily. Chrys., Beng.

The glory of the Mosaic Dispensation was shown in the irradiation of the face of Moses (Exod. xxxiv. 29, 30); but that illumination, which was only for a time, indicated the transitory character of the glory of his dispensation.

But Christ is the 'Light of the World,' and He enlighteneth every man that cometh into the world. (John i. 9; viii. 12; ix. 5.) The light which shone on the face of Moses was only a passing gleam reflected from the countenance of Christ.

This relation of Moses to Christ, and of the glory of his ministry as compared to that of the Gospel, was visibly displayed at the Transfiguration. There Moses and Elias (i. e. the Ministers of the Law and of Prophecy, see on Matt. xvii. 2, 3) are brought into juxtaposition with Christ. They appeared in glory. (Luke ix. 31.) But their conversation is concerning Christ and His death, ἔξοδον,—the true Exodus of the spiritual Israel. (See on Luke ix. 31.) He is the centre to which their thoughts converge, and from which their δόξα radiates. The Brightness of His Raiment is described. The lustre of His face is mentioned in the Gospel-history of the Transfiguration. (Matt. xvii. 2. Mark ix. 3. Luke ix. 29.) And the voice from heaven came to Him alone,—"This is My beloved Son, hear ye Him." (Matt. xvii. 5. Mark ix. 7. Luke ix. 35.)

Hence St. Peter, one of the witnesses of the Transfiguration, says (2 Pet. i. 17), He received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to Him from the excellent glory. And see the expressive words of the three Evangelists after this declaration from heaven; they saw no man (οὐκέτι) but Jesus left alone, μόνον, and Jesus εὑρέθη μόνος. The Law passes, the Prophets pass, διὰ δόξης, through glory, but the Gospel remains, ever remains, ἐν δόξῃ, in glory.

13. οὐ, καθάπερ Μωϋσῆς] We do not [i. e. put a veil on our faces], as Moses did. On this ellipse see Matt. xx. 23; xxvi. 5. Rom. i. 21; ix. 32; xiv. 23. 1 Cor. ix. 12. 25; xi. 16. Phil. iii. 5. Winer, p. 514.

— ἐτίθει] was placing; i. e. when he had delivered his message to the people; but he removed it when he went in to converse with God. (Exod. xxxiv. 34. See above on v. 7.)

St. Paul here states another proof of the transcendent glory of that Evangelical Ministry, with which he was invested.

He had shown its dignity and glory in its gracious and vivifying spirit, as contrasted with the condemnatory rigour of the Law (vv. 6—9), and in its permanence as compared with the transitory character of the Law (vv. 7—11).

He now declares its exceeding dignity and glory in two other respects;

(1) Inasmuch as the Law had a veil on its countenance; that is, it was veiled in dim types and shadows; as St. Paul himself had taught the Corinthians in his former Epistle, where he shows, that whatever things happened to the Israelites in the Passover, the Passage of the Red Sea, the Manna, the smitten Rock, were τύποι ἡμῶν, figures of us Christians (1 Cor. x. 1—6; v. 7), shadows of good things to come, but the substance is CHRIST. (Col. ii. 17. Heb. x. 1.)

(2) Inasmuch as the only mode by which the Law itself can be understood, is by the reception of the Gospel. It is the Spirit of Christ in the Gospel, which illuminates the Law, and takes the veil from its face, and makes its true features discernible; and which also takes the veil from the hearts of the readers of the Old Testament, and enables them to see its true beauty and glory, illuminated by the light of Christ's actions, sufferings, and exaltation, as shown in the Gospel. The Gospel is the unveiling of the Law; and it is the unveiling also of the hearts of its readers, and qualifies them to read it aright.

See then the transcendent glory of the Evangelic Ministry, with which I (says the Apostle) have been entrusted.

And in this respect St. Paul's interpretation of the figurative meaning of the veil on the face of Moses, as typical of the veil on the hearts of the people, and his prophecy of its removal by the Spirit of God, is happily illustrated by the language of Isaiah xxv. 7, He will destroy in this Mountain (the Christian Sion) the face of the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all Nations.

13—16. πρὸς τὸ μὴ ἀτενίσαι—περιαιρεῖται τὸ κάλυμμα] in order that the children of Israel might not stedfastly look, or penetrate with the glance of their eyesight (see Acts i. 10; iii. 4; vii. 55), to the end of that dispensation which was evanescent.

The force of the expression πρὸς τὸ, in order that, and of what follows, cannot be understood without reference to the facts of the history. (Exod. xxxiv. 30—35.)

After the making of the golden calf (Exod. xxxii. 1—6), and the breaking of the Two Tables of Stone written with the finger of God (xxxi. 18; xxxii. 15, 16. 19), and the murmuring of the people (xxxiii. 4, 5), and the hewing of two other Tables of Stone which Moses took up with him into the Mount (xxxiv. 1—5), and the fast of forty days and forty nights, and the writing of the Commandments upon them by the hand of Moses (xxxiv. 27, 28), Moses came down from Mount Sina, and was not conscious of the glory of his countenance, and Aaron and the children of Israel were afraid to come near him. But he called them to him, and Aaron and the rulers returned to him, and he talked with them; and afterwards the children of Israel came nigh, and he declared to the people all that God had spoken with him in the mount. See the passage in the LXX, as cited on v. 7.

It was not till he had ceased speaking to them that Moses put a veil on his face (see v. 33 as it is in the original Hebrew, and in the Septuagint quoted on v. 7). And when he returned to speak to the Lord he drew off the veil, and kept it off till he came back to speak to the people; and they saw that his face shone, and Moses drew on the veil till he went back to God.

It is evident, therefore, that after he came down from Sina with the Two Tables, Moses spoke to Aaron, the Rulers, and People without any veil on his face, and that he did not put the veil on till he had rehearsed to them the Commandments.

They received the Decalogue from him while his face shone brightly with the glory reflected from the vision of God. The Law was given in glory. It was a glorious Revelation from God. But they to whom it was given were a rebellious and stiffnecked people (see Exod. xxxiii. 5; xxxiv. 9), as he himself knew and said. If they had been pure in heart, if they had been obedient to God, they would have been able to see the divine glory, they would not have been dazzled by the brightness of his countenance. It was the God of this world who blinded their minds (τὸ νοή-ματα) because of their unbelief. See what St. Paul himself says in the next chapter, iv. 4. Satan, whose service they preferred to God's, blinded their eyes that they could not look at the glory of God.

Moses therefore punished them for their hardness of heart. After that he had declared God's Law, with his face uncovered, and showing by its brightness the glory of that Law of which he was a Minister, and the glory of that God Whose Law he declared, and Whose glory beamed in his countenance, he put a veil on his face, in order to reprove and condemn the people for their moral and spiritual blindness, and in order that they might not see to the end of that which was evanescent; in order that they might not see his own entrance into God's presence, when his countenance would be uncovered by the removal of the veil from his face, and God's glory would beam upon it.

This act of Moses was prophetic and typical;

It showed that there was no reserve or disguise on the part of God.

He sent the Lawgiver down from the mountain with the Two Tables in his hand, and his face resplendent with divine glory. Moses did not then veil his countenance of his own accord; no, he wist not even that it shone. But the people were dazzled with its glory. They were blinded by that brightness, of which Moses himself was unconscious; and were unable to look on the reflection of that which he had seen face to face. A proof of their unholiness and disobedience. No wonder, for they had just been guilty of idolatry and impurity (Exod. xxxii. 6—9).

However he proclaimed to them the Law, in the first instance at least, without any veil on his face. But when he had done so, he put on a veil, to denote their blindness in not discovering, and their stubbornness in disobeying, the Law, and in order to punish that blindness and stubbornness. He did so in order that they might not see to the end of the Law. He punished them for their blindness by darkness, according to the words of God to the prophet (Isa. vi. 9, 10), "Hear ye but understand not, see ye but perceive not, make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes, lest they see with their eyes and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and be healed." He put the veil on his face that they might not see to the end of his revelation in the presence of God,—ἵνα μὴ βλέπωσιν (says Chrys.), οὐ γὰρ ἐχώρουν, ὥστε ἐκείνων ἐλάττωμα τοῦτο,—and thus intimated that they would be punished for their blindness by not being able to pierce with their spiritual eyesight, and to discern (says Theodoret) the end of the Law which is CHRIST (Rom. x. 4. Col. ii. 17); for to Him the Law tends, and in Him it terminates and is fulfilled. There was no failing in God, nor in Moses, nor in the Law. The Apostle (says Chrys.) does not disparage the Law, nor Moses, but he censures the unbelief of the Jews. God illumined the countenance of Moses with His own Glory, and Moses delivered the Law, and his countenance shone while he held the Tables in his hand, and rehearsed them to the People. But (ἀλλὰ, v. 14) their minds (νοήματα, cp. iv. 4) were blinded (ἐπωρώθησαν), veiled with a thick and callous film of spiritual blindness (see Mark iii. 5; vi. 52), because of their unbelief. The Veil, therefore, which Moses put on his face, was typical of their sin and punishment. It was significant of the veil which was on their hearts, and which still remains, even to this day, on the hearts of the Jews in reading the Old Testament, because they do not believe, and because they do not read it illumined by the light of the Gospel. Cp. Clem. Alexandrin. Strom. iv. p. 541, ἄχρι τῆς σήμερον ἡμέρας τὸ αὐτὸ κάλυμμα τοῖς πολλοῖς ἐπὶ τῆς ἀναγνώσεως τῆς παλαίας διαθήκης μένει, μὴ ἀνακαλυπτόμενον κατὰ τὴν πρὸς τὸν Κύριον ἐπιστροφήν.

But Moses drew off the veil from his face when he returned to God, and entered the presence of the Lord, and his countenance shone with His glory; and thus he typically showed that when the people would return to God, the veil would be drawn off from their hearts, and they would be able to see stedfastly (ἀτενίσαι) to the end of the glory of the Law, consummated and glorified in Christ.

How transcendently glorious, therefore, is the Ministry of the Gospel (argues the Apostle), which is not only luminous in itself, but irradiates the Law with its splendour!

— οὐ γράμματος—τοῦ καταργουμένου] On reviewing these verses it may appear to be not unnecessary to insert a caution against the perversion of them into a depreciation of the Old Testament;

The abuse of them by the Marcionites has been exposed and confuted by Tertullian (v. 11); and S. Augustine has vindicated and explained their true sense against the Manichæans in his Treatise "Contra Adversarium Legis et Prophetarum" (iv. 24), where he says that "the blasphemers of divine Oracles have alleged that the Law given by Moses was evil, because St. Paul calls it a Ministration of death: not perceiving that St. Paul said this to those who imagine that the Law is sufficient for their own will, and who, not being aided by the Spirit of Grace, were held captive by the guilt of disobedience under the Letter of the Law. But (he adds) that disobedience itself would not be evil, if the Law, which they disobeyed, had not been good."

The Law (he adds) is distinguished by St. Paul from the Gospel, in that the one commands what is good, the other confers what is good; the one makes man a hearer of righteousness, the other a doer. Why then should we be surprised that St. Paul calls the Law a ministration of death, in that it forbids that which we do, and commands what we cannot do; and that the Gospel is a ministration of the Spirit, which quickens and enables us to rise from the death of sin?

And what does the Apostle mean in saying that the veil was on the face of Moses in order that they might not see stedfastly to the end of that which was being done away? What was that end? Christ; the end of the Law to every one that believes. (Rom. x. 4.) But what kind of end? An end which perfects, not destroys. "Finis quippe dicitur, propter quem fiunt omnia, quæcunque aliquo fiunt officio." The glorified face of Moses, on which the veil was, signified Christ. And that glory was to pass away, because all significations pass away, when that which is signified by them is revealed. As the Apostle says that all earthly knowledge will pass away (1 Cor. xiii. 10. 12) when we are admitted to see God face to face, so those things which were foreshown in shadows to the Jews in the Old Testament, have passed away, now that the substance has been revealed to us in the New.

But that the Law itself is good, although it is called a Ministration of death, is obvious from what the same Apostle says in his Epistle to the Romans. (Rom. vii. 6—13, where see note.) See also S. Augustine, contra Faustum Manichæum, xix. 7.

On the perversion of this doctrine of St. Paul by the Antinomians and Anabaptists, and others of later days, see the Seventh Article of the Church of England, "The Old Testament is not contrary to the New," &c., and the Expositions of Dr. Hey, Professor Browne, and others on that Article.

16. περιαιρεῖται] the veil is being removed. By the present tense he indicates what is always going on; and the certainty of the future total removal of the veil from the Jewish heart; when it will turn to Christ. Rom. xi. 26.

17. Ὁ δὲ Κύριος τὸ Πνεῦμά ἐστιν] The Lord Jehovah, with whom Moses spake, is the Holy Ghost, Who writes the New Covenant, of which we are Ministers, on the heart. A proof of the Divinity of the Holy Ghost. He is speaking of the Paraclete, and calls Him God. (Chrys.) The Spirit is here plainly said to be the Lord, that is, Jehovah, with Whom Moses spake. See Bp. Pearson (Art. viii. p. 590), and Barrow (Serm. xxxiv. Vol. v. p. 161).

— πνεῦμα Κυρίου] The Spirit of the Lord. The Holy Ghost is called the LORD in this verse, "The Lord" Jehovah, with whom Moses spake, "is the Holy Ghost," and now He is called "the Spirit of the Lord." The reason is because the Holy Ghost is God, and also proceeds from God. (John xiv. 16; xv. 26.) He is the Lord, and He is the Spirit of the Lord. Cp. Bp. Pearson, Art. viii. p. 599—609.

— ἐκεῖ ἐλευθερία] there is Liberty. We are not like the Jews under a Law (says Augustine, de Continentiâ, c. 3) which commands what is good, but does not enable to do it; but we are under Grace, which makes us love what the Law commands, and is the Law of those who are Free. And see Aug. de Spirit. et Literâ, c. 10, de Naturâ et Grat. c. 57. (A Lapide.) guilt of sin in our Justification, or from the dominion of sin in our Sanctification, is purchased for us by the Blood of Christ, and is revealed to us in the preaching of the Gospel, which is therefore called the Law of Liberty, and is conveyed to us invariably and effectually by the Spirit of God and of Christ, which is therefore called a free Spirit (Ps. li. 12); for where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is Liberty. *Bp. 18. Ἡμεῖς δὲ πάντες] Under the Law Moses alone partook of the glory, his face alone shone; but under the Gospel, not only the faces of its Ministers, but of all the people who believe through their Ministers, shine with divine glory. (Theodoret.) Πάντες, Antitheton ad unum Mosen. (Bengel.) As Isaiah says (lx. 1) to the Church Universal, "Arise, shine, thy Light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee."

— κατοπτριζόμενοι] Beholding the glory of the Lord Jehovah as in a glass. Κατοπτριζόμενοι signifies—

(1) To look into a glass and see one's self. See Artemidor. ii. 7. Diog. Laert. in Socr. ii. 33, ἠξίου νέους συχνῶς κατοπτρίζεσθαι, and other passages in Wetstein.

(2) To look in a mirror, and see any object reflected in it. See Philo, Alleg. p. 79, μηδὲ κατοπτρισαίμην ἐν ἄλλῳ τινὶ τὴν σὴν ἰδέαν ἢ ἐν σοὶ τῷ θεῷ. Loesner, p. 304; and Meyer, p. 77; and Winer, p. 227.

And this is the sense here. As Augustine says (de Trin. xv. 8), "Per speculum videntes, in speculo intuentes."

But where do we all see the glory of the Lord reflected as in a κάτοπτρον or glass?

The Answer is, In Christ; He Whom we preach. In Him we see the Glory as of the only begotten of the Father. (John i. 14.) He that hath seen Him, hath seen the Father. (John xiv. 9.) He, as the Apostle says in the next chapter (which explains this passage) is the Image of God (2 Cor. iv. 4), εἰκὼν τοῦ Θεοῦ. He is the Image of the Invisible God. (Col. i. 15.) The brightness (ἀπαύγασμα) of His Father's Glory, the express Image of His Person. (Heb. i. 3.) And He is our "Emmanuel," "God with us," "God manifest in our Flesh."

This is the sense in which St. Paul's words here were understood by his fellow-labourer, S. Clement, Bishop of Rome, who adopting the Apostle's language, thus writes in his Epistle to the Corinthians, c. 36:—

By means of Christ we gaze stedfastly (ἀτενίζομεν, St. Paul's word here, vv. 7. 13) into the depths of heaven; by means of Him we see in a glass (ἐνοπτριζόμεθα, cp. St. Paul's κατοπτριζόμενοι) His pure and majestic countenance; by His means the eyes of our hearts have been opened, and our foolish and darkened mind sprouts upward (ἀναθάλλει) to His glorious Light; the Lord of all wills us to taste by Him of His immortal knowledge, for He is the brightness (ἀπαύγασμα) of His Majesty.

Therefore the Apostle says, As Moses with face unveiled went into the presence of Jehovah, so we all, the veil being taken off from our hearts by the Spirit, behold the glory of Jehovah reflected, as in a mirror, in Christ revealed to us in the Gospel. And, as the Apostle himself explains his meaning in the next chapter, v. 6, God shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ, Who is the Image of God. (iv. 4.)

And not only so, but by reason of His Incarnation and of our baptismal Incorporation into Him, we are transfigured (μεταμορφούμεθα) into the same image of God that we see in Him (on the accusative εἰκόνα after μεταμορφούμεθα, see Meyer, and compare Rom. viii. 29); we are made partakers of the divine Nature in Him (2 Pet. i. 4); being baptized into Him, we have put on the new man which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness (Eph. iv. 24), and are transformed by the renewing of our mind (Rom. xii. 2), and have put on the new man, and are renewed after the Image of Him who created Him (Col. iii. 10); and labour and pray for grace to follow His example (John xiii. 15. 1 Pet. ii. 21), that the same mind may be in us as was in Him (Phil. ii. 5). And we have hope that He will change our vile body also, so as to be fashioned (σύμμορφον) like unto His glorious body (Phil. iii. 21); and that when He shall appear we may be like Him (1 John iii. 2).

The Jews were not able to gaze at the divine glory even when reflected in Moses; they were dazzled and blinded by it, and could not ἀτενίσαι its splendour. But we all are enabled by the Spirit to see the Glory itself. And, besides, we are transfigured into it. This was more evident when miracles and supernatural spiritual gifts were vouchsafed to the Church. But even now the eyes of the faithful may see gleams of the divine glory. When we are baptized the soul receives new rays from heaven, being cleansed by the Spirit; and we not only see the glory of God, but receive some lustre from it, as silver receives the rays of the Sun and reflects them. Chrysostom.

St. Paul shows that the veil on the face of Moses was a type of the veil on the hearts of the Jews; for Moses is not now discerned by them with the heart, as he was not then with the eye... The Jews did not understand their own Sacraments (the Passover, the Manna, the smitten Rock, &c.), because the veil was on their hearts, which did not see Christ. But when the Jew turns to God, the veil will be removed. He has now on his heart the veil typified by that of Moses, but he will perceive Christ to have been preached by Moses, when he turns to the faith of Christ. But we, with eyes unveiled, that is, of the heart (which is veiled to the Jew), contemplate Christ, and are transfigured by the same image from glory (i. e. from that glory by which Moses was transfigured) to glory, i. e. of Christ, or (it may be) from the glory of the life of grace on earth, to the glory of the life immortal in heaven. Tertullian (c. Marcion. v. 11).

— καθάπερ ἀπὸ Κυρίου Πνεύματος] as from the Lord, the Spirit; i. e. as might be reasonably expected from the divine energy, and vivifying power, and gracious loving-kindness of Him Who is no other than the Almighty and Everlasting Lord Jehovah (the Everlasting I am, the Author of all life and being), and therefore able to do all things, and Who is also the Holy Spirit, whose special office it is, by His own blessed effusion, to regenerate, renew, sanctify, and transform us into the image of God in Christ.

Observe how the Apostle here calls the Spirit Lord, τὸ Πνεῦμα Κύριον καλεῖ. Chrys.

It is hence evident that in the previous place also (v. 17) he called the Spirit Lord. Theodoret.

St. Paul had said above (v. 6) that the Spirit is the "Giver of Life" (ζωοποιεῖ). He had said also that the Lord Jehovah Who spake to Moses is the Holy Ghost.

See also Basil on the word Κύριος, the Lord Jehovah, predicated by St. Paul of the Holy Ghost, as cited by Bp. Pearson, note (Art. viii. pp. 591, 592).

St. Paul says also that the process of transformation and transfiguration of the Christian into the divine Image, is operated by the energy of God the Holy Ghost. Cp. Rom. viii. 15—17; Gal. iv. 6. 1 Cor. vi. 17; xii. 11. 2 Cor. i. 22.

These important statements concerning the Nature and Office of the Holy Spirit deserve careful consideration.

The Holy Spirit is Κύριος = יְהוָה, Jehovah, the "I am that I am," the ὁ ὤν, the self-existing First Cause. He is the Author and Giver of Life to the soul, ζωοποιός.

The Church Universal has embodied (against the Macedonian Heretics, the πνευματόμαχοι, who denied the Godhead of the Holy Ghost, Epiphan. Hæret. 84. Aug. Hæres. 52) these two great truths in her Creed, Πιστεύω εἰς Πνεῦμα τὸ Ἅγιον, τὸ Κύριον, καὶ Ζωοποιὸν, "I believe in the Holy Ghost, the Lord, and Giver of Life."

Ch. IV. 1. ἐγκακοῦμεν] So A, B, D*, F, G. Els. has ἐκκακοῦμεν. The same variety is found in Luke xviii. 1. 2 Cor. iv. 16. Gal. vi. 9. Eph. iii. 13. 2 Thess. iii. 13.

The former seems more appropriate here. The metaphor is from military life. (See above ii. 14, and below iv. 7.) We do not act as cowards (κακοί) and deserters; we do not swerve from the post of service in which we have been stationed by the Captain of our Salvation, Who enlisted us under His banner (2 Tim. ii. 4) at our baptism; however hard, painful, and perilous the service may be (i. 8), we do not abandon our colours, οὐκ ἐκκακοῦμεν, no, nor do we faint in and under our afflictions, οὐκ ἐγκακοῦμεν, but we remember that when He enlisted us, we renounced the hidden things of darkness, and so far from deserting our standard, or fainting under it, we fight boldly against our spiritual foe.

2. ἀπειπάμεθα] Observe the aorist and middle voice; we renounced them at our Baptism; we put them far away from ourselves, ἀπερρίψάμεθα. (Hesych.)

How wretched, therefore (argues the Apostle), is the condition of the Infidel under the Gospel. Far worse than that of the Jews under the Mosaic Dispensation, "whose carcases fell in the wilderness." (1 Cor. x. 5.) See the comparison here with their case, as described before, iii. 14. The eyes of the Jews were blinded by Satan, that they could not see the glory of Moses; the eyes of the Infidel are blinded by Satan, that they cannot see the Glory of Christ, Who is the Image of God, Whose Glory reveals itself to the eyes of the faithful in the countenance of Jesus Christ. (v. 6.)

And therefore the case of the Jew rejecting Christ is far more desperate than that of those who rebelled against Moses, and perished in the desert. See this comparison more fully developed in the Epistle to the Hebrews, ii. 1—3; xii. 18—25.

This intellectual and spiritual blindness of Unbelief is the punishment inflicted by retributive justice on the moral pravity of those who do not use their faculties, whether of mind or body, in obedience to the Law of God Who gave them, and to His glory.

"Deus his qui non credunt sed nullificant (ἀθετοῦσιν) Eum, infert cæcitatem" (Irenæus). And he quotes this passage of St. Paul, and Rom. i. 28, Because they would not retain God in their knowledge, He gave them up to a reprobate mind; and 2 Thess. ii. 10—12.

As S. Augustine says (c. Julian. Pelagian. v. 3), "Cæcitas cordis, quam solus removet Illuminator Deus, et peccatum est, quo in Deum non creditur, et pœna peccati, quâ cor superbum dignâ animadversione punitur, et causa peccati cùm mali aliquid cæci cordis errore committitur." And in Ps. ii., "Ira Dei est mentis obscuratio, quæ consequitur eos qui legem Dei transgrediuntur." And in Serm. 117, "Vindicat Deus in animâ aversâ à se exordio pœnarum, ipsâ cæcitate; qui enim avertit se à lumine vero, jam cæcus efficitur. Nondum sentit pœnam, sed jam habet."

The origin of spiritual blindness is Disobedience. Disobedience to God's will, however made known to men, whether by Reason and Conscience (the Law written in our hearts), or in Holy Scripture, is always punished by Him with spiritual blindness.

This Disobedience shows itself in two ways;

(1) By lusts of the flesh, such as uncleanness, covetousness, and the like; and

(2) By intellectual and spiritual sins, such as pride of reason, want of attention to evidence, wilfulness, self-love, self-conceit, self-sufficiency, restless eagerness for self-display, desire of worldly glory and pre-eminence, impatience of neglect, resentment, and contempt of others.

Here was the cause of the fall of Angels, who disobeyed the law of their being, which was obedience to God. Here was the cause of the blindness of Heathenism: The prince of the power of the air worked in the children of disobedience. (Eph. ii. 2. Cf. Rom. i. 21. Eph. iv. 18.) Their blindness was the judicial penalty inflicted upon them for turning away their eyes from the true light, which is God.

Here was the cause of the blindness of the Israelites in the wilderness; they would not rejoice in the light which shone from the pillar of fire, but took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the star of their god Remphan, whose name is Blindness. (See on Acts vii. 43.)

The practical conclusion from these facts is:

In all systems of Morals and Theology, there must be the fundamental principle, that God is the only source of light to the soul. As in the natural world, it is not so much the eye which is the cause of vision,—for it cannot see in the dark,—but it is the sun in the heavens, which by its luminous beams paints pictures on the retina; and these pictures are the only means by which the mind is enabled to hold converse with the visible world; so is it in the spiritual universe. Christ, the Sun of Righteousness, illumines the spiritual iris with His divine rays, which pass through the lens and penetrate the pupil of the inner eye, and delineate images on the camera obscura of the soul. But unless He does this work, and unless the spiritual organ and optic nerve of the heart is rightly disposed by obedience, and quickened by the Spirit of God to receive this illumination, all is dark within. The commandment of the Lord is pure, and giveth light unto the eyes. (Ps. xix. 8.) When Thy word goeth forth, it giveth light and understanding unto the simple. (Ps. cxix. 130. Prov. vi. 23.) Open Thou mine eyes, that I may see the wondrous things of Thy law. (Ps. cxix. 18.)

This spiritual illumination is vouchsafed only to those who obey God: If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine. (John vii. 17.)

If this light is not vouchsafed, spiritual darkness prevails. The inner eye is blinded by the evil one; it cannot see the things of the Spirit, which are spiritually discerned. (1 Cor. ii. 14.)

— εἰκὼν τοῦ Θεοῦ] the Image of God. On this phrase as applied to Christ, see on Col. i. 15.

7. ἐν ὀστρακίνοις σκεύεσιν] in earthen vessels,—vases of terra cotta,—κεραμικά.

On the word σκεῦος see Mark xi. 16. John xix. 29. Rom. ix. 21. 2 Tim. ii. 20. σκεύη κεραμικά, Rev. ii. 27. Cp. Rev. xviii. 12. The human body is fitly so called, being formed from the earth, χοϊκὸν (1 Cor. xv. 47. 49. Gen. ii. 7; iii. 19), and feeble and fragile as a vessel of clay, and destined for the dust (Job iv. 19; xiii. 12).

As to the treasure in vessels of clay, earthenware, cp. Pers. ii. 10:

"O si
Sub rastro crepet argenti mihi seria!"

It may be, that St. Paul, in describing the progress of the Gospel preached by his Ministry, still keeps up the military metaphor (see above, iv. 1), and has here in his mind the circumstances of a Triumphal Procession (ii. 14), in which it was usual to carry vessels (θησαυροί) filled with gold and silver coin ('stips'), which were dispensed by the conqueror. See the description in Plutarch of the Triumph of Paulus Æmilius, where he says: "Next went those who carried the gold coin in vessels which held three talents each, like those that contained the silver, and which were to the number of seventy-seven."

We (says the Apostle) carry the treasure of Christ; we bear it through the world, in its triumphal progress; we dispense it to the people; but we bear it, not in vessels of gold and silver,—like those in which the treasure of earthly conquerors is borne,—but in vessels of clay; in order that the excellency of the power of what we dispense in the Ministry of the Word and Sacraments may be, and be seen to be, of God, and not of men.

— ἵνα] in order that. The conjunction ἵνα marks God's providential design, in committing His spiritual treasure to frail men, as its depositories and dispensers. On this use of ἵνα, see 1 Cor. i. 15, and Winer, p. 408; and cp. Philem. 13.

God chose Fishermen and Publicans to be the first Preachers of the Gospel; in order that it might be seen, by the weakness of the instruments used, and by the greatness of the work done by their means, that the effect was not due to the human instruments, but to the Divine Agent Who wrought by them. See 1 Cor. i. 27—29.

Herein is the power of God magnified, when He works mighty things by weak means. His strength is perfected in our weakness. (2 Cor. xii. 9.) Chrys.

God is pleased to work by human means, even in the most signal manifestations of His mercy,—such as the reception of Saul into the Church at Damascus, and of Cornelius, the first-fruits of the Gentile world at Cæsarea. Although He had called the one by the mouth of Jesus Christ Himself from heaven, and the other by an Angel, yet He sent them both to hear the Word, and receive the Sacrament of Baptism from the hands of men. See above on Acts ix. 6.

So, in the ordinary dispensations of His gifts to the soul, He uses the simplest elements; the element of Water in Baptism, the creatures of Bread and Wine in the Holy Communion. He consigns the golden treasure of Regeneration and Renewal to those earthen vessels—those fictile urns—in order that from the greatness of the gift bestowed, and from the simplicity of that in which it is conveyed, all may see and confess that the excellency of the Gift is from God.

8. θλιβόμενοι ἀλλ' οὐ στενοχωρούμενοι] See below Rom. ii. 9; viii. 35.

10. πάντοτε τὴν νέκρωσιν τοῦ Ἰησοῦ ἐ. τ. σ. περιφέροντες] always bearing about the putting to death of Jesus: "mortificationem Jesu." Iren. v. 13. Cp. Tertullian c. Marcion. v. 11, and see Primasius here.

Observe, he does not say τὸν θάνατον, the death of Jesus, but τὴν νέκρωσιν, the putting to death, the Crucifixion.

We who die daily (1 Cor. xv. 31) for Christ, and are being killed all the day long (Rom. viii. 36) for His sake, and are in deaths oft (xi. 23), and are crucified to the world (Gal. vi. 14), and by the world, and are conformed to the likeness of Christ's death, in order that we may also be conformed to the likeness of His Resurrection (Rom. vi. 5), we bear about and display to the world the Crucifixion of Christ in our own body: we bear it about, not as a thing of which we are ashamed, but in which we glory, as the very cause of all our hope and joy.

What is the putting to death of Jesus which the Apostle bare about with him? It is the death by which he died daily, by which he also preached the Resurrection. Christ's power is shown by the ability He gives us to die daily, and by the deliverances which He works for us. Chrysostom.

— ἵνα καὶ ἡ ζωὴ] that the life also of Jesus may be made manifest in our body. For if we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him. (2 Tim. ii. 12. Rom. viii. 17; ix. 36. 2 Cor. vi. 9.)

S. Irenæus hence proves the doctrine of the Resurrection of the Body. The sufferings which the Apostle endured in the Body, preached his belief in its future glory. Cp. on 1 Cor. xv. 32; and Tertullian c. Marcion. vii.: "Hæc fictilia vasa, in quibus tanta nos pati dicit Apostolus, in quibus etiam mortificationem circumferimus Domini, hanc substantiam Deus resuscitaturus est, in quâ pro fide Ejus tot tolerantur, in quâ mors Christi circumfertur."

11. οἱ ζῶντες] we that live are daily being delivered, παραδιδόμεθα (present); the very essence of our life is to die daily for Christ.

12. ὁ θάνατος ἐν ἡμῖν—ἡ δὲ ζωὴ ἐν ὑμῖν] The Death of Martyrs is the Life of the Church; the Blood of Martyrs is the Seed of the Church. Tertullian. See on Acts viii. 1—4.

13. κατὰ τὸ γεγραμμένον] according to what is written. The Psalm which St. Paul here quotes (Ps. cxvi. 10) is one of thanksgiving, in which David praises God for his own deliverance. As David returns thanks to God for his marvellous rescue from his enemies when he was in despair, so we for our surprising deliverances from our perils.

It is one of the Psalms chosen by the Church for the religious use of women on their deliverance from the pain and peril of childbirth.

14. σὺν Ἰησοῦ] with Jesus. So B, C, D, E, F, G, and Lachm., Tisch., Meyer, Alf. Elz. has διὰ Ἰησοῦ, with D, I, K, and many Cursive MSS. and Fathers.

Some Expositors interpret the words of a spiritual Resurrection, but this seems to be erroneous.

Some MSS. have ΕΓΙΡΕΙ here, but the future, ἐγερεῖ, was the reading of MSS. in the second century.

Hence Tertullian (de Resur. Carnis, c. 44), arguing for the future Resurrection of the Body, thus quotes this passage: "Scientes quòd qui suscitavit Jesum, et nos suscitabit cum Ipso, qui jam resurrexit à mortuis. Quî 'cum Ipso,' nisi quia 'cum Ipso' 'sicut Ipsum,' sapit? (i. e. σὺν αὐτῷ is equivalent to ὡς αὐτόν). Si vero sicut Ipsum, non utique sine carne."

And so Primasius understands the words σὺν Ἰησοῦ, 'similiter Jesu, si cum eo moriamur.'

Compare 1 Cor. vi. 14, Θεὸς καὶ τὸν Κύριον ἤγειρε, καὶ ἡμᾶς ἐξεγερεῖ: and St. Paul says, Eph. ii. 5, ἡμᾶς συνήγειρεν ἐν Χριστῷ.

And hence S. Polycarp, ad Phil. c. 2: ὁ ἐγείρας αὐτὸν ἐκ νεκρῶν καὶ ἡμᾶς ἐγερεῖ, ἐὰν ποιῶμεν αὐτοῦ τὸ θέλημα.

On comparison of those passages with the present, we cannot entertain any doubt of St. Paul's meaning, which is expressed concisely so as to affirm,

(1) That we shall be raised in our bodies; and

(2) That our future Resurrection will be due to Christ's past Resurrection (see 1 Cor. xv. 20, 21), and to the fact of our being incorporated in Him, and dwelling in Him, and dying with Him. See vv. 10, 11.

(3) That He will raise us, so as to be with Jesus (cp. 1 Thess. iv. 17), and so shall we be ever with the Lord. Hence he speaks of those who are laid asleep in peace through Jesus (διὰ Ἰησοῦ), being brought together with Him (σὺν αὐτῷ). (1 Thess. iv. 14.) They who are buried with Him in baptism (Rom. vi. 4. Col. ii. 12); they who have died with Him, will live with Him (Rom. vi. 8); they who suffer with Him (Rom. viii. 17), they will also reign with Him (2 Tim. ii. 11, 12).

16. ἡμέρᾳ καὶ ἡμέρᾳ] Hebraismus. Esther iii. 4. Ps. lxviii. 19. Wetstein.

17. καθ' ὑπερβολήν] ὑπερβολὴ, from ὑπερβάλλω, to shoot beyond; and καθ' ὑπερβολὴν εἰς ὑπερβολὴν is to be joined with the verb, as in Gal. i. 13, καθ' ὑπερβολὴν ἐδίωκον, and 2 Cor. i. 8, καθ' ὑπερβολὴν ἐβαρήθημεν.

The light affliction, by its lightness, as placed in the opposite scale, and by its nature as affliction, makes the scale of glory and reward to mount high into the air, καθ' ὑπερβολὴν εἰς ὑπερβολήν, so as more than to reach the examen, or beam, of the balance. Cp. Rom. viii. 18. Matt. v. 11, 12. 1 Pet. i. 6, 7.

18. μὴ σκοπούντων ἡμῶν τὰ βλεπόμενα] Observe the words here used for seeing. Things, which are looked at and discerned by the bodily eye, are not the scope of our spiritual vision. He does not say τὰ ὁρώμενα, but τὰ βλεπόμενα, which is something more.

— τὰ γὰρ βλεπόμενα—αἰώνια] Quoted by S. Ignatius, in his Epistle to the Romans, c. 3, where he introduces the passage with the words οὐδὲν φαινόμενον αἰώνιον, and thus marks the difference between the objective οὐ and the subjunctive μὴ, as here used by St. Paul: μὴ σκοπούντων ἡμῶν—μὴ βλεπόμενα. Cp. Winer, p. 429.

We who walk by faith and not by sight (v. 7. Rom. viii. 23—25. Heb. xi. 1—27), contemplate with our inner eye those objects which we cannot look at with our outward eye; for we know that those things which we can look at with our outward eye are temporal, but those things which we cannot so discern are eternal. Therefore he adds, v. 1, οἴδαμεν γὰρ κ.τ.λ.

As was expressed by the Author of the "Night Thoughts," in the Inscription placed at the end of the arcade in his garden, "Invisibilia non decipiunt."

CH. V. 1. τοῦ σκήνους] of the tabernacle, in which we now dwell. See v. 4; and Bp. Middleton here, p. 472; and Winer, p. 98. The σκῆνος, or temporary tent, of the natural body on earth, is contrasted with the eternal mansion of the glorified body in heaven.

2. ἐπενδύσασθαι] to put on (ἐπί) in addition.

The glorified body will not only be an ἔνδυμα, or indumentum, but an ἐπ-ένδυμα, or super-indumentum. See v. 3, and above on 1 Cor. xv. 35, and S. Jerome ad Pammachium (tom. iv. p. 323), who says: St. Paul declares that this mortal will put on immortality; that is, that the flesh will not be annihilated, but be spiritualized, glorified, and beautified; as the human body of Christ was at the Transfiguration, when He was still recognized as before, "ut eadem membra solis fulgore rutilantia Apostolorum oculos præstringerent."

Therefore (he adds) St. Paul does not desire to be unclothed, but to be clothed upon; that is, not to lose his mortal flesh, but to have it super-invested with heavenly glory. "Nemo superinduitur, nisi qui antè vestitus est." And in another place he says: "Dicit Apostolus, Nolumus exspoliari sed (volumus) supervestiri, ut absorbeatur mortale hoc à vitâ, ne scilicet corpus ab animâ deseratur, sed, animâ inhabitante in corpore, fiat inclytum, quod antè inglorium erat." S. Jerome ad Marcell. (tom. iv. p. 166).

3. εἴ γε καὶ ἐνδυσάμενοι οὐ γυμνοὶ εὑρεθησόμεθα] yea truly,—if when we have even put on our bodies again we shall be found to be not naked.

The body itself is called here an ἔνδυμα, indumentum; but the future glory of the risen body is called an ἐπ-ένδυμα (see v. 4), super-indumentum: and they who rise with the ἔνδυμα of their bodies, but without the ἐπ-ένδυμα of that glory which is prepared for the Saints, are properly called γυμνοὶ, naked, to their endless shame. (Dan. xii. 2.) See above on 1 Cor. xv. 37, which is the best exposition of this text.

Similarly the word γυμνὸς in the Apocalypse describes the absence of spiritual clothing. (Rev. iii. 17, 18; xvi. 15.)

Hence Tertullian (de Res. Car. c. 4) well interprets ἐπενδύσασθαι by "superinduere virtutem cœlestem immortalitatis;" and c. Marcion. v. 12: "Mortui recipient corpus super quod induant incorruptelam de cœlo .... uti devoretur mortale hoc à vitâ, dum eripitur morti per superindumentum demutationis."

Similarly Chrys., Theodoret, and Theophylact explain γυμνὸς here to mean, not clothed with the garb of glory and immortality,—the marriage garment of the heavenly nuptials of Christ and His Bride the Church glorified (Iren. iv. 36. 6), which will be given to the Righteous only, and which will be like that of Christ's glorified body (Phil. iii. 21. Iren. v. 13. 3, 4. 1 Cor. xv. 53); whereas the Wicked will be despoiled even of that corporeal beauty and grace which they had as men upon earth, and will be made like to Evil Angels and Fiends in the lake of fire.

Hence therefore we groan and labour here on earth, in order that we may not be despoiled by fire with the Wicked, but be superinvested with Immortality with the Righteous. Primasius.

4. τῷ σκήνει] the tabernacle of our body. See v. 1.

5. ἀρραβῶνα τ. Π.] See i. 22.

6. ἐνδημοῦντες—ἐκδημοῦμεν] we being at home in the body are absent from the Lord. An assertion of the separate existence of the disembodied spirits of the righteous, in a state of peace and happiness in the interval between their Death and the Resurrection. See above on Luke xxiii. 43.

7. διὰ πίστεως] by faith as the means,—the way, which we pass through, and by which we are guided, as a traveller is by a road. Cp. Rom. viii. 25. Winer, p. 339.

10. φανερωθῆναι] to be made manifest. However now we may endeavour to disguise ourselves from the eyes of men; or however much we may be misconceived and misrepresented by them, we shall then be all displayed in our true colours, and all the secrets of all hearts will be made known, in the presence of men and angels, at the Judgment-seat of Christ.

— ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ βήματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ] Hence S. Polycarp ad Phil. 6, ἀπέναντι τῶν τοῦ Κυρίου καὶ Θεοῦ ἐσμεν ὀφθαλμῶν, καὶ πάντας δεῖ παραστῆναι τῷ βήματι τοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ ἕκαστον ὑπὲρ ἑαυτοῦ λόγον δοῦναι.

— ἵνα κομίσηται ἕ. τὰ διὰ τοῦ σώματος] in order that each man may then receive what he has laid up in store for himself by means of his body; according to the things which he did or practised (ἔπραξεν) by the same body's instrumentality when he was upon earth. See on Eph. vi. 8. Col. iii. 25. Gal. vi. 8. 2 Cor. ix. 6.

The aorist ἔπραξεν happily marks the earthly life past, as appearing then to be only like a single moment of time, compared with eternity.

That which shall then be received will be either a reward or punishment; a reward for the good, a punishment for the evil done in the body: and that which shall receive the reward, and be liable to the punishment, is not only the soul but the body. It stands not, therefore, with the nature of a just retribution, that he which sinned in one body should be punished in another, or that he which pleased God in his own flesh should see God with other eyes. As for the wicked, God shall destroy both their soul and body in hell (Matt. x. 28), but they which glorify God in their body and their spirit, which are God's (1 Cor. vi. 20), shall be glorified by God in their body and their spirit; for they are both bought with the same price, even the blood of Christ. (1 Cor. vi. 20.) The bodies of the Saints are the members of Christ (1 Cor. vi. 15), and no members of His shall remain in death; they are the temples of the Holy Ghost (1 Cor. vi. 19), and therefore if they be destroyed, they shall be raised again. For if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in us, as He doth, and by so dwelling maketh our bodies temples, He which raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken our mortal bodies by His Spirit that dwelleth in us. (Rom. viii. 11.) Bp. Pearson.

Furthermore, the identity of the dying and rising body will appear by those bodies which shall never rise, because they shall never die. This may be considered not only in the translations of Enoch and Elias, but also in those whom Christ shall find alive at His coming, whom He shall not kill, but change. The dead in Christ shall rise first; then they which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall they ever be with the Lord. (1 Thess. iv. 16, 17.) If those which are alive shall be caught up as they are alive with the same bodies, only changed into glorified and spiritual bodies, that is, with the same bodies spiritualized and glorified, certainly those which were dead shall rise out of their graves to life in the same bodies in which they lived, that they may both appear alike before the Judge of the quick and the dead. (Acts x. 42.) Otherwise the saints, which shall be with God and with the Lamb for evermore, would be chequered with a strange disparity, one part of them appearing and continuing with the same bodies in which they lived, another part with others. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. vi. p. 709.

Because it is here said that every one would be judged according to what he has actually done in the body, the Pelagians hence argued that Infants are sinless, and that there is no such thing as Original sin, or, at least, that it has no guilt, and is not liable to punishment.

But, if for argument's sake it be allowed that St. Paul's assertion here respects Infants, which may be doubted (see viii. 12), then we may say with Aug., Epist. 217, p. 1220, "Scimus etiam parvulos secundum ea quæ per corpus gesserunt recepturos vel bonum vel malum. Gesserunt autem non per se ipsos, sed per eos quibus pro illis respondentibus et renuntiare diabolo dicuntur et credere in Deum, unde et in numero fidelium computantur, pertinentes ad sententiam Domini dicentis, 'Qui crediderit et baptizatus fuerit salvus erit.'" (Mark xvi. 16.) And by nature we are all in Adam, and we all sinned in him, and are guilty before God. See Rom. v. 12. Eph. ii. 2.

13. ἐξέστημεν, Θεῷ] If we were beside ourselves in boasting of ourselves, and so, in your eyes are chargeable with folly (see xi. 1—19; xii. 6. 11, γέγονα ἄφρων), it was not for the sake of any glory to ourselves, but to God, Whose Ministers we are, and Whose grace has made us what we are, and to Whom therefore be all the praise. (1 Cor. xv. 10. 2 Cor. iii. 5, 6.)

14. ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ Χριστοῦ] The love which Christ showed in dying for us constrains us to suffer gladly, even death, for you. (See Eph. v. 2.) Walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and given Himself for us (ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν) an offering and a sacrifice to God. (1 John iii. 16.) He laid down His life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. (John xv. 12.)

15. κρίναντας τοῦτο, ὅτι εἷς—ἄρα οἱ πάντες ἀπέθανον] The Love of Christ constraineth us, having formed this judgment, viz., because One died in the stead of all mankind, then all Mankind died in Him.

Els. has εἰ after ὅτι, but this arose from a misunderstanding of ὅτι, which means because, and is not found in the best MSS.

— εἷς ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀπέθανεν] One (i. e. Christ) died for all, as their Proxy and Substitute, in their stead.

Christ, the Second Adam, summed up all Mankind in Himself. He died for all, and all died in Him; and since He is also the Everlasting Word, the Co-eternal Son of God, and rose again from the Dead, He rescued all Mankind, whose Nature He had taken, from corruption, and raised it to Immortality. See Athanas. De Incarnatione Verbi Dei, § 9, 10, p. 44, who refers to this passage of St. Paul, and to 1 Cor. xv. 11. Heb. ii. 9—14.

It has indeed been alleged by some recent Expositors that wherever ὑπὲρ is used in the N. T. to declare the great doctrine of the Atonement, it signifies only for the benefit of, i. e. that Christ died for the good of, Mankind, but that it never signifies that He died in the place of Mankind.

This assertion is made even by some in expounding the present passage; but

(1) It is unquestionable that ὑπὲρ is used to signify in the stead of, by St. Paul. See Philem. 13, ἵνα ὑπὲρ σοῦ διακονῇ μοι. 1 Tim. ii. 6, concerning Christ's sacrifice, δοὺς ἑαυτὸν ἀντίλυτρον ὑπὲρ πολλῶν. See on 1 Cor. i. 13, and on 1 Cor. xv. 3, and Winer, p. 342.

(2) St. Paul's argument here would fail, if ὑπὲρ does not signify in the place of. If a person has done a thing merely for the good of others, it cannot be said that they did it; but if a person has done a thing in the place of others, as their Sponsor and Representative, it is rightly said that they did it. "Qui facit per alium facit per se." The Sponsors at Baptism renounce the Devil and profess faith in Christ not only for the good of the Child baptized, but in the place of the Child; and therefore the Child is rightly said to have renounced the Devil, and to have professed faith in Christ. So Christ died, not only for the good of Mankind, but in the place of Mankind.

And therefore the Apostle rightly concludes (which otherwise he could not have done) that all men died (ἀπέθανον) in Christ.

This is the true meaning of his words (πάντες ἀπέθανον), all died, and not, as the words are sometimes translated, all were dead; a translation at variance with the true use of the aorist ἀπέθανον, which is applied here to all men, as well as to Christ.

It is urged by those who maintain the opinion above mentioned, that if St. Paul had used ὑπὲρ as meaning in the stead of, he could not have added that He rose again (ἐγερθέντι), as he does in v. 15. For it is alleged, that Christ did not rise again in our stead.

But this objection has no weight. St. Paul adds that Christ rose again as well as died, for a very good reason, viz., to prove that Christ, Who was the Proxy of Mankind in His Death for the sins of the whole World, was accepted as such by God.

This great Doctrine of the vicarious suffering of Christ, and of the full, perfect, sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction which He made for us, as our Head and Representative, and that other Truth, no less important, of our Justification by our virtual Resurrection in Him, are well expressed by Dr. Barrow (Serm. xxx. Vol. v. p. 69).

God, in the Death of our Lord, did manifest His wrath toward us, and execute His justice upon us. So in raising Him thence correspondently God did express Himself appeased, and His law to be satisfied. As we in His suffering were punished (the iniquity of us all being laid upon Him, Isa. liii. 6), so in His Resurrection we were acquitted and restored to grace. As Christ did merit the remission of our sins and the acceptance of our persons by His Passion, so God did consign them to us in His Resurrection, it being that formal act of grace whereby, having sustained the brunt of God's displeasure, He was solemnly reinstated in favour, and we representatively or virtually in Him; so that (supposing our due qualifications, and the performances requisite on our parts) we thence become completely justified, having not only a just title to what Justification doth import, but a real instatement therein, confirmed by the Resurrection of our Saviour, whence He was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our Justification. (Rom. iv. 25.)

Our Justification and Absolution are rather ascribed to the Resurrection of Christ than to the Death; for that indeed his Death was a ground of bestowing them, but his Resurrection did accomplish the collation of them. For since, the Apostle argues, God hath acknowledged satisfaction done to His justice by discharging our Surety (Christ) from restraint, and from all further prosecution,—since, in a manner so notorious, God hath declared His favour toward our Proxy,—what pretence can be alleged against us, what suspicion of displeasure can remain? Had Christ οἱ πάντες ἀπέθανον, καὶ ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀπέθανεν, ἵνα οἱ ζῶντες μηκέτι ἑαυτοῖς ζῶσιν, ἀλλὰ τῷ ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν ἀποθανόντι καὶ ἐγερθέντι.

16 [n] Ὥστε ἡμεῖς ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν οὐδένα οἴδαμεν κατὰ σάρκα· εἰ δὲ καὶ ἐγνώκαμεν κατὰ σάρκα Χριστὸν, ἀλλὰ νῦν οὐκ ἔτι γινώσκομεν.

17 [o] Ὥστε εἴ τις ἐν Χριστῷ, καινὴ κτίσις· τὰ ἀρχαῖα παρῆλθεν, ἰδοὺ γέγονε καινὰ τὰ πάντα.

18 [p] Τὰ δὲ πάντα ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, τοῦ καταλλάξαντος ἡμᾶς ἑαυτῷ διὰ Χριστοῦ, only died, we should not have been condemned, our punishment being already undergone; yet had we not been fully discharged without that express warrant and acquittance which His Rising doth imply. So may St. Paul be understood to intimate when he saith, If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins. (1 Cor. xv. 17.) He (saith S. Chrysostom), by His Resurrection, dissolved the tyranny of death, and with Himself raised up the whole world. By His Resurrection not only the natural body of Christ was raised, but the mystical Body also; each member of His Church was restored to life, being thoroughly rescued from the bondage of corruption, and translated into a state of immortality, so that God, saith St. Paul, hath quickened us together with Christ, and raised us together, and made us to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. (Rom. viii. 21. Eph. ii. 5, 6.)

Hence in our Baptism (wherein Justification and a title to eternal life are exhibited to us), as the Death and Burial of Christ are symbolically undergone by us, so therein also we do interpretatively rise with Him. Being, saith St. Paul, buried with Christ in Baptism, in it we are also raised together with Him. (Col. ii. 12, 13.) And Baptism, St. Peter telleth us, being antitype of the passage through the flood, doth save us by the Resurrection of Christ presented therein. (1 Pet. iii. 21.) Dr. Barrow.

— ἄρα οἱ πάντες ἀπέθανον] then all died in Him. Christ was the Representative, Proxy, and Substitute of all Mankind, and, in His Death, all died; all collectively (οἱ πάντες, the all) died, were summed up in Him, and suffered Death, the penalty of the sins of all. So all Men died in Christ's Death.

And He died for all, in order that He might rise for all, and might live for all (Heb. vii. 25), and so all might rise and live in and by Him.

We all died in Him, died to sin, died to our lusts, died to our old man: and we died, not in order that we might remain dead, but in order that we might rise again, and live in newness of life as new creatures (v. 7) in Him, and that we might live, not to ourselves, but to Him Who died and rose again for us.

And how are we to rise for Christ, and to live for Him? By showing to Him, in His Members, the same love that He showed to us; that is, by being ready to suffer for them as He suffered for us.

Therefore the Love which Christ showed to us constraineth us to labour for the salvation of all, by endeavouring to reconcile all to God. (v. 23.)

Thus we imitate Him in the καταλλαγὴ or At-onement which He wrought for us.

— οἱ ζῶντες] they who live by virtue of Christ's Resurrection, they who are incorporated into Him Who is the "Resurrection and the Life."

16. οὐδένα οἴδαμεν κατὰ σάρκα] we know no one according to the flesh. The words κατὰ σάρκα are opposed to κατὰ πνεῦμα. See i. 17, and 1 Cor. i. 26, and iii. 3, 4.

The sense is, we regard no one according to carnal considerations; we do not look at men κατὰ πρόσωπον (see v. 12), according to their outward appearance; we measure no one by mere worldly standards of secular power, learning, eloquence, or wealth; but we regard men κατὰ πνεῦμα, spiritually, and as they are in Christ, Who is no respecter of persons.

In Him all men died. For He died for all. And He died for all, in order that all might rise by the first Resurrection of the spiritual Regeneration, and live in Him and to Him, and so rise again to everlasting glory in the Second Resurrection at the Great Day.

All Christians are engrafted into His Body. They have arisen by "the washing of Regeneration and Renewal of the Holy Ghost. The Old Man is buried in them by virtue of their baptism, in which they have been buried with Christ, wherein also they arose with Him, that they should walk in newness of life. (Col. ii. 12. Rom. vi. 4.) Henceforth they have another conversation, another life,—that which is from above." Chrysostom.

And so Theodoret here; νεουργηθέντες διὰ τοῦ παναγίου βαπτίσματος τὸ τῆς ἁμαρτίας ἀπεξεδυσάμεθα γῆρας. And so Theophyl.

— εἰ δὲ καὶ ἐγνώκαμεν κ.τ.λ.] if we have ever known Christ Himself according to the flesh. St. Paul is not here speaking of himself personally, but of himself as a Christian Man and Minister. He says ἡμεῖς, we; and If any one is in Christ (i. e. whosoever is in Christ) he is a new creature.

The comparison here is therefore not between different periods in St. Paul's own life, subsequent to his conversion and ordination to the Apostleship, but between the state in which he was before and after his Baptism.

Therefore the notions which have been built by some on this passage, as to a gradual development in St. Paul's Apostolic Teaching, are groundless.

His meaning is,—Before we were made Christians, the Cross was unto us a stumbling-block or foolishness. (1 Cor. i. 23.) We regarded Christ merely κατὰ σάρκα, with carnal eyes; we saw Him only as a Man,—poor, despised, rejected, crucified by the Rulers of this world; we even thought it a duty to do many things contrary to the Name of Jesus of Nazareth. (Acts xxvi. 9.)

But now the scales are fallen from our eyes (Acts ix. 18); the veil has been taken from our hearts. We see the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. We glory in the Cross, and in that alone. (Gal. vi. 14. Philem. 7, 8.) We know nothing but Jesus Christ, and Him crucified. (1 Cor. ii. 2.)

There is another sense in which the Apostles themselves might be said not to know Christ after the flesh; which is expressed by S. Leo, who observes (Serm. 69), that though Christ retained His human body after the Resurrection, yet it was become "corpus impassibile, immortale, incorruptibile, ita ut merito dicatur caro Christi in eo quo fuerat statu ante passionem, nesciri."

By His Resurrection and Ascension He changed and glorified that flesh which He took from us; and we in hope and expectation are already changed and glorified, because we His Members are risen in our Head. See Athanas. de Incarnat. § 10. Looking at Christians as thus transfigured in Christ, we may be said not to know them κατὰ σάρκα. And so Theoph. here.

And this sense, both as regards Christ and Christians, is adopted by Augustine c. Faustum, xi. 7. Though in another place (Serm. 5) he says, "When we knew Christ carnally, we knew Him only as man, but now we know Him as God co-equal with the Father." And so in his 147th Epistle "de Videndo Deo," c. 35, he interprets this knowledge which is not after the flesh, as equivalent to faith in Christ.

— τὰ ἀρχαῖα] More significant than ἀρχαῖα. The old things (τὰ ἀρχαῖα), the original things of the old Adam passed away from us in our Baptism; they were drowned then, as Pharaoh and his host were in the Red Sea; and now all things have become and are new to us in Christ.

Observe the aorist παρῆλθεν, used to express the passing away of the old things at a particular time, when the Old Man was buried in us, and the New Man raised up in us; and observe also the perfect tense γέγονε, used to describe the state which then succeeded and still continues.

The Apostle refers to Isa. xliii. 18, μὴ μνημονεύετε τὰ πρῶτα, καὶ τὰ ἀρχαῖα μὴ συλλογίζεσθε, ἰδοὺ ἐγὼ ποιῶ καινά. Cp. Rev. xxi. 5, ἰδοὺ καινὰ πάντα ποιῶ.

18. τοῦ καταλλάξαντος ἡμᾶς ἑαυτῷ] who reconciled us to Himself through Christ.

On this subject the reader may be reminded of the following words of Bp. Pearson: We must conceive that God was angry with mankind before He determined to give our Saviour. We cannot imagine that God, Who is essentially just, should not abominate iniquity. The first affection we can conceive in Him upon the lapse of man, is wrath and indignation. God therefore was most certainly offended before He gave a Redeemer; and though it be most true that He so loved the world that He gave His only-begotten Son (John iii. 16), yet there is no incongruity in this,—that a Father should be offended with that son which he loveth, and at that time offended with him when he loveth him.

Notwithstanding therefore that God loved men whom He created, yet He was offended with them when they sinned, and gave His Son to suffer for them; that through that Son's obedience He might be reconciled to them.

This Reconciliation is clearly delivered in the Scriptures as wrought by Christ. For all things are of God, Who hath reconciled us to Himself by Jesus Christ (2 Cor. v. 18); and that by virtue of His death; for when we were enemies, we were reconciled unto God by the death of His Son (Rom. v. 10) making peace through the blood of His cross, and by Him reconciling all things unto Himself. (Col. i. 20.)

In vain it is objected, that the Scripture saith our Saviour reconciled men to God, but no where teacheth that He reconciled God to man; for in the language of the Scripture, to reconcile a man to God, is in our vulgar language to reconcile God to man,—that is, to cause Him Who before was angry and offended with him, to be gracious and propitious to him. See 1 Sam. xxix. 4. Matt. v. 23, 24.

In the like manner we are said to be reconciled unto God, when God is reconciled, appeased, and become gracious and favourable unto us; and Christ is said to reconcile us unto God, when He hath moved and obtained God to be reconciled unto us, when He hath appeased Him and restored us unto His favour. Thus when we were enemies we were reconciled to God,—that is, notwithstanding he was offended with us for our sins, we were restored unto His favour by the death of His Son. (Rom. v. 10.)

Whence appeareth the weakness of the Socinian exception, that in the Scriptures we are said to be reconciled unto God; but God is never said to be reconciled unto us. For by that very expression it is understood, that he which is reconciled in the language of the Scriptures, is restored unto the favour of Him Who was formerly offended with that person which is now said to be reconciled. As when David was to be reconciled unto Saul (1 Sam. xxix. 4), it was not that David should lay down his enmity against Saul, but that Saul should become propitious and favourable unto David: and therefore, where the language is, that David should be reconciled unto Saul, the sense is, that Saul, who was exasperated and angry, should be appeased, and so reconciled unto David. Bp. Pearson (on the Creed, Art. x. p. 677). See also on 1 Tim. ii. 6.

— τὴν διακονίαν τῆς καταλλαγῆς] The Ministry of Reconciliation, committed by Christ to the Apostles, and to the Christian Priesthood after them in succession to the end of time, is exercised,

(1) In Preaching the Word; thus opening the kingdom of heaven by the key of knowledge.

(2) In the Sacrament of Baptism; thus actually receiving men into the Household of God by the opened Door.

(3) In Absolution of Penitent Sinners; especially in the Pardon pronounced and conveyed in, and sealed by, the Holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

Their office which they so exercise is a Ministry (διακονία), because they only apply the means instituted by God for the salvation of men; and the virtue and efficacy of what they minister is not from them who dispense the means, but from Him Who instituted the means, and Who conveys the blessings of spiritual birth, life, health, recovery, and salvation, by the instrumentality of the means which He has appointed, and of those whom He has appointed to minister them.

See the Authorities on this subject in Theophilus Anglicanus, Part i. chaps. xiii. and xiv.

19. θέμενος ἐν ἡμῖν] having deposited the treasures of His grace (for Himself) in us, as in vessels chosen for that purpose—earthen and fragile though we be (iv. 7).

21. μὴ γνόντα ἁμαρτίαν] Him Who did not know sin. Here μὴ, the subjective negative, is supposed by some Expositors to correct the notion of those who condemned and crucified Christ as a sinner. Winer, p. 430.

But it rather serves to indicate that, although, and even because, God knew Christ to be perfectly sinless (for unless He had been perfectly sinless, He could not have redeemed sinners), He treated Him as Sin in the abstract; in order that Christ might be "the Lord Our Righteousness, and that we might become the Righteousness of God, in Him."

— ἁμαρτίαν ἐποίησεν] The sense of this expression is to be explained from a consideration of the word ποιῶ as used in N. T.

It cannot mean that God made Christ to be sin. For how could He that is sinless become Sin in the abstract? How could He be said to have sin? Such an expression (as Aug. says, Serm. 134 and 155), "intolerabile videretur, absit!" But God treated Him, accounted Him as such, and gave Him up, sinless as He was, and known by Him as such, to suffer as sin for our sakes, as our proxy and substitute. (See Isa. liii. 5, 6. 9—12.) The Lord laid on Him the iniquity of us all. He bore the sin of many; and Rom. viii. 3. 1 Pet. ii. 22; and above on v. 14.

The verb ἐποίησεν is here used as in John v. 18, ἴσον ἑαυτὸν ποιῶν τῷ Θεῷ: viii. 53, τίνα σεαυτὸν ποιεῖς: x. 33, σὺ ἄνθρωπος ὢν ποιεῖς σεαυτὸν Θεόν. 1 John i. 10, ψεύστην ποιοῦμεν αὐτόν.

Hence S. Augustine, in applying Psalm lxix., "I paid them the things that I never took," to Christ, says, "Non peccavi, et pœnas dabam;" and says that He was "delictorum susceptor, non commissor," and "delicta nostra sua fecit, ut Suam Justitiam nostram Justitiam faceret."

This interpretation seems preferable to that of some Expositors who regard ἁμαρτίαν sin, as equivalent to a sacrifice for sin; though not without some authority from the LXX. Lev. iv. 8. 10. 21. 24. 34; v. 9—12; vi. 25. But ἁμαρτία is here opposed by St. Paul to δικαιοσύνη.

The passage in Gal. iii. 13, where Christ is said to have been made a curse for us, has been quoted in support of the exposition that Christ was actually made to be sin. But it does not authorize such a notion as that. St. Paul explains there what he means, viz. that Christ was made the object of execration, for "cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree." But a person may be holy—and Christ is perfectly holy—and yet be subject to a curse. See Matt. v. 11. Luke vi. 22; vii. 33.

A curse is the expression of another's judgment on the person who is subject to it; but it does not alter the essential character and qualities of the person who is under it.

Hence Theodoret says here: "He Who was sinless suffered the death of sinners; and having been called that which we were (viz. sin), He called us that which He was (viz. Righteousness); for He gave us the riches of Righteousness as a gift." Compare Chrys. and Theoph. here; and Bp. Bull on Justification, Answer to Stricture xi. § 10; and Bp. Sanderson (iii. p. 65), who thus speaks: That alone satisfactory punishment of our blessed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, was not at all for His own sins,—far be the impiety from us so to imagine; for He did no sin, neither was there any guile found in His mouth (1 Pet. ii. 22), but for ours. He payed that which He never took (Ps. lxix. 4); it was for our transgressions that He was wounded, and the chastisement of our peace was laid upon Him.

Yet even those meritorious sufferings of His may be said in a qualified sense to have been for His own sins; although, in my judgment, it be far better to abstain from such like speeches as are of ill and suspicious sound, though they may be in some sort defended.

But how for His own sins? His own by commission? By no means. God forbid any man should teach, any man should conceive so; the least thought of this were blasphemy, but His own by imputation. Not that He had sinned, and so deserved punishment, but that He had taken upon Him our sins (Isa. liii. 5), which deserved that punishment.

As he that undertaketh for another man's debt maketh it his own, and standeth chargeable with it as if it were his own personal debt, so Christ, becoming surety for our sins, made them His own, and so was punishable for them, as if they had been His own personal sins, Who His own self bare our sins in His own body upon the tree. (1 Pet. ii. 24.) That He was punished for us Who Himself deserved no punishment; it was because He was made sin for us Who Himself knew no sin. (2 Cor. v. 21.) Bp. Sanderson.

— ἵνα ἡμεῖς γενώμεθα δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ] that we might be made the Righteousness of God in Him.

This is something more than the Righteousness provided by God and accepted by Him, which is the interpretation of some expositors. Cp. Rom. i. 17; iii. 21. 30; iv. 5; x. 3.

It is the righteousness of God, contrasted with, and taking the place of, the unrighteousness of man. It is the righteousness of God in the Second Adam, as prevailing over the unrighteousness of man in the First Adam.

Christ, God of God, took our Nature, and is God manifest in the Flesh; and having summed up all Mankind in Himself, as our Head, the Second Adam, suffered for our sins as our Representative and Proxy; and by virtue of the infinite value of the sacrifice which He in His Person, the One Christ, God as well as Man, offered for us, and of the full satisfaction which He made, He effected an Atonement, καταλλαγήν, or reconciliation between God and Man, and united us to God in Himself, being perfect God and perfect Man; and so He took away our sins; and we, by reason of His Incarnation and Death for us, and of our baptismal incorporation and mystical indwelling in Him, are become the Righteousness of God in Him. God regards us as no longer sinners, but as having His own righteousness in Christ. God laid on Him the Sin of Mankind, in order that Mankind might become the Righteousness of God in Him Who is called 'EMMANUEL,' 'God with us,' and Whose Name is, "the LORD (Jehovah) OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS." (Jer. xxiii. 5, 6.) Cp. Isa. xlv. 24, "In the LORD have I righteousness and strength; even to Him shall men come. In the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified." And see 1 Pet. ii. 24. 2 Pet. i. 4.

Christ is more than Jehovah our Justifier, He is Jehovah our Justice. He is made unto us by God very Righteousness itself. (1 Cor. i. 30.) And yet more, He is made Righteousness to us that we may be the Righteousness of God in Him. (2 Cor. v. 21.) Which place S. Chrysostom, well weighing, says: "This very word δικαιοσύνη the Apostle useth to express the unspeakable bounty of the gift; that God hath not given us only the operation or effect of His Righteousness, but His very Righteousness, His very Self unto us." God made Him Who knew no sin to be sin, in order that we might be made (not righteous persons, that was not full enough, but) Righteousness itself; and there He stays not yet,—not every Righteousness, but the Righteousness of God Himself. What can be further said? What can be conceived more comfortable? Bp. Andrewes (v. p. 112).

See also Bp. Bull on Justification, Answer to Strict. xi. § 10, who however does not seem to give sufficient weight to the abstract words ἁμαρτία and δικαιοσύνη. Christ was treated not only as a sinner, but as sin in the abstract, collectively and universally. in order that all men, collectively and universally, as members of the Church Universal, which is Christ's Body, might become the Righteousness of God in Him.

See Chrys. here, who well observes: "St. Paul expresses here the quality itself. He does not say that God treated Christ as a sinner, but as sin, in order that we might become,—he does not say righteous men, but the Righteousness of God in Him."

Sometimes we meet in the Psalms with heavy complaints of the number and burden of sins; and these passages are quoted in the New Testament as uttered by our Redeemer, and in which there seems to be no change of person from beginning to end. We are assured by the Apostle (Heb. x. 5), that the sixth, seventh, and eighth verses of the fortieth Psalm, "Sacrifice and offering thou didst not desire," &c., are spoken by Messiah coming to abolish the legal sacrifices, by the oblation of Himself once for all. The same person, to appearance, continues speaking, and, only three verses after, complains in the following terms: "Innumerable evils have compassed me about; mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, so that I am not able to look up."

See also Ps. lxix. 5. The solution of this given in the writings of the Fathers is this; that Christ, in the day of His passion, standing charged with the sin and guilt of His people, speaks of such their sin and guilt as if they were His own, appropriating to Himself those debts for which, in the capacity of a surety, He had made Himself responsible. The Lamb, which under the Law was offered for sin, took the name אָשָׁם (asham), guilt: because the guilt contracted by the offerer was transferred to that innocent creature, and typically expiated by its blood. See Lev. v. 6.

Was not this exactly the case in truth and reality with the Lamb of God? "He did no sin, neither was guile found in His mouth, but He bare our sins in His own Body on the tree. (1 Pet. ii. 22.) He was made Sin for us, Who knew no sin, that we might be made the Righteousness of God in Him." Christ and the Church compose one mystical Person, of which He is the Head, and the Church the Body: and as the Body speaks by the Head, and the Head for the Body, He speaks of her sin, and she of His Righteousness. Bp. Horne (Preface to the Psalms, p. xiv).

He takes her sin in order that she may receive His Righteousness.

CH. VI. 2. Καιρῷ δεκτῷ] In an acceptable season. A remarkable application of inspired prophecy. It contains the Words of God the Father to God the Son, Incarnate, and subject to scorn and to suffering for man's redemption, and interceding as Mediator for His Members.

To the Son thus praying the Father says, "In an acceptable season I hearkened to Thee." See the passage in Isaiah xlix. 6—8, which is here introduced with great propriety, when the Apostle had been speaking of God the Father as having treated the sinless Son as Sin; and which, therefore, is a seasonable declaration from God the Father that the Son's sacrifice for sin was accepted, and that His Prayers for the Church, which He has purchased with His Blood, are heard; and it thus affords a divine assurance, that the Grace proffered by God to all in Christ will, if it be duly used, be available for their everlasting salvation.

7. ὅπλων—δεξιῶν καὶ ἀριστερῶν] arms on the right hand and on the left; that is, offensive and defensive weapons. The reference is to the Sword and Spear (ξίφος καὶ δόρυ) in the soldier's right hand, by which he attacks the enemy, and to the Shield (ἀσπὶς) on his left arm, by which he defends himself from the foe. See Blomfield on Æsch. Agam. 116, χερὸς ἐκ δορικτύπου, i. e. the right hand; and cp. Bengel here.

Such is the spiritual armour of the Christian soldier against his ghostly Enemy. (See Eph. vi. 14—17.) He has to wage a war of attack against Satan as well as of defence. The Christian is therefore provided by God with both kinds of weapons,—both with spiritual sword and shield,—and he must exercise himself in wielding both.

8—10.] Compare the beautiful language of the ancient Christian Apologist. They (the Christians) live in the flesh, but not according to the flesh (see below, x. 3); they dwell on earth, and are citizens of heaven; they obey the Laws, and mount above the Laws with their own lives (ἰδίοις βίοις νικῶσι τοὺς νόμους); they love all men, and are persecuted by all; they are not known, and yet are condemned; they are put to death, and are made alive; they are poor, and make many rich; they lack all things, and they abound in all things; they are treated with scorn, and rejoice therein; they are vilified, and they are justified; they are reviled, and they bless; they are insulted, and they are dutiful; they do well, and are punished as evil-doers; and being punished they rejoice, as being thereby raised to life. Justin Martyr (p. 497).

10. πτωχοί] paupers; poorer than the poor (πένητες). See viii. 9.

— κατέχοντες] possessing, holding fast. On the force of κατὰ, see 1 Cor. vii. 31.

12. στενοχωρεῖσθε] Ye are straitened, "angustiamini" (Vulg.), opposed to πεπλάτυνται. There is ample room for you all to dwell at large in my heart, πάντας ἔνδον ἔχομεν, καὶ τοῦτο μετ' εὐρυχωρίας πολλῆς. (Chrys.)

But ye are cramped and straitened in your own bowels. I open my heart wide to you, but not so you to me. As to this mode of speaking, see 1 Kings iv. 29. Ps. cxix. 32.

S. Chrysostom has here a beautiful passage displaying the tenderness and expansive largeness of St. Paul's heart, as seen in the numerous passages of his several Epistles, in which he pours out an effusion of love to those whom he addresses. See 1 Thess. i. 9; ii. 19. 2 Thess. ii. 17. Gal. iv. 15. 19. 2 Cor. vii. 7; xii. 15. Rom. i. 11. Eph. iii. 14. Col. ii. 3. 7. 24. Tit. i. 4. 2 Tim. i. 4.

13. τὴν αὐτὴν ἀντιμισθίαν] In the same manner by way of recompense. For τὸ αὐτὸ, ὅ ἐστιν ἀντιμισθία, see Winer, pp. 469. 546. An example of conciseness, together with apposition. (Rom. xii. 1. 1 Thess. ii. 6. 2 Thess. i. 4, 5; ii. 14.)

14. Μὴ γίνεσθε ἑτεροζυγοῦντες ἀπίστοις] Do not become unequally matched (whether by marriage, or friendship, or participation in idolothyta) with unbelievers, i. e. heathens (1 Cor. vi. 6; vii. 12—15; x. 27; xiv. 23), as oxen ill yoked with other animals; a conjunction forbidden by the Levitical Law. (Deut. xxii. 9.) And hence ἑτεροζύγῳ is used by the Septuagint (Lev. xix. 19) to describe two animals of different kinds.

Compare the compound words (used by St. Paul), ἑτερόγλωσσος, 1 Cor. xiv. 21; ἑτερο-διδασκαλεῖν, 1 Tim. i. 3; vi. 3. And as to the thing itself, cp. Ovid, Epist. ix. 29, "Quam malè inæquales veniunt ad aratra juvenci," and the authorities for ἑτερόζυγος in Wetstein, who quotes Hesych., ἑτερόζυγοι, οἱ μὴ συζυγοῦντες, which explains the dative here. Cp. Winer, p. 198.

Hence St. Paul may be expounded to express concisely here two precepts:

(1) Be not unequally yoked, but seek for union and partnerships in wedlock, friendship, &c. with persons of the same Christian faith, love, and holiness with yourselves,—what the Apostle himself calls γνησίους συζύγους, genuine yoke-fellows (Phil. iv. 3),—that you may pace on equably side by side, "pari passu, passibus æquis," and may together bear the yoke of life with patience and concord. Cp. Juvenal xiii. 22, "ferre incommoda vitæ, nec jactare jugum." And cp. Theocrit. xii. 15, ἀλλήλους ἐφίλασαν ἴσῳ ζυγῷ, and xiii. 15, αὐτῷ δ' εὖ ἔλκων, where the dative may be compared with ἀπίστοις here; and the description in Æschyl. Pers. 185—199;

(2) If you are to be unequally matched at all, let it be with any one rather than with unbelievers, heathens, idolaters, ἀπίστοις. For what partnership can there be of righteousness with lawlessness? light with darkness? of Christ with Belial? the Temple of God (which ye are) with Idols?

15. Βελίαρ] = Heb. בְּלִיַּעַל, nequam; from root יָעַל = non, and, perhaps, עֹל, jugum, a yoke. See S. Jerome in Eph. iv., who says, "Belial, absque jugo, quod de collo suo Dei abjecerit servitutem." Cp. Mintert. in v. So that Belial is one who is lawless, and submits to no yoke; which, if so, may reflect further light on St. Paul's word, ἑτεροζυγοῦντες.

The λ is changed into ρ at the end of the word, "quod Græcis nullum nomen desit in ρ." Mintert., and see Gesen. Thes. i. p. 210.

16. Ὅτι ἐνοικήσω] St. Paul cites here Lev. xxvi. 11, 12 from LXX, where God is promising His presence to those who were following the itinerant Tabernacle in the Wilderness; and thus the Apostle teaches us to regard that Tabernacle, on its march through the desert, as a type of the Christian Church travelling through the wilderness of this world, and there carried up and down, with its chosen vessels of God's grace, which at last are translated into, and are enshrined in, the stationary and everlasting Temple of the Jerusalem that is above,—the Church glorified.

This is what is declared by Ezekiel (xxxvii. 27), who adopts some of the words here quoted by St. Paul, and to whom the Apostle here refers, and who thus describes the days of the Messiah: διαθήσομαι αὐτοῖς διαθήκην εἰρήνης, διαθήκη αἰωνία ἔσται μετ' αὐτῶν, καὶ θήσω τὰ ἁγιά μου ἐν μέσῳ αὐτῶν εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, καὶ ἔσται ἡ κατασκήνωσίς μου ἐν αὐτοῖς, καὶ ἔσομαι αὐτοῖς Θεὸς, καὶ αὐτοί μου ἔσονται λαός· καὶ γνώσονται τὰ ἔθνη ὅτι ἐγώ εἰμι ὁ Κύριος ὁ ἁγιάζων αὐτοὺς, ἐν τῷ εἶναι τὰ ἁγιά μου ἐν μέσῳ αὐτῶν εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα. Cp. the promises in the Christian Scriptures. Rev. vii. 15; xxi. 3.

17, 18. Διὸ ἐξέλθετε κ.τ.λ.] Wherefore come ye out. In these verses St. Paul (as is usual with the Apostles and Evangelists, and as was common with Hebrew Teachers) combines several passages from the Old Testament, and blends them into one. See Surenhus. p. 557—560, and above on 1 Cor. i. 31.

The passages are Isa. xlviii. 20; lii. 11. Jer. l. 8; li. 6. 45. These are admonitions to fly from Babylon and its idolatrous abominations. (Cp. Rev. xviii. 4.) And they are properly applied by the Apostle as exhortations to Christians to flee from communion with Heathens and Idolaters in acts of idolatrous worship (cp. 1 Cor. x. 21), and also to shun association with them in the intimate relationships of domestic life, particularly in Marriage (1 Cor. vii. 39). Compare Tertullian, ad Uxor., on marriage with a heathen, ii. 2—4.

On account of the misuse of this passage of St. Paul by some in later days, it is requisite to observe that it cannot be rightly applied to justify separation from the Visible Church of Christ on the plea of flaws and blemishes in her.

There were flaws and blemishes, more than enough, in the Church of Corinth, as is shown in St. Paul's two Epistles to that Church, especially in the first Epistle. See above on 1 Cor. i. 2.

But St. Paul never advises any one to separate himself from that Church. No; in his first Epistle he condemns schisms and divisions as works of the flesh (1 Cor. iii. 3), and he exhorts the Corinthians to be perfectly joined together in one mind (1 Cor. i. 10), and teaches that there should be no schism in the body (xii. 25), and that no spiritual gifts are of any profit without Love (1 Cor. xiii. 1—3).

He allows no one to separate himself from, or to make schisms in, a Church, on the plea of defects in it.

If indeed a Church, in her teaching and practice, not only adulterates what is true with what is false, and what is holy with what is idolatrous, but also proceeds to enforce her corruptions on others as terms of communion with her, and thus makes it impossible to communicate with her in what she has that is true and holy, without communicating also with what is erroneous and idolatrous; if she excommunicates all who do not and cannot communicate with her in her errors and corruptions, then a schism there is, and must be; and a sin there is, and a grievous sin. For wherever schism is, there is sin. But the guilt of the schism rests with her, who makes communion in her sins to be essential and indispensable to communion with herself.

This is the case with the present Church of Rome.

But it is not the case with the Church of England.

The Church of England requires nothing to be received, as necessary to salvation, but what is contained in Holy Scripture, or may be proved thereby. And she ministers the Word and Sacraments of Christ by the hands of an Apostolical Ministry.

It is therefore not sinful to communicate with her; but it is sinful not to communicate with her.

Therefore a solemn warning must be addressed to all in this country who wilfully separate themselves from Communion with her.

To be blind to the solemn cautions against schism which abound in these Epistles to the Corinthians, and to palliate the sin of separation from her by a text like the present, which exhorts the Christians of Corinth to separate themselves from heathens and idolaters in their heathenism and idolatry, is to daub with untempered mortar (Ezek. xiii. 10), and to wrest the Scriptures, as the unlearned and unstable do unto their own destruction (2 Pet. iii. 16); and to do despite to the Holy Spirit Who wrote them, and Who is the Spirit of Peace and Concord as well as of Wisdom and Truth.

18. καὶ ἔσομαι] This promise also is the sum and substance of several Scriptures blended together, particularly Jer. xxxi. 1. 9. Isa. xliii. 6. See Surenhus. p. 559.

CH. VII. 2. οὐδένα ἠδικήσαμεν—ἐφθείραμεν] We injured no man, we corrupted no man, we defrauded no man, when we were with you. Very different was the conduct of their false teachers: 2 Cor. xi. 19, 20.

3. εἰς τὸ συναποθανεῖν] Even to die together with you. As those persons, among the nations, who are under a vow to die with their friends; whence the words συναποθνήσκοντες and commorientes. Such were "the Sacred band" (ἱερὸς λόχος) among the Thebans (Plutarch in Pelopida), and the Soldurii among the Gauls (Cæsar, de B. G. iii.). Cp. Horat. 2 Od. xvii. 11, "supremum carpere iter pariter parati." Athenæus, vi. 249, B, τοὺτους οἱ βασιλεῖς ἔχουσι συζῶντας καὶ συναποθνήσκοντας. See A Lapide and Wetstein.

5. ἔσχηκεν] has had. This perfect tense has been altered to the aorist ἔσχεν in some MSS., viz. B, F, G, K. But the perfect has a peculiar force here, much more powerful than the aorist, which would reduce the protracted feeling of anguish here to a mere momentary pang. And it fixes, as it were, a permanent centre, to which other things are made to converge. On that centre the writer's own mind is fixed, and to it he draws the mind of his readers. Cp. i. 9; ii. 13.

The sense of the passage is, We came to Macedonia. Think of us there. Fix your minds on us there: contemplate our condition there. We have had no respite, but in all things are afflicted; without, fightings; within, fears. But God comforted us in our distress by the arrival of Titus from you.

Compare Rev. v. 7, ἦλθε, καὶ εἴληφε τὸ βιβλίον. He came, and (as I see) he has taken the book, which he holds.

— ἐν παντὶ θλιβόμενοι] The broken abruptness of the sentence represents the agitated condition of the writer's feelings at the time. Cp. Winer, p. 315, and see on v. 8.

These natural anacoluthα, which place before the eyes of the reader the inner workings of the great Apostle's heart, are far beyond the rigid rules of ordinary Grammar; they belong to a higher science, the Grammar of Nature, and even of Inspiration, and impart an indescribable grace of tenderness and truth to these the impassioned outpourings of his full heart. If they so touch the soul when read now, what must have been their effect when they sounded forth in all their original freshness, with the living voice, in the public recitations of these Letters in the Churches of Corinth and Achaia!

7. ὥστε με μᾶλλον χαρῆναι] so that my joy exceeded my sorrow, great as that had been.

8. τῇ ἐπιστολῇ] the Epistle: the first to the Corinthians.

— βλέπω γάρ] For I perceive this, that that Epistle did give you pain, although for a short time.

Βλέπω is more expressive than ὁρῶ. Do not think that I am heedless of your feelings, and that I do not care what pain I give you. I, though absent from you in body, contemplate your inmost feelings, with the eyes of paternal love, and feel for you and with you.

9. κατὰ Θεόν] with a view to God, and not with an eye to yourselves only, or to the world, κατὰ κόσμον. "Ἡ κατὰ Θεὸν λύπη est dolor animi Deum spectantis et sequentis" (Bengel). And so Winer, p. 358, note; whereas "ἡ κατὰ κόσμον λύπη est dolor animi mundum spectantis et sequentis."

This and the following verse gives the definition of genuine Repentance, as distinguished from spurious;

True Repentance is dolor admissi, grief for the sin committed against God; false repentance is only dolor amissi, grief for what is lost by the sin. The former is dolor ob culpam, i. e. it arises from sense of sin; the other is only dolor ob pœnam, and is produced by fear of punishment.

The latter is the repentance of Cain, of Esau, of Saul, of Ahab, of the Pharisees, of Judas, whose eyes were turned on themselves and on worldly things, in their expressions of sorrow; whence proceeds hopeless despondency, perhaps self-destruction.

But the other Repentance is the Repentance of David, of the Publican, of the Prodigal, and of Peter, whose eyes were fixed on God, and looked at their sin in its relation to Him, and to His Purity, Justice, and Love; whence arises in the heart a feeling of godly sorrow, shame, and remorse; and yet not of despair, for with the eyes fixed on God, the sinner sees in Him a merciful Father, as well as a Holy God and Just Judge; and it sees the all-sufficient propitiation which He has provided for sin, in Christ, and it resorts to the means of pardon and grace, which He dispenses by the Ministry of Reconciliation in His Church, and by which He restores the penitent to Himself. See above, v. 20, 21.

10. σωτηρίαν ἀμεταμέλητον] salvation not to be repented of. A striking contrast. Worldly sorrow worketh death,—eternal death,—which is for ever to be rued. But godly sorrow worketh salvation which (whatever pain it may now cost to attain it) is never to be rued, but will be rejoiced in for eternity.

Observe also the distinction between μετάνοια and μεταμέλεια. Μετάνοια, change of mind, belongs only to the good; μεταμέλεια, pain of mind, belongs to evil men as well as good. Peter μετανοεῖ, as well as μεταμέλεται. Judas μεταμέλεται (Matt. xxvii. 3), but not μετανοεῖ. Μετάνοια begins with μεταμέλεια, but at length delivers from μεταμέλεια; whereas μεταμέλεια, without μετάνοια, continues to eternity.

11. ἀλλά] On this emphatic repetition of ἀλλὰ, see 1 Cor. vi. 11.

— πράγματι] Elz. prefixes ἐν, not in the best MSS.; and πράγματι is to be joined with ἐν παντί.

12. οὐδὲ εἵνεκεν τοῦ ἀδικηθέντος] not mainly and primarily for their sakes; that is, for the sake of the incestuous person and his father. (v. 1.) Cp. 1 Cor. v. 9, μὴ τῶν βοῶν μέλει τῷ Θεῷ; Theophyl.

— ὑμῶν—ἡμῶν] So the best MSS. authorities. Elz. has ἡμῶν—ὑμῶν.

St. Paul's meaning is, that he wrote his former Epistle in order that the zeal (σπουδή, see v. 11) of the Corinthians in behalf of their Ministers (Paul and his associates), and in obedience to their admonitions, might be made manifest among them by their godly repentance and exercise of salutary discipline.

13. Διὰ . . . ἡμῶν περισσοτέρως μᾶλλον] So the best MSS. Elz. inserts δὲ after περισσοτέρως, and has ὑμῶν instead of ἡμῶν.

The sense is well given in Vulg., "Ideò consolati sumus. In consolatione autem nostrâ abundantiùs magis gavisi sumus super gaudio Titi, quia refectus est spiritus ejus ab omnibus vobis." So Syriac, Æthiopic, and Gothic Versions.

On the accumulation of comparatives denoting intensity of feeling and vehemence of action, see Phil. i. 23, πολλῷ μᾶλλον κρεῖσσον. Mark vii. 36. Winer, p. 214. And in 2 Cor. xii. 9 a superlative is joined with a comparative, ἥδιστα μᾶλλον.

— Τίτου] S. Chrysostom remarks here on St. Paul's prudence in stating these particulars concerning Titus, which would be very acceptable to the Corinthians, of whom he had brought so favourable a report to St. Paul; and would prepare the Corinthians, on their side, to give a hearty welcome to Titus, whom the Apostle now designed to send back to them, in order to gather their charitable contributions for the poor Saints at Jerusalem. See here viii. 6. 16. 23.

He wins their love for Titus; for nothing more cements affection than a good testimony concerning those whose love is to be won. And what the Apostle says of Titus is, that his arrival from Corinth, with the report he gave of them, turned his own sadness into joy. Chrys.

CH. VIII. 1. δεδομένην ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλ.] Cp. Acts iv. 12, δεδομένον ἐν ἀνθρώποις, 1 John iv. 9, ἐφανερώθη ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν ὑμῖν.

The preposition ἐν here expresses more than the dative. The gift or grace was not only bestowed upon, but operated in, the Churches. It was a χάρις ἐνεργουμένη, a grace working in them by love, and showing itself by acts of Charity to others.

2. ἐν πολλῇ δοκιμῇ θλίψεως] in much proof of affliction. On the word δοκιμή, see ii. 9; ix. 13; xiii. 3. Rom. v. 4.

Affliction is here represented as a fire which tries the Christian soul—as the furnace does metal—whether it is of sterling ore, or adulterated (κίβδηλος), and therefore reprobate (ἀδόκιμος), and which not only tries, but refines it. Jer. vi. 30. Gen. xxiii. 16. Prov. xvii. 3; xxvii. 21, LXX. 1 Pet. i. 7, λυπηθέντες ἐν πολλοῖς πειρασμοῖς ἵνα τὸ δοκίμιον ὑμῶν τῆς πίστεως πολὺ τιμιώτερον χρυσίου τοῦ ἀπολλυμένου, διὰ πυρὸς δὲ δοκιμαζομένου, εὑρεθῇ εἰς ἔπαινον. . . .

The Churches of Macedonia stood the trial well, and were purified by affliction (on which see 1 Thess. i. 6; ii. 14), so that their love shone more brightly in acts of kindness to others. Their own experience of poverty and suffering made them more sympathetic and charitable to others. "Non ignara mali miseris succurrere disco." Virgil.

— ἡ κατὰ βάθους πτωχεία] A beautiful and picturesque image. Their penury reaching downward to a low level—like a well, sunk to a great depth in the soil—gushed forth abundantly in a copious stream of fresh and living water of love, in the spiritual wealth of their Christian liberality.

On κατὰ βάθους πτωχεία, see Winer, p. 341, and p. 377.

Thus their severe affliction produced much joy; thus their deep poverty produced much riches of Alms. Chrys.

Observe, also, the Apostle does not say that it abounded to much wealth in the amount given, but abounded to much wealth in honest openness and heartiness (ἁπλότητι) of giving. (See Rom. xii. 8.) For it is not the sum given, but the spirit of the giver, which is the measure of true almsgiving in the sight of God.

Some render ἁπλότητος by liberality, here and in Rom. xii. 8, but this is a questionable rendering; and the sense is that in which the word is commonly used by St. Paul, in 2 Cor. i. 12; xi. 3. Eph. vi. 5. Col. iii. 22.

Ἁπλότης is not merely simplicity, but honest openness and freeness, and expansive largeness of heart ("cordis simplex dilatatio"), free from all guile, and sinister considerations of self.

It is well described by Phavorinus as τὸ μηδὲν μέτ' ἐπινοίας ἐξ ἑαυτοῦ πλάττον ἢ λαλοῦν.

τον τῆς ἁπλότητος αὐτῶν· [3] ὅτι κατὰ δύναμιν, μαρτυρῶ, καὶ παρὰ δύναμιν αὐθαίρετοι, [4] [b] μετὰ πολλῆς παρακλήσεως δεόμενοι ἡμῶν τὴν χάριν, καὶ τὴν κοινωνίαν τῆς διακονίας τῆς εἰς τοὺς ἁγίους, [5] καὶ οὐ, καθὼς ἠλπίσαμεν, ἀλλ' ἑαυτοὺς ἔδωκαν πρῶτον τῷ Κυρίῳ, καὶ ἡμῖν διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ· [6] [c] εἰς τὸ παρακαλέσαι ἡμᾶς Τίτον, ἵνα καθὼς προενήρξατο, οὕτω καὶ ἐπιτελέσῃ εἰς ὑμᾶς καὶ τὴν χάριν ταύτην. 3. παρά] So B, C, D, E, G. Elz. ὑπέρ.

4. ἁγίους] Elz. adds δέξασθαι ἡμᾶς, not found in the best MSS.

The sense is—Instead of our being suppliants to them for aid, they contributed according to their power, and beyond their power, of their own will; praying us with much entreaty, with regard to the grace and partnership in the communication (i. e. contribution) that we were making for the saints, i. e. imploring us to allow them to be associated with us in the privilege of offering alms to their poorer brethren at Jerusalem. See Theodoret here, who says, τὴν ἡμετέραν παραίνεσιν προβλαβόν αὐτοὶ, δεηθέντες ἡμῶν τῆς τῶν ἁγίων θεραπείας φροντίσαι.

A blessed example of Christian Charity, anticipating the prayer for aid; and regarding it as a boon, to be permitted to take part in labours of love, remembering the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive" (Acts xx. 35).

St. Paul happily applies the word χάρις, grace, to a work of charity, in this appeal to the Corinthians, who prided themselves much on their own spiritual gifts and graces: and thus enforces the teaching of his former Epistle (chap. xiii.), that no spiritual gifts avail without charity. See v. 6 and v. 7, ὥσπερ ἐν παντὶ περισσεύετε, πίστει καὶ λόγῳ καὶ γνώσει . . . ἵνα καὶ ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ χάριτι περισσεύητε. Chrysostom.

5. καὶ οὐ, καθὼς ἠλπίσαμεν, ἀλλ' ἑαυτοὺς ἔδωκαν πρῶτον] and not, as we hoped, their substance, but themselves also they gave first to the Lord. On this ellipse, see Acts v. 4. 1 Cor. xv. 10. Winer, p. 439. We had indeed expected their substance, for we have had experience of their love (see vii. 5), but they went beyond our hopes, and gave themselves.

Thus he shows that, to the honour of the Macedonians, they were not puffed up by their own works of charity, nor were so elated by them, as to neglect other things, as if in giving their money they had done all that was needed. No: they not only gave their money, but themselves. (Theoph.) Thus also he obviates an objection that he had a personal end to serve in these collections; and shows that it was not the money of the Corinthians that he desired so much as themselves. (See xii. 14.)

8. διά] i. e. δοκιμάζων διὰ, testing, proving, by means of. Bengel, Winer.

9. δι' ὑμᾶς ἐπτώχευσε πλούσιος ὤν] He, being rich, became πτωχὸς on our account. Πτωχὸς is more humble and destitute than πένης. He reduced himself to penury, for us, in order that ye might become rich thereby.

Behold Him Who is rich and made Himself poor for our sakes. By Him all things were made (John i. 3). It is a greater thing to make gold than to have it. You may be rich in gold and silver and cattle; but you could not make them. But see Him Who was rich. All things were made by Him. Now see Him Who made Himself poor. The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (John i. 14). Who can conceive His riches? And now think on His Poverty. He is conceived in the Virgin's womb. O paupertas! He is born in a poor inn, wrapped in swaddling clothes, laid in a stable; He, the Lord of heaven and earth, the Maker of Angels, the Creator of all things, Visible and Invisible, is fed at the breast of His Mother, veils His Majesty, is taken and bound, and scourged, and buffeted, and crowned with thorns, nailed to a tree, pierced with a lance.... O paupertas! Augustine (Serm. 14).

10. οὐ μόνον τὸ ποιῆσαι, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ θέλειν προενήρξασθε] You pre-commenced,—that is, you originated of your accord, you took the initiative, before (πρὸ) you received any instigation from me, you pre-commenced not only the act (of beneficence), but the desire.

The priority to which the Apostle here refers, is not (as some have supposed) with regard to the Macedonian Christians. This would have been an invidious comparison.

But the meaning is—'Ye anticipated all suggestions from me.' There is a refined delicacy in this statement, in which he gives to them (as it were) precedence to himself, their Teacher. Ye outran my wishes and requests by your love.

It is to be observed, that in all this discourse concerning Almsgiving, St. Paul lays the main stress ont he cheerfulness and eagerness to give, by which genuine Charity is characterized, and which God most loves in all offerings to Him. Cp. Exod. xxv. 2; xxxv. 2. The Macedonians besought him to receive their alms. And the Corinthians (he says) anticipated his appeal, by their own desires to give.

There is therefore something very significant and instructive in this sentence, where τὸ θέλειν, the desire, is placed above τὸ ποιῆσαι, the act. For the act of giving might be only done at the instigation of others. But the desire to give is a free motion of the giver. And where the desire is, there will be the act; but the act is sometimes done without the desire to do it.

It may also be remarked that St. Paul applies this word προενάρχομαι to Titus (v. 6), as well as to the Corinthians; and these are the only passages where the word occurs in the New Testament. Titus is commended as αὐθαίρετος, v. 17, in his appeals for alms. He anticipated St. Paul's wishes, and voluntarily undertook the task of suing for the benevolence of the Corinthians in aid of the poor Christians at Jerusalem. He προενήρξατο τὴν χάριν. But to the honour of the Corinthians, be it said, they anticipated the appeal by their own spontaneous offers of aid, προενήρξαντο τὸ θέλειν.

St. Paul adds also that this alacrity of theirs was displayed in the past year, (see next note,) in order to show that he does not claim to himself the credit of having first excited it by his own Epistle.

Observe how the Apostle shows that the Corinthians came forward to this labour of love without exhortation from others; and of their own free will. A salutary lesson to all Christian congregations. Chrysostom.

— ἀπὸ πέρυσι] from last year. Cp. ix. 2; and see authorities in Wetstein, ἡ πέρυσι κωμῳδία (Aristoph.), al πέρυσι πρέσβεις (Demosth.), πέρυσι ἐπιδημῶν (Theophrast.). Not, therefore, necessarily, "a year ago."

The time to which St. Paul refers might have been not more than nine months before. It must have been, however, before the writing of his First Epistle, which was sent in the same year as the Second to the Corinthians. See the Introduction.

On the use of ἀπὸ in measures of time and place, see Acts xxviii. 23, and Winer, p. 375. 491, 492.

St. Paul had shown to the Corinthians (v. 1—4) that the Macedonians had come forward and pressed him to admit them to be his partners in making the collection for the poor. But he would not disparage the Corinthians by extolling those of Macedonia. He therefore records their free overtures of a similar kind. He reminds them not only of their own acts, but of their desires.

And he does not say ἐνήρξασθε, but προενήρξασθε ἀπὸ πέρυσι. I therefore now am only exhorting you (he means) to accomplish that to which you yourselves, willingly outrunning all exhortation from me, stimulated yourselves to do with all promptitude and alacrity. Chrys. He makes their own acts to become like exhortations to themselves.

11, 12. ἐκ τοῦ ἔχειν κ.τ.λ.] from, and according to your means. Winer, p. 329. ἐκ signifies the standard by which a thing is measured, as in "ex pede, Herculem."

This sense is unfolded in the following verse. If the alacrity of mind of the giver is manifestly set forth as an offering to God (like the "panes propositionis," or shewbread), according to what a man may have (which God knows), it is acceptable to Him, and is not estimated according to what he has not. As to the difference of the conditional ἔχῃ and the definite ἔχει, see Winer, p. 275, and Meyer here.

Cp. Aug. in Ps. 103, "Coronat Deus in te bonitatem, ubi non invenit facultatem. Nemo dicat, 'non habeo,' Charitas de sæculo non erogatur;" and S. Leo (Serm. iv. de Jejun.), "æquatur merito qui distat impendio. Potest par esse animus ubi dispar est census" (A Lapide); and on Mark xii. 42, 43. Luke xxi. 2, 3.

15. καθὼς γέγραπται κ.τ.λ.] From Exod. xvi. 18, LXX, where the words are μετρήσαντες γομὸρ, οὐκ ἐπλεόνασεν ὁ τὸ πολὺ, καὶ ὁ τὸ ὀλίγον (al. ἔλαττον) οὐκ ἠλαττόνησε.

Thus the Holy Spirit, speaking by St. Paul, reveals to us another specimen of the moral and spiritual meaning of the dealings of Almighty God with the Israelites under the Levitical Law. See on 1 Cor. ix. 9, οὐ φιμώσεις βοῦν ἀλοῶντα.

The command of God was that the manna, which the several members of the same tent (συσκήνιοι) had gathered, should be put together into one common stock, that it should be συνηγμένον, συλλελεγμένον (see LXX), and then be meted out with an homer; and when this was done, it was so ordered by Almighty God that when the whole was measured out, each person had exactly an homer, neither more nor less (Exod. xvi. 16—18).

God thus condemned covetousness. Chrys.

God not only gave the manna, but ordered it to be measured out, so that none could abuse God's gift by selfishness. Theodoret.

This St. Paul applies as a practical lesson to the members of the Christian Church. They are all συσκήνιοι, inmates of the same spiritual tent (σκηνή); travellers together through the wilderness of the world to the same heavenly Canaan. It is God who rains down the manna of His bounty in their temporal wealth. What they gather is His. And they may not gather only for themselves. What is gathered by them is to be regarded by them as belonging to others, so that there may be a liberal communication of God's gifts to all, and that the needs of their poorer brethren may be supplied from their abundance, and that there may be an equality. Thus God admits them to the high privilege of being fellow-workers with Himself in His own munificence to men.

17. σπουδαιότερος] more zealous than to need any exhortation from me. Cp. Acts xxv. 10. Phil. ii. 28. Other examples of the use of a comparative, with relation to something understood, may be seen in Winer, p. 217.

— ἐξῆλθε] he went forth, and now goes. The aorist is used here as in the next verse. See next note, and Meyer and Alford here.

18. Συνεπέμψαμεν] I now send with him. The aorist is used in this case as ἔγραψα, scripsi, dictavi. See Acts xxiii. 30, and below, ix. 3.

— τὸν ἀδελφὸν, οὗ ὁ ἔπαινος ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ] The brother, of whom the praise (is) in the Gospel. A more significant expression than "whose praise is in the Gospel." It indicates that the praise, which the person here described desires and has, is not any praise from men, but the approval of God, for his work in the Gospel.

To whom does the Apostle refer, under this honourable title?

The person here mentioned as sent together with Titus to Corinth, and as one, the praise of whom is in the Gospel in all the Churches, had (as appears from St. Paul's statement, v. 19) been appointed by the Churches to be St. Paul's fellow-traveller and coadjutor in the administration of the collection now in progress for the relief of the poor Christians at Jerusalem:

Therefore this person must have been not only one who was sent with this Epistle, but also one of those who afterwards accompanied St. Paul to Jerusalem on his subsequent visit to that city "with the alms and offerings," which, soon after the date of this Epistle, he carried with him (Acts xxiv. 17) in the journey to Jerusalem, described in the Acts of the Apostles, xx. 4—xxi. 17.

This consideration at once excludes Barnabas, whom some have supposed to be here meant;

Of those persons who are mentioned in Acts xx. 4, Sopater is also excluded, because he went with St. Paul as far as Asia only, and not to Jerusalem. Timothy also is excluded, because he is associated with St. Paul in writing this Epistle (i. 1), and could not have been sent with Titus.

There remain Aristarchus, Secundus, Gaius of Derbe, Tychicus, Trophimus, and St. Luke.

Of those just mentioned, only St. Luke appears to have been St. Paul's constant fellow-traveller to Jerusalem. Those others (he says) went before, and waited for us at Troas; and we sailed from Philippi to them to Troas. See Acts xx. 5.

It is evident also, from the perpetual recurrence of the words we and us in every stage of St. Paul's journey from Troas (Acts xx. 6) to Jerusalem (xxi. 17), that St. Luke was St. Paul's fellow-traveller from Corinth to that city.

It has been said with much confidence by some in recent times, that, in using the word Gospel, St. Paul does not here refer to any written Gospel, and particularly not to St. Luke's Gospel, which (they affirm) was not then written.

But, even although it be supposed for argument's sake, that St. Luke's Gospel had not as yet been written, yet they who believe that St. Paul wrote by divine inspiration, may be allowed to suppose that the holy Apostle's words were so ordered by the Holy Ghost that they might have afterwards a wider meaning, beyond the range of the immediate circumstances under which they were written.

We need not, therefore, despise the argument supplied, à posteriori, by the fact that St. Luke's praise was certainly, if not then, yet soon afterwards, and has ever since been, in all the Churches, by means of his written Gospel. And we need not disparage the application made of these words to St. Luke by ancient Christian writers such as Origen, Primasius, and S. Jerome (Epist. 50, ad Paulin.), "Actorum noverimus scriptorum Lucam esse medicum cujus laus est in Evangelio;" and again (in Ephes. c. 1), "Loquitur de Lucâ, cujus laus," &c.; and by the Church of England in her Collect for St. Luke's Day,—an application fully justified by the event.

The gifts which qualified St. Luke for writing the Gospel and the Acts had, it is probable, previously recommended him also for preaching the Gospel orally, especially to those persons, viz. the inhabitants of Macedonia and Achaia, of whom and to whom St. Paul is now writing.

The excellency of St. Luke's Greek style marked him out, à priori, for that purpose. And Church History points to St. Luke as having written his Gospel there. "Lucas, Medicus, discipulus Pauli Apostoli, in Achaiæ Bœotiæque partibus volumen condidit." Jerome (Cat. Ser. Ecc. c. 7).

διὰ πασῶν τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν [19] [m] οὐ μόνον δὲ, ἀλλὰ καὶ χειροτονηθεὶς ὑπὸ τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν συνέκδημος ἡμῶν, ἐν τῇ χάριτι ταύτῃ τῇ διακονουμένῃ ὑφ' ἡμῶν, πρὸς τὴν τοῦ Κυρίου δόξαν καὶ προθυμίαν ἡμῶν, [20] στελλόμενοι τοῦτο, μή τις m 1 Cor. 16. 3, 4. ch. 4. 15. ver. 9, 12—14. Phil. 4. 18, 19.

Thus we are brought to the question, Has it been proved that St. Paul does not refer here to a written Gospel, and consequently not to the Gospel of St. Luke?

Certainly not.

The words here are "the praise of whom (is) in the Gospel through all the Churches."

It is not easy to see, how the praise of any one, and particularly how the praise of any of those who were St. Paul's fellow-travellers to Jerusalem (whose names are supplied by the Acts), could be said to be through all the Churches by means of mere oral teaching;

The words seem plainly to point to some written document, circulated, like St. Paul's own Epistles at this time, by copies through the Churches, and probably read publicly in them, as those Epistles were, and as was the case with the Scriptures of the Old Testament.

Such a document as this, relating the acts and words and sufferings of Christ, would in all probability have been provided for the Churches of Asia and Greece, who would be very desirous to have such a History, and who were distinguished by their literary endowments and pursuits, and to whom St. Paul had now been preaching the Gospel for more than seven years.

See above on 1 Thess. i. 9.

As to the Gospel of St. Luke, we know from himself that it was written before the Acts (Acts i. 1. Luke i. 1), the composition of which, in all probability, was not later than A.D. 63, only four or five years after the date of this second Epistle to the Corinthians (see on Acts i. 1, and Introductory note to St. Luke's Gospel).

If, as Christian Antiquity believed, and as many reasons suggest, St. Paul refers to some one of the written Gospels here, when writing to the Churches of Achaia, it is most probable that he refers to that written by St. Luke.

That Gospel was specially designed for the use of the Greeks, and, as early testimonies affirm, was written in Greece, and under the superintendence of St. Paul (see the Introduction to it).

Supposing this to be so, we may next observe, that there is peculiar propriety in the fact, that St. Paul, the inspired Apostle of the Gentile Churches, here sets his Apostolic seal on that Gospel, the Gospel of St. Luke, which was specially designed for Gentile use.

Observe also, the person here mentioned by St. Paul was chosen and appointed by the suffrages of the Churches (ἐχειροτονήθη, v. 19) to be St. Paul's coadjutor in an important mission, and to convey the alms of the Gentile Churches to Jerusalem.

This incident confirms the supposition that the person in question was St. Luke.

He was St. Paul's intimate friend and companion. Who more likely than he to be associated with St. Paul?

The person in question was also well known, and highly esteemed by all the Churches for his labours in the Gospel, and he was chosen also for that reason.

If St. Luke's Gospel had been written and circulated, it would have commended him to the Churches for such a mission.

Here also we may, perhaps, recognize the reason for what Dr. Paley has noticed as surprising, viz. that the purpose for which St. Paul went to Jerusalem is never expressly mentioned in St. Luke's work, the Acts of the Apostles, but only comes out incidentally in the report there given of one of St. Paul's speeches. (Acts xxiv. 17.)

Probably St. Luke's own modesty restrained him from mentioning a circumstance which redounded so much to his own honour, lest he should be suspected of praising himself (Prov. xxvii. 2), who had been elected by the Churches to accompany the great Apostle in this embassy of love.

Another reason for supposing that St. Paul here refers to St. Luke is as follows:—

It is observable that St. Paul here mentions Titus by name.

Why does he not also mention by name this companion of Titus? Why does he not mention by name him, "whose praise is in the Gospel in all the Churches?"

May it not be, because he was St. Paul's fellow-traveller, and because he was already designated as the historian of his Acts, and because to praise such a person by name might have been inexpedient, as savouring too much of that spirit which eulogizes those from whom it expects to receive praise in return?

Certainly there was something more than accidental in the fact, that a person who was so constant an attendant on St. Paul, as St. Luke was, in his journeyings, voyages, and imprisonments, and who was chosen by the Holy Ghost to write the history—the only history—of his Acts, as well as one of the Gospels, has received so little notice by name from St. Paul in his fourteen Epistles. He is there mentioned only three times, and this merely in a very cursory way, Col. iv. 14. Philem. 24. 2 Tim. iv. 11.

What can be the reason of this silence?

None more probable, it seems, can be assigned, than that the Apostle would thus show, that the blessed Evangelist St. Luke acted, wrote, and suffered, with a higher aim than for praise, even from the lips of an Apostle, and that he whose praise is in the Gospel needeth no other praise; and that the Apostle would not expose himself to the imputation of having purchased the honourable record he has received from the Apostolic historian by panegyrizing the historian himself.

Such considerations as these may perhaps also throw some light on an interesting question which will have suggested itself to the student of St. Paul's history and writings;

Why a person so eminent as Titus was, as a fellow-worker of St. Paul, is never mentioned by name in the Acts of the Apostles by St. Luke?

Was there any relationship between them? Titus is seen first at Antioch (see Gal. ii. 1), which was probably the native place of St. Luke. He was a Hellenist (Gal. i. 3) perhaps of that City, and Titus was associated with St. Luke (if the above exposition be correct) in this work of charity for the poor Christians at Jerusalem.

Did St. Luke feel a delicacy in praising by name a person who seems to have been his co-trustee in this important and delicate matter of collecting and administering those pecuniary collections in Macedonia and Achaia? Or was Titus instrumental with St. Luke in composing and publishing the Acts of the Apostles? And did the same reasons which deterred St. Luke from mentioning his own name in the work of which he was the author, and which records events at which he was present, and in which he took a leading part, deter him from mentioning that of Titus also?

Doubtless, if the truth were now known, as it will be hereafter, the reason would be seen to be one alike honourable to St. Titus and St. Luke. Even now, knowing what we do of St. Titus from this and other Epistles of St. Paul, we may be sure that St. Luke's silence concerning him is the silence of respect and love.

Lastly, if the above reasonings are true, it is interesting and satisfactory to reflect that the writer of the Acts of the Apostles was not only connected by ties of personal friendship with St. Paul, the Apostle of the Gentiles, but that he was appointed by the suffrage of the Churches (v. 19) to be his fellow-traveller in that important mission to Jerusalem, which was the occasion of so many benefits to the Church, and led eventually to St. Paul's testimony to the Gospel at Rome; and that in reading the Acts of the Apostles, we read a History composed by one who received a public witness from the Churches, and who was set apart by their voice for intimate association with the Apostle whose history he relates.

19. χειροτονηθεὶς] See Acts xiv. 23, and Wetstein here.

— προθυμίαν ἡμῶν] our eager desire: that is, to have a colleague in the management of the pecuniary collection, for the reason which he proceeds to explain, lest any one should carp and cavil at us in this matter, as if we had personal interests of our own to serve, and in order that we might provide what is honourable in the sight of God and man.

Do not think, therefore, that we are jealous of the interference of others in this collection. We eagerly desired to have a Coadjutor; and one has been given us at our desire.

20. στελλόμενοι] shunning. The Metaphor is from navigation (see Gloss. Phrynich., ap. Wetstein, ἡ μεταφορὰ ἀπὸ τῶν ἱστίων, cp. Iliad, i. 433): shifting, furling, shortening, or reefing our sails, so as to avoid the injurious effects of a gale of calumny from suspicious men.

On St. Paul's use of nautical terms, particularly after a voyage and in addressing maritime people, as the Corinthians, see above on Acts xx. 20, ὑπεστειλάμην, and Gal. ii. 12.

— ἁδρότητι] abundance; said of a rich harvest or wealthy freight, as here. St. Paul compares himself to a mariner sailing with a rich cargo of spiritual merchandise and Christian beneficence toward Jerusalem; and he says that he so pilots the vessel, as to decline the winds of envious censure, to which, on account of the riches of his freight, he was exposed.

21. προνοούμενοι] So Eliz. and C, I, K, and Coptic, Gothic Versions, and Clem., Chrys., Theodoret, and Cursive MSS. Some MSS. (B, D, E, F, G) have προνοοῦμεν γὰρ, but this seems too direct an expression of self-commendation. The participle introduces the reason for a particular act in a delicate and modest manner. See LXX in Prov. iii. 4, whence the quotation is; and cp. Rom. xiii. 17, and S. Polycarp. ad Philipp. 6, προνοοῦντες ἀεὶ τὸ καλὸν ἐνώπιον Θεοῦ καὶ ἀνθρώπων.

22. τὸν ἀδελφὸν ἡμῶν] our brother. Perhaps Silas, ἀνὴρ ἡγούμενος ἐν τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς, who had been with St. Paul as his fellow-labourer at Corinth (Acts xviii. 5, and see Acts xv. 22. 27. 32. 34. 40; xvi. 19. 25. 29; xvii. 4. 10. 14. 2 Cor. i. 19), and had been associated with St. Paul in writing to the Macedonian Churches. (1 Thess. i. 1. 2 Thess. i. 1.)

23. ὑπὲρ Τίτου] concerning Titus. On this use of ὑπὲρ see 2 Cor. i. 6. 8. 2 Thess. ii. 1. Winer, p. 343.

— ἀπόστολοι ἐκκλησιῶν] envoys of Churches. "Sent by the Churches." (Chrys.) The word ἀπόστολοι, used here with a genitive, and that of a human society, and without an article, is not to be confounded with the words οἱ ἀπόστολοι, the Apostles (i. e. of Christ); nor does it give any countenance to the notion that the title of Apostle was given as a designation to others besides the Twelve, Matthias, Paul, and Barnabas. Cp. on Rom. xvi. 7.

CH. IX. 2. καυχῶμαι Μακεδόσιν] I am glorying to the Macedonians. Cp. v. 4. Therefore this Epistle was probably written from Macedonia. See Introduction.

— ἀπὸ πέρυσι] See viii. 10.

3. Ἔπεμψα] I send the brethren (mentioned viii. 17—22) with this Epistle. Ἔπεμψα is used as ἔγραψα, scripsi, I write; the reference being to the time when the letter would be read by the receiver, to whom the writing and the sending of it would be acts of past time. See Acts xxiii. 30. Above viii. 19. Phil. ii. 28. Philem. 12. Winer, p. 249.

4. ἐὰν—Μακεδόνες] if any Macedonians come with me on my visit to Corinth. It appears from Acts xx. 4 that Aristarchus and Secundus of Thessalonica were with him there.

— τῇ ὑποστάσει ταύτῃ] this firm reliance. See Wetstein here, and Heb. iii. 14. Eliz. adds τῆς καυχήσεως, which words are not found in B, C, D*, F, G, and are probably a gloss from xi. 17.

5. εὐλογίαν] εὐλογία = בְּרָכָה (beracah), and is used for it by LXX as:

(1) A blessing, Gen. xxvii. 12. 36. 38. 41. Cp. Gal. iii. 14. Eph. i. 3. Heb. vi. 7. James iii. 10. Rev. v. 12, 13;

(2) A thank-offering, a gift. Gen. xxxiii. 11, λάβε τὰς εὐλογίας μου. Josh. xv. 19, δός μοι εὐλογίαν.

As Theodoret observes here, St. Paul when speaking of offerings of beneficence in this discourse concerning alms, does not speak of them as gifts proceeding from one person to another, but rather as κοινωνίαν, communication of what belongs to many, and not only to the possessor (viii. 4; ix. 13. Cp. Heb. xiii. 16. Rom. xii. 13. Gal. vi. 6. Phil. iv. 15); and as a χάριν, grace, as something freely bestowed by God, like manna (cp. 1 Cor. xvi. 3. 2 Cor. viii. 15. 19; ix. 8. 14), in order to be freely and thankfully dispensed by men to others.

He also calls it εὐλογίαν, a word used by him in speaking of the Holy Communion (1 Cor. x. 16) as that in which men offer the eucharistic sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving, and on which they implore His blessing.

Thus, then, the Holy Spirit, speaking by the Apostle, represents Almsgiving not only as a duty necessarily following on the mutual communion of the members of Christ's body, but as a privilege; an act of eucharistic worship due to God, the sole Author and Fountain of all blessings and graces, spiritual and temporal; and therefore rather to be called a joyful effusion of benediction, than a painful effort of beneficence.

— μὴ ὡς πλεονεξίαν] Do not imagine that we desire to extort your alms from you as a benefit to ourselves, from which we expect to reap any worldly gain (ὡς πλεονεκτοῦντες, Chrys.), but rather we wish to procure thereby a blessing to you. Do not therefore give grudgingly, as those who are constrained to give, but give joyfully, as those who are receiving a blessing by giving one to others. (Chrys., Theoph.)

Cp. Phil. iv. 17, "Not that I desire a gift, but fruit that may abound to your account." And see below xii. 17, ἐπλεονέκτησα ὑμᾶς;

6, 7.] This text confirms the doctrine, that there will be different degrees of bliss and glory hereafter (see on Luke xix. 17. John xiv. 2, 3. 1 Cor. xv. 41, 42), as also of different degrees of punishment (see Matt. xi. 22. Luke xii. 47). Cp. Chrys. in 1 Cor. Hom. xli. S. Ambrose in Luc. vi. S. Aug. Enchir. c. 3, de Civ. Dei, ii. c. 3, and in Ps. cl.

The Apostle teaches, that we must all be made manifest before the Judgment Seat of Christ; and lest you should say that we shall be so made manifest, in order that the good may receive good things in equal degrees one with another, and the bad may receive evil things, he adds, in the same Epistle, that he who soweth in blessings will reap in blessings, and he that soweth sparingly will reap sparingly; and though both reap, yet their harvest will differ in measure and quantity. Jerome (c. Jovin. ii. tom. vi. pt. 2, p. 217).

From the measure, which is according to the subject of sin, there are, in that eternity of punishment, varieties, whereby may be gathered a rule much built upon in Holy Scripture,—that degrees of wickedness have answerable degrees in the weight of their endless punishment. God is not wanting to the world in any necessary thing for the attainment of eternal life, though many things be necessary now, which, according to our first condition, we needed not. He bestoweth now eternal life as His own free and undeserved gift, together also with that general inheritance and lot of eternal life, great varieties of rewards proportioned to the very degrees of those labours, which to perform He Himself by His grace enableth. Hooker, book v. Appendix, No. i. p. 722. Cp. E. P. II. viii. 4. See also Bp. Bull, Sermon i. p. 168.

6. ὁ σπείρων ἐπ' εὐλογίαις] He that soweth with blessings from himself will reap with blessings from God. Ἐπί = on or at, as the moving principle and accompaniment. See vii. 13; ix. 13. 1 Cor. xiv. 16; xvi. 17.

Almsgiving is spiritual husbandry, which returns a rich harvest to the husbandman. Sow thankfully in alms, and you will reap joyfully in blessing. Cp. Gal. vi. 7.

7. προῄρηται] has purposed. So B, C, F, G. Elz. προαιρεῖται. The perfect tense is preferable. St. Paul charitably supposes that the Corinthians have already made up their minds to give liberally.

— ἱλαρὸν δότην] a cheerful giver. Cp. Prov. xxii. 8, ὁ σπείρων φαῦλα θερίσει κακά . . . ἄνδρα ἱλαρὸν καὶ δότην εὐλογεῖ ὁ Θεός.

9. καθὼς γέγραπται] Ps. cxii. 9. See Dr. Barrow's Spital Sermon on this text (Serm. xxxi. Vol. ii. p. 136—206), which has almost exhausted the subject on which it treats—"The Duty and Reward of Bounty to the Poor." See particularly there, p. 194, 195.

— Ἐσκόρπισεν] He winnowed out, and gave of His winnowings to the poor. St. Paul keeps up the metaphor of the husbandman. He sows in alms, and reaps a rich harvest. He winnows his harvest, and gives thereof to the poor. See on Matt. xxv. 24.

10. χορηγήσει—πληθυνεῖ—αὐξήσει] So the best MSS.—Elz. has χορηγήσαι κ.τ.λ. in the optative mood.

On the sense of χορηγέω,—properly said of a wealthy person supplying the requisite funds for the equipment and training of a tragic χορός,—see the authorities in Wetstein here.

— γενήματα] Luke xii. 18.

— δικαιοσύνης] See Matt. vi. 1.

11. πλουτιζόμενοι] A nominativus pendens evolved from the preceding words. Cp. Rom. xii. 9. Heb. xiii. 5. Eph. iv. 2. Col. iii. 16. So δοξάζοντες, v. 13. Cp. Winer, p. 505.

13. διὰ τῆς δοκιμῆς] through the proof. Cp. viii. 2, and viii. 8, and Winer, p. 340.

— δοξάζοντες] The nominative is evolved from πολλῶν εὐχαριστιῶν, others glorify God, and give Him thanks by means of and through the proof, &c. See note on v. 11.

The sense is, Do not suppose that the only benefit of this collection will be that thus relief will be provided for the necessities of the Saints. No; glory will thence redound to God. All who see how you have received the Gospel, and have submitted yourselves to the Lord, and how you have proved your Christian love by aid to your poorer brethren at a distance, and to all men, will praise God, Who is the Author of all the graces seen in your acts. You also will receive the fruit of prayers offered on your behalf. Blessed therefore be God for His unspeakable gift. Theodoret.

— ἁπλότητι] See above, viii. 2, and below, Rom. xii. 8.

The word ἁπλότης denotes specially that disinterested candour, and unambitious simplicity, and genuine openness of heart and hand which God specially loves in those who give alms. Cp. Loesner, p. 262, citing examples from Philo on this usage, who combines the word with ἀκακία, Opif. 36 B, 39 C.

14. αὐτῶν δεήσει] glorifying God on account of the prayer of them (the recipients of your alms) on your behalf, who long after you, by reason of the exceeding grace of God, shed upon you. This is another occasion of glory to God.

CH. X. 1. παρακαλῶ διά] I exhort you by Christ's gentleness, as the instrument and means through which I would move you. Cp. Rom. xii. 1; xv. 30. 1 Cor. i. 10.

— κατὰ πρόσωπον μὲν ταπεινός] who when present am mean among you, but when absent am bold towards you. The Apostle here quotes the language of his adversaries, who thus disparaged his personal appearance. Cp. vv. 7 and 10. See Nicephor. H. E. ii. 37. Joh. Malelas, Chron. x. p. 257, on the traditions concerning St. Paul's stature and personal presence; and Chrys., Vol. v. p. 992, ὁ τρίπηχυς ἄνθρωπος.

Κατὰ πρόσωπον, face to face, is opposed to ἀπὼν here, as in Acts iii. 13; xxv. 16. On the word ταπεινὸς see below, Rom. xii. 16.

2. Δέομαι δὲ, τὸ μὴ παρὼν θαρρῆσαι] I pray you (to take care) that I may not, when present, be bold. Chrys. Winer, p. 288.

— λογίζομαι] I reckon.

— ἐπί τινας τοὺς λ.] against certain persons,—namely, those that reckon, &c. St. Paul in these two Epistles always spares the names of his opponents and accusers. See above, 1 Cor. iv. 18.

— κατὰ σάρκα] according to the flesh; opposed to κατὰ Πνεῦμα, according to the Spirit. See v. 16. Hence Justin Martyr, p. 497, ἐν σαρκὶ τυγχάνουσιν, ἀλλ' οὐ κατὰ σάρκα ζῶσιν.

4. τὰ γὰρ ὅπλα] Another use of metaphors from military life, by means of which he had described the martial struggles, and victorious successes, of the Christian Ministry. See on ii. 14—16; iv. 1—17.

The Armies of Imperial Rome, her Camps, and her campaigns, her legionary organization and discipline; her forts and citadels, military roads and bridges, trophies, triumphal processions, triumphal arches, triumphal columns,—objects which presented themselves to St. Paul in his travels through the Roman empire, and were very familiar to his readers, supply the Apostle with imagery which is consecrated and christianized by him, and is made subservient to describe the conflicts and conquests of the Cross.

— δυνατὰ τῷ Θεῷ] though foolishness to the world, yet they are strong to God. Weak though they may be man-ward, yet powerful they are God-ward: for whatever we bind on earth is bound in heaven (Matt. xvi. 19; xviii. 18); whatsoever the Ministers of Christ do lawfully in His Name, and by His Authority, is ratified by His Omnipotence.

Whether they remit or retain sins, whatsoever is done by way of orderly and lawful proceeding, the Lord Himself hath promised to ratify. Hooker, VI. iv. 2. Other similar passages may be seen in Theoph. Anglican. chap. xiii. xiv.

The dative τῷ Θεῷ, God-ward, is here used as in Acts vii. 20, ἀστεῖος τῷ Θεῷ. Cp. Winer, p. 221.

9. Ἵνα μ. δ. ὡς ἂν ἐκφοβεῖν] that I may not seem as it were to terrify you by letters. Ἄν softens the word ἐκφοβεῖν, as tanquam and quasi in Latin.

This is the only passage in the New Testament where ἄν is used with an Infinitive, as in classical Greek it often is. Cp. Matth. G. G. 597. Ἄν is very rarely used in the New Testament with the Optative after Conjunctions and Relatives, but ἐάν takes its place. Cp. Winer, p. 277.

On the rare use of ἄν in the Septuagint, even with the Aorist Indicative, see above on Luke xvii. 6.

— διὰ τῶν ἐπιστολῶν] by my letters.

10. φησί] one says,—as inquit and ait in Latin. Any one says, whom the writer does not care to specify by name. Horat. Sat. I. i. 62, "Nil satis est, inquit." Heindorf, p. 146. So φησί is used indefinitely, as here, in the best Greek Authors. Wolf ad Demosth. Lept. p. 288; and in LXX, Sirach xv. 12. Winer, p. 462. As was before observed, St. Paul never mentions his accusers by name in these Epistles.

12. ἐγκρῖναι] to approve: a metaphor from the athletic games, in which they who were admitted to be competitors for the prize were said ἐγ-κρίνεσθαι, and they who were rejected were said ἐκ-κρίνεσθαι. See Aristid. Panath. p. 109, and Wetstein here.

— συγκρῖναι] to compare. 1 Cor. ii. 13.

— ἐν ἑαυτοῖς ἑαυτοὺς μετροῦντες] Something more than ἑαυτοῖς simply. The ἐν marks that the measurement was confined within themselves, instead of its being extended to others beyond and without (ἔξω) themselves.

But we do not measure ourselves at all, but labour in the field which God has measured out for us. Cp. Horat. Sat. II. ii. 114:

"Videas metato in agello
. . . . . fortem mercede colonum."

13. κατὰ τὸ μέτρον κ.τ.λ.] According to the measure of our rule or line (see preceding note), which God assigned to us as a measure to reach even to you. Cp. Rom. xii. 3, ἑκάστῳ ὡς ὁ Θεὸς ἐμέρισε μέτρον πίστεως.

Almighty God marked out to St. Paul his duty, not only in direction, but also in extent. He was not to deviate from its direction, nor to exceed its extent.

God's will to him was not only a κανὼν, but a μέτρον,—a κανὼν in direction, and a μέτρον in extension.

The Apostle therefore says, we boast according to the μέτρον or extent of the κανὼν, or rule of direction, which God allotted to us (not we assigned to ourselves), as a measure to extend even to you. The κανὼν marked out our direction towards you, the μέτρον was our commission of extension to you.

A salutary lesson to all Christians, not to swerve from, nor go beyond, their line of duty; not to deviate from its direction by intruding into other men's duties, so as to become ἀλλοτριο-επίσκοποι (1 Pet. iv. 15), nor yet to fall short of the point to which God has appointed them to reach.

A warning also to Churches, not to usurp and invade the spiritual provinces assigned to others.

The metaphor here (say Chrys. and Theophyl.) is either from a vineyard, which a landlord measures out to be cultivated by his labourers, or from a territory, which a king assigns to the generals of his forces, to be subdued by them.

God has allotted the world to His Apostles and their successors, to be conquered by them as soldiers for Christ, and to be tilled by them as His husbandmen.

It is observable, that the Psalmist (Ps. xix. 4, explained by Rom. x. 18) speaks of the line of the Preachers of the Gospel as extending, like that of the Natural Elements themselves, to the ends of the earth. Their Line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world. And it is probable that the Apostle refers here to the Psalmist's words. Cp. Rom. x. 18.

St. Paul's μέτρον of extension is described by himself in Gal. ii. 8, 9. Rom. i. 14; and God interfered from time to time, by special revelation, to declare His κανόνα of direction. See Acts xvi. 6. 9, 10.

— κανόνος] (1) Rule, from קָנֶה, kaneh (Ezek. xl. 5), κάννα, κανών. Latin canna (reed). Engl. cane, a measuring rod or rule.

Hence the Canon of Scripture; which is, as it were, put into the hands of the Church by the Holy Spirit, Who wrote the Canonical Books of Holy Scripture, as the Rule by which all Doctrines are to be measured. Cp. 1 Pet. iv. 11, and the authorities cited in the Editor's Lectures on the Canon of Scripture, p. 6.

The word is used by St. Paul here and Gal. vi. 16. Phil. iii. 16.

(2) κανὼν also is used for the line which marks a special allotment of labour and assignment of territory, and the course along which a person was to run; hence it was an athletic term. See Jul. Pollux, iii. 151, τὸ μέτρον τοῦ πηδήματος κανών.

Consequently, κανὼν came to signify a state of life, a τάγμα, a λειτουργία, function or ministry. Thus S. Clement, in his Epistle to the Corinthians, 41: ἕκαστος ἐν τῷ ἰδιῳ τάγματι εὐχαριστείτω τῷ Θεῷ, μὴ παρεκβαίνων τὸν ὡρισμένον τῆς λειτουργίας αὐτοῦ κανόνα.

This appears to be its sense here. And St. Paul himself explains it by his expression στοιχεῖν κανόνι (Gal. vi. 16. Phil. iii. 16; and see here, vv. 15 and 16), to walk by a line measured and marked out as a guide; in which sense, the line itself may be called a regula, or rule.

14. οὐ γὰρ ὡς μὴ κ.τ.λ.] for we are not overstretching ourselves, as if we were not reaching unto you. We are not straining ourselves by an unnatural effort (as it were) to grasp at you, as if you were not within our arm's length. For (he adds) we arrived at you, we did attain to you (ἐφθάσαμεν) in our appointed range of preaching the Gospel. On the difference between οὐ and μὴ here, cp. 1 Cor. ix. 26. Winer, p. 421.

— ἐφθάσαμεν] we arrived. Luke xi. 20. Rom. ix. 3. Phil. iii. 16. St. Paul might well say this, for he had been at Corinth, and had preached the Gospel there for a year and six months with great success. Acts xviii. 11.

15. ἐν ὑμῖν μεγαλυνθῆναι] to grow in, by, and with your growth.

17. Ὁ δὲ καυχώμενος] 1 Cor. i. 31.

18. οὐ γάρ] αὐτεπαινέτους μισεῖ Θεός. Clemens Rom. c. 30.

— συνιστάνων] So B, D, E, F, G.—Eliz. συνιστῶν. The form συνιστάνοντες may probably be the correct one in iv. 2; vi. 4. Cp. iii. 1, and above, v. 12.

CH. XI. 1. Ὄφελον] 1 Cor. iv. 8. Winer, p. 270.

— μικρόν τι ἀφροσύνης] Would that ye had borne with me in a little folly! "Modicum quid insipientiæ." (Vulg.) So B, D, E, and Lach., Tisch., Meyer, Alf. Eliz. inserts τῆς before ἀφροσύνης, which would give the sense "my folly," which is less suitable here. Cp. v. 16, μικρόν τι καυχήσωμαι.

2. Ζηλῶ γὰρ ὑμᾶς Θεοῦ ζήλῳ] I am jealous over you, and zealous for you, with a godly jealousy and zeal. See above on Gal. iv. 17, 18, which affords the best comment on this passage.

— ἡρμοσάμην] I betrothed you: when I preached to you at Corinth. Prov. xix. 14, παρὰ Κυρίου ἁρμόζεται γυνὴ ἀνδρί. Do not suppose that because I speak of jealousy, I wish to have myself regarded by you as the Bridegroom. No, I am only the paranymph. I have not sought you for myself, but I have brought you as a bride to Christ. "He that hath the bride is the Bridegroom—Christ—and He alone" (John iii. 29).

On this use of ἁρμόζομαι in the Middle Voice, see Loesner, p. 321.

— ὑμᾶς—παρθένον ἁγνήν] The Church is like the blessed Mary, a Virgin and a Mother. S. Aug., Serm. i. de Verb. Dom., "Ecclesiæ concessit Christus in Spiritu, quod Mater Ejus habuit in corpore, ut et Mater et Virgo sit." Serm. 16, de Temp., "Ecclesia Mater est visceribus charitatis, Virgo integritate fidei." S. Ambrose ad Ev. S. Luc. xv. 18, "Vir Christus est, Uxor Ecclesia; caritate Uxor, integritate Virgo."

And such is the duty of each Christian soul, espoused to Christ in baptism, and pledged to be true to Him in purity of faith and holiness of life, in hope of being admitted to share in the future bliss of the Bride glorified in heaven.

As Aug. says (Serm. 93), "In corde omnes virginitatem habere debent," and he compares the Christian soul to the wise Virgins in Matt. xxv. 1—13, where see note; and (in Johann. Tract. 13), "Virginitas mentis est integra fides, solida spes, sincera charitas."

— ἑνὶ ἀνδρί] to one husband. Christianity is the Marriage of the soul to Christ, as the single object of affection, expressed in v. 3 by ἁπλότης, and distinguished from the spiritual polygamy of Heathenism, and the spiritual fornication of Heresy.

3. φοβοῦμαι δὲ, μήπως, ὡς ὁ ὄφις ἐξηπάτησεν Εὔαν] A clear assertion of the reality of the appearance of Satan in the form of a serpent to Eve in Paradise. Cp. Rev. xx. 2, τὸν ὄφιν τὸν ἀρχαῖον, ὅς ἐστι διάβολος.

As Adam was a type of Christ, so Eve, the spouse of Adam, and "the mother of all living," was a type of Christ's Church. As Eve was taken from the side of Adam when asleep, so the Church was formed from the side of Christ on the Cross. As Eve was united to Adam by God, so the Church to Christ. And as the Devil tempted Eve, so he tempts the Church. Compare what St. John reveals in the Apocalypse (xii. 9—15), of the serpent's rage against the woman (i. e. the Church) in the wilderness.

— ἐξηπάτησεν] deceived. Compare the teaching in 1 Tim. ii. 14.

St. Paul dwells mainly on the subtlety of this false teacher; he describes him as πανοῦργος, as a δόλιος ἐργάτης (v. 13), disguised as an Angel of light.

It appears, then, that this false teacher did not openly impugn the Apostle's doctrine (cp. v. 4), but attempted surreptitiously to supplant his authority.

— τῆς ἁπλότητος] the singleness of your love, and reverence, and devotion to Christ as your one husband.

— καὶ τ. ἁγνότητος] Not in Eliz., but in B, D, E, F, G.—D, E place τῆς ἁγνότητος first. Cp. 2 Cor. i. 12, where ἁγιότητι and ἁπλότητι are interchanged in the MSS. by reason of their similarity (ΑΠΛΟΤΗΤΙ and ΑΓΙΟΤΗΤΙ), which probably occasioned the omission of one of the two substantives here. Ἁγνότητος has a special reference to παρθένος ἁγνὴ in v. 2.

4. Εἰ μὲν γὰρ ὁ ἐρχόμενος] There is a severe censure in these words, which is carefully to be noted. Ὁ ἐρχόμενος is he who cometh: i. e. who is not sent with a regular ordination and mission. This is the true character of an unauthorized Teacher, such as St. Paul here describes; and is the term which our Lord Himself had used in this sense in the Gospel where He says that all who came before Him were thieves and robbers. See note on John x. 8.

Hence ὁ ἐρχόμενος here, the teacher who sends himself, is contrasted with the Apostle who is sent by another, namely, by Christ. And therefore St. Paul, speaking of himself here, as distinguished from this self-sent comer, who would have supplanted him (v. 5), says, "I reckon that I was in no respect behind the chiefest Apostles." See also on xii. 12, "Truly the signs of the Apostle were wrought by me among you in miracles and mighty works;" where ὁ ἀπόστολος is opposed to ὁ ἐρχόμενος.

γὰρ—ἀποστόλων] You might well have tolerated him, if he is able to reveal to you another, or second, Jesus (ἄλλον, not ἕτερον: see above on Gal. i. 7), an additional Saviour (cp. John xiv. 16, ἄλλον παράκλητον), besides the Jesus who was preached to you by me. And you might reasonably have borne with your new self-sent instructor, if you are now receiving (λαμβάνετε) from him a different Spirit (ἕτερον) from that Holy Ghost Who has been bestowed upon you by me. And you might well have borne with him, if you yourselves are accepting (δέχεσθε) a different Gospel from that which you accepted at my hands.

That is,—If my Apostleship to you had been defective (εἰ ὑστέρησεν) either in the terms of salvation which I preached to you in Jesus my Saviour, or in the supplies of the Holy Spirit which were dispensed to you by me in my Gospel, and by the effusion of grace in the Sacraments and laying on of hands administered by me,—if, in a word, I, your Apostle, had failed in my Apostolic work; and if this self-sent comer is able to supply my failings, and to make you abound more largely in spiritual wealth (πλουσιωτέρους ὑμᾶς ποιεῖ κατὰ χάριν, Chrys.), then, indeed, you might well have borne with him.

But none of these suppositions can be admitted; for, I reckon that I have not fallen short in any respect of the very chiefest Apostles (cp. xii. 11), and this my Apostolic power was made manifest among you in all things (v. 6), and the signs of the Apostle (the sent ambassador of Christ, contrasted with the self-ordained comer, ὁ ἐρχόμενος) were wrought among you in miracles and mighty works (xii. 12).

Observe, that this false teacher to whom St. Paul alludes, does not appear to have ventured to censure the Apostle's teaching; but only to have insinuated certain objections against the mere externals of St. Paul's ministry; such as his personal appearance, his address, his utterance, his not taking wages of the Corinthians (v. 6, 7); and, on such pleas as these, to have set himself up as a rival to the Apostle.

Here, then, is a warning against those, who say in fair speeches, and with a flattering semblance of friendship, that they have no objections to make against the Doctrines of the Church, and yet separate themselves from her Communion; and perhaps obtrude themselves as rival Teachers against her lawfully sent and ordained Ministers, or abet those who are guilty of doing so. Their case is one of Schism—simple and formal Schism—and is condemned here by the Apostle, and in his former Epistle, 1 Cor. iii. 15.

6. ἰδιώτης τῷ λόγῳ] untutored in speech, no professional rhetorician. Cp. 1 Cor. xiv. 16, and Acts iv. 13, on the proper signification of ἰδιώτης.

S. Augustine (de Doctr. Christ. iv. 7) supposes that St. Paul is only adopting the language of his accusers here; for (says Aug.) the Apostle was not, nor could he allow himself to be rude in speech ("imperitus sermone"), his eloquence being unrivalled.

This is true; but ἰδιώτης τῷ λόγῳ does not mean one who is not eloquent as a speaker, but one who has not learnt eloquence by the rules of rhetorical Schools: and in this sense the Apostle was ἰδιώτης τῷ λόγῳ, at the same time that he surpassed in eloquence all who had been trained in the schools of human Oratory.

— οὐ τῇ γνώσει] not in knowledge. What matters it, then, as to my speech? What am I the worse, even if I be not tutored by your Greek Teachers? What is the use of a key of gold, if it cannot unlock the treasures of divine Knowledge? what is the harm in a key of wood, if it can open them? Aug. (Sent. 266 ap. A Lapide.)

7. δωρεὰν—εὐηγγελισάμην] I preached gratuitously. I waived my right to ministerial wages from you. This was done for your spiritual edification (see 1 Cor. ix. 4—12); and yet even this is now turned as an argument against me, as if I had no confidence in my own claim to maintenance from those who were taught by me! Cp. 1 Cor. ix. 9.

9. καὶ ὑστερηθείς] and being reduced to want, I—your Apostle—who had not been a whit lacking in my spiritual gifts to you (v. 5), even I was allowed by you to lack in your carnal dues to me!

— οὐ κατενάρκησα] A word full of meaning, for which it is not possible to find an equivalent in English;

The metaphor is from the fish νάρκη, or torpedo, which attaches itself to other creatures, and produces torpor in that to which it attaches itself, and then endeavours to derive nourishment from it. See Athen. vii. p. 314, C, νάρκη θηρεύει εἰς τροφὴν ἑαυτῆς τὰ ἰχθύδια, προσαπτομένη καὶ ναρκᾶν ποιοῦσα.

Hence Hesych. κατέναρκησα = κατεβάρυνα. Cp. below, xii. 14, where the word is repeated.

I was not like a torpedo to any among you; I did not attach myself to any for the purpose of first rendering him torpid by my touch, and then sucking nourishment from him, and preying upon him.

This might be truly said of False Teachers, who attach themselves to the unwary, and beguile them into a state of lethargy and swoon-like trance (which they call faith) with the spiritual narcotics of their delusive doctrines; and then, having spoiled them of their Reason and their Conscience, make them their victims, and prey upon them.

Too many in the present age may know by painful experience what this spiritual κατανάρκησις is.

— τὸ γὰρ ὑστέρημα—Μακεδονίας] See this allusion to the supply of St. Paul's wants at Corinth by the brethren (Silas and Timothy) coming to him with gifts from the Churches of Macedonia, explained in the history of his visit to Corinth in the Acts of the Apostles xviii. 3—5, and notes there.

10. οὐ φραγήσεται] This glorying of mine shall not be obstructed, as by a φραγμὸς or fence. St. Paul uses the expression φράττειν στόμα, to stop the opening of the mouth as by a hedge, Rom. iii. 19. Heb. xi. 33.

The introduction of this figure of a φραγμὸς, or work of defence, thrown across an outlet to block it up, and to prevent the ingress of something from without, which endeavours to enter it, and the application of this metaphor to the regions of Achaia, may perhaps have been suggested to St. Paul by the frequent endeavours to obstruct the passage of the Isthmus of Corinth, in order to prevent aggressions from the North.

Nothing can be more obvious and natural than the project of erecting works of defence across the Isthmus for the protection of the Peninsula ("the regions of Achaia") . . . so we find that this operation is often alluded to in ancient History. See Herod. viii. 71. Diodor. Sic. xv. 68. Xenophon (Hell. vii. 1). Col. Leake (Morea iii. 297).

Some foundations of this Isthmian wall still remain, which was a work of the Corinthians, and a part of that system for defending the Corinthia which the position of Corinth naturally suggested. Leake (iii. 304).

St. Paul is writing from the North of the Isthmus—from Macedonia. He has told the Corinthians that the line of his spiritual Province reaches to Corinth (x. 14), and he now adds that no obstructions of theirs can exclude and fence him off from displaying his power, and from glorying in Christ, "in the regions of Achaia."

12. ἐκκόψω τὴν ἀφορμήν] I will cut off the means of attack. Another military metaphor. These false teachers among you perhaps think to block up my entrance to you at Corinth, as if I were an invader and an enemy.

But my stratagem—which they think to defeat—will have the effect, as it was designed to have, of cutting off their ἀφορμὴν, or sallying-place, from the stronghold in which they have fenced themselves, and from which they think to attack me.

— ἵνα—εὑρεθῶσι καθὼς καὶ ἡμεῖς] in order that they may be found even as we. Let it not be supposed that St. Paul indulges any vindictive feeling against his adversaries. No: in his Christian charity, he wishes that God may turn their hearts, and that they may be brought to the same temper of mind as himself: and that they may cease to vaunt themselves against him, and be found to be as he is, in what they glory; that is, that they may not glory in themselves, but in the Lord, as he does, and may do all for the glory of God. 1 Cor. i. 31. 2 Cor. x. 17, "Let him that glorieth glory in the Lord." Cp. 2 Thess. i. 4. Gal. vi. 14. 2 Cor. xi. 30; xii. 9.

Compare his charitable speech when in bonds at Cæsarea, "I would to God that all who hear me this day, might become such as I also am this day, save these bonds" (Acts xxvi. 29).

Our Blessed Lord had set the example of endeavouring to cut off occasion for indulging evil passions, and of removing stumbling-blocks from the way of His bitterest enemies, and of winning them over (if they would be won) by love and wisdom, to Himself.

It is hardly necessary to observe, that St. Paul cannot mean, that wherein the false teachers glory in preaching the Gospel freely, they may be found even as we; for their objection to him was that he did not venture to claim wages; and they did not preach without reward. See v. 20. 1 Cor. ix. 12.

14. αὐτὸς γὰρ ὁ Σατανᾶς] See Mede's Essay, Works, p. 225; Bp. Sanderson, i. p. 244; note above on Matt. vii. 16. 20; and Dr. South's Sermon, preached before the University of Oxford, on this text, and applying it to the History of the Christian Church, and to that of the Church of England (Sermons, iii. p. 450—495, and inserted in Christian Institutes, iv. p. 1—35).

16. κἂν ὡς ἄφρονα δ. μ.] Receive me—even though you receive me (καὶ ἐὰν δέξησθέ με) as a fool. Cp. Mark vi. 56. Acts v. 15. Winer, Meyer.

17. Ὃ λαλῶ, οὐ κατὰ Κύριον λαλῶ] What I am now saying, I am not saying according to the Lord; that is, not according to the Lord, but by constraint from you, who extort these words of glorying from me.

Yet he does not thereby deny his own Inspiration in what he now writes, as has been alleged by some.

The case of self-praise is like that of some other things uttered by the tongue, which are not in themselves according to the Lord (κατὰ Κύριον), but are even from the Evil One (ἐκ τοῦ πονηροῦ). They owe their origin to men's bad passions, and to their strifes and differences. But yet they are, under certain circumstances, expedient and necessary, and are even conducive to the glory of God.

Such particularly are Oaths, as Christ Himself and His Apostles teach. And therefore God Himself does not refuse to confirm His promises by an oath (Heb. vi. 16, 17), and He authorizes and prompts holy men, on fit occasions, to swear. See above on Matt. v. 34.

So self-praise. It is ἐκ τοῦ πονηροῦ. But, like an oath, it may, under certain circumstances, on account of the bad passions and jealous calumnies of men, become expedient and necessary, especially for those, who, like St. Paul, have the public duties of a sacred ministry to discharge, and whose character cannot be disparaged without injury to God and the Church, whose Ministers they are.

And it is not unworthy of remark, that St. Paul concludes this vehement burst of self-collaudation with a solemn oath. See below on v. 31.

Self-praise in the mouth of St. Paul is like the sword of the Philistines in the hands of David,—a suitable instrument for destroying the enemies of God.

As Bp. Sanderson observes (i. 119) on this case of St. Paul, "Your undervaluing of me (your Apostle) to the great prejudice of the Gospel, but advantage of false teachers, hath made that glorying now necessary, which had been otherwise but vanity and folly."

It was therefore a function worthy of that Divine Spirit Who inspired the Apostle in writing this Epistle for the edification of the Church in every age, to direct him in this difficult task of vindicating himself. Cp. Lee on Inspiration, Lect. vi. pp. 297, 298.

Consequently, St. Paul distinctly asserts here that he is not to be regarded as ἄφρων, v. 16. Let no man think me a fool, he says, but if you do think me so, receive me as such, that I also may boast a little. Cp. xii. 6.

Indeed, we may magnify God's goodness in thus overruling evil for good, so as to make evil itself ministerial to His glory.

If the Evil Spirit had not tempted his emissaries at Corinth to array themselves as angels of Light (vv. 14, 15), and to set themselves up as rivals of St. Paul, and to disparage his authority, and to depreciate his acts, the Church of Christ would never have possessed this and the following chapters of this Epistle, and would never have known what it now does of the triumphs of divine Grace working in the heroic actions, and patient sufferings, and glorious revelations, of St. Paul.

Even now it must be remembered, that this self-vindication falls short of all that could be said on this point.

Much more of Apostolic labour is to be added to this record, written about ten years before his martyrdom. But from what is recorded, the rest may be inferred; and that may well be reserved for the Revelation of the Great Day.

18. κατὰ τὴν σάρκα] A stronger expression than κατὰ σάρκα. They not only glory κατὰ σάρκα, but κατὰ τὴν σάρκα, according to their flesh, i. e. their carnal and external advantages.

19. ἀνέχεσθε κ.τ.λ.] φρόνιμοι ἡδέως μωρῶν ἀνέχῃ. Theophil. Antioch. (ad Autol. iii. p. 119).

20. λαμβάνει] takes wages. See v. 8, ἄλλας ἐκκλησίας ἐσύλησα λαβὼν ὀψώνιον. And so Chrys. And though this was not an act of violence, yet, as it was a permanent charge, the payment of such wages might well be noted as a proof of ἀνοχὴ on the part of the Corinthians with respect to others, especially when they did not give such a regular maintenance to St. Paul. See also this use of λαμβάνειν in connexion with μισθὸν, 1 Cor. iii. 8; and applied to tithes, Heb. vii. 8, 9. 15; and λῆψις, Phil. iv. 15. Cp. also 3 John 7, μηδὲν λαμβάνοντες (taking no wages for ministerial service) ἀπὸ τῶν ἐθνικῶν. See above, note on 1 Cor. ix. 6, in illustration of the fact that such payment would be regarded as a burden by the Corinthians, and other Gentile Christians.

— εἰς πρόσωπον—δέρει] smites you on the face, as an insult (Matt. v. 39. Luke xxii. 64. Acts xxiii. 2. 1 Cor. iv. 11. 1 Tim. iii. 3), and, perhaps, fanatically, with a pretence of divine enthusiasm and prophetic zeal. Cp. 1 Kings xxii. 24. Neh. xiii. 25. Isa. lviii. 4. Bengel.

21. Κατὰ ἀτιμίαν λέγω, ὡς ὅτι ἠ. ἠ.] I am speaking this with reference to dishonour to which I have been subjected by some among you. Cp. vi. 8, διὰ δόξης καὶ ἀτιμίας. On this use of κατὰ, see Phil. iv. 11, οὐχ ὅτι καθ' ὑστέρησιν λέγω. Acts iii. 17. I am pleading apologetically, as one who would defend himself from ignominy. I am entreating you to bear with me, as if I were a burden to you! I am thus debasing myself, as if it were true that I were feeble; whereas the fact is, the weapons that we wield are mighty (x. 4), and we can do all things through Him Who strengtheneth us (xii. 6. Phil. iv. 13).

But let me now change my tone,—If any one is bold, I am bold also.

22. Ἑβραῖοι] Acts vi. 1. Phil. iii. 5.

23. ἐν κόποις] This is the subject of my glorying. Not the earthly advantages which I had enjoyed, but the sufferings which I endured.

On St. Paul's actions and sufferings, as recorded in these verses, see the eloquent passages in Greg. Nazian. Orat. ii. p. 38—40.

24. παρὰ μίαν] save one. See Deut. xxv. 3. Josephus, Ant. iv. 8, speaks of πληγὰς μιᾶς λειπούσης τεσσαράκοντα. See also the Rabbinical Authorities in Wetstein's note here, on the scrupulous care of the Jews in this matter.

On the penal discipline exercised among the Jews by scourging in the Synagogue, see on Acts xxvi. 11. Cp. Acts xxii. 19, δέρων κατὰ τὰς συναγωγάς. And cp. Matt. xxiii. 34, μαστιγώσετε ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς ὑμῶν.

On the use of παρὰ here, cp. Winer, p. 360.

25. ἐρραβδίσθην] i. e. by heathen Magistrates, as at Philippi. (Acts xvi. 22.)

— ἅπαξ ἐλιθάσθην] at Lystra. (Acts xiv. 19.) He had been almost stoned at Iconium. (Acts xiv. 5.)

It is observable—

(1) That of these sufferings, viz. beating with rods, stoning, shipwreck, which were endured by St. Paul within the period contained in the Acts of the Apostles, the greater number are not mentioned in that History by St. Luke.

And (2) that the History of St. Luke itself concludes about five years before St. Paul's Martyrdom, and therefore leaves a large portion of his sufferings altogether unnoticed.

But (3) that St. Luke gives a record of one beating with rods (Acts xvi. 22), of one stoning (Acts xiv. 19), and of one shipwreck, suffered by St. Paul (Acts xxvii. 41).

This is according to the plan of that History (as is observed above in the Introduction to that Book, p. xii), viz. to present the world with specimens of what was done and suffered by one or two Apostles as specimens of the Apostolic body, and to leave the rest to be inferred from those one or two cases.

— νυχθήμερον—πεποίηκα] I have passed a night and a day in the deep, i. e. the deep water, with no rest for the sole of my feet (on the ground) for that time. That this is the natural interpretation (which is given by Chrys., Theophyl., and others) seems clear, especially from the connexion of the words with what precedes, ἐναυάγησα. I suffered shipwreck thrice, and on one occasion, after being wrecked, did not reach the land for a night and a day, but remained in the deep water swimming and tossed by the waves for that time.

Observe the use of the perfect here, and compare above, vii. 5.

28. ἡ ἐπίστασίς μοι ἡ καθ' ἡμέραν] That which presseth upon me daily. "Instantia mea quotidiana." Vulg.

Ἐπίστασις is used in this sense in 2 Mac. vi. 3, ἡ ἐκ κακίας ἐπίστασις. And Theophrast. (C. Pl. ii. 9, 1) speaks of the ἐπίστασις πνευμάτων, "the continual stress of winds." And in Soph. (Antig. 225), φροντίδων ἐπιστάσεις may be rendered "curarum instantias, pressuras." Elz. has ἐπισύστασίς μου. But ἐπίστασις is in B, D, E, F, G, and μοι is in B, F, G.

— ἡ μέριμνα πασῶν τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν] The care of all the Churches. If then there was one Visible Head of all the Churches among the Apostles, it was not St. Peter, but St. Paul. Cp. note above on Acts xiii. 9 as to the Western Church.

29. Τίς ἀσθενεῖ—πυροῦμαι;] Who is weak, and I do not sympathize with him in his weakness? To the weak I become weak, in order to save the weak. (See on 1 Cor. ix. 22.) Who has a stumbling-block thrown in his way by another, and I am not immediately fired (πυροῦμαι) with sorrow, shame, and indignation at this outrage against one for whom Christ died (see 1 Cor. viii. 9—11), and at this breach of Christian Charity? (Rom. xiv. 15.)

30. τὰ τῆς ἀσθενείας] I will glory, not in my miracles, but in my infirmities; not in what I have done, but what I have suffered. "Vincit qui patitur." And see further note at end of the Chapter.

31. Ὁ Θεὸς—οἶδεν] God—knows; a solemn adjuration (see above 1 Cor. xv. 31. 2 Cor. i. 23), proving the great weight and importance of what he has said; and showing that, however he might seem to be speaking as a fool (ἄφρων), yet this ἀφροσύνη or folly was like μωρία Θεοῦ, the foolishness of God, as the Greeks accounted the Gospel (1 Cor. i. 21—23); and that, if he had been "beside himself," it was to God. (2 Cor. v. 13.) See above on v. 17.

— Ὁ Θεὸς καὶ Πατὴρ] God, Who is also the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. See on Tit. ii. 13.

— οἶδεν—ὅτι οὐ ψεύδομαι] God knows that I lie not.

In what?

Not in the record that he had just been giving of his sufferings. These were public and notorious, and needed no such solemn adjuration.

But the Apostle's meaning is (and this is carefully to be noted, for otherwise the connexion of what precedes and what follows cannot be understood), Almighty God, the Omniscient Searcher of hearts, knows that I lie not in saying that I glory in my infirmities. He knows, that I do not glory (as some do) in my supernatural endowments and spiritual gifts, such as working of miracles, speaking with tongues, and prophecy, but (what perhaps you cannot believe, and therefore I call God to attest the truth of what I say) that the things in which I most glory are my infirmities: the ignominies to which I have been exposed, and which I have now recorded, in being publicly beaten and scourged, and treated with contumely by my own kindred, the Jews, and by treacherous Christians, and the dangers and hardships by sea and land which I have endured, and from which I never delivered myself miraculously, or was rescued by any splendid interference of God in my behalf.

As he says in another place (2 Cor. xii. 9, 10), Of myself I will not glory save only in my infirmities. I glory in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses.

And why does he glory in these? His answer is, Because by sufferings I am made like Christ; and because the power and goodness of God is most glorified in making use of so weak and despised an instrument as I am seen to be, in order to work out His great and gracious purposes; because God's strength is made perfect in my weakness. (2 Cor. xii. 5.) And since God's glory, and not my own glory, is the aim and end of all my actions, and since my doctrine to you is, "let him that glorieth, glory in the Lord" (1 Cor. i. 31. 2 Cor. x. 17); and since the Lord is most glorified in my weaknesses, therefore I glory in them,—and God, Who knows the secrets of my heart, knows that I lie not, when I say that I glory in them.

The connexion of this solemn declaration with what follows, will be pointed out at the close of the next note.

32. ὁ ἐθνάρχης Ἀρέτα] The Ethnarch, or Governor (according to the sense of the word as illustrated by Wetstein), appointed by Aretas the king (of Arabia Petræa), was guarding the city (ἐφρούρει). So in Acts ix. 24, it is said the Jews were watching the gates (of the city, παρετηροῦντο τὰς πύλας) day and night, in order to kill him. He therefore did not attempt to escape by the gates, but over the wall.

Observe, that St. Paul here describes Damascus as "the city of the Damascenes;" by which he seems to intimate that Damascus was not altogether subject to Aretas, but had some independent jurisdiction left, at the same time that Aretas had an Ethnarch there.

It seems to have been in the condition of a city nominally free, under the protection of a superior power.

As to the circumstances under which Aretas the king was enabled to exercise his influence at Damascus, and appoint an Ethnarch or Governor there, see above, "Chronological Synopsis" prefixed to the Acts, p. xxxv, xxxvi, and notes on Acts ix. 2 and 24, where the incident here mentioned is described. Cp. Wieseler, Chronol. Synops. p. 167—176. Dr. Kitto's Illustrations, p. 153—5, and Howson, i. p. 99—101.

After πιάσαι με Elz. adds θέλων, against the preponderance of the best MSS.

33. διὰ θυρίδος] by a window, probably in a house built on the city wall. Wetstein.

— ἐξέφυγον] I escaped. On the question as to the lawfulness of flight in persecution, in reference to the duty of the Christian Pastor, see on Matt. x. 23. St. Paul had not as yet been ordained to the Apostleship, when he escaped from Damascus (see Acts xiii. 3), and he knew that he was designed by Christ to preach the Gospel "to all men" (Acts xxii. 14; xxvi. 17), and he reserved himself for the work to which he would be afterwards ordained. He gave no scandal to the disciples by his flight; for it is specially mentioned that they aided him in it. (Acts ix. 25.) Cp. Acts xvii. 14. See also Acts viii. 1; xiv. 6.

32, 33.] But what, it may be asked, is the connexion between this incident at Damascus (which seems to be introduced very abruptly) with what goes before, and what follows?

A reply to this question has in part been suggested in the note on v. 32, οὐ ψεύδομαι. It may be continued as follows;

(1) As to what precedes.

St. Paul had called God to witness, that the things which he himself gloried in were his infirmities—not his miraculous powers and supernatural gifts—but the reproaches, insults, ignominies, distresses which he had suffered, without the exercise of any miracle to rescue him from them, as some might have expected would have been wrought for so great an Apostle, and as had been done more than once in the case of St. Peter. (See Acts v. 19; xii. 7—11.)

The reason why he gloried in his infirmities (as has been already stated), was because by suffering and shame he was made most like Him Who was "a Man of sorrows;" and Who "came to His own and His own received Him not;" and because God was most glorified in working such wonderful results, as He had done, in the conversion of so many souls, by an instrument so weak and so despised by men as he was, and because the Gospel which he preached was thus shown to be not of man, but of God. 2 Cor. iv. 7.

God, Who alone sees the inmost recesses of the heart, and Whom I solemnly call to witness, knoweth that I lie not in thus glorying,—not in my miracles and other supernatural gifts, which may bring glory to me,—and in which some other men (e. g. the Corinthian false teachers) might be disposed to glory, but in my sufferings and indignities in which I have been exposed to contempt, but which bring glory to Him.

He now proceeds to illustrate and confirm this solemn adjuration by a signal example;

In Damascus—that great city, the capital of Syria—whither, as you know, I had gone, invested with secular power and dignity, an envoy from the Jewish Sanhedrim, with full powers to execute their mandates; and where, if I had preferred worldly glory to the offence of the Cross of Christ, I should have been honourably entertained and aided by the Ethnarch of Aretas, the king, there I, who present myself before you as no whit inferior to the very chiefest Apostles, there I was exposed to great danger. But I did not work any wonder to deliver myself, nor did God interfere to rescue me. I was watched by a military force, and was in great peril; but I, the Apostle of the Lord, did not go boldly forward, and encounter, and put to flight, my enemies as the Prophets of old—Moses, Elijah, and Elisha—did theirs (2 Kings i. 10. Luke ix. 54. 2 Kings ii. 24), nor was I delivered by any glorious miracle as Daniel of old (Dan. vi. 22), or as Peter in later days (Acts v. 19; xii. 7), but (mark, I confess the truth) I fled away from mine enemies. And the mode of my escape was ignominious and contemptible. I was let down concealed—and as if I were not a man, but consigned as a mere bale of goods—in a basket through a window in a house built on the wall, and so I escaped their hands. This was the manner in which I, who had come down to Damascus in worldly power, pomp, and glory, skulked away and absconded from it. I, the zealous persecutor of Christianity, endured this shame for Christ.

Believe me, then, I hide nothing from you,—my fears, my weaknesses, my most ignominious adventures. No; I glory in them. And why? Because they are the things which prove the power and love of God, in effecting such mighty works by one so weak.

Probably, this escape from Damascus had been made the occasion of obloquy against St. Paul. Probably, he had been taunted with it as a base and cowardly act, unworthy of an Apostle, by some of his adversaries and rivals at Corinth. He does not disguise the circumstance; he glories in it. He even reserves it for the last place in his series of sufferings for Christ.

(2) Next, as to the connexion of these two verses with what follows.

Observe the striking contrast.

He had said, that if he gloried, he would glory in the things concerning his infirmities; and he had therefore recounted them. He had just detailed one of the most humiliating (his escape from Damascus) as the climax of all.

He now goes on and says, "To glory, verily, is not expedient for me." Οὐ συμφέρει, It is not profitable or edifying (1 Cor. viii. 12; x. 23) for me. Remark μοι, for me, reserved for the last emphatic place: To glory is not expedient for such an one as me, in any thing which concerns myself. In myself I am nothing but weakness. I know this, and I will act upon this knowledge. For I will now proceed to visions and revelations vouchsafed to me by the LORD.

Γὰρ is introduced there, as often, where a proposition is followed by the discussion of it, "ubi propositionem excipit tractatio." See Bengel, xii. 58; and cp. 1 Cor. xi. 26, and Winer, p. 403. Cp. Æschyl. Theb. 42, ἄνδρες γὰρ ἑπτὰ κ.τ.λ.

Observe also the contrast between μοι and Κυρίου, corresponding to each other respectively at the ends of the two clauses.

See also μοι explained by ἐμαυτοῦ in xii. 5. I will not glory of myself, abstractedly as myself, save only in my infirmities. But I will glory of what has been done to me and in me by the Lord.

Mark then the striking character of the transition from himself, simply as himself,—from Paul, simply as Paul,—to Paul the Apostle, enlightened by Visions of the Lord. Observe the transition from Paul simply as a man, to Paul as a man in Christ; from the σκεῦος ὀστρακινὸν (2 Cor. iv. 7) to the σκεῦος ἐκλογῆς (Acts ix. 15); from the "earthen vessel" of his own human weakness, to the chosen vessel of divine Grace.

I (he may now be understood to say), who in fear and trembling and in darkness was let down in a basket through a window in the wall, and so escaped by flight from Damascus (such I am simply in myself, weak and contemptible), I, the same Paul, as a man in Christ, and favoured with visions of the Lord, was caught up to the third heaven. I, who had been let down in the basket through a window, was carried up above the clouds through the golden portals of heaven (cp. Rev. iv. 1) to the bright regions of glory, and I was caught up to Paradise, to the peaceful abode of the blessed, and heard unutterable words, which it is not lawful for a man to reveal.

How striking the contrast! how sublime the transition! From Paul let down in the basket at Damascus, to Paul caught up by the Spirit to the third heaven, and to Paradise!

Hence the connexion is obvious; and it is to be regretted that, by the break made by the end of the chapter, the one part of this glorious picture of the great Apostle, drawn by his own hand, should ever be read without the other.

Ch. XII. 1. Καυχᾶσθαι δή] To glory, verily, I know, is not expedient for me; for I will proceed to speak of Visions and Revelations from the Lord.

On the meaning and connexion of this with what precedes, see above, the note on xi. 32, 33.

B, D, E, F, G, have καυχασθαι δεῖ, which has been received by Scholz and Lachmann. But this is another example of error, propagated even in the oldest MSS. by identity of sound of letters, i. e. in this case of ει and η.

2. Οἶδα ἄνθρωπον] I know a man. That this is St. Paul himself is clear from v. 7.

— πρὸ ἐτῶν δεκατεσσάρων] fourteen years ago. On this use of πρὸ see John xii. 1. Winer, p. 491, 2.

Fourteen years, reckoned inclusively, carry us back to the time of St. Paul's ordination to the Apostleship, which must not be confounded with the time of his conversion to Christianity. See note on Acts xiii. 2, ἀφορίσατε δή.

The "Visions and Revelations of the Lord," his rapture into the "Third Heaven" and into "Paradise," appear to have been vouchsafed to him at the time of his Ordination.

They were vouchsafed to St. Paul especially, because he was called by God to endure more sufferings, and to "labour more abundantly," than the rest of the Apostles. And they were vouchsafed to him at that particular crisis, because he was then going forth, for the first time, as an Apostle and Missionary of Christ.

He was about to incur shame and suffering, both from Jews and Gentiles, for the sake of the Gospel.

The long series of his afflictions and humiliations for Christ, which St. Luke has recorded in the Acts, and which St. Paul himself has enumerated here, was then about to commence. It was therefore very reasonable that he, who was going forth to suffer for the Lord, should then have "Visions from the Lord;" that he should have revelations from the Lord of the glory to be enjoyed hereafter.

If, therefore, a conjecture may be permitted as to the place in which these Visions were vouchsafed to the Apostle, we should not perhaps be in error if we were to specify Antioch. See on Acts xiii. 1—4.

These Visions had been given to the Apostle as long as fourteen years before.

St. Paul had been resident at Corinth for a year and six months, and he had written an Epistle to the Corinthians.

And yet he had never as yet disclosed to them the glorious privileges which the Lord had vouchsafed to himself in these Visions and Revelations.

An exemplary pattern of modesty and humility, and a signal proof of his constraint and reserve in speaking of himself.

Here is also a clear evidence, that, when he now relates these Visions and Revelations vouchsafed to him by the Lord, it is by compulsion and necessity (cp. Theodoret, Theophyl.), and that the thorn "in the flesh" had done its work, for which it was given him by God, that he might not be elated by them, v. 7.

— εἴτε ἐν σώματι, οὐκ οἶδα, εἴτε ἐκτὸς τοῦ σώματος] This was not therefore a trance, but a local translation. If it had been only a trance or ecstasy, he could not have doubted whether he was in the body or no. For in all such visions the soul and body remain united.

St. Paul says that he was caught up; his only doubt is whether this rapture was a translation of his body and soul together, or a translation of his disembodied spirit alone.

This sentence, therefore, shows that the soul, when separated from the body, has powers of perception. If not, it could not have been a matter of doubt with St. Paul, whether he was out of the body or no, when he was translated to heaven and to Paradise, and heard what he did there.

It therefore confirms the doctrine, that the soul, when separated from the body by death, does not sleep. See on Luke xii. 4; xvi. 23; xxiii. 43.

2—4. ἁρπαγέντα—ἕως τρίτου οὐρανοῦ—ἡρπάγη εἰς τὸν παράδεισον] St. Paul speaks here of two several raptures or translations to two several places.

(1) A rapture to the Third Heaven.

(2) Another rapture to Paradise.

He distinguishes the places themselves by two several names. And he distinguishes them also by the prepositions which he uses to characterize his two raptures respectively.

He is carried up as far as the third heaven.

He is also carried into Paradise.

Accordingly we find (as has been well shown by Whitby and Wetstein here, and on Luke xxiii. 43) that the ancient writers carefully distinguish between the two.

Thus S. Irenæus (ii. 34), "Paulus, usque ad tertium cœlum raptum se esse significans; et rursum delatum esse in Paradisum. Quid illi prodest aut in Paradisum introitus, aut in tertium cœlum assumptio?"

See also Tertullian, de Præscr. c. 24, and Justin M. and Methodius; and (of the moderns) Bp. Jeremy Taylor, quoted in Grabe's note to Irenæus, l. c.

So S. Jerome (Ep. ad Joh. Hieros. c. 3), "Quis audiat Originem in tertio cœlo nobis donantem Paradisum?" And see Jerome in Ezek. xxviii. Epiphan. Hær. 64, Δὶς ἀναληφθεὶς ἀναγῶς (Παῦλος) ἅπαξ μὲν ἕως τρίτου οὐρανοῦ, ἅπαξ δὲ εἰς τὸν παράδεισον. And Athanasius, Gregory Mag., and Primasius in Bengel's note here.

With regard now to these two several places—

(1) The Third Heaven.

This is generally understood by ancient Christian Writers to be the highest heaven.

It is true, indeed, that some Rabbinical writers speak of the seventh heaven as the highest. See the authorities in Wetstein here. But other Jewish teachers specify the third heaven as the highest, and as equivalent to the "heaven of heavens." See the note of Grotius and Bengel, who says that the Hebrew Dual (shamayim) bespoke two heavens, but the revelation of the glory of the third, or highest, was reserved to the New Testament.

It is also evident, that St. Paul would not have used the words he does here, saying that he was caught up (ἕως) as far as to the third heaven, if there had been as many as four degrees of heavenly glory beyond and above it.

We may therefore conclude with ancient Christian authors that when St. Paul says that he was caught up as far as to the third heaven, he was translated into the company of the Angelic hierarchy, and that there he was mingled with the Seraphim, and had the fruition of the Beatific Vision; and that thence was kindled within him that ardour of zeal, and fire of love, and light of knowledge with which he inflamed and illuminated the world. Cp. A Lapide here, and Augustine, super Gen. ad literam, 12: "Tertium cœlum dicitur Visio intellectualis Dei; Ipsius Dei cognitio."

(2) Paradise, i. e. the place of peace, of joy, to which the souls of the righteous are carried immediately on their dissolution from the body, and in which place they remain till the last Trump shall sound, and the General Resurrection shall take place, when their bodies will be raised, and reunited to their souls, and they will be "caught up into the air," and will receive their full reward, according to their works, from the Everlasting Judge, and be for ever in heavenly glory with the Lord. (1 Thess. iv. 17.)

The word Paradise is of Eastern origin (Heb. פַּרְדֵּס, Neh. ii. 8. Eccles. ii. 5. Cant. iv. 12), and signifies a Royal garden or park, girt with an enclosure, adorned with trees and shrubs and flowers, and stocked with beasts and birds, and watered with fair rivers. Hence it is applied in the Septuagint version of the Old Testament (Gen. ii. 8—10, &c.) to that region, that Gan, גַּן, Eden, עֵדֶן, or 'Garden of delight,' which was intersected with rivers, and planted with every tree pleasant to the sight and good for food, and in which our first Parents were placed by God, to keep it and dress it.

Though the word Paradise in its literal sense signifies a place fenced off from common ground, and much more beautiful than it; and though it means a Royal Park, and though the Park leads to the Palace, yet the Park is not the Palace. So, likewise, in its figurative sense, Paradise means a place separate from, and much more delightful than, earth; but it is not the heavenly Palace of the Great King.

The Place called Paradise is not the perpetual abode of the souls of the righteous. The word itself denotes that it is a temporary resting-place; an abode of delightful but transitory sojourn. It signifies a royal demesne, a fair park, a beautiful enclosure, and leading to the Royal Palace of the Great King, but it is not the Palace itself. The spiritual Paradise is filled with unspeakable joys, and it leads to the Spiritual Palace, to Heaven itself, to the everlasting abode of the Saints of God; but it is not Heaven. It conducts to the royal mansion of the Eternal King, but it is not that Mansion itself.

And as the presence of Eastern Kings was oftener vouchsafed to their Paradise or Park than to other places, so Scripture teaches that the Souls which are in Paradise have a nearer fruition of the Divine Presence than they had on Earth, and therefore are said to be "in the hand of God," and to be "with Christ," and so are unspeakably happy; yet they have not as yet attained the supreme and perfect joys of the beatific Vision, to which they will be admitted after the General Resurrection and Day of Judgment.

Hence Tertullian (Apol. 47) says, "Paradisum nominamus locum divinæ amœnitatis, recipiendis sanctorum spiritibus destinatum."

The word Paradise is found in numerous passages in the Greek Septuagint Version of the Old Testament, but it is never used for Heaven. In the New Testament the word Paradise is found three times only, once in Luke xxiii. 43, once in the Revelation of St. John (Rev. ii. 7), and once here (2 Cor. xii. 4), where the Apostle speaks of his own visions and revelations of the Lord, and where he distinguishes between the Vision which he had of Paradise and that other Vision with which he was favoured of the third Heaven.

Almighty God, in order to qualify St. Paul for encountering all the trials which awaited him, and to teach us by him of how little account all earthly sufferings are, when compared with the joys of the future state, was pleased to reveal to him not only the full and final joys "such as eye has not seen, nor ear heard," which are reserved in Heaven for all God's faithful Servants, but to show him also joys of Paradise, joys (the Apostle says) of such transcendent felicity, that it is not for man to utter them, to which the souls of the righteous are admitted immediately on their delivery from the burden of the flesh.

It was St. Paul's personal knowledge of these two successive states,—the one the immediate, the other the final state of the departed Soul of the faithful Christian,—the one the first state of his soul at the very moment of his dissolution, and during the interval between it and the day of Judgment, and the other the state of his soul from the day of Judgment through the countless ages of Eternity, which elicited from the Apostle those memorable words, I reckon (λογίζομαι, that is, I, who have full knowledge of the fact, pronounce) that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with, or put in the scale against, the glory that shall be revealed in us. (Rom. viii. 18.) Therefore, he also said, I long to depart, and to be with Christ, which is far better. (Phil. i. 23.) When we are absent from the body, we are present with the Lord. (2 Cor. v. 8.)

But knowing that his happiness, though great in Paradise, would not be perfected, until his mortal body was raised from the dead at the coming of Christ to Judgment, he says (2 Cor. v. 4), We that are in this tabernacle (of the body) do groan, being burdened, not that we would be unclothed, but we would be clothed upon (2 Cor. v. 2); that is, we long for the general Resurrection, we long to be arrayed in our heavenly body, like unto Christ's glorious body, and to enter into the full enjoyment of a blessed Eternity. And he encourages all the faithful with the assurance, that when Christ, who is their life, shall appear again in His glorified body, they also shall appear with Him in glory. (Col. iii. 4.)

It may, perhaps, be asked here, If Paradise is the place to which the souls of the righteous are conveyed immediately after their dissolution, and if the Third Heaven is the region of everlasting bliss and celestial glory, why did St. Paul mention his rapture into Paradise after his rapture into the Third Heaven?

This question may be answered by reference to our Lord's words to the penitent thief (Luke xxiii. 43), To-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise;

The penitent thief had prayed to Christ that he might be remembered by Him in the future glory of His kingdom (v. 42). Christ gave him more than he asked; He gave him an immediate reward, that of Paradise, to which his soul would be conveyed on that self-same day, and which would be preparatory and introductory to the greater and everlasting bliss of the heavenly kingdom. See note on Luke xxiii. 43.

So it is with St. Paul. He had a vision of the heavenly glory. But this was not all. Nor, indeed, would that Vision have ministered all the comfort which he needed under suffering, and which was ministered to him by the Vision of Paradise. For the bliss of heaven is posterior to the Resurrection and Day of Judgment, which might be very distant, and (as the event has shown) were very distant from St. Paul. But the joys of Paradise being immediate, and being introductory to heavenly glory, would afford him the greatest comfort, and inspire him with the greatest courage under suffering, and would give to Martyrdom the character of a blessed and immediate transition from a world of sin and sorrow to one of holiness and joy.

7. ἐδόθη μοι σκόλοψ τῇ σαρκί] there was given a thorn to me, and to that part of me which is σὰρξ, flesh,—as distinguished from my πνεῦμα or spirit. On this use of the double dative, the former describing the person, the second specifying the member, or part of the person, as in the Homeric expression δίδου δὲ οἱ ἠνία χερσὶν, see Winer, p. 197. The word σκόλοψ (root σκάλλω, fodio) is used by LXX for a thorn. Num. xxxiii. 55, σκόλοπες ἐν τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς, said of the nations of Canaan in relation to the Israelites. So Ezek. xxviii. 24, σκόλοψ πικρίας καὶ ἄκανθα ὀδύνης: and Hos. ii. 6, φράξω τὴν ὁδὸν αὐτῆς σκόλοψι. This is doubtless its sense here.

What was this σκόλοψ, or Thorn, which was given to St. Paul?

It cannot be (as has been supposed by some) an affection of the eyes consequent on the glare of light at his Conversion. The σκόλοψ was not given him then, but some years after (see on v. 2). And it is more likely that by his Conversion to Christianity he was enlightened not only spiritually but physically. Cp. Acts ix. 18.

This conjecture of some in modern times, that the great Apostle laboured under physical deficiency of eyesight, rests on no grounds of Holy Scripture or primitive Tradition. Cp. on Acts xxiii. 1.

This thorn was in the flesh,—that is, in the outer man; and it was given him (observe the word given) as a providential dispensation, in order that he might not be exalted above measure (he repeats this twice) by the transcendent altitude (τῇ ὑπερβολῇ) and exceeding sublimity and glory of his revelations. It was given him as a remedy and safeguard against spiritual Pride and Presumption.

He was delivered over to this infirmity lest he should fall from the truth, and in order that he might escape the sin of elation against God by pride. Irenæus (v. 3).

It must have been something therefore external, which might expose him to disparagement from censorious men, and depress all aspirations of self-complacency, by the chastening discipline of worldly scorn.

Cp. Bp. Bull's Sermon on this subject, Serm. v. Vol. i. pp. 117 and 126.

Accordingly, St. Paul speaks of it in another place as a "trial in his flesh," which made him an object of contempt to some, and tried their affection and reverence for him. He commends the Galatians (iv. 14), because they did not set at nought and scoff at (οὐκ ἐξουθενήσατε οὐδὲ ἐξεπτύσατε) this trial in his flesh, but accepted him as an Angel of God, as Christ Jesus,—as one who was chastened by suffering, as He was. The thorn in his flesh reminded them that he was a minister of Him Who was crowned with thorns. (Mark xv. 17. John xix. 5.)

Hence we may account for the mention of it here. Doubtless, among those at Corinth who carped and cavilled at the Apostle, especially at his personal presence (2 Cor. x. 10), some indulged in sneers on this physical infirmity, which sometimes probably made itself manifest in his address; and they used it as an occasion for disparaging his office and discrediting his ministry, as if in his bodily presence he was weak, however much he might attempt to intimidate and overawe them, when he was absent, by menaces in his letters (x. 10).

What was the explanation (they might ask with bitter irony) to be given of this bodily affliction? Was it likely that God would thus visit a favoured Apostle of Christ with such infirmity, and thus damage his success in preaching the Gospel?

St. Paul answers this question, and solves the objections arising from it;

The thorn in his flesh (he says) was a gift from God—ἐδόθη μοι. And why was it given? In order that I should not be too much lifted up by the exceeding altitude of my revelations from Him.

It is therefore a mark of His favour. It is a consequence and a memento of the privileges I have received from Him. It may remind you, as it does me, of the abundance of my revelations. It is even a badge of my office, a credential of my ministry.

There was also no fear that the success of his ministry (for which he was zealous) would be impaired by his infirmity. "My grace," God has said (εἴρηκε—has said once for all), "is sufficient for thee; My strength is perfected in thy weakness." The weaker the instrument, the greater the triumph of God's grace, which enables that instrument to do what it does, and accomplishes such mighty works by its means.

They who read Scripture with awe, and contemplate with reverence the Saints of old, will not indulge in inquisitive and profitless speculations on the precise nature of this thorn in the flesh of St. Paul.

The Holy Spirit does not gratify such curiosity as this. He tells us that the holy Apostles were men of like passions with ourselves. (Acts xiv. 15.) And we know from the present instance, that the great Apostle of the Gentiles, he who laboured more abundantly than the rest (1 Cor. xv. 10), and with the most blessed fruit in his labours, and who had a great abundance of Visions and Revelations in the Lord, was also afflicted by some visible infirmity in his body which might expose him to contempt from others, and was designed by God to keep him humble, and also to test their dutiful love for the Apostle of Christ.

But the Holy Spirit does not give any minute personal details concerning the external appearance of the Holy Apostles. He does not perpetuate any of the flaws and blemishes of our feeble and frail humanity which might have been visible in their form or feature. He abstracts as it were all that is accidental and temporary in the portrait, and presents us with a beautiful ideal picture of what was essential and is eternal, and so gives us a truer likeness of them. And who would wish to mar this divine work, by intruding into it what was merely earthly and temporary? who would wish to know what St. Paul's thorn in the flesh was? Who would wish to associate him with any bodily blemish, now that all the "spots and wrinkles" of mortality have disappeared, and he has been transfigured as it were by the bright illuminations of the Holy Ghost, and his soul has passed to the Paradise which he himself saw, and he will be clothed hereafter with a glorified body, and dwell in soul and body in the infinite felicity of the third heaven?

See further what has been said on this subject in the Introduction to the Acts of the Apostles, p. xii, xiii.

— ἄγγελος Σατᾶν] He calls the thorn in his flesh a messenger of Satan to buffet him. "Sudem refert datum sibi Angelum Satanæ" (Tertullian, de Fugâ, c. 3. and de Pudic. 13) "a quo colaphizaretur, ne se extolleret." And yet St. Paul says that it was given him (i. e. by God) in order that he might not be too much exalted by the exceeding glory of his revelation.

A very important declaration, teaching,

(1) That physical evils are from Satan, who assails holy men, in order to torment them. Similarly it was revealed by the Holy Spirit in the history of Job, that his afflictions were from Satan (Job ii. 6, 7); and our Lord Himself declares that the woman in the Gospel, whom He calls a daughter of Abraham, and who was bowed together with a spirit of infirmity for eighteen years, had been bound by Satan. (Luke xiii. 16.)

(2) That God, Who is Almighty and All-merciful, permits Satan to visit holy men with severe afflictions, in order that those afflictions may be made subservient to His own wise and gracious purposes. He thus overrules evil with good, and defeats Satan with his own weapons. God permitted Satan to afflict Job, that his patience might be tried and be an example to every age. He permitted Satan to bind the daughter of Abraham for eighteen years, that her faith might be a pattern to all, and that Christ's power and love in loosing her—touching only the hem of His garment with faith—might be known. And He permitted Satan to afflict the Apostle with the thorn in his flesh, in order that he who had been caught up into the Third Heaven might be saved from the peril of pride, by which Satan fell from heaven; He permitted him "to fall under the Devil's scourge, that he might not fall into the Devil's sin" (Bp. Bull); and that God's grace and power might be displayed and glorified in and through his weakness. Cp. Tertullian (de Fugâ, c. 2).

God permitted Satan to buffet the Apostle by a Thorn; but under the transmuting influence of God's grace working with St. Paul's free will, that Thorn has been made as it were to bloom and "blossom as the rose," and to yield for the Apostle's head an unfading garland of glory.

Therefore the Apostle says: "Most gladly will I then glory in my infirmities; for when I am weak, then am I strong."

"Ne extollar datus est mihi stimulus carnis meæ angelus Satanæ. O venenum quod non curatur nisi veneno! O antidotum quod quasi de Serpente conficitur et propterea theriacum nuncupatur! Serpens enim ille superbiam persuadet dicens Gustate et eritis sicut dii. (Gen. iii. 5.) Superbiæ persuasio ista est. Unde cecidit serpens inde nos dejecit. Meritò ergo venenum serpentis de serpente sanatur. Quid ait Apostolus Ter Dominum rogavi ut auferret? Deus precanti aderat. Videte quid ter roganti responderit, 'Sufficit tibi gratia mea.' Ego, medicus optimus, novi in quem tumorem pergat id quod volo sanare. Quiesce, sufficit tibi gratia mea; non sufficit tibi voluntas tua." S. Augustine (Serm. 163). See also Serm. 354.

8. Ὑπὲρ τούτου] 'Concerning this.' On this use of ὑπὲρ = Heb. עַל, and Latin super, see 2 Cor. i. 6, 8. 2 Thess. ii. 1; and see Winer, p. 343.

— τρὶς] three prayers, consequent perhaps on three several severe assaults of temptation. Job is tempted by Satan thrice,—(1) by the loss of his goods; (2) of his children; (3) of his health. Our Lord is tempted by Satan thrice. (Matt. iv. 1—11. Luke iv. 1—13.) Peter was tempted by Satan thrice. (Matt. xxvi. 34—75. Luke xxii. 31.) And after his fall was enabled by Christ to make three professions of love. (John xxi. 17.)

— ἵνα ἀποστῇ ἀπ' ἐμοῦ] in order that he might depart from me. St. Paul had claimed the power of delivering the incestuous Corinthian to Satan. (1 Cor. v. 5.) He here represents himself as buffeted by a "messenger of Satan," and desiring, but not able, to free himself from the visitation.

He affirms that he also had proved his Apostleship by miracles (v. 12).

Yet he never pretends that he worked any miracle to heal himself of his severe bodily infirmity, which exposed him to disparagement and obloquy.

We learn these things from himself,—an evidence of his veracity, and of his confidence in the truth of his cause. No enthusiast would have written thus. The exception proves the rule. The candid avowal of weakness confirms the assertion of power.

Thus also we see the principles by which the miraculous powers given to the Apostles were regulated by God. St. Paul himself tells us that he lacked bodily sustenance (xi. 9), and was often in hunger, thirst, in cold and nakedness (xi. 27); and that he had a thorn in his flesh, by which Satan buffeted him, and which exposed him to reproach. Yet we never hear that he was authorized or enabled to exert his miraculous powers in order to provide himself with food, or to heal himself of sickness. They who were more privileged by God than other men in working miracles, were not exempted by Him from enduring severe afflictions. Indeed, they were as much depressed below other men in their sufferings, as they were raised above them by their miracles. They were designed by Almighty God to be exemplary to the world in suffering; which they would not have been, if they had wrought miracles for their own benefit. Their history shows that the true principle of the Gospel of Christ is imitation of Christ; that it is sacrifice of self for the good of others, and for the glory of God.

9. εἴρηκε] He has said. Observe the force of the perfect tense. God has said it; I remember it well. He has said it, Whose word is Yea and Amen. He has said it once for all. Man prays thrice, but God speaks once. He has spoken it; and the force of that speech still abides with me, and works its work upon me. Cp. εἴρηκε, Heb. i. 13; iv. 4.

Although the petitions of holy men are not always granted, yet their prayers are always heard. God sometimes shows His love to them by denying them their requests; and in this denial He gives them what He, Who is omniscient and all-merciful, knows to be best for them, and so deals with them according to their prayers, which are always framed and uttered in a spirit of submission to the divine Will. Augustine (in Joann. Tract. 6).

"Apostolus ad voluntatem non est exauditus, sed est exauditus ad salutem. Paulo Apostolo negavit quod oravit; sæpe malis hominibus dat Deus ad damnationem; huic negavit ad sanitatem."

"Rogavit Dominum ut auferret stimulum carnis a quo colaphizabatur, aliquem forte dolorem corporalem, et dicit Deus sufficit tibi gratia mea, &c. Ego novi quem curo. Tanquam emplastrum mordax urit te sed sanat te." Augustine (in Ps. xxvi. xcviii., Serm. 47. 154).

On the other hand, Almighty God often punishes evil men by giving them what they most desire;

The Devil's petition was granted by God when the Devil asked leave to tempt Job; and so the Devil was worsted. God gave the Israelites their desire, and they perished in their lust. (Ps. lxxviii. 30.)

Doubtless, Satan exulted in being allowed to buffet St. Paul. But how much shame has thence recoiled upon Satan from his conflict with the Apostle! and how much glory to God, and how much benefit to the Church! Augustine (Serm. 354).

— Ἥδιστα—μᾶλλον] Most gladly will I therefore glory rather (i. e. rather than faint) in my infirmities (i. e. rather than in my miracles). On this combination, see vii. 13.

11. Γέγονα ἄφρων] Perhaps this may be put interrogatively, "Have I become foolish? If so, ye constrained me." St. Paul does not allow that he is ἄφρων. See xi. 16; xii. 6.

Elz. adds καυχώμενος here, an explanatory gloss, not found in the best MSS.

12. τοῦ ἀποστόλου] Of the Apostle, as distinguished from all other men; and especially as distinguished from all false teachers, who are not sent by Christ (ἀπόστολοι), but are mere comers (ἐρχόμενοι). See above, xi. 4.

On this use of the definite article, see above on John iii. 10, ὁ διδάσκαλος, and John xviii. 10, τὸν δοῦλον.

13. ἡττήθητε ὑπέρ] A remarkable use of ὑπὲρ, with something of an oxymoron in it, a favourite figure with St. Paul (see Rom. xii. 11), Ye were lessened and abased above; and perhaps marking that the ἧττα or loss (if ἧττα it was) was a proof of St. Paul's love, and so a privilege. There is a gentle tone of delicate irony and affectionate playfulness in the whole sentence, especially in the words, "Forgive me this wrong."

— εἰ μή] See on 2 Cor. iii. 1.

— κατενάρκησα] See on xi. 9.

14. τοῦτο] So the best MSS.; not in Elz.

15.] On this text, see Bp. Andrewes' Sermons, ii. p. 98.

16. Ἔστω δέ] But be it so. A supposition. He recites an objection of his adversaries. I, they say, do not burden you in my own person; I did not venture to do it, they allege. I was not straightforward and courageous enough to do it myself; but with a sort of moral cowardice, and being by nature (ὑπάρχων) crafty, I caught you by guile. I ensnared you by an artifice, by a mere semblance of disinterestedness, in order to make you my prey by means of others my emissaries. Cp. Theophyl. Bp. Sanderson, ii. p. 349.

17, 18. ἀπέσταλκα] I have sent. The sense of this and the following verses seems to be, I am charged with craftiness in suborning others to be my agents in promoting my personal interests. If this were true, then the persons of whom I have made choice to be my delegates to you, would be of such a character as to be fit ministers of my artful and covetous designs.

But what is the case? Who are they? Titus and the brother. You know Titus by experience. Their character is a guarantee of my integrity. The choice which I have now made is a proof that the allegation just recited is false.

18. τὸν ἀδελφόν] the brother; perhaps St. Luke (see viii. 18), or the brother mentioned viii. 22.

19. Πάλιν] Are ye thinking that we are again pleading our own cause before you? Is this your present surmise? It is a very erroneous one. We are pleading before God, not you. We are speaking in Christ not for our own glory, but for His; and we are doing this and all things for your edification.

A, B, F, G have πάλαι here, and so Vulg., which has been adopted by some Editors, Lachm., Tisch., Alf. But πάλιν is in D, E, I, K, and the majority of Cursive MSS., Versions, and Fathers. It is confirmed also by iii. 1, ἀρχόμεθα πάλιν ἑαυτοὺς συνιστάνειν;

The confusion of ΠΑΛΑΙ and ΠΑΛΙΝ is frequent in MSS. (See Bloomfield's note.) And there is no instance in the N. T. where πάλαι stands at the beginning of a sentence. And πάλαι appears to mark a past time as contrasted with the present (as in Heb. i. 1), whereas the Apostle is speaking of present surmises. And the sense given in the English Authorized Version, and in many Ancient Versions, where the sentence is rightly represented as interrogatory, appears more forcible and just than that arising from the reading πάλαι δοκεῖτε.

CH. XIII. 1. Τρίτον τοῦτο ἔρχομαι] This is the third time that I am intending to come. So Jud. xvi. 15, τρίτον τοῦτο. Num. xxii. 28, LXX. John xxi. 14.

St. Paul had been once, and only once, at Corinth, viz. in the visit described in Acts xviii. 1—11, which visit lasted a year and a half, and ended about three years and a half before this Epistle was written.

That ἔρχομαι may have the sense of I am now intending to come, is evident from his words written at Ephesus, 1 Cor. xvi. 5, Μακεδονίαν διέρχομαι, I am now intending to go through Macedonia.

That the visit he was now intending to pay to Corinth, and which he did pay soon after these words were written, was only a second visit, may be inferred from his words above (i. 15), I was desirous to come to you before this, that you might have a second benefit. And again (xiii. 2), I have said before, and now premonish you, as though I were present the second time.

This sense of his words, τρίτον τοῦτο ἔρχομαι, is further cleared by what he had said just before (xii. 14), This is the third time that I am in readiness (ἑτοίμως ἔχω) to come to you.

He had been ready once, and did come; he had been ready again, but did not come, because they were not ready to receive him (see 2 Cor. i. 23); he had even been very desirous to come, but their disorders had prevented him from coming.

He, for his part, is now ready a third time to come to them. But whether he will actually now come or no, is dependent on something else, namely, on whether they, on their side, make themselves ready, by godly repentance and amendment, to receive the visit which he is ready and desirous to pay.

Thus he reminds them that his absence, which some among them had misinterpreted and censured (2 Cor. i. 15—17), was not due to any levity, fickleness, estrangement, or failure on his part. On the contrary, in will and desire this was the third time in the course of four years that he was with them. And if he was absent longer from them, his absence would not be due to himself. They could secure his presence by readiness for it.

Other reasons for this interpretation may be seen above in the note on 2 Cor. ii. 1.

— ἐπὶ στόματος δύο μαρτύρων καὶ τριῶν] Every matter that has been spoken (ῥῆμα, see on Luke i. 37) shall be established at the mouth of at least two witnesses, and, if it may be so, of three. From Deut. xix. 15, LXX; and see Deut. xvii. 6. John viii. 17, and Heb. x. 28, i. e. on the testimony of not less than two.

Compare Titus iii. 10, αἱρετικὸν μετὰ μίαν (one at least) καὶ (and if it may be) δευτέραν νουθεσίαν παραιτοῦ.

St. Paul appeals to his three intentions to come to Corinth as three witnesses that he is in earnest in what he says, and as three pledges that what he says, will be done. Ἀντὶ μαρτυριῶν τὰς παρουσίας αὐτοῦ τίθεις καὶ τὰς παραγγελίας, says Chrys. And so Œcumen.; and Theophylact says, Almighty God threatens the sinner, and for a time forbears to punish. But at last, after reiterated warnings, He executes judgment. So the Apostle. He says that in the same manner as every controversy is determined on the testimony of two or three witnesses, so the sentence which he has often threatened will be executed unless they repent. He compares his own comings to witnesses.

4. ζήσομεν] On this form of the future, see Winer, p. 80.

5. Ἑαυτούς] yourselves. Emphatic. Do not try me, do not tempt me, do not examine me, your Apostle, but examine yourselves.

— εἰ μήτι] unless haply (which God forbid!) ye are reprobates. On this use of εἰ μήτι, see above, iii. 1.

12. ἐν ἁγίῳ φιλήματι] with a holy kiss. See above, 1 Thess. v. 26. 1 Cor. xvi. 20; below, Rom. xvi. 16.

13. Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου] The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the Love of God, and the Communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. S. Athanasius (Ep. iii. ad Serapion. § 6, p. 555) refers to this Benediction in proof of the Doctrine of the distinct personality of each of the three Persons of the Ever-Blessed Trinity.

"Egregium de SS. Trinitate testimonium." (Bengel.)

The Three Persons are named in this Benediction, which has been adopted by the Christian Church; and is a full exposition of the doctrine of the Trinity less explicitly expressed in the Levitical Benediction, which God Himself prescribed to be used (Num. vi. 23—26), and in which the word יְהוָה, JEHOVAH (= Κύριος (LXX), the LORD), is repeated thrice.

In like manner S. Clement of Rome (Frag. 7) recites a primitive form of Christian Adjuration, in which the Three Persons of the Blessed Trinity are expressed as they are here in the Apostolic Benediction, Ζῇ ὁ Θεὸς, καὶ ὁ Κύριος Ἰησοῦς, καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα Ἅγιον.

As to the evidence of the same doctrine from the Baptismal Formula, see Matt. xxviii. 19, and Waterland's Moyer Lectures, Serm. viii.

In order to understand the force of this Benediction, it is to be observed—

(1) That all spiritual Blessings come from (ἐκ) God the FATHER, through (διά) God the SON (see 1 Cor. viii. 6), and by God the HOLY GHOST.

The Love of God is the one source and inexhaustible well-spring of all spiritual blessings to men; and these blessings are conveyed to us through the Son, in "Whom all the Fulness of the Godhead dwells" (Col. i. 19), and Who took our Nature, and is our Emmanuel, "God with us," and has made us members of His Body, and has become the Channel of Grace to us. And so we have "all received of His fulness, and Grace for Grace." (John i. 16.)

This Grace, flowing through the Son from the source of the Father's Love, is applied personally and individually to us, and made energetic to our spiritual New Birth and New Life in this world, and everlasting salvation in the world to come, by the operation of the Holy Ghost, Who overshadowed our Nature in the Blessed Virgin's Womb (Luke i. 35), and Who enabled her to conceive and to bring forth Christ, Who is the Second Adam; and so wrought the New Birth of our Nature, which was regenerated by the Incarnation of Christ; and Who, by His personal Communion with us, bestows, communicates, and applies the Grace flowing from the Father through the Son, for our personal Regeneration in Baptism, and forms Christ within us; and by His renovating and quickening operation makes Christ to dwell in us, and makes us to dwell in Him. See below on Titus iii. 5.

(2) These divine operations of the Three Persons of the Ever-Blessed Trinity, in the World of Grace, are analogous to their workings respectively in the world of Nature.

God the Father made the World, but this work of Creation was wrought through the Son (John i. 1, 2. Heb. i. 2), and by the vivifying influence of the Holy Ghost. See on Matt. iii. 16. Cp. Gen. i. 2.

(3) Also, the effusion of all grace to us from the Father, through the Son, and by the Holy Ghost, was declared at the Baptism of Christ, God and Man, when the voice of the Father proclaimed Jesus to be His well-beloved Son, and the Holy Ghost came upon Him from heaven as a Dove. (Matt. iii. 16, 17.)

(4) This Benediction is to be understood also as declaring not only the manner of the descent of Blessings from God to us, but also the means of our ascent to God;

This latter article of our faith is expressed by St. Paul thus:—Christ came and preached to you that were afar off, and them that are nigh. For through Him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father. (Eph. ii. 17, 18.)

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS.

I. ST. PAUL himself has supplied the best materials for an Introduction to this Epistle. These will be found in his speeches, recorded in the Acts of the Apostles, and in his Epistle to the Galatians, and in portions of his two Epistles to the Corinthians [1].

The Discourse which he delivered, in his first Missionary Tour, in the Synagogue at Antioch in Pisidia, contains the germ of the argument which he afterwards unfolded in this Epistle.

In that address he declared to the Jews, that he was commissioned to proclaim the fulfilment of the Promise made unto their fathers, and now accomplished in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, Whom God has raised from the dead; and that through Him Forgiveness of Sins is now preached, and that every one who believes in Him is justified from those things, from which men could not be justified by the Law of Moses [2].

The jealousy of the Jews, and the joy of the Gentiles, on the announcement of this intelligence, as described by the Sacred Historian, and the results of the Apostle's preaching at Antioch to these two communities, present a significant specimen, and display a vivid picture of the feelings produced in the minds of the Jewish and Gentile population throughout the world by the preaching of St. Paul.

On referring to that narrative [3], the reader will recognize a practical exhibition of some of the main difficulties with which the Apostle had to contend in writing the Epistle to the Romans.

The treatment which he afterwards experienced, in his second Missionary journey, from the Jews of Thessalonica, who were filled with envy against him, because he preached to the Gentiles [4], and because he proclaimed, that salvation was now offered to them on equal terms with the Jews; and the inveterate rancour, with which they excited the suspicions of the civil Magistrates against him, and with which they pursued him to Berœa [5], will afford further insight into the state of mind with which the Jews, and many of the Jewish Christians, regarded the Apostolic declaration of Free Grace offered to all Nations in Christ.

The same feeling which had shown itself at Antioch in Pisidia, and at Thessalonica, manifested itself also in the cities of Corinth [6] and Ephesus [7], and followed St. Paul to Jerusalem.

This feeling is exhibited in a striking manner in the narrative of the Acts of the Apostles, where it is related, that when St. Paul addressed the Jews in their own tongue from the stairs of the Castle, overhanging the platform of the Temple, at Jerusalem, they kept silence, and listened with attention to his speech, till he uttered the words which had been spoken to him by Christ, "Go; for I will send thee far off unto the Gentiles." Then they lifted up their voice, and cried, "Away with him, he ought not to live;" they shook their garments, and tossed dust into the air, and would have killed him, if he had not been rescued by the Roman power [8].

[1] See 1 Cor. i. 23, 24. 30; x. 1—12; xv. 56, "The strength of sin is the Law" (2 Cor. iii. 6—18; v. 14—21).
This consideration illustrates the importance of studying the Epistles of St. Paul in chronological order, and with special reference to the historical commentary provided for them in the Acts of the Apostles.

[2] Acts xiii. 32—39.
[3] Ib. xiii. 42—51.
[4] Ib. xvii. 5. Cp. 1 Thess. ii. 15, 16.
[5] Ib. xvii. 6—10.
[6] Ib. xviii. 5, 6—12.
[7] Ib. xix. 9.
[8] Ib. xxii. 1. 21—24.

In his speech before Felix, at Cæsarea, the Apostle asserted the harmony of the Gospel with all that is written in the Law and the Prophets[0]; and in his appeal to King Agrippa he affirmed, that the reason of the jealousy of the Jews was no other than this, that he preached to them and to the Gentiles the doctrine of Repentance and Conversion; and that he had taught nothing that was not in accordance with what their Prophets and Moses had said concerning the Passion and Resurrection of Christ; and that He should be the first, on His Resurrection from the Dead, to publish Light to the Jewish Nation, and to the Gentiles.... King Agrippa, believest thou the Prophets? I know that thou believest[1].

Thus the Apostle constantly presented two main assertions to his hearers; and the sacred Historian, his faithful companion, St. Luke, takes care to give special prominence to them, as fundamental principles of the Gospel, namely,

(1) That Remission of Sins, and Everlasting Life, are offered freely by Almighty God to all men, whether Jews or Gentiles, in Christ, and in Christ alone, and

(2) That this Divine Plan of Universal Redemption is not at variance with His previous Revelation in the Holy Scriptures of the Old Testament, and with His particular dispensation to the Jews, in the Levitical Law, and with His choice of them as His people; but had been preannounced by those Scriptures, and had been prefigured by that Law and Dispensation, as their own fulfilment and consummation.

Three of the speeches, which have been just mentioned, were delivered by St. Paul after the date of the Epistle to the Romans; but before his arrival in the City of Rome. His first act on reaching Rome, was, as we find in the Acts of the Apostles, to desire the personal attendance of the principal Jews of that city[2]. His discourse to them, and its consequences, are very expressive of his own feelings, and theirs; and supply a clear illustration of the Epistle which he had addressed about three years previously to the inhabitants, especially the Jews and Jewish Christians, of that city. "For the hope of Israel," he says, "I am bound with this chain;" and he reasons with them from morning to evening "concerning Jesus, both out of the Law of Moses and the Prophets." And some believed, and others did not believe; and when they agreed not among themselves, and departed from him, Paul reminded them of the prediction of their own Prophet, Isaiah, foretelling the unbelief of the Jews[3], and said, "Be it known, therefore, to you, that the salvation of God is sent to the Gentiles, and they will hear it[4]."

The next important help for a profitable study of the Epistle to the Romans, is to be found in the Epistle to the Galatians.

This assistance is rendered more valuable and interesting by the similarity of substance, and difference of circumstances, of the two Epistles;

The Galatian Church consisted mainly of persons who had been originally Gentiles;

The Roman Church was mainly composed of Jewish Christians;

The Galatian Church had been founded by St. Paul;

But the Roman had not been visited by him when he addressed it in his Epistle;

The Galatians had been beguiled by Judaizing Teachers to adopt the ceremonies of the Levitical Law, as necessary to salvation;

The Romans had been trained in conformity to these ceremonies from their infancy.

St. Paul had already had a difficult task to perform in recovering the Gentile Christians of Galatia from the false position into which they had been betrayed, and in rescuing them from the dangerous delusion of building on any other foundation than the merits of Christ, and of placing their hopes of justification and everlasting salvation on works done by themselves in conformity with the Levitical Law, which he shows to have had only a manuductory office, in bringing mankind, regarded as in a state of spiritual pupilage, to maturity and manhood in Christ[5].

He had now the still more arduous duty of endeavouring to persuade the Jewish Christians and Jews of Rome, to regard the Mosaic Law as only a provisional and preparatory Dispensation, and as designed by God to prove man's guilt, but as totally unable to remove it; and as intended to lead the way to the full and final Revelation conceived in the Divine Mind from eternity, and now at length displayed in the Gospel, wherein the Righteousness of God is communicated to men in Christ, the Incarnate Word, reconciling the World to God, by the offering of Himself, in their flesh, and as their Representative; and as joining together all who believe, whether Jews or Gentiles, as fellow-members in Himself[6].

There is good reason to believe, that the labour of love which the Apostle had performed in writing to the Churches of Galatia, had been attended with success, and that they were restored by his efforts to the true foundation, from which they had lapsed, of Faith in the merits of Christ, as their only ground of Justification[7].

The work in which he was now about to engage, in addressing the Jews and Jewish Christians at Rome, was beset with far greater difficulties than those which he had encountered in writing to the Gentile Christians of Galatia.

In the Epistle to the Galatians he had addressed himself to Gentiles, who had recently fallen into error.

But here, in the Epistle to the Romans, he had to contend against the inveterate prejudices of the Jews; prejudices consecrated, as they thought, by their national religion for many generations.

In the Epistle to the Galatians, he had dwelt upon the ceremonial provisions of the Levitical Law, and had shown their transitory character. But this was only a small portion of his argument[8] with the Jews. They might be ready to waive all claims to Justification from conformity to the Levitical Ritual; but it did not therefore follow, that they would not firmly maintain a claim to Justification on the ground of their Obedience to the Moral Law, promulgated by God from Mount Sinai.

II. In order to understand the peculiar character of the difficulties which beset the Apostle, and the drift of his arguments by which he labours to surmount them in the Epistle to the Romans, we must endeavour to realize the feelings of the Jews and Jewish Christians whom he is addressing, and to place ourselves in their position.

With this view let us bear in mind the following facts:

1. The Jews regarded themselves as the elect people of God. They supposed that they had been distinguished for many centuries by Him, Who does all things wisely, and had been separated by Him from all the other Nations of the World, for some adequate reason, which they imagined to be no other than some special merit, inherent in their own race, deriving its origin from Abraham, the Father of the Faithful, the Friend of God.

They could not, therefore, readily accept the Apostle's proposition, that all marks of spiritual distinction between themselves and the Gentiles were now to be effaced, and that the religious privileges which they had inherited, and had hitherto enjoyed for so many generations, were suddenly to be withdrawn, and that all Nations were to be henceforth placed on an equality, and to be received as brethren and fellow-members of an Universal Church; and that this Universal Church had claims to superior antiquity and to higher dignity in the Divine Counsels; that it had been foreknown by God antecedently to the choice of the Jewish Nation, and had been foreordained by Him even from Eternity[9]; and that they themselves were now to be superseded by it in the favour of God.

Such declarations as these seemed to them to involve a sentence of national disfranchisement, and also to expose the Immutable God to a charge of fickleness and caprice, as imputing to Him an alteration of purpose with respect to their own nation, His favoured People; or as even arraigning the Almighty with imbecility, as if He were not able to maintain His own, and had been frustrated

[6] Rom. iii. 2; xvi. 25, 26.

[7] See above, Introduction to the Epistle to the Galatians, pp. 36—42.

[8] St. Paul seems designedly to have distributed his argument with the Jews into three parts,

(1) As to the Ceremonial Law—specially handled in the Epistle to the Galatians.

(2) The Moral Law—in that to the Romans.

(3) The dignity of the Priesthood, and Legislation of the Sinaitic Dispensation, as compared with that of CHRIST—in the Epistle to the Hebrews.

Thus these three Epistles constitute a complete body of Christian Apologetics in reply to Jewish objections; with the exception of one part of the Christian argument, namely, that which relates to the Prophecies of the Old Testament concerning the Messiah, and shows that they have been fulfilled in Jesus Christ.

This portion of the work had been accomplished in the Gospel of St. Matthew. And it is probable that it would have been undertaken by St. Paul in his zeal for the conversion of the Jews, if it had not been already done by another.

[9] Rom. viii. 29, 30; xvi. 26.

in a design prosecuted for two thousand years, and now, as it seemed to them, rashly reduced to an abortion in the Gospel preached by St. Paul.

2. The Jews could also point to the fact, that the only written Revelation that had ever been hitherto vouchsafed by Almighty God to Mankind, had been made to themselves. The Law had been given them from Mount Sinai, with awful manifestations of the Divine Majesty. It had been promulgated with signs and wonders. All infractions of it had been sternly punished. Its mandates were published in order to be obeyed. Obedience to them must, therefore, as they thought, be possible. And if so, it must entitle the obedient to Reward from that Righteous God Who had promulgated the Law.

A doctrine, such as St. Paul's, which represented the Mosaic Law as having only a preparatory and provisional character, and not as perfect in itself, but as designed by its Divine Author to lead to a perfect Dispensation, the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and to be, as it were, absorbed in it; and which affirmed that this Gospel was the consummation for which the Patriarchs and Prophets, and all the holy men who lived before, and under, the Law, had yearned with longing aspirations, as the fulfilment of all their hopes, was in their eyes a disparagement of the Law, and of its Divine Author.

Besides, the Apostle's assertion, that the Law was unable to give Life, but brought with it Death[1], and that all their claims to reward, grounded on their own supposed obedience to the Law, were only treacherous and illusory, and that, if they were to be judged by the Law, apart from the merits of that Jesus Whom their Priests and Rulers had killed by a death which their Law declared to be accursed[2], they had no hope of salvation—was, in their opinion, an outrage against all the holy men of their own Nation who had lived and died under the Law, and against the Almighty Being Himself Who had given the Law in order that they might live thereby, and had communicated to it, as they supposed, His own Divine Attributes of perfection.

3. St. Paul preached Christ Crucified, as the end of the Law for Righteousness to all who believe[3]. He also preached the Divinity of Christ[4]. And on the ground of that Doctrine of Christ's Godhead he rested his assertion of the infinite merits of Christ, "God manifest in the flesh[5]," incorporating all by Faith in Himself, offering an acceptable sacrifice for all, taking away the sins of all, and having the same universal relation to all mankind by Grace, that the common Parent of all, Adam, had by Nature[6]; and by virtue of the two Natures, the Divine and Human, united in His one Person, being no other than "the LORD our RIGHTEOUSNESS" preannounced by the Prophets[7], the very Righteousness of God to us[8], that we might be made the Righteousness of God in Him[9].

But this Doctrine of a suffering Manhood in Christ was very obnoxious to the Jews, who looked for a temporal Deliverer, and placed their hopes of future national emancipation from the Heathen Rule of Rome, and of national aggrandizement, in the triumphs to be achieved, as they fondly hoped, by their expected Messiah.

Nor was the assertion of His Divinity more acceptable to them[10]. They were tenacious of what they supposed to be the true Doctrine of the Divine Unity. They were not, therefore, prepared to accept the doctrine of the Atonement, and man's consequent Justification, as preached by St. Paul, inasmuch as that Doctrine rests on two fundamental verities,—namely, the sufferings of Christ as man, and the infinite virtue and universal efficacy of those sufferings, because they were endured by Him Who is God[11].

4. The treatment which Christ had experienced from the Chief Priests and People of the Jewish Nation at Jerusalem, presented another obstacle, and rendered the reception of the Gospel a difficult thing for the Jews. If Jesus, whom they had crucified, was indeed the promised Messiah (as St. Paul affirmed), if He had been preannounced as such by Moses and the Prophets, if also He is a Divine Person, coequal with the JEHOVAH of their own Scriptures, if He Who is "the Christ according to the flesh, is also God over all, blessed for ever, Amen[12]," then it must be acknowledged, that in rejecting Him, the Jewish Nation had been guilty of an act of blindness and of impiety which no language could describe.

The recognition of the doctrines preached by St. Paul, concerning Christ, involved therefore a sentence of condemnation on their own Hierarchy and Nation—the favoured People of God.

Such difficulties as these beset the Apostle addressing the Jewish Nation, for whose special benefit he wrote the Epistle to the Romans.

He had to perform a task like that of the Father in our Lord's Parable of the Prodigal Son. Indeed, with reverence be it said, in this divinely inspired Epistle, the Father of all Himself, Who had now graciously received the Younger Son—the Gentile World—with gladness into His Own House, the Universal Church of Christ, comes out and entreats the Elder Brother—the Jewish Nation—to enter the House, and join with Him in joy, because his brother "was dead and is alive again, and was lost, and is found[1]."

From these considerations it will appear that the present Epistle necessarily assumed a peculiar form. It may be called an "Apology for the Gospel against Judaism."

This, its apologetic character, must be constantly borne in mind, in order that the writer's design and language may be duly understood. He is necessarily led to state the objections of the Jews. But he was also bound to do this with Christian Charity.

Hence some parts of the Epistle are constructed in the shape of a Theological Dialogue.

The Apostle often identifies himself with his adversaries, and states their objections as if they were his own. He puts himself in their place, and speaks for them.

Objections are introduced by him without any notice of the name of the objector, who finds himself refuted without any personal reflections on himself.

In this way, successive allegations are disposed of with true oratorical skill, blended with genuine Christian courtesy.

The suddenness of the transitions from one objection to another, and the delicate tact and refined sympathy for his opponents, with which the objections are stated and answered, have doubtless been the occasions of some difficulty to the reader.

Besides, the typographical form in which the Epistle is often represented, either as broken up into single verses, or else exhibited in long paragraphs, without any note of transition or intimation of the apologetic and interlocutory character of the Epistle, has served to increase the difficulty.

But if the reader is on the alert, and applies to the Epistle some of that lively sensibility and sympathetic effusion of heart with which it is written, these difficulties will disappear, and those very characteristics which at first may have occasioned embarrassment in his mind, will only serve to increase his affection and veneration for the inspired writer of the Epistle.

III. We are led by these preliminary remarks to take a summary view of the contents of the Epistle itself.

The Apostle begins with proving,—

(1) That the whole world is guilty before God;

(2) That all therefore need a Redeemer;

(3) That a Redeemer has been provided for all in Christ.

His Jewish Readers would readily admit the first assertion as to human guilt, as far as it concerned the Gentiles; but not in respect to themselves.

1. In making this general affirmation, the Apostle takes care to state, that the Gentiles had not been left by God without a Law. He asserts that they had from the beginning, the Original, Universal Law, of Natural Reason and Human Conscience. Indeed if they had not been under a Law they could not be guilty of Sin. For, the essence of Sin is, that it is the transgression of the Law; and where there is no Law, there is no transgression[2].

[1] See above on Luke xv. 11—28.

[2] Rom. iv. 15; v. 13. 20; vii. 8. 1 Cor. xv. 56.

He shows that Law is as ancient as the Creation. Indeed it is older than the Creation. It is a necessary consequence of the Divine Attributes of the Everlasting Himself[1].

2. Thus he prepares the way for the statement of the important truth, that the Mosaic Law, as to its Moral provisions, was not an original, or independent Code, but came in, as it were, indirectly and accidentally, "because of transgressions[2];" and was only a republication of the antecedent, original, universal, unwritten Law, which Mankind had received from God at the beginning, and which still remained engraven in the Conscience of the Gentile world, though its characters had been bedimmed by Sin.

Having stated that the Heathen had always possessed a Law, and that they were guilty before God, because they did not obey that Law[3], and therefore had no hope of Salvation in themselves, he next proceeds to show that the Jews were not in a better condition than the Heathen. This he proves from the testimony of those very Scriptures which the Jews had received from God Himself, and in the possession of which they justly gloried as their distinguishing privilege, and which could not be gainsaid by them, because they were "the oracles of God[4]," and which affirm their guilt, and that there is "none righteous, no not one."

All are under sin; all fail of the glory of God[5]; all, therefore, need a Redeemer.

But God has not left mankind in a state of despair. He has mercifully devised a remedy coextensive with the disease; He has graciously provided a restoration no less universal than the Fall.

All are unrighteous in themselves; but the righteousness of God is freely offered to all, whether Jew or Gentile, in Christ[6].

It is offered, by virtue of Christ's Incarnation and Death, Whom God hath set forth as a propitiation for the sins of all, by fulfilling the Law of Obedience for all, suffering the penalty due for the sins of all, and exhibiting at once God's infinite hatred of sin, and His immense love for sinners.

This righteousness is to be laid hold of by a lively Faith in the cleansing and saving efficacy of the Blood of Christ[7].

St. Paul is thus brought to his main conclusion, that the Evangelical Doctrine of Universal Redemption in Christ, is not a contravention of the Mosaic Law, but a fulfilment of it. "Do we make void the Law through Faith? God forbid! Nay, but we establish the Law[8]."

He next proceeds to reply to some objections raised by the Jews.

1. From the case of Abraham.

The Jews alleged, that Abraham was justified by something inherent in himself; and they pleaded that they, his posterity, could be justified in the same manner. St. Paul shows, that Abraham was not justified by any thing in his own flesh[9],—that is, in his own nature,—irrespectively of God's Spirit; but was justified, because he did not lay his foundation on any thing in himself, but built himself upon the Word of God. Abraham was not justified by reliance on himself, but by dependence upon God; he was not justified by trusting to any supposed merits of his own, but by firm assurance in the promise of God; he was not justified by looking downward, and inwardly, on himself, but by looking upwards, and externally, and, as it were, projecting himself out of himself, and by dwelling, by Faith, in God. He was justified, by emptying himself of himself, in order to be filled with God.

He reminds the Jews, that Abraham was not justified by the Law, nor by Circumcision, but was justified long before the Law was given[10], and even before he was circumcised[11]; and therefore Justification cannot rest on the foundation of Circumcision, or of the Law.

Abraham, he shows, was justified; but not as the father of the Jewish race, but as the father of all of every nation, who are children of his Faith[12], and believe in God, Who raised Jesus Christ from the dead, "Who was delivered to die for our sins, and was raised again for our Justification[13]."

2. Yet further. The Apostle not only goes back to Abraham, the Father of the Faithful, but to Adam, the Father of the whole human race.

He shows that Universal Redemption in Christ is provided by God's love as a gracious remedy correlative to, and coextensive with, universal guilt in Adam. As all men are by nature in Adam, and as all men sinned and fell in him [1], so all men are by grace in Christ, and rise in Him from the grave of sin, and are accepted in Him by God [2].

St. Paul raises the doctrinal superstructure of Universal Redemption on the historical basis of Original Sin.

3. He is thus led further to disabuse the Jews of their erroneous notions concerning their own Law as a Moral Code.

They regarded it as originally and absolutely designed for the Jewish nation, and as intended by God to be an instrument of Justification to them.

But the Apostle carries their thoughts backward from themselves, and from Mount Sinai, even to Adam in Paradise.

He shows the essence of the Law there. The disobedience of Adam proved the pre-existence of Law; and the universal prevalence of Death, the consequence of Sin, proved the universality of Law.

All sinned in Adam, all fell in Adam, and all die in Adam. Even Infants, who are not guilty of actual sin, are subject to death [3]. And why? Because they also are in Adam; they fell in him, and in him they die [4].

The Law, in its moral essence, is coeval with creation, and coextensive with the world.

Why then was the Levitical Law given on Mount Sinai?

That Law came in, as it were, by a side-door [5], in order to prove the universality of man's sin; it came in incidentally and parenthetically, and in order to show,—by giving new clearness and firmness to the dim and worn-out outlines of the original universal Law of Ethics, vouchsafed by God to mankind at the beginning, and by refreshing and re-illuminating its faded characters,—how far mankind had declined and degenerated from that primitive standard. It came in, in order to be a witness of human delinquency and depravity, and in order to humble the haughty imaginations of mankind, who were fondly enamoured of themselves, and vainly supposed that they were able to live up to the requirements of their moral nature, by their own unassisted reason and unregenerate will; and it came in, in order to reveal them to themselves, and to display them in the revolting hideousness of the authentic features of their own moral turpitude, and so to put them out of conceit with themselves, and thus to reduce them from their intellectual intoxication to a state of moral sobriety; and to prove to them their need of a Saviour, and of the cleansing blood of Christ, and of the regenerating and renewing influences of the Holy Ghost; and to prepare them to receive with meek and humble thankfulness the gracious dispensation of the Gospel, in which a healing stream is poured forth from the side of Christ hanging on the cross on Calvary, and stems and throws back, in a retroverted current, and with superabundant power, all the tide of pollution, which had flowed downwards from the Tree of Knowledge in Paradise and from the Disobedience of Adam, and had tainted all his posterity, and had streamed on in the countless channels of its dark waters through every age of the world [6].

4. But here another objection arose. Did not such a doctrine as this afford encouragement to sin?

If the consequences of Adam's sin were overruled for good by Divine Grace in Christ,—if the loss of Paradise by the first Adam had been made, under God's controlling power and love, to be ministerial to the attainment of the far greater glory and felicity of Heaven, through the Second Adam; if heavenly blessedness, far exceeding all the bliss that had been enjoyed by Adam in Paradise, had been freely poured forth from the exhaustless well-spring of God's love on mankind incorporated in Christ, and dwelling in Him by faith, would it not be permissible, and even expedient, to continue in sin, in order that grace may abound [7]?

This question, as the Apostle shows, is founded in ignorance of the primary principles of the Christian Profession.

By the terms of the initial Sacrament of Holy Baptism, by which he is engrafted in Christ, the Christian is dead to sin, and born anew unto righteousness [8]. If he were to continue in sin, he would be falling backward into the state of death from which he has now been delivered, instead of going forward to the state of everlasting life and felicity to which he has been born anew. He would be sinking again into the slavery of Satan, instead of going onward to the glory of the liberty of the children of God[1].

Therefore, the Apostolic assertion that the Christian is no longer under the Law (that is, is no longer under the rigour and the curse of the Law[2]), but is under Grace, affords no countenance to sin.

On the contrary, it is by Divine Grace alone, which he receives by virtue of his membership in Christ, that he is able to overcome sin, and to obey God's law, and to bring forth fruit unto holiness, and to attain the proper end of his existence—the free gift of God in Christ—everlasting life[3].

5. But such reasonings as these might seem to be an impeachment of the Divine Wisdom and Goodness in giving the Mosaic Law.

Was it consistent with those attributes of the unchangeable God, to publish, with dread solemnities, a Law of such a character, that those persons to whom it was given should be eventually released from some of its provisions, especially its penal enactments? And was this release to be regarded by them as having been antecedently contemplated, and previously provided for by Him Who had given the Law, and even as a natural and a necessary consequence and consummation of the Law itself?

Was not the Law from God? Certainly it was. Is not God infinitely good? Was then the Law Sin[4]? Heaven forbid! Was it not, like its Author, holy, just, and good[4]? Doubtless it was. What then was its purpose?

The Apostle shows that man's relation to the Law might be changed, and had been changed, without any disparagement of the Law itself.

Marriage is instituted by God. But the Levitical Law itself had provided that a wife might marry a second husband after the decease of the first[5].

The Law—as far as its rigour and curse are concerned—is now dead to us. That rigour and curse, which was not the consequence of man's nature (as it came originally from God), but was due to the corruption of man's nature, created at first pure and in the image of God, had been removed by the death of Christ[7], endured for the sake of man. We are now made free to be espoused to Him, our heavenly Bridegroom, Who has married our nature, and has joined us to Himself in holy wedlock; and Who has given life to the Universal Church by virtue of His own Death on the cross, as Adam gave life to Eve, "the mother of all living," formed from his side as he slept.

But shall we say that "the Law is sin" because we are delivered from its rigour and curse by Christ? Heaven forbid! St. Paul here leads us to look back on the state of man before the Law had been given from Mount Sinai.

In the loving fulness of his Apostolic heart, by which he made himself "all things to all men[8]," he identifies himself with human nature, in its primitive universality, as it existed before the Decalogue.

Sin is the transgression of the Law; and "where no Law is, there is no transgression."

It is true that there never was a time when human nature was without Law.

But in the course of many ages after the Fall, the voice of primeval Law became feebler and feebler. Its characters, inscribed in the human Conscience, became more and more faint and evanescent. Man was almost without the presence and consciousness of Law; and by consequence he was almost also without the knowledge of sin. Sin itself seemed to be laid asleep. It was, as it were, dead[9]. A miserable state of ignorance, it is true, but one of comparatively little responsibility[10].

While man was dreaming away his life in this spiritual swoon of unconsciousness, suddenly the trumpet sounded on Mount Sinai; and a Law, clear in its tones, like the loud voice of the trumpet with which it was given, was promulgated by God. This solemn sound aroused the human Conscience from its slumber, and with it awakened Sin. It showed to man what was the will of God. It displayed God's Law before his eyes; a Law which (in its moral provisions) was no new creation, but was a republication of the old, the original Law, under which man had been from the beginning. It showed to him Sin, in its true character, as rebellion against the Will, and violation of the Law, of God. And it did more than this. The Law of God, the All Pure and All Holy, encountered Human Depravity face to face,—it came into conflict with it.

And what was the consequence?

Man, impatient of control, and exasperated by interference, resented this manifestation of the Law. Elated by the pride of his stubborn will, tainted by the disease of his disordered nature, and weighed down by the heavy load of inveterate evil habits, he was indignant at the voice of Law; he hated Law even because it was Law; he spurned at it, and kicked against it, because it was holy, and just, and good, and was therefore offensive to himself in his unholiness, and injustice, and wickedness; he rebelled, audaciously and impiously rebelled, against the Law of God, even because it was the Law of God.

Yet, all the while, Man's Conscience and Man's Reason could not deny that the Law was good. They were on the side of the Law. But his Conscience and Reason were under the tyranny of his Will and Appetite, and their voice was drowned by the vociferous clamour of his Passions.

Human Nature was then like a Civil Government in the turbulent time of a Revolution, when the ignobler members of the Commonwealth gain the ascendancy, and hold in thraldom those who ought to rule. The inner voice of Conscience and of Reason, which ought to exercise a Royal Supremacy over Human Nature, but which uttered their mandates in vain, and were powerless to overrule the madness of the rebellious democracy, and furious mob, of excited and inflamed Lusts, served only to show, to what a miserable condition of bondage Human Nature was reduced.

Thus by reason of man's corrupt and wretched condition, the publication of the Law could not remove sin, but only displayed, provoked, and aggravated it. It showed the foulness and loathsomeness of man's moral disease, and caused his wounds to fester, and made sin to be more exceeding sinful[1].

Well, therefore, might the Apostle exclaim in the name of suffering Humanity, "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Well might he reply from the bottom of his heart, "I thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord[2]."

He, God of God, the Everlasting Son of the Everlasting Father, has taken Human Nature, and by becoming incarnate, and being born for me, has done for me what by reason of the weakness of my flesh the Law could not do. He, the Incarnate God, has even made my flesh, by which I fell, to be the instrument of my rising again; He, by suffering death for me, which He could not do unless He had taken my flesh, has delivered me from the body of death, the penalty of the Law, and has raised me to life, and has infused His Divine Spirit into my nature, and has imparted to me His Righteousness; and at the same time that He has taken away the curse of the Law, He has enabled me to perform the righteous requirement of the Law[3], and has given me, in His own glorious Resurrection in the flesh, a pledge of my Resurrection in His likeness, if I continue in Him.

Therefore, I am under the strongest obligations to live, not after the Flesh, but after the Spirit[4].

6. They who thus live are sons of God by adoption, and are heirs of all things in Christ, and will be glorified together in Him.

Therefore they rejoice in tribulation, because it was His path to glory, and is also theirs; and they are not staggered by sufferings, because in their own sufferings, and in the vanity and bondage of all earthly things, they recognize a consequence of the Fall, and a cause of thankfulness for their Recovery, and a pledge of future emancipation into glory to those who are redeemed in Christ[5].

They know that all things work together for good to them that love God, who see the proof of His love to them in the fact, that they have been called into His Church Universal, according to His purpose, which He purposed in Christ from the beginning. All things work together for good to those who love God, whom God foreknew in Him, and foreordained for conformity to the likeness of His own Son, so that He might be the Firstborn among many brethren, and whom in due course of time He called into His Church, and justified them by their Baptism into His body, and glorified them by their union with Him[6].

Yes, He glorified them already. For may we not regard this blessed consummation of glory as already realized, when we look at what God has already done for us all? Since He spared not even His own Son, but delivered Him up to death for us all, how is it possible that He should not likewise, together with this gift of Him, freely give us all things?

[1] vii. 13. [2] vii. 24, 25. [3] viii. 1—4.

Who, therefore, now can bring any condemnatory charge against us who love God, and who are shown, by His gracious acts to us, to be greatly beloved of Him, and who are therefore authorized to call ourselves the elect people of God? It is God Who justifieth us,—Who is he that condemneth us[1]? When we behold Christ, Who took our Nature, and died in our flesh for us all, now raised from the dead, and enthroned in our Nature at the Right Hand of God,—when we behold Him ever living to pray for us, there we see our own Justification, there we see our own Exaltation, there we see our own Glorification[2].

May we not therefore speak of ourselves (as far as God's will is concerned) as already saved[3], glorified in Christ? May we not feel assured, that, if we do our part,—we, whose Nature Christ has taken, and for whom He died (such is the immensity of His Love), and Who has carried that Nature into heaven, and who have been made sons of God in Him, cannot fail of everlasting salvation? for it is written, that "every one who believeth in Him shall not be confounded[4]."

7. This declaration, that God now offers salvation to all men in Christ, and that all, of every nation, who embrace that offer, and comply with its conditions, and dwell by faith in Christ, are God's elect people, raises the question concerning the relation of the Jews to God under the Gospel.

Are not the Jews His elect people? Were not they chosen by Him, and set apart by a special mark as His own? Did He not therefore see in them some special merit, on account of which He was induced to make this distinction between them and all other nations? Have they been cast off by Him? Is He then changeable and inconstant? Is not this assertion of His election of an Universal Church, from all Nations in Christ, irreconcileable with the love and faithfulness of Him Who is infinitely Good and ever the same?

8. The answer to these questions had been in part anticipated by the Apostle.

He had spoken of the Universal Church of all faithful people as foreseen and foreordained in Christ[5]. The Christian Church is the Elect People of God even from Eternity[6].

The choice of the Jews, as God's favoured people, was like the giving of the Mosaic Law, a parenthetical act.

The Law of Moses was a posterior promulgation of the Original Law of Eternal and Immutable Morality. It came in subsequently and accidentally, "because of transgressions[7]."

So the Choice of the Jews. It was not God's primary purpose. His antecedent and original design was to save all in Christ. The subsequent choice of a particular people, the Jews, could not frustrate that original purpose. No. It prepared the way for its effect.

The Apostle meets the question of the Jews, concerning the alleged inconsistency in the divine Counsels, by a full acknowledgment of the special privileges of the Jewish Nation; and he happily sums up his recital of their national prerogatives, by the solemn asseveration, that from out of them "sprung the Christ according to the Flesh, Who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen[8]." This, he reminds them, is their greatest privilege; and he invites them to accept the Gospel as their own national inheritance in Christ.

He then grounds his answer on the foundation of God's Sovereignty. God chooses whom He wills. Even in the case of Abraham He showed this. He chose the seed of Abraham by Sarah, and not by Hagar or Keturah[9]. In Isaac shall thy seed be called. This was still more remarkable in the case of Isaac's children, born of the same mother at the same birth. He loved Jacob, and hated Esau[10]. They who are chosen are not themselves the cause of the choice. They have not entitled themselves to be chosen, by any thing inherent in themselves, or by reason of their own

[3] St. Paul therefore says, "according to His mercy He saved us, by the washing of Regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost" (Titus iii. 5).—He speaks of our salvation as a thing already done; for so it is, as far as God's part is concerned. It remains only for us to do ours. Cp. Eph. ii. 5. 8.

works[1]. It is not from their merits, either actual or foreseen, but only from God's love, that the choice proceeds. That which God loves in those whom He foreknows and chooses, is His own work in them. And that which He hates in those whom He rejects, is their own sin.

Here is an answer to the Jewish notion, that they had been constituted to be God's elect people on account of their own deserts.

9. In reading these declarations of the Apostle, certain principles are to be borne in mind.

God is Sovereign Lord of all. He is the sole Author of all good in man.

He also foreknows all men from Eternity, and foresees what every man will be. All things are present to Him at once.

He loves the good and holy. But it is not on account of any thing inherently good in themselves (as distinguished from goodness derived from God), and growing out of themselves as from a root, that He loves them. But He loves in them His own image and His own work. He loves in them His own Nature. He loves in them the work of Christ, and of the Holy Ghost. He loves that work not resisted, marred, and frustrated by them, but cherished in them[2], by a right exercise of their Free will, which is the gift of God. He loves His own People foreseen and foreknown from Eternity in Christ.

So likewise what He hates in the wicked is not any thing which He has made or foreordained in them. What he hates in them is not the Nature which He has given them, but it is that Nature spoiled and corrupted by their own sin; it is that Nature perverted and depraved by their abuse of the good gifts of Reason, Conscience, Grace, and Free Will which He in His love has bestowed upon them.

And in choosing according to His own Sovereign Will and Pleasure, He chooses nothing unjustly, arbitrarily, capriciously, and unreasonably. "There are no antinomies with God[3]." He does nothing without Counsel. The exercise of His Sovereign Power is ever guided and regulated by His infinite Justice, infinite Wisdom, and infinite Love[4].

10. The Sovereignty of God, Who is infinitely wise, just, holy, and merciful, is clearly seen in the case of those who proudly resist His Will.

His power is shown even in their Rebellion against it. And the mightier the human Rebel is, so the punishment inflicted on him by the divine Justice is more signal, and the conquest achieved over him by the divine Power is more glorious.

Therefore the Apostle well chooses the example of Pharaoh, a royal rebel against God[5]; one whose resistance against God appeared to be triumphant for a time, during the long period in which he held God's people in bondage; one whose pride and stubbornness defied the divine Majesty and Omnipotence, which displayed itself in mighty works, calling him mercifully to repentance, and chastening him justly for his sins.

In the end, God conquered Pharaoh by means of Pharaoh's own acts. He punished him by his sins. He chastened him by his hardness of heart. In order that Pharaoh might not imagine that he by his power had triumphed over God, and in order that others might not be led by him to presume and to resist God, He declared to Pharaoh that He had raised him up on high in order that He might show by him His power, and in order that His Name might be proclaimed in all the Earth by his means[6].

The display of God's sovereignty to the world is the end which He has in view in raising up all men to high dignity and royal estate. And this purpose is not frustrated, although they resist Him, as Pharaoh did. The end is always sure; for it is an end fixed by God. The means are left free to man. Men may choose the good or the evil; they may obey God or rebel against Him. This is by God's own permission; for He has given them Free Will. If they obey Him, as God desires and commands and invites them to do by many gracious promises of reward, then His glory is promoted by their actions. But even if they resist Him, in defiance of His commands, and in spite of His threats and encouragements, still, His purpose, in raising them up to eminence, is not defeated by them. Whether they obey, or rebel against, Him, the end, which is His glory, is always attained. His design cannot be frustrated by their sin. Indeed, if they rebel against Him, the attainment of His end is made more triumphant by their endeavours to prevent it. The irresistible Might and Majesty of the Divine Conqueror is made more illustrious even by the pride and power of the human Rebel who is conquered. The glory of God is displayed in the overwhelming of Pharaoh and of his host engaged in an act of rebellion, and plunged down, in the fiercest paroxysm of his fury against heaven, into the lowest depths of the Red Sea.

11. Let no one, on the ground of God's irresistible Power, proceed to arraign God's Justice. It is enough for us, that God, Who is infinite in Wisdom and Goodness, acts as He does. God's Sovereign Omnipotence is never at variance with His Infinite Justice. Therefore who art thou, O man, that repliest against God[1]? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus[2]? He has power, if He had so willed it, to create one vessel to honour, and another to dishonour.

But[3], instead of doing this, He, in His long-suffering, bears with vessels of wrath fitted by themselves for destruction[4], and at last overtaken, like Pharaoh, by that destruction for which they had prepared themselves.

Thus He shows His wrath and power by them. On the other hand, He shows the riches of His glory on vessels of mercy which He Himself prepared for glory[5].

Here then is your answer. You, Jews, who complain that if God has chosen an Universal Church in Christ, He has dealt unfairly with you His Elect People, may see yourselves also chosen here. Every one who believeth in Christ shall not be confounded[6]. This Universal Church is for Jews as well as for Gentiles. Indeed, salvation is first offered to you[7]. And it is for Gentiles as well as for Jews, as your own Prophets foretold that it would be[8]. And the goodness of the God of Abraham is magnified by the extension of His grace in Abraham's seed, which is Christ, to all who are true children of Abraham, by imitating his Faith.

True it is, that while Gentiles have been received as God's people, and have attained to that Righteousness, which God offers to all through faith in Christ[9], many of you have failed of the glory designed for you by God. And why? because you build yourselves on yourselves, and not, as your father Abraham did, on something external to himself, namely, on the Rock of Salvation, which God has provided for you, and which many of you (as your own Prophets forewarned you would be the case) have made to be for yourselves "a stone of stumbling, and Rock of offence[10]."

This is no new thing. You had previous intimation of it from Moses. He told you that no one can be justified by the Law. It is only he whose obedience is perfect, that can hope for Justification thereby. But this is not your case. It is not the case of any man. No man's obedience is perfect. Christ alone fulfilled all Righteousness.

12. But your Scriptures speak to you also of another mode of Justification, a method which is not from man, but from God; one which is built by Faith on Christ. And this foundation is universal. It is the same for all, whether Jew or Gentile, for there is no difference. Every one who believeth on Him shall not be ashamed. The same God is rich in mercy to all who call upon Him. He therefore sends Preachers to all. He preannounced in your Scriptures this universal evangelization. Our office in preaching to the Gentiles (an office which you regard with hatred and indignation) is presupposed by the Old Testament, and is there blessed by God[11]. And He preannounced also in your Scriptures, that many of you would reject the offer, and that it would be received by the Gentile world[12].

Therefore the doctrine which we preach of Universal Redemption by Christ, and of Justification by Faith in Him, is no novel doctrine; it is contained in the Scriptures in your hands.

But do not therefore suppose, that God, in receiving the Gentiles, has rejected you. You may, perhaps, imagine that the number of the Jews who have accepted God's offers in Christ, is small. Some certainly have accepted them. I, myself, who preach Christ to the Gentiles, am one[13]. There is a remnant according to the election of Grace[14]. There is a residue of faithful Israelites building on God's free favour in Christ, and not relying for hopes of Justification on any supposed merit of their own. The rest, it is true, have been blinded. It was prophesied in your Scriptures that so it would be[15].

Here also, in His own due time, God will overrule evil with good. His design is to provoke you to godly jealousy by means of the Gentiles[16]. His purpose will be effected in its season, and so "all Israel will be saved[17]."

IV. 1. The Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh Chapters, to which we have now been referring, have been made the groundwork of controversy concerning Predestination, Election, and Reprobation.

These questions will be considered further, as far as the language of this Epistle requires, in the course of the notes on those Chapters.

But a general observation, in addition to what has been already said on this subject, may be offered here with respect to them.

How did the question of Predestination come under St. Paul's consideration in this Epistle at all?

It did not arise with reference to the future salvation of any particular individuals, as contrasted with other individuals.

But it was produced by the opinion of the Jews, that they themselves, as a Nation, were the elect People of God; and that as such they had special merits of their own, entitling them, nationally, to such a favour from Him.

It arose from the allegation of the Jews, that the Apostle, in affirming that God had now received an Universal Church in Christ as His chosen people, was charging Him Who is unchangeable and all-wise, with inconstancy and vacillation, or with lack of forethought or foreknowledge, as revoking a privilege awarded by Himself to the Jewish People, and as transferring or extending that privilege to others, the Gentiles, from whom they, the Jews, had been expressly severed and kept apart, as an Elect People, by God. This consideration may serve to remove the difficulties that have been found by some in these Chapters.

2. It is certain, that the Apostle is not here treating professedly the question of personal Election or Reprobation. He has his eye fixed on a very different subject, namely, on the blessed truth, that God had chosen in Christ an Universal Church, as His elect People, from the beginning.

St. Paul's purpose is, to show the entire conformity, harmony, and consistency, of this previous choice, with another no less certain fact, namely, God's choice of the Jews as His peculiar people.

It is also certain, that the Apostle no where asserts that God has created any one for wrath and destruction. But, on the contrary, St. Paul has declared, that God "spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all[1];" and he has said more than once in this Epistle that every one who believes in Him will not be confounded[2].

He teaches, that God has foreknown and foreordained to salvation an Universal Church; and that He has purchased to Himself that Church by the precious blood of His Dear Son, and that He has chosen, as His own elect People, all, whether Jew or Gentile, of every nation under heaven, who are incorporated in the Body of Christ, and constantly abide in Him by Faith.

3. God's primary Will and Predestination is, that all men should be saved.

"He will have all men to be saved" (says St. Paul), "and to come to the knowledge of the truth[3]."

It is God's Will also that every man should have Free Will. "Ipse nos velle vult." And therefore it is God's will, that all should be able to receive or reject the offer of salvation made to all men in Christ.

God predestinates every man to be free in the exercise of his will. And He gives Grace, in order to quicken our will. And He gives us Reason, Conscience, and Scripture, to guide it. It is also God's Will that they who freely accept the terms of salvation which are freely made by Him, should be saved; and that they who abuse their free will to reject what He offers, and desires them to accept[4], shall fail of salvation, and incur punishment and perdition.

Therefore it may be truly said, that God predestinates the faithful to salvation, and predestinates the unbelieving to destruction.

This is what St. Paul declares, when he says that God "is the Saviour of all men," that is, in desire and design. This is His primary predestination. But then the Apostle adds, "specially of them that believe[5]." He predestinates all in desire, and He predestinates the faithful in act.

4. But in making this statement, we must not fall into the Arminian error, which represents man's goodness, foreseen by God, as the ground of God's predestination of the godly.

God predestinates the godly to salvation; but the primary cause of that predestination on God's side is His Love; and the primary cause of it on man's side is not any thing inherent in man as man, but it is the work of God in man; it is the Nature created by God, and taken by Christ; it is man, seen by God, not as man is in himself, but as he was originally when formed in God's image, and as he is, now that he is restored and created anew in Christ, Who has assumed man's nature, and has made man a member of Himself, and a temple of the Holy Ghost, by Regeneration and Justification. It is man redeemed, and sanctified, and dwelling in Christ, and not resisting God's grace, but abiding in Christ unto the end, who is the object of God's love and the subject of His Predestination. Man's Faith in God is indeed a condition of that Predestination, but God's Love to man in Christ is its cause.

Almighty God foreknows from Eternity who will be saved. But God's Foreknowledge, though it foresees every thing, causes nothing. He foreknows every thing that will be; but nothing will be because He foreknows it. And man has not divine prescience. Man cannot tell who will be saved. No man can be sure even of his own future salvation[1]. And he cannot read the heart, and pronounce sentence on others.

And man must speak as man, and not as God. It is not for him to usurp the judgment-seat of God. Man can only speak from what he sees. And wherever he sees that God has freely given all the necessary means of grace and salvation, there, in his Christian charity, "which hopeth all things," he ought to presume that God's good counsel will not be frustrated by man's sin, to man's own loss and destruction. St. Paul therefore speaks of all his brethren in Christ as "called and holy[2]," and he regards all Christian men and women as "the elect people of God[3];" and, in a like spirit, his brother Apostle St. Peter exhorts all Christians to "give diligence to make their calling and election sure[4]."

5. It is remarkable, that (as if in order to clear away all doubt on this subject) St. Paul commences the next Epistle which he wrote, namely, that to the Ephesians, by addressing them all as predestinated in Christ. The preamble of that Epistle (Eph. i. 3—14) is the best elucidation of the doctrine of Predestination as taught in the Epistle to the Romans.

With regard to our own predestination, the Apostle teaches us to look for the evidence of it (as far as it can be seen), (1) in what God has done for us; and (2) in our own lives.

"All things," he says, "work together for good to them that love God, to them that are called according to His purpose[5]."

The fact that we have been called by God into His Church is a proof of His Love to us.

The fact that He has given His only-begotten "for us all," is another proof of His immense Love to us. It is a pledge that He will deny us nothing, if we are faithful to Him, but will "freely give us all things." It is an earnest of future glory.

Our own love to Him is also a proof of His love to us; for our love of Him is a fruit of His Spirit given to us, and working in our hearts.

We have been called by Him, we have been justified by Faith in Him and have received the Seal of Pardon in Baptism[6], and have been born anew in Christ; and if we feel that we love Him, if we see the fruits of that love in our actions, if we recognize the likeness of Christ in ourselves, and of His life in our lives, then we may humbly hope and believe, that we have been predestinated by Him to life eternal.

For, whom God foreknew, them He did predestinate to be conformed to the likeness of His Son, and whom He did predestinate them He also called, and whom He called, them He justified[7]. Our calling, therefore, and Justification, together with our love to Him, are evidences of our Predestination. Whom He justified, them (in His divine will and design) He also glorified. And if He be for us, who shall be against us? who shall separate us from the love of Christ? what can hinder this predestination of us (who have been called, and who love God) from taking effect? Nothing. For, in all our afflictions, we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. I am persuaded, then, that nothing will be able to separate us from the love of God in Christ. And, therefore, by His grace, we will continue in His love; and we know that he who "endureth to the end shall be saved[8]."

6. The Calvinistic scheme of Predestination fails, when it attempts to account for the introduction of the question of Election in this Epistle. It cannot explain the presence of the topic here [2].

It fails also, when it endeavours to reply to the Apostle's Jewish objectors.

If the Calvinistic interpretation of these chapters is applied to the solution of the questions, by which the Jews, with whom the Apostle is arguing, pressed St. Paul, it will be found to be wholly inadequate to the purpose.

Indeed, that Interpretation would involve the Apostle in an irrelevant and weak paralogism, which would recoil on himself to his own discomfiture and confusion. Of little avail would it have been for him to assure the Jews (who supposed themselves to be God's elect), that some few, unknown, persons, had been predestined by God to salvation, under the Gospel, and that all the rest of mankind had been eternally condemned as Reprobates, and were doomed by an irresistible decree to eternal perdition.

Yet this is the assertion which the Calvinistic interpretation imputes to St. Paul.

7. Let us turn from this erroneous interpretation to that of Primitive Antiquity.

The whole of the Apostle's argument then becomes clear and convincing. It becomes also persuasive, encouraging, and attractive.

You Jews allege that you are the Elect People of God; and that by our preaching of the doctrine of Universal Redemption and of Justification by Faith in Christ, you are disinherited. Heaven forbid! God's gifts are without repentance [3]. The first offer of the Gospel is made to [1] See on Rom. viii. 29, 30. Eph. i. 5—11.

[2] The following summary of the Calvinistic doctrines, as far as they bear on the questions mentioned above, is derived from the editor's Occasional Sermons (First Series, p. 87), where other authorities on the subject are collected :—

"God," says Calvin, "preordained and forewilled Adam's fall," and "all are born of the same corrupt mass of perdition," and "out of this mass God elects some." (Calvin, De Prædest. pp. 607, 608. 613. Inst. iii. 23, §§ 3, 4. 7. Comm. in Rom. ix. 23) "Predestination," he says, "is the eternal decree of God, by which He determined what He would do with every man. For all men are not created on equal terms; but to some of them eternal life is preordained, and to others eternal condemnation. Therefore, accordingly as a person is created for one or other of these two ends, so, I affirm, he is predestinated either to life or death." (Calvin, Inst. III. c. xxi. § 5.) They who are called to a state of salvation are few in number compared with those who are left in a state of perdition. "The Grace of God," he says, "does not rescue many from eternal death, and it leaves the world in that perdition to which it is doomed." (Calvin, Inst. III. xxii. § 7.)

He teaches, that they who have once received grace can never fall away.

"They," he says, "who are once engrafted by Christ into His body, can never perish; for Christ will exert the power of God to preserve them, which power is greater than all. They who are incorporated in Christ can never fail of salvation." (Inst. III. ii. § 12. III. xxii. § 7; xxi. § 7.)

He defines saving faith to be a personal assurance in the individual that he himself will be saved. Thus: "Faith is a firm and certain knowledge of God's goodwill to ourselves; and he only is a true believer, who, being persuaded of God's fatherly love to himself, and relying on His promises to himself, has an undoubting confidence in his own future salvation." (Inst. III. ii. § 16.)

All they who will fail of salvation, are represented by Calvin as created for the purpose of being condemned eternally.

"Almighty God," he says, "created them for shame in life, and for perdition in death." (Inst. III. xxiv. § 12.)

"They are born from their mother's womb devoted to inevitable destruction." (Inst. III. xxiii. § 6.)

Hence Calvin is far from allowing that Christ died for all men; or that offers of salvation are made freely by God in Him to all, and that the merits of His sufferings extend to all nations in every age.

On the contrary, he thus speaks:—"How comes it to pass that the fall of Adam has involved so many nations, with their infant children, irremediably, in everlasting perdition? How, but because it so pleased God? 'Decretum quidem horribile, fateor!' 'A horrible decree! I grant it.' But no one can deny that God foreknew it, because He Himself had so foreordained it." (Inst. III. xxiii. § 8.)

Hence it is alleged by him, that Free Will is no essential part of man's nature. He says, "Man's desires and endeavours have no part in working out his salvation." (Calvin, Inst. III. xxiv. § 1.) "It is not in man's power to refuse or to accept divine grace." (Inst. II. iii. § 11.) "God," he says, "so moves the will, not (as for many ages it has been taught and believed) as if it were in our choice whether we will resist or obey the motions of grace. We must repudiate the assertion so often iterated by Chrysostom, in which he says (see Chrys. in Joann. vi. 44), that 'whom God draws, He draws willing to be drawn.'" (Inst. II. iii. § 10.)

Hence the sounder Confession of the Lutherans, to be subscribed by their Clergy, thus speaks:—

"The false and erroneous doctrine of the Calvinists concerning Predestination and Providence, is as follows:—

"I. That Christ did not die for all, but only for the elect.

"II. That God created the greatest part of men for damnation, and willeth not that they should be converted and live.

"III. That the Elect and Regenerate cannot lose their faith, or forfeit the grace of the Holy Ghost, or be damned, although they commit heinous sin.

"IV. That those who are not elect are necessarily damned, and cannot be saved .... although they live holy and blameless lives." (From Articuli Visitatorii a Ministris Ecclesiarum, &c. ad subscribendum propositi anno Christi 1592. See Hase, Libri Symbolici, p. 866, ed. Lips. 1837.)

Hence it may readily be inferred, what the teaching of Calvin is concerning the Sacrament of Baptism. "It is a great error," he says, "to imagine that Sacraments confer grace, provided we do not oppose to them the bar of mortal sin" (which is the case with infants). "This opinion," he adds, "is pernicious, deadly, diabolical." (Inst. IV. xiv. § 14.)

"In Baptism there is no virtue of Regeneration or Salvation, but only a knowledge and assurance of them." (Inst. IV. xv. § 2.)

"Baptism is not represented as an effectual means of grace, but a sign and assurance to the elect that God pardons their sins." (Inst. IV. xv. §§ 1. 10; xvi. § 22.)

"The children of believers are baptized, not in order that they may be made therein the children of God; but they are thus, by a sacred sign, received into the Church because they already belong to Christ's body." (Inst. IV. xv. §§ 20. 22.) And one of Calvin's disciples says, that "St. Augustine greatly erred in attributing too much efficacy to Baptism; for he did not perceive that it was only an outward Mark of Regeneration, but asserted, that by the act of Baptism we are regenerate, and adopted, and engrafted into the family of Christ."

[3] Rom. xi. 29.

you. Believe in Christ. Then you also, yes, all of you, are God's People. Then you are God's elect. You are His favoured Heritage in a far higher sense than you were before, or could ever have hoped that you would be. You are sons of God in Christ, you are united to one another as fellow-members in Him Who comes from you "according to the flesh," and is also "God over all, blessed for evermore. Amen[1]."

V. The doctrine of St. Paul thus expounded is followed appropriately and logically by a series of practical precepts concerning ordinary duties[2].

Such exhortations would have no rational connexion with the foregoing argument of the Apostle, if he had intended to show, (as the Calvinistic theory alleges that he did,) that men are what they are, by a fatal necessity, and that the greater part of mankind were created, by the Father of the Saviour of the world, to be eternally lost.

But these exhortations follow naturally from the Apostle's statement, that as we are all by nature in Adam, so by grace we are all in Christ; and that as we are all members of Christ, so the law of our being is Love[3].

The remainder of the Epistle is also of a practical character. It follows as a corollary from the argument of the whole Epistle, that—

(1) All are guilty before God;
(2) All need a Saviour;
(3) Christ died for all;
(4) And we are all one body in Him.

Therefore let not the strong judge the weak, nor the weak judge the strong. Let the brother who has been rescued from Heathen Idolatry, and been received into the Church of Christ, not censure him who has passed from the Law to the Gospel, and from the Synagogue into the Church. But let Gentile Christians and Jewish Christians "bear one another's burdens, and so fulfil the Law of Christ;" and let them join together in praising God with one heart and mouth, and so fulfil the prophecies of the Old Testament[4].

After sundry salutations to brethren at Rome, he closes the Epistle with a Doxology, in which he expresses the main doctrine of the whole. He there claims for the Gospel its true title. He declares it to be the Mystery hidden in the Divine Counsels from Everlasting; and to have been preannounced by the Prophets; and to be now manifested by the command of God to All nations for the obedience of Faith in Christ.

Thus he asserts the precedence of the Gospel over the Law, and declares that the calling out from all Nations of an Universal Church in Christ was God's design before the foundation of the world[5].

VI. On the whole it may be affirmed, that the great characteristic of this Epistle is its Universality.

It is addressed to the great Capital of the Fourth and Last Monarchy of the world. It confutes the exclusive notions of the Jewish People, who would have limited God's mercies to themselves. It proves from the Jewish Scriptures, as well as from the World's History, that all are guilty before God. It proclaims the universal prevalence of human corruption, and the universal effusion of divine grace. It declares the Universality of sin and death overflowing on mankind from the Fall of the First Adam; and it preaches the Universality of Redemption, Justification, and Sanctification procured for the World by the death of the Second Adam, Jesus Christ.

It displays Mankind alienated from God by the one, and reconciled to God by the other. It exhibits all men as reunited to Him,—in His Will and desire,—as His sons by adoption in Christ. It declares that Jews and Gentiles are joined to one another, and to God in Him, Who is both God and Man, Jesus Christ; and Who is both the Seed of the Woman, and was also born under the Law, and thus belongs to both Gentiles and Jews. It represents them all as knit together in One Universal Church, foreknown by God from Eternity, and purchased by the precious Blood of His Dear Son. And it affirms that, in this Church Universal, God offers freely, fully, and actually the gift of the Holy Ghost and of Eternal Life to all who believe in Christ, and who dwell by Faith and Love in Him.

It may, indeed, seem wonderful, that an Epistle designed as a refutation of narrow theories concerning the saving efficacy of Christ's Death, and distinguished by its bold declarations of God's immense Love to Mankind in Christ, should have been perverted by some into an occasion and instrument for disseminating narrow notions, similar to those which it was intended to banish from the world.

But the most wholesome food is abused by the Evil One into the most noxious poison.

There is, however, little fear that any should be beguiled by these erroneous perversions, if the Apostle's aim in writing this Epistle be steadily kept in view; and if the persons to whom and by whom it was written, and if the time and the circumstances of its composition, be carefully borne in mind; and if the reader does not allow his mind to dwell exclusively or mainly on single expressions occurring here and there in the Epistle [1], but considers their relation to the context, and to the whole scope of the Epistle, and to the other Epistles of St. Paul, and to the general Teaching of Holy Writ, not as expounded by some few Expositors of comparatively recent date, but as interpreted by the consentient doctrine and concurrent practice of the Universal Church of Christ in her Creeds, Prayers, and Administration of Sacraments, and in other Symbols of Faith, and in the writings of her ancient and best Divines; and if this work be performed with fervent prayer to the Holy Ghost, Who inspired the heart of the Apostle to unfold fully to the world the blessed truth which was proclaimed by Christ Himself; "God so loved the world, that He gave His Only-Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting Life [2]."

On the Doctrine of Justification, and on the Teaching of St. Paul on this subject, compared with that of St. James.

I. The following summary of Propositions (which will be more fully illustrated in the course of the Notes on this Epistle) may serve to prepare the way for the consideration of this subject, especially as treated by St. Paul to the Romans and to the Galatians:—

(1) Almighty God is infinitely holy, and hates sin.

(2) Man is by nature in a state of sin, and liable to God's wrath.

(3) The word "to justify," as applied in Holy Scripture to man in his fallen state, signifies to acquit, to absolve, to declare and pronounce him not guilty, by a judicial act [3]. And Justification signifies acquittal, a grant of pardon, a discharge from penalty, an acceptation of man as just [4], and entitled as such (as long as he remains in a justified state) to the everlasting salvation promised by God to the righteous.

(4) He Who thus justifies man is GOD. "It is God that justifieth [5]."

(5) The first moving cause of man's Justification by God is God's infinite Love, and free Grace, and Favour to man.

(6) The meritorious cause of Man's Justification by God is the sacrifice offered by the Son of God, Who took man's nature, and became our Second Adam and Head, summing up all mankind in Himself, so that in Him we were created anew, and became in Him a new Man, and are made the sons of God by adoption [6]; and Who in our nature fulfilled perfectly the Law of God by a sinless Obedience, and at length died in that nature on the Cross for the sins of the whole world, in order to redeem it from the bondage of sin, and to reconcile God to man by the plenary propitiation, satisfaction, and expiation then made by the infinite value of the blood of Him Who is God and Man, and Who purchased Mankind to Himself by the price of that blood, and redeemed them by that ransom from everlasting death to everlasting life in Himself, and who incorporates and engrafts us as members in Himself, so that God sees us in Christ, and accepts us in the Beloved [7], Who is "the Lord our Righteousness [8]," and is made by God Righteousness to us [9], so that we might become the Righteousness of God in Him [10].

[4] The question, whether the word "to justify" is used by St. Paul to describe an infusion of a quality of Righteousness, as well as the act of our acquittal, by reason of imputation to us of Christ's Righteousness, will be considered below in notes on iii. 24—26. Cp. on i. 16.

(7) The immediate and efficient cause of man's Justification is the operation of the Holy Ghost, applying the benefits procured by the meritorious cause (the death of the Son of God), and derived to us through Him from the origin of all good, the Love of God the Father [1].

(8) Thus the Three Persons of the Ever-Blessed Trinity are seen co-operating in the work of man's Justification.

The first cause is God the Father and Creator of all; from Whom are all things.

The second cause is God the Son, the Redeemer; through Whom are all things.

The third is God the Holy Ghost, the Sanctifier; by Whom are all things.

(9) The Holy Ghost applies the benefits of Christ's death by certain instrumental means, appointed by God for the conveyance of these benefits to man, and deriving their virtue from the meritorious efficacy of Christ's death, and administered by those whom God "hath set in the Church," and hath empowered by the Holy Ghost "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ [2]."

(10) The first of these instrumental means, on God's part, is the Holy Sacrament of Baptism, whereby the justifying efficacy of Christ's blood is applied to man, and man is made the child of God by adoption, and engrafted into the body of Christ [3].

(11) This first application of that meritorious efficacy would suffice for man's deliverance from the penalty of sin, and for his everlasting salvation, if he did not subsequently fall into actual sin.

(12) But "in many things we offend all [4]."

Consequently, other means have been appointed by God, for the Restoration of the sinner to his justified state, by the application of the meritorious efficacy of Christ's death.

This work of Restoration is specially performed by the operation of the Holy Ghost through the Ministry of Reconciliation [5], particularly by the administration of the Holy Sacrament of the Communion of the Body and Blood of Christ, wherein pardon is sealed and dispensed to the faithful and penitent receiver, and he is reinstated in the favour of God.

(13) A man is born anew in Baptism, the Sacrament of Regeneration [6].

But the new life then given needs continual renovation and increase.

We are justified once, but the Justification once given needs constant reparation.

There is this difference, however, between Regeneration and Justification; Regeneration is new Birth, and is never repeated. It takes place once, and once only. It is the same life which is given in the new birth, that is afterwards quickened and increased in Renovation.

But Justification is the grant of pardon and a title to heaven; and this grant may be forfeited, this title may be cancelled, and a new grant and a new title may be necessary.

(14) To speak strictly, the word "to justify" signifies (as was before said) to acquit, to declare just, and to accept and to treat as just. It does not properly mean to make just.

Justification on God's part is not, in the strict sense of the term, the infusion of righteousness and holiness into man.

This work is properly the work of God in Regeneration and subsequent Renovation.

It is the work, not so much of Justification as of Sanctification.

God justifies, when He grants pardon; He sanctifies, when He gives grace.

(15) Thus much may be premised concerning the work of Justification on the part of God the Agent.

It is now requisite to consider Justification on the side of man the Recipient.

(16) St. Paul teaches that the essential requisite on man's side for the reception of Justification from God, is Faith.

Faith is that habit of mind, which does not build on any thing that is intrinsic and inherent in man's own self (such as works done by his own strength), but looks outward and upward for mercy and strength and salvation, and lays its foundation upon the promises and acts of God, in Christ, God and Man, dying for the sins of the world, and relies and rests on the meritorious efficacy of His blood.

St. Paul affirms that man is justified by God in respect of, and by means of, Faith [7] in Christ.

(17) He does not represent our Faith as the principal cause of our Justification; for, God's mercy is the principal cause.

Nor does he represent our Faith as the meritorious cause of our Justification; for, this is to be sought in Christ's death.

Nor does he represent our Faith as the efficient cause of our Justification; for, this is to be found in the gracious operation of God the Holy Ghost.

Nor does he represent our Faith as the instrumental cause in God's hand for bestowing pardon on us. For, the ordinary instruments and means by which God works in justifying us are the Holy Sacraments and the Ministry of the Word, by which He applies to sinners the meritorious efficacy of Christ's death.

But he represents Faith as the instrument on our side, by which we rely on God's word, and appeal to Him for mercy, and receive a grant of pardon, and a title to the Evangelical promises from God.

(18) "It is God Who justifieth;" and He reads the heart. He knows whether or no we have Faith; and of what kind our Faith is. And He has taught us by St. Paul, that the wages of sin is death[1]; that "neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision: but Faith working by Love[2];" that we have been made free from sin, and have become servants of God, that we should have our fruit unto holiness and the end everlasting life[3]; that for this cause Christ died for all, in order that we, who live by His death, should not live unto ourselves, but unto Him that died for us[4] and rose again; and that they who have "believed in God must be careful to maintain good works[5];" and that we are created in Christ Jesus for good works[6]; and that though we have all Faith, but have not Charity, we are nothing[7]; and that we shall be judged hereafter by our works, and be rewarded according to our works[8].

(19) It is indeed the peculiar office and proper function of Faith, to rely on God, and to discern and receive God's free pardon bestowed on us in virtue of the death of Christ.

Faith is the eye by which we see, and the hand by which we stay ourselves on God's truth, and rest on His power and love, and lay hold on His grace.

But as, in order to see any object aright, the eye must be a living and healthful eye; and as, in order to receive, lay hold on, grasp, and retain what is offered to it and put into it, the hand must not be a dead, cold, and palsied limb, but be firmly strung with sinews, and warmed by a free circulation of blood; so the Faith which discerns, receives, and retains God's free grace and pardon, is a clear-sighted, vigorous, energizing faith, having its spiritual eye opened and cleansed by the Holy Spirit, and its spiritual hand nerved by Hope and warmed by Love; so that it may work its proper works, of piety, holiness, and charity, and may receive their proper reward at the Great Day of account. See further on this subject the authorities quoted below in the note on Rom. iii. 26—28.

II. We are hence led to the following Question:—

How is the Doctrine of Justification, as stated by St. Paul in his Epistles to the Galatians and the Romans, to be regarded in relation to the Doctrine as stated by St. James in his General Epistle?

(1) St. Paul says, λογιζόμεθα πίστει δικαιοῦσθαι ἄνθρωπον, χωρὶς ἔργων νόμου[9], i. e. we reckon that a man is justified by Faith, apart from the works of the Law.

St. Paul uses here the dative case πίστει: and his meaning is, that we are justified by Faith as by an instrument; and that the only instrument, which is, on our side, the means by which we receive pardon from God, is Faith.

(2) St. James says, ὁρᾶτε τοίνυν ὅτι ἐξ ἔργων δικαιοῦται ἄνθρωπος, καὶ οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως μόνον[10],—that is, "Ye see, therefore, that man's justification proceeds from works, and not from Faith only."

St. James uses the genitive case with the preposition ἐκ, prefixed to both ἔργων and πίστεως.

He does not say that we are justified by works (ἔργοις); and St. Paul says that we are justified by Faith (πίστει[11]).

But the Apostle St. James teaches that our Justification proceeds from, and comes out of, Faith

[10] James ii. 24.
[11] Rom. iii. 28.

(ἐκ πίστεως); but that it does not proceed or arise from it only (μόνον), but comes from works also.

His meaning may be illustrated thus;

We quench our thirst from (ἐκ) a river (ἐκ ποταμοῦ) which proceeds from (ἐκ) a well-spring beneath the earth. We gather food from off a tree which grows from a root beneath the ground.

We could not quench our thirst from the river, unless the water flowed out of the subterranean spring; we could not gather food from the tree unless it grew from the subterranean root.

The subterranean spring and the subterranean root are the proper and primary means and instruments by which we receive natural refreshment and food from the bounty of the Creator, Almighty God.

But the spring and the root are not the only things from which we receive them. They are derived to us from the river that flows from the source, and from the tree that grows up from the root.

So Faith is the proper means by which we receive the spiritual refreshment and food of pardon and grace from God; but it is that Faith which does not hide itself beneath the earth, but flows forth in a healthful stream, and grows up in a fruitful tree, of a holy and religious life.

Some writers on this subject have said that good works are only Fruits of Justification.

This assertion is manifestly at variance with the teaching of St. James, who says that a man is justified ἐξ ἔργων καὶ οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως μόνον[1].

He represents Justification as proceeding from works; and not works as proceeding from Justification.

Other writers say, that Works are conditions of Justification.

But this assertion is not strictly accurate, if works are taken in their proper sense of outward, visible acts.

The truth may be expressed more clearly by the affirmation, that the only proper instrumental mean of Justification, on man's side, is such a Faith as is approved by God, Who sees the heart, and knows the future, and Who can foresee all contingencies; that is, Who not only knows how every man will act, but how he would act under circumstances which might arise, and yet may not arise.

The instrumental means of Justification is such a Faith as either actually does good works, or is desirous to do them, either by acting or suffering, when God gives the occasion, and does and suffers with an eye fixed on God, as the only giver of all pardon and grace, in virtue of the merits of Christ, and with a single view to God's glory, and with a deep sense of its own weakness and unworthiness, and with an absolute renunciation of all notions of merit in itself, and with an abiding persuasion that, though it can claim no reward on account of its works, yet it will be tested by its works, and rewarded hereafter according to its works.

III. With regard to the use of the word Faith by St. Paul, in the Epistles to the Galatians and Romans, as compared with its use by St. James, it is to be remembered that the two Apostles are writing with two totally different objects before them.

They had two different questions to solve, and they had two different classes of adversaries and errors to encounter and refute.

Judaism presented itself to them in two different aspects, in regard to this great question concerning man's Justification.

(1) There was the rigid Judaism which sought for Justification by the works of the Law.

(2) There was that other form of Judaism which boasted that it alone had clear knowledge (γνῶσις) of God; and that it had Faith in Him; and imagined that this would suffice for Justification without Good Works.

The first form of Judaism is that which is encountered in these two Epistles by St. Paul.

The second form of Judaism is that which is condemned by St. James.

St. Paul maintains the Evangelical grace and virtue of Faith in the merits of Christ, as opposed to all proud notions of righteousness grounded on legal works and human deserts.

St. James asserts the necessity of an operative Faith of the heart and life, in opposition to a mere speculative assent and barren persuasion of the mind.

[1] James ii. 24.

St. Paul encounters the self-righteousness of the Jew, by pointing to the example of Abraham the Father of the faithful, whose seed the Jews boasted to be. St. Paul shows by the history of Abraham, as written by God Himself in the Ancient Scriptures delivered to the Jews, that their father Abraham, although eminent in obedience, was not justified by works meriting a reward from God as wages due to them, but was justified by God's free grace to which he looked by Faith. He believed in God's promise, and his faith was imputed to him for righteousness[1].

On the other hand, St. James is refuting those who trusted to a mere speculative faith, as confidently as the others did to their legal obedience. And he shows that Abraham's faith was not a mere assent of the mind, or a mere nominal profession, but was a living, operative Faith; that "Faith wrought with his works, and that from (ἐκ) his works his faith was made perfect[2]."

Faith is the root of works, and unless works spring from that root they are counted as dead in God's sight.

But Faith without works is also dead, being alone[3]. Indeed, in God's eye it is not really Faith, although it assumes the name of faith. It does not bring forth the proper fruit by which Faith is exercised, increased, proved, and known, and which God expects to find growing upon it.

Such a Faith, falsely so called, is like the barren Fig-tree, luxuriant only in leaves, which was withered by the breath of Christ[4].

St. James agrees with St. Paul, and supplies what it was not within the immediate scope of St. Paul's argument to express in the Epistles to the Romans and Galatians on the article of Justification.

St. Paul teaches that in order to be justified by God we must not rely on any thing in ourselves as having any merit, but solely on God's free grace in Christ.

Similarly, St. James represents us as freed from the rigour of the Law of Works, and as living under the Covenant of Grace, which he calls the perfect Law of Liberty[5].

St. Paul represents Faith as the instrumental means on our part for receiving grace from God.

But he teaches also throughout his Epistles the indispensable necessity of Charity and of good works.

In like manner St. James asks, "What profit is it if a man say that he have Faith, if he have not works? can Faith save him[6]?" He contends against a nominal Faith; he condemns a hollow profession of Faith in words, on the part of those who bore no fruit of Faith in their deeds.

St. James vindicates the character of genuine justifying Faith, by rebuking the pretensions of a specious hollow Hypocrisy, calling itself by the sacred name of Faith.

He says that such a Faith as that, is dead[7], and that it is not better than the Faith which the Devils have, who believe in God and tremble[8]; that Abraham's Faith is exemplary to us because it was an operative Faith[9], a Faith receiving perfection from its works (ἐκ τῶν ἔργων); and that as the human body apart from the spirit (χωρὶς πνεύματος) is dead, so likewise Faith separated from the works which are to be expected from it (χωρὶς τῶν ἔργων) is dead also[10].

St. James teaches that our Justification does not proceed from (ἐκ) Faith only, but from works also[11], which manifest the life and perfect the growth of Faith.

Thus the teaching of each of the two Apostles mutually supports, illustrates, and completes that of the other.

The one, St. Paul, refutes all presumptuous notions of human merit, and establishes the great doctrine of God's free grace, and the plenary virtue and efficacy of Christ's sufferings.

The other, St. James, condemns the specious semblance of empty professions, and asserts the doctrine of human free will and human responsibility; and that the Sufferings of Christ are not only meritorious but exemplary, and that they do not offer any pretext or plea for man's sin, nor afford any cloak or shelter for those who wilfully break His laws.

The one, St. Paul, in these two Epistles, warns us against Pride; the other, St. James, denounces Hypocrisy. Both show the dignity of Faith rightly so called; the one by declaring that it looks up to Him Who alone can justify the sinner, and that it relies only on God's promises and attributes, and on the obedience and sufferings of Christ, and on the gracious workings of the Holy Ghost in the divinely appointed means of pardon and grace, and does not place any trust in any fancied deserts of its own.

The other declares the true character of genuine Faith, as distinguished from the specious counterfeits which too often call themselves by its name.

Thus the two holy Apostles join together in teaching that the Faith by which we are justified is that living Faith, which fixes its eyes stedfastly on God's love, and moves habitually in harmony with His Will and Word.

IV. In the last place, it is carefully to be remembered, that St. Paul himself, having contended, in these two Epistles, to the Galatians and to the Romans, against that form of Judaism which sought to justify itself by the works of the Law, combats no less strenuously that other form of Judaism condemned by St. James, which imagined that it could approve itself to God by a vain and hollow γνῶσις, or knowledge, and by a mere speculative profession of Faith, barren of Good Works.

This he has done in his later Epistles, especially in his two Epistles to Timothy and his Epistle to Titus.

In those three Epistles St. Paul delivers to Timothy and Titus, the chief Pastors of the Churches of Ephesus and Crete, a solemn charge to stop the mouths of those who make a profession that they know God, but in works deny Him [1], and who have the form of godliness but deny its power [2]. Such a γνῶσις or science, is, he declares, falsely so named [3]. And he insists in the strongest terms [4], that all who profess Faith in God must be careful to maintain Good Works [5]; and thus he declares his entire accordance, when treating of the same subject, in the teaching of his brother Apostle St. James.

On the Date of the EPISTLE to the ROMANS.

The time and place at which this Epistle was written may be inferred as follows:—

1. St. Paul, when he wrote it, had never been at Rome, but had been desirous to visit it for many years, ἀπὸ πολλῶν ἐτῶν [6].

2. He had no longer any occasion to remain where he was [7], but was now setting out on a journey to Jerusalem with a collection gathered from Macedonia and Achaia for the poor Saints at Jerusalem [8].

3. From Acts xxiv. 17, compared with 1 Cor. xvi. 1—4, 2 Cor. viii. 1—4, it appears that he carried such a collection from Achaia and Macedonia to Jerusalem, on his visit to Jerusalem after his second visit to Achaia.

4. He mentions in the Epistle, Timotheus, Gaius, and Sosipater (Sopater), as with him [9]. And these persons are described, in the Acts of the Apostles, as being with him on his second visit to Achaia [10].

5. He commends to them Phœbe, a deaconess of Cenchreæ, which was the eastern port of Corinth.

Hence it appears most probable, that the Epistle to the Romans was written in Achaia (as was supposed by Origen, Theodoret, and others of the ancients), at Corinth its capital, or at its port Cenchreæ [11], at the close of St. Paul's second visit to Southern Greece, viz. in the spring of A.D. 58.

TITLE. Πρὸς Ῥωμαίους] So A, B, C.

CH. I. 1. Παῦλος] On the name Paul, see on Acts xiii. 9, and cp. Origen here.

— δοῦλος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ] a bondsman of Jesus Christ. So St. James i. 1, and St. Peter, 2 Pet. i. 1, St. Jude 1, and St. John, Rev. i. 1, who says also, τοὺς ἑαυτοῦ δούλους τοὺς προφήτας. Other men in the beginning of their Epistles, especially those which they addressed to the Roman people, recited their own titles as Rulers, Kings, or Conquerors; but the Apostles claim to be heard as δούλους, bondsmen,—bondsmen of Jesus Christ.

— κλητός] Not self-called (αὐτό-κλητος), but called by Christ and the Holy Ghost. See 1 Cor. i. 1.

— ἀφωρισμένος] set apart and dedicated, ἐκλελεγμένος, διακεκριμένος (Hesych.), not only by an ἀφορισμὸς from my mother's womb (Gal. i. 15), but specially by the ἀφορισμὸς of the Church at Antioch, at the express mandate of the Holy Ghost, to ordain me to the Apostleship. See on Acts xiii. 2 (the best comment upon this text), where the Holy Ghost says, Ἀφορίσατε (the word here used by St. Paul) δή μοι Σαῦλον εἰς τὸ ἔργον ὃ προσκέκλημαι αὐτόν, so that he was both κλητὸς and also ἀφωρισμένος: he was not only called by God, but was also visibly set apart for the Apostolic office by an outward mission and ordination, at His command.

2. ὃ προεπηγγείλατο κ.τ.λ.] which (Gospel) God promised afore by his Prophets in the Holy Scriptures (of the Old Testament) concerning His Son which was born of the seed of David.

St. Paul thus anticipates and obviates a Jewish objection, that the Gospel preached by himself, the Apostle of the Gentiles, and proclaiming salvation to all Nations (v. 5) on equal terms, in Christ, was at variance with the Law of Moses; and he affirms that the Gospel is the fulfilment of the promises of God made by the Prophets of the Old dispensation; and, particularly, of the divine promise to David the King and Prophet of the Jewish Nation.

He begins and ends his Epistle with this declaration, which contains the substance of the argument of the whole. See below, xvi. 25—27.

3. ἐκ σπέρματος Δαυὶδ κατὰ σάρκα] from the seed of David according to the flesh (Acts ii. 30. 2 Tim. ii. 8).

Hence it may be inferred that Mary, as well as Joseph, was of the house and lineage of David. See on Luke iii. 23.

4. τοῦ ὁρισθέντος Υἱοῦ Θεοῦ] Who was defined (as distinguished from all others) by a divine decree, and proclaimed to be the Son of God. Chrys., Theophyl.

The best exposition of this text is Psalm ii. 7, where Christ says, after His Crucifixion, and at His Resurrection, I will declare the decree (חק, chok) whereby THE LORD said unto me, "Thou art My Son, this day have I begotten Thee. Sit Thou at My Right Hand until I make Thy foes Thy footstool."

— κατὰ πνεῦμα ἁγιωσύνης] according to the Spirit of Holiness which was in Him, by which He was anointed (Luke iv. 18. John x. 36. Acts iv. 27; x. 38. Heb. i. 9), and by which He was declared to be the Messiah, the Son of God, and by which Spirit He worked (Matt. xii. 28. Acts ii. 22), and overcame the Spirits of darkness; and by which He offered Himself (Heb. ix. 14), and which Spirit of Holiness being in Him, rendered it impossible that He, the Holy One of God, should be holden by the bonds of Death and the Grave, and see corruption. Cp. Acts ii. 24—27.

Therefore, as the first Birth of Jesus, namely, that from the womb of His Virgin Mother, was by the operation of the Holy Ghost (Luke i. 35), so likewise His second Birth, that from the Tomb, by which He was the firstborn of the dead (Col. i. 18. Rev. i. 5), was due to the energy of the same Divine Person, the Holy Ghost. Cp. below, viii. 11, and see Chrys., Theodoret, and next note.

— ἐξ ἀναστάσεως νεκρῶν] from, after, and by, His Resurrection from the Dead, by which He was proved and proclaimed to be the Son of God; and after which He breathed on the Apostles, and said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost" (John xx. 22), and sent down the promised gift of the Holy Ghost from heaven (Acts i. 8; ii. 4).

The order of St. Paul's words here must be carefully attended to, in order that their sense may not be weakened. He says that Christ Jesus was decreed and declared to be the Son of God, with power according to the Spirit of Holiness, by the Resurrection from the dead;

The operation of the Holy Ghost, concerning which the Apostle is speaking, was not in His Birth, but in and after His Resurrection.

5. ἐλάβομεν χάριν καὶ ἀποστολήν] we received (at our ordination) Grace and Apostleship. "Gratiam ad laborum patientiam, Apostolatum ad prædicationis auctoritatem." Origen.

I, no less than the other Apostles, received grace and Apostolic commission and authority (Chrys.) from God through Christ (cp. xii. 3; xv. 15. 1 Cor. iii. 10. Eph. iii. 7, 8), with a view to the ὑπακοὴ πίστεως, obedience of faith; that is, in order that I might bring all Nations to that faith which manifests itself in hearkening to the Word, and in obedience to the Will, of God. See Rom. xv. 18; xvi. 26. 2 Cor. x. 5. Gal. v. 6. 1 Pet. i. 14. 22.

— ὑπέρ] in behalf of His Name, or for His Name's sake, as 2 Cor. v. 20, ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ πρεσβεύομεν.

τοῖς Θεοῦ κλητοῖς ἁγίοις, χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

n ch. 15. 23. 1 Thess. 2. 18.
o 1 Cor. 9. 16. Acts 28. 2.

6, 7. κλητοὶ—κλητοῖς] called. He gives emphasis to this word, by repeating it. As your father Abraham was called by God, so you in obeying the Gospel are the called of God. He thus declares that in embracing Christianity the Jews are God's people, and that all who are members of the Visible Church (ἐκκλησία) are the called of God. See below, viii. 30.

— ἁγίοις] holy: properly, separated by dedication to God. Another comfortable assurance to the Jews. They had been distinguished by God as "a holy nation" (Lev. xx. 8. Ezek. xx. 12). St. Paul assures them that they did not lose that title by accepting Christianity, but enjoyed its privilege in a higher sense than before. He regards all the faithful whom he addressed, as called and holy, not in themselves, but by virtue of their holy calling (2 Tim. i. 9. Heb. iii. 1), and by the grace and holiness of Him who has called them, and has so obliged them to holiness of life. "Be ye holy; for I am holy" (1 Pet. i. 16).

He applies this title without distinction to them all, intimating thereby that God offers grace sufficient to them all, and that all may be meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the Saints in light. See above on 1 Cor. i. 2. 1 Tim. ii. 4.

Men are not called by God because they are already holy; but they are made holy because they are called. Augustine.

— χάρις καὶ εἰρήνη] Grace and Peace. See on 1 Thess. i. 1.

An ancient Father uses this salutation as an argument against the Pelagian Heresy. "Cunctæ prope Epistolæ Apostoli hoc habent principium Gratia Vobis et Pax; et simili fine clauduntur" (see above on 1 Thess. v. 28); and he observes that St. Paul, who was more eminent in labours than the rest, is a signal example of humility, ascribing all his powers to divine Grace. "Vas Electionis humilitate dejectus, imo Conscientiâ fragilitatis suæ, loquitur Ego minimus Apostolorum," &c. Jerome adv. Pelagianos Dial. ii. p. 515.

8. Πρῶτον μὲν εὐχαριστῶ] First of all I render thanks. As usual, the Apostle begins with a sentiment by which he expresses his gratitude to God, and conciliates the good will of those to whom he writes. Cp. 1 Thess. i. 2. 2 Thess. i. 3. 1 Cor. i. 4.

— περὶ] So A, B, C, D*, K, and others, and Griesbach, Lachm., Tisch., Meyer, Alford. Elz. ὑπέρ.

10. εἴπως—εὐοδωθήσομαι] if haply I shall be prospered on my way, so as to come to you.

The verb εὐοδοῦν τινα signifies to lead prosperously on a journey. See Gen. xxiv. 27. 48.

Hence in Greece and Asia, at this day, the parting wish to travellers is καλὸν κατευόδιον, buon viaggio.

St. Paul compares his ministry to a journey; and his desire is that it may be so prospered as to bring him to Rome.

— ἤδη ποτέ] now at length. His prayers in this respect were granted about three years after this was written, A.D. 61.

11. ἐπιποθῶ] I long earnestly. See xv. 23. 32, and 2 Cor. v. 2; ix. 14. Phil. i. 8; ii. 26.

— εἰς τὸ—ὑμοῦ] to the end that ye may be established in the faith; that is (for, think not that I am so presumptuous as to imagine that the benefit will be wholly yours), that I also may be comforted with you, each by the faith that is in the other, both you and me. The faith of the teacher grows with that of his hearers, and so all edify one another in love.

13. ἐκωλύθην] I was hindered. See above on 1 Thess. ii. 18. Cp. below, xv. 22.

— τινὰ καρπόν] So the best MSS. Elz. καρπόν τινα. Cp. τι χάρισμα, v. 11.

14. Ἕλλησί τε καὶ βαρβάροις] To Greeks and Barbarians, i. e. to all the world. St. Paul was now at Corinth, among the Greeks, and he speaks according to their ideas, in which all who did not speak Greek were βάρβαροι.

"Huic nomen Græcè est Onagos fabulæ. Demophilus scripsit; Marcus vortit barbarè, i. e. Latinè." Plautus, Asinar. Prolog. 10. Cp. Juvenal, Sat. vi. 156, and note above on Acts xxviii. 4. Cicero indeed says (de Fin. ii. 15), "non solum Græcia et Italia sed etiam omnis Barbaria." The word does not necessarily convey any notion of inferiority, but only of distinction of language and race.

— ὀφειλέτης εἰμί] I am a debtor. I only pay a debt when I preach to all the world. Cp. 1 Cor. ix. 16; xi. 23. 2 Cor. v. 14. Bp. Sanderson iv. p. 80.

Another proof of the gift of "divers languages" for preaching the Gospel. How could St. Paul be said to owe the debt of the Gospel to all the world, if he had not the means of paying it? And how could he pay it without the coinage of intelligible words? See on Acts ii. 4; xiv. 11; xxviii. 2, and Theodoret here.

St. Paul spake with tongues more than all (1 Cor. xiv. 18), and this χάρισμα laid him under an obligation to preach to all.

Hence an ancient Father well says, "Arbitror Paulum diversis gentibus effectum esse debitorem quod omnium gentium linguis eloqui suscepit, per gratiam Spiritus Sancti" (1 Cor. xiv. 18). So Origen; who thus refutes some recent allegations, that there is no evidence of a belief in the second and third centuries that the Apostles possessed and exercised the power of speaking foreign languages, for preaching the Gospel. See above on Acts ii. 3—8.

If the Apostles were debtors, not only to the Jews, but to the Grecians and Barbarians too, then they must have had the tongues not only of the Jews, but of the Grecians and Barbarians to pay this debt, to discharge the duty, "Ite prædicate," "Go ye and Preach" to all. And this was a special favour from God, for the Propagation of His Gospel far and wide, this division (or distribution) of Tongues (to the Apostles at Pentecost and Sion), which was a reversing of the curse of Babel. Bp. Andrewes (on the sending of the Holy Ghost, iii. 123).

See above, notes on Acts ii. 4; xiv. 11; xxviii. 2. 1 Cor. xii. 10. 28. 30; xiv. 2. 5, 6. 19.

15. οὕτω τὸ κατ' ἐμὲ πρόθυμον] so there is the readiness of mind on my part (κατ' ἐμέ): whatever, on the side of God, may be ordered by His Will (κατὰ Θεὸν), to which my will is subject, and will be conformed.

On this use of κατὰ, see vii. 22; viii. 1. 1 Cor. iii. 3; xv. 32. Eph. i. 15.

τὸ πρόθυμον is nearly equivalent to ἡ προθυμία, as ii. 4, τὸ χρηστὸν for ἡ χρηστότης. Cp. below, viii. 3; ix. 22. So 1 Cor. i. 25, τὸ μωρὸν, τὸ ἀσθενές. Phil. iv. 5, τὸ ἐπιεικές. Cp. Philippi, p. 28.

St. Paul here, as often, omits the verb. See ii. 8. 2 Cor. ix. 6. Gal. v. 13, especially the verb substantive ἐστὶ, 2 Cor. xi. 22. Eph. iii. 1. 2 Tim. iii. 16. Cp. Meyer, who, however, — καὶ ὑμῖν] even to you, who dwell in a city renowned for its intelligence, literature, and learning. Cp. Fritzsche.

16. Οὐ γὰρ ἐπαισχύνομαι] For I am not ashamed of the Gospel. An answer by anticipation to a supposed objection, as usual with the Apostle, "Paulus solet quidquid alius objicere potest, antequàm objiciatur, edisserere." Jerome (ad Hebib. qu. 11).

The objection had been suggested by the word Rome—the imperial Metropolis of Heathenism—where Christianity was despised (Acts xxviii. 22), and where a fierce Persecution would ere long rage against it. Cp. Apollinar. in Catenâ here.

I am not ashamed to preach "Christ crucified" (1 Cor. i. 23) even in the most powerful and learned Cities of the Heathen world.

— τὸ εὐαγγέλιον] Elz. adds τοῦ Χριστοῦ, with some MSS., but not found in A, B, C, D*, E, G, and the earliest Fathers.

— Ἰουδαίῳ τε πρῶτον] both to the Jew first. First, in having a prior claim, as the covenanted people of God: first, therefore, in the season of its offer (cp. Matt. xv. 24. Rom. iii. 2; ix. 5), but not in the condition of the recipients after its acceptance.

For, he adds, the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation unto every man believing, τῷ πιστεύοντι, that is, on his acceptance of its terms by Faith, which is the hand by which the soul takes hold of Christ's Righteousness.

By the word πιστεύοντι, believing, the Apostle prepares the way for the declaration of the functions of Faith in the next following verses.

17. Δικαιοσύνη γὰρ Θεοῦ ἐν αὐτῷ ἀποκαλύπτεται] For the Righteousness of God is therein revealed from faith unto faith.

This significant phrase, "the Righteousness of God," is not to be lowered, weakened, and impaired, so as to mean only the method of Justification by which God acquits and justifies mankind (Fritz. p. 47, De Wette, and others). But it is the very Righteousness of God Himself, which is both imputed and imparted to men in Jesus Christ, "the Righteous" (1 John ii. 1), Who is "the Lord our Righteousness" (Jer. xxiii. 6; xxxiii. 16), and who, being God from everlasting, and having also taken the nature of Man, and having made us members of Himself in Baptism, is made Righteousness to us (1 Cor. i. 30), and does effectually, by His Incarnation, and by our Incorporation into Him, justify us in believing on Him, and making Him ours by Faith, so that we may not only be acquitted by God, but so that we may become the Righteousness of God in Him (2 Cor. v. 21).

This Righteousness is called the Righteousness of God, because it is not of man, but of God only, and is revealed in Christ, in order to take away man's unrighteousness, and to declare us righteous in Christ, which is the work of Justification; and also to make us righteous in Him, which is the work of Sanctification.

See above, Introduction to this Epistle, p. 198, and below on iii. 24—36.

This Righteousness of God, which was kept secret in former ages, is now revealed to the World for the first time in the Gospel, and is made available to man by Faith unto Faith, that is, by Faith growing continually, and rising from one degree to another, going on from strength to strength (Ps. lxxxiv. 7), and receiving grace for grace (John i. 16), till it is transformed from glory to glory (2 Cor. iii. 18).

The opposite to this is described by a similar phrase below, vi. 19, τῇ ἀνομίᾳ εἰς τὴν ἀνομίαν, one degree of wickedness unto another. Cp. Jer. ix. 2, in the Hebrew, and 2 Cor. ii. 16.

By this expression, ἐκ πίστεως εἰς πίστιν, from or out of Faith (as a root), unto Faith (as the tree), St. Paul enters on his great argument concerning Faith, as the proper organ, on man's side, of Justification—that is, the organ by which man trusts in God (and not in himself), and lays hold of the Righteousness of Christ slain for the sins of the whole world, and delivering His own members from a state of guilt, and raising them to one of favour with God.

By the words ἐκ πίστεως, he declares that Faith is the root of the Christian life, and by adding εἰς πίστιν, he guards against the supposition that the Christian life consists only in the root, and shows that it is continually growing with fresh increments from the small seed (Matt. xvii. 20) to greater altitude and vigour, putting forth new leaves and branches, and bringing forth new fruit in due season; but still it is ἐκ πίστεως εἰς πίστιν. The vital principle is one—Faith, the "prora et puppis" of the Christian life. Cp. Theophyl., Bengel. See also St. Paul's account of his own spiritual growth and life, Phil. iii. 9—14.

This is well expressed by the great African Father and Bishop: "We were called when we were made Christians. Men are baptized; all their sins are forgiven them; they are justified from sin. We cannot deny this. Yet there still remains a warfare against the Flesh, the World, and the Devil. We have been justified. But our righteousness grows as we advance. Therefore, let every one of you who has already been placed in a justified state (when he received remission of sins 'by the washing of Regeneration,' and when he received the Holy Ghost) advance day by day, and let him look to himself whether he is making progress: let him grow and ripen till he is perfected. Man begins with Faith; and if you have in you that faith which worketh by love (Gal. v. 6), you already belong to the number of the predestinate, called and justified. (Rom. viii. 29, 30.) Therefore let Faith grow in you. We live by Faith as long as we are on the road, as long as we are in the journey of our mortal pilgrimage, as long as we are in the body; but when we come to our journey's end, then we shall see Him as He is." Augustine (Serm. 158).

— Ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται] But the just shall live by faith. (Habak. ii. 4.) Said by the Prophet Habakkuk to encourage the Jews when fainting under the proud oppression of the Chaldeans. Have faith in God. He will send you a deliverer. Cyrus, a type of Christ, was raised up as God had promised (Isa. xliv. 28); he conquered and destroyed the Chaldean king in his revelry, and restored the Jews to Jerusalem, and enabled them to rebuild the Temple, an emblem of the Church in glory.

The Apostle applies this prophecy of Habakkuk to the Christian Church, and to his own argument concerning the blessings of eternal life, consequent on Faith in Christ. This application is appropriate and felicitous, especially in reference to his Jewish fellow-Christians, who were thus taught that the temporal promises to their fathers in the Old Dispensation had a spiritual fulfilment to themselves in the New.

Concerning this prophecy and its relation to the Doctrine of Justification by Faith, see above on Gal. iii. 11; v. 11.

The conjunction δὲ, but, contains a warning, that, while the just shall live by faith, the unjust, who does not believe, shall perish, and so it is introductory for what follows.

18. Ἀποκαλύπτεται γὰρ ὀργὴ Θεοῦ] For the Wrath of God (as well as the Righteousness of God, v. 17) is revealed in the Gospel. The Apostle had prepared the way for this declaration by saying, "but the just shall live by Faith; implying that the unbelieving and unjust should not live.

He had stated, that, by a gracious method of Universal Justification, Eternal Life is now revealed in the Gospel both to Jew and Gentile.

He now takes occasion to guard against abuses of that doctrine, by stating that a righteous process of Universal Judgment is also revealed in the same Gospel.

He shows the reasonableness of this, from the fact, that every one who lives is a responsible agent, as being subject to some Law, either to that of

(1) Natural Reason, or

(2) Written Revelation,

Or to both; and therefore all, without exception, must render an account of themselves to God, Who will judge them all at the Great Day. He thus also answers an allegation, grounded by some on the fact, that God passed by the sins of the Heathen without intervening to punish them in this world. See below, iii. 25. All men are under some Law. Sin is the breach of Law. God is always angry with sin; but His anger against it is now displayed more clearly in the Gospel.

Since also the wrath of God is revealed in the Gospel, all have now a clear warning of God's purpose to judge the World. Cp. Acts xvii. 30, 31.

ἀδικίαν ἀνθρώπων τῶν τὴν ἀλήθειαν ἐν ἀδικίᾳ κατεχόντων, 19 [s] διότι τὸ γνωστὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ φανερόν ἐστιν ἐν αὐτοῖς, ὁ Θεὸς γὰρ αὐτοῖς ἐφανέρωσε· 20 [t] τὰ γὰρ ἀόρατα αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ κτίσεως κόσμου τοῖς ποιήμασι νοούμενα καθορᾶται, ἥ τε ἀΐδιος αὐτοῦ δύναμις καὶ θειότης, εἰς τὸ εἶναι αὐτοὺς ἀναπολογήτους, 21 [u] διότι γνόντες τὸν Θεὸν οὐχ ὡς Θεὸν ἐδόξασαν, ἢ εὐχαρίστησαν, ἀλλ' ἐματαιώθησαν ἐν τοῖς διαλογισμοῖς αὐτῶν, καὶ ἐσκοτίσθη ἡ ἀσύνετος αὐτῶν καρδία· 22 φάσκοντες εἶναι σοφοὶ ἐμωράνθησαν, 23 [v] καὶ ἤλλαξαν τὴν δόξαν τοῦ ἀφθάρτου Θεοῦ ἐν ὁμοιώματι εἰκόνος φθαρτοῦ ἀνθρώπου, καὶ πετεινῶν καὶ τετραπόδων καὶ ἑρπετῶν.

— τῶν τὴν ἀλήθειαν ἐν ἀδικίᾳ κατεχόντων] holding, keeping down, the Truth in ungodliness, as in a prison-house. Men have incarcerated the Truth, and hold her a captive under restraint and durance, with the bars and bolts of a depraved will and vicious habits, so that she cannot go forth and breathe the air, and see the light, and do works suitable to her own nature. See Chrys., Aug. (Serm. 141), Theophyl., Œcumen.

19. διότι τὸ γνωστὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ] Quia quod notum est Dei. (Vulg.) Because that which is known of (concerning) God, is manifest in them: that is, is clearly displayed among men as men generally. That which we know of God's justice is not hidden from any, but is made manifest to all men by His works.

S. Basil therefore (Hexæmeron 1) called the natural world θεογνωσίας παιδευτήριον, a school of the knowledge of God. Almighty God has two Books in which men may read His attributes,—the Book of Nature and the Book of Scripture; and He has two Temples in which He is to be worshipped,—the World and the Church.

— ὁ Θεὸς γάρ] So the best MSS.—Elz. ὁ γὰρ Θεός. For God Himself made it manifest to them by creation.

20—23.] These verses are quoted by S. Hippolytus, the scholar of S. Irenæus, in his recently recovered Philosophumena, pp. 99, 100.

20. τὰ γὰρ ἀόρατα] for the unseen things of Him are seen from the creation of the world, being understood by, and in, His works.

The words from the creation of the world may signify either

(1) From the time of the Creation; that is, from the beginning of the world,—compare Matt. xiii. 35. Mark x. 6. 2 Pet. iii. 4,—or

(2) From the structure and fabric of the world. Theodoret; and so Luther and others. See Meyer, p. 54.

The former appears to be the better sense; the latter being contained in what follows.

The meaning is, that God never left Himself without a witness (Acts xiv. 17); and that, long before the Mosaic Law was given, and ever since the Creation, men have had clear evidence of God in His works.

This truth was confessed by the Heathens. See Cicero (de Nat. Deor. ii. 6. 26, and Tuscul. Quæst. i. 29): "Deum non vides, tamen Deum agnoscis ex operibus ejus." Aristot. (de Mundo, vi.): πάσῃ θνητῇ φύσει γενόμενος ἀθεώρητος ἀπ' αὐτῶν τῶν ἔργων θεωρεῖται ὁ Θεός.

On this argument (viz. the proof of the Attributes of God from the Works of Creation), compare Wisdom of Solomon, cap. xiii.; Clemens Romanus, i. 20; Athanasius, ad Gentes, § 35, p. 27; and Barrow's Sermon "on the Being of God proved from the Frame of the World," iv. 141, where (p. 161) he thus expounds this text: "The Invisible things of God, by the make and constitution of the world, are clearly seen .... so that they are inexcusable who from hence do not know God, or knowing Him, do not render Him due glory and service."

— ἀΐδιος αὐτοῦ δύναμις] The eternity of God is proved from the corruptible nature of the visible world. Cyril.

— θειότης] divinity. The word θειότης expresses the attributes of the Θεότης: the divine features of the Deity; the God-like working of the Godhead. Cp. Col. ii. 9.

The words εἰς τὸ εἶναι αὐτοὺς ἀναπολογήτους are also capable of two meanings.

(1) So that they are without excuse. Cp. this use of εἰς τὸ below, vii. 5; or

(2) To the intent that they may be without excuse. See Meyer, and Revised Version, p. ix.

The former—which is the translation of the ancient Expositors, and Reiche, De Wette (p. 20), Philippi (p. 37), and others—seems to be the preferable rendering. For it can hardly be thought, that the conviction, confusion, and condemnation of men was any part of the divine plan in Creation, although it follows as a consequence from it.

21. διότι] because —. This word introduces the reason why they are without excuse, and are punished.

— καρδία] St. Paul places the seat of infidelity in the heart; "the evil heart of unbelief." Heb. iii. 12.

22. φάσκοντες εἶναι σοφοί] Intelligence, as such, is no safeguard against Superstition and Idolatry. Knowledge puffeth up. (1 Cor. viii. 1.) Intelligence often engenders Pride, and Pride is punished by God with spiritual blindness, which is the mother of Idolatry. "Vindicat Deus in animâ aversâ à se exordio pœnarum ipsâ cæcitate." Augustine, Serm. 117.

"Cæcitas mentis est pœna peccati, quâ cor superbum dignâ animadversione punitur" (c. Julian. Pelag. v. 3). See also Aug. in Ps. ii. and v. on spiritual blindness as the necessary consequence of Unbelief and Disobedience to God.

25. τῷ ψεύδει] the lie. Idolatry is emphatically called τὸ ψεῦδος, the lie, in Scripture (Isa. xxviii. 15; xliv. 20. Jer. xiii. 25), because the gods, whom Idolaters worship, do not even exist, and yet they worship them in the place of Him Who is the cause of all existence, and Who is the Truth. Cp. Severian, and above, 2 Thess. ii. 11, and 1 Cor. viii. 4.

— παρὰ τὸν κτίσαντα] beside, and rather than, the Creator, 'præ Creatore,' and so as eventually to exclude Him. Hilary (de Trin. 12). Cp. v. 26, παρὰ φύσιν.

From this text a strong argument may be derived against

(1) The Arians, who assert Christ to be a Creature, and yet profess to worship Him; and

(2) Against those who pay religious worship to any creature;

According to Scripture, no one is to be worshipped who is not God by nature (Gal. iv. 8); no creature, but the Creator only. (Rom. i. 25.) From whence it is evident that there is no middle between Creator and creature, Creator and creature being opposites: so that a creature cannot be Creator, nor Creator a creature. Scripture knows nothing of creature-worship, nothing of inferior, relative, or mediate worship distinct from divine; nothing of two worships, of different kinds,—either before the Gospel or after. The one fundamental rule of Worship, from Genesis down to Revelation, is to worship God alone,—the God of Israel, the Jehovah, the Creator, Sustainer, Preserver of all things. There was never any distinction made of supreme and inferior sacrifices, vows, oaths, prayers, protestations. All religious worship is God's peculiar, all of the same nature, and of like import and significancy. Waterland (iv. p. 359, "The Scriptures and the Arians compared").

— εὐλογητός] בָּרוּךְ, baruk, blessed; to be distinguished from μακάριος, also translated in English by blessed; but the latter is applied to men; the former only to God. See ix. 5.

26, 27. Διὰ τοῦτο—ἀπολαμβάνοντες] A dark picture of Heathenism, but fully verified from the writings of what has been called the most brilliant age of the most intellectual nations of the world. e. g. from those of Aristophanes, Catullus, Horace, Sallust, Suetonius, Tacitus, Juvenal, and Martial.

It is also important to observe, that the same Divine Spirit Who gives this fearful catalogue of vices consequent on the infidelity of mankind in the past ages of the world (v. 29—32) has drawn a similar picture of what yet remains to be seen in the future. See the words of the Apostle in 2 Tim. iii. 1—9.

The results of the infidelity which will display itself in the world, will, it is to be feared, in one respect be worse than those of former ages, inasmuch as Christianity is a clearer revelation than any that had previously been vouchsafed to the world, and the sin of apostasy from it, and the punishment due to such apostasy, will be proportionably great.

26. ἀτιμίας] dishonour. See above on 1 Thess. iv. 4.

28. οὐκ ἐδοκίμασαν] (1) They did not apply the proper tests to discover the truth, and

(2) did not approve it (Phil. i. 10); and therefore God punished them by giving them over to be the victims of their own νοῦς, now no longer γνήσιος and καθαρὸς, but κίβδηλος and ἀδόκιμος.

The metaphor is from metals, and the fate of the mind which does not search for, examine, and approve the truth, may be described in the Prophet's words, "How is the gold become dim, and the most fine gold changed." (Lam. iv. 1.) "Thy silver is become dross." (Isa. i. 22.) "Reprobate silver shall men call them because the Lord hath rejected them." (Jer. vi. 30.)

These verses (26, 27) are quoted by S. Hippolytus l. c. p. 100.

On the Laws of Nature cognizable by man (in opposition to the later theory of Locke), see Hooker, I. viii. 10.

— τὰ μὴ καθήκοντα] See on Eph. v. 4.

29. ἀδικίᾳ] Elz. adds πορνείᾳ, which is not found in the best MSS., and is rejected by Lach., Tisch., Alf.

— κακοηθείας] ill-nature; that malignant habit which turns every thing, however good, into evil, and lives on the poison which it makes for itself. Cp. Aristot. Rhet. ii. 13. Wetstein, ii. 27. Schleusner in v. Trench, Syn. N. T. § xi.

30. ψιθυριστὰς] backbiters; properly whisperers, 'susurrones,' clandestine propagators of calumnious reports; and so distinguished from the following word, καταλάλους, slanderers, persons guilty of evil-speaking, privately and in public.

— θεοστυγεῖς] haters of God. So the Authorized English Version after Theodoret, Suidas, Œcumenius, Grotius, and Syriac Version; and so Passow. This sense seems most consistent with the context. The Apostle is describing here the sins of the Heathen, and not their punishment; and it was competent for him to pronounce that they were haters of God (for this was seen from their own words and works), but it was not for him to declare that they were hated by God. Perhaps, therefore, the active sense is preferable, although the passive, "hated by God," has been adopted, as most consistent with analogy, by many recent Expositors (Fritzsche, Meyer, De Wette, Alford, Philippi), and by the learned Revisers of the English Authorized Version. The argument from analogy is not conclusive for the passive sense: θεομισὴς is 'a hater of God' (Aristoph. Av. 1555), and why not also θεοστυγὴς? Compare also iii. 18.

— ὑβριστὰς, ὑπερηφάνους, ἀλαζόνας] insolent and injurious in acts, proud in thoughts, and boastful in words. Cp. Fritzsche, and Trench, Syn. § xxix.

31. ἀσυνθέτους] fœdifragos, truce-breakers, μὴ ἐμμένοντας ταῖς συνθήκαις. Gloss. N. T. Alberti, p. 94. Cp. Jer. iii. 7. 10. LXX.

— ἀστόργους] Elz. adds ἀσπόνδους, not in A, B, D*, E, G.

32. τὸ δικαίωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ] the righteous decree or statute of God. Δικαίωμα is that which δεδικαίωται, i. e. has been counted just, and has been ordained and decreed, and is enforced as just. See ii. 26; viii. 4.

Hence, in a secondary sense, it signifies the statute kept, by righteous obedience; and a justified state. See v. 16.

— οὐ μόνον αὐτὰ ποιοῦσι—πράσσουσι] although they well know the just sentence of God, that they who practise (πράσσουσι) such things are worthy of death, not only do them, but even patronize those who practise them.

In the word πράσσω (from περάω, περαίνω, Buttmann, Lexil. § 95) the idea of continuance and habitual prosecution is brought out more strongly than in ποιῶ, and the word συνευδοκεῖν aggravates the offence; for he who does evil is carried away by his own passion, but he who patronizes it does it deliberately, and with malice prepense inflames the passions of others. See Œcumen., Bengel, Meyer.

CH. II. 1. Διὸ ἀναπολόγητος] Wherefore thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art (whether Jew or Gentile) that judgest.

An answer on the part of the Apostle (as usual with St. Paul, see i. 16) to a supposed objection.

Yes (the Jew might say), all that you have just now said concerning the moral condition and consequent misery of the Heathen is true. But what is that to us? We are God's elect We are His privileged people. We have His Law. We have the Holy Scriptures.

True (the Apostle may be now supposed to reply), and therefore you are without excuse, for (as he has just said, i. 32) it is declared in God's just decree (δικαίωμα) that all who do such things are worthy of death; and "we all know this" to be so (v. 2). And ye Jews who condemn the Heathen, practise yourselves the sins which ye condemn in others. And it is not by hearing the Law of God that you can be justified, but by doing it. (See v. 13.) It is not γνῶσις, but πρᾶξις that will save you. And therefore you are liable to the same, nay rather to greater, condemnation than the Heathen; inasmuch as you sin against clearer light and a more explicit Law than they. You, therefore, who are first in privileges, will be first in punishment (v. 9); and you will be condemned at the Great Day even by some of them whom you condemn, who, though they have not the Law, yet are Law unto themselves; and though they have not the letter of the Law written on tables of stone, yet show the work of the Law written in the fleshly tables of their own hearts. (vv. 14, 15. 27.)

— ἄνθρωπε] O man. He does not say ὦ Ἰουδαῖε, O Jew! but he says, and says twice, ὦ ἄνθρωπε, O man.

Why does he adopt this general designation?

(1) Because the proposition he is about to state is one of universal application.

(2) Because he will approach the Jew with gentleness, and not exasperate and alienate him by any abrupt denunciation.

(3) Because, if the Jew does those things with which St. Paul here charges him, he has disinherited himself; he is no longer worthy of the name of Ἰουδαῖος, but is a mere ἄνθρωπος (not ἀνὴρ), in a lost state. See ii. 28, 29, and on Rev. ii. 9; iii. 9, as to the word Ἰουδαῖος; and on the word ἄνθρωπος, see 1 Cor. iii. 3, 4.

This passage occupies an important place in the Pelagian controversy concerning Human Free Will, Divine Foreknowledge, and Divine Grace.

See the Dialogue on these questions in the works of S. Jerome, where the argument for Free Will is thus stated:—

Critobulus. Quid ergo juvat atque coronat in nobis Deus et laudat quod Ipse operatus est?

Atticus (Orthodoxus). Voluntatem nostram, quæ obtulit omne quod potuit; et laborem, qui contendit ut faceret; et humilitatem, quæ semper respexit ad auxilium Dei.

Crit. Ergo si non fecimus quod præcepit, aut voluit nos adjuvare Deus, aut noluit. Si voluit et adjuvit, et tamen non fecimus quod voluimus, non nos, sed ille superatus est. Sin autem noluit adjuvare, non est culpa ejus, qui voluit facere, sed illius qui adjuvare potuit, et noluit facere.

Att. Non intelligis διλήμματον tuum in grande blasphemiarum decidisse barathrum, ut ex utraque parte, aut invalidus sit Deus, aut invidus, et non tantum ei laudis sit, quod bonorum auctor est et adjutor, quantum vituperationis, quòd mala non coercuit. Detrahatur ergo illi, cur Diabolum esse permiserit, cur passus sit, et hujusque patiatur quotidie aliquid in mundo mali fieri. Quærit hoc Marcion, et omnes Hæreticorum canes, qui Vetus laniant Testamentum, et hujuscemodi syllogismum texere consueverunt;

Aut scivit Deus hominem in paradiso positum, prævaricaturum esse mandatum illius; aut nescivit.

Si scivit, non est in culpa is qui præscientiam Dei vitare non potuit, sed ille qui talem condidit, ut Dei non posset scientiam devitare.

Si nescivit, cui præscientiam tollis, aufers et divinitatem.

Hoc enim genere in culpa erit qui elegit Saül futurum postea regem impiissimum. Et Salvator aut ignorantiæ, aut injustitiæ tenebitur reus, cui in Evangelio sit loquutus: Nonne vos duodecim ego elegi Apostolos, et unus de vobis diabolus est? (Joh. vi. 70.) Interroga Eum, cur Judam elegerit proditorem? cur ei loculos commiserit, quem furem esse non ignorabat? Vis audire rationem. Deus præsentia judicat, non futura. Nec condemnat ex præscientia, quem noverit talem fore, qui sibi postea displicat: sed tantæ bonitatis est, et ineffabilis clementiæ, ut eligat eum, quem interim bonum cernit, et scit malum futurum, dans ei potestatem conversionis et pœnitentiæ, juxta illum sensum Apostoli: Ignoras quia benignitas Dei ad pœnitentiam te adducit? secundum duritiam autem tuam et cor impœnitens thesaurizas tibi iram in die iræ et revelationis justi judicii Dei, qui reddet unicuique secundùm opera ejus.

Neque enim ideo peccavit Adam, quia Deus hoc futurum noverat; sed præscivit Deus, quasi Deus, quod ille erat propria voluntate facturus. Accusa ergo Deum mendacii quare dixerit per Jonam: Adhuc tres dies et Ninive subvertetur. (Jonah iii. 4.) Sed respondebit tibi per Jeremiam: Ad summam loquar contra gentem et regnum, ut eradicem et destruam et disperdam illud. Si pœnitentiam egerit gens illa à malo suo, quod loquutus sum adversùs eam, agam et ego pœnitentiam super malo quod cogitavi ut facerem ei. Et ad summam loquar de gente et regno, ut ædificem et plantem illud: si fecerit malum in conspectu meo, ut non audiat vocem meam; pœnitentiam agam super bono, quod loquutus sum ut facerem ei. (Jer. xviii. 8; xxvi. 13.) Indignabatur quondam et Jonas, cur Deo fuerit jubente mentitus: sed injusti mœroris arguitur, malens cum pernicie innumerabilis populi verum dicere, quàm cum tantorum salute mentiri. Ponitur ei exemplum: Tu doles super hedera sive cucurbita, in qua non laborasti, neque fecisti ut cresceret, quæ sub una nocte nata est, et una nocte periit: et ego non parcam Ninive civitati magnæ, in qua sunt plus quàm centum viginti millia hominum, qui nesciunt quid sit inter dexteram et sinistram suam? (Jonah iv. 10, 11.) S. Jerome (Dialog. adv. Pelag. iii. p. 536).

— ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ὀργῆς] in the Day of Wrath. Now, on earth temporal blessings may be given to sinners; but at the last Great Day of everlasting recompense, when He shall render to every man according to his work, His vengeance shall manifest His wrath, and the righteousness of His judgment shall be revealed to every eye in the condign punishment of unreconciled sinners. *Bp. On the sense of ἐριθεία, see above on Gal. v. 20, the Excursus of Fritzsche here, p. 105. 143—148, and Philippi, p. 56.

On the use of ἐκ, cp. iii. 26; iv. 12. 14.

— ὀργὴ καὶ θυμός] So the best MSS. Elz. has θυμὸς καὶ ὀργή. Θυμὸς πρόσκαιρος, ὀργὴ πολυχρόνιος. (Ammon.) Θυμὸς is fitly placed after ὀργή, for it is iræ excandescentia. (Cic. Tusc. iv. 9.) Ὀργὴ is the heat of the fire, θυμὸς is the bursting forth of the flame.

St. Paul, in the rapidity of his style, omits the verb. See i. 15.

There is something very expressive in the change of structure of the sentence, and in the omission of the Verb here. It is Almighty God Who ἀποδώσει ζωὴν αἰώνιον. It is His primary design and desire to give eternal life to all. (1 Tim. ii. 4.) But man's destruction is brought down by man on himself, Deo nolente. (Hos. xiii. 9.) Cp. Œcumen.

9. θλῖψις καὶ στενοχωρία] afflictio et angustia. Cp. 2 Cor. iv. 8, ἐν παντὶ θλιβόμενοι, ἀλλ' οὐ στενοχωρούμενοι. Cp. Isa. viii. 22, LXX. The former word represents the act by which a man is cast down and dashed to the ground, the latter the state in which he is kept by continued pressure and constraint.

— Ἰουδαίου πρῶτον] The Jew first. The servant who knew his Lord's will, and did not do it, and will be beaten with many stripes, is the Jew; the servant who knew it not, is the Gentile. (Luke xii. 47, 48.) Origen.

11. προσωποληψία] A, D, G have προσωπολημψία, which reading has been received by Lachmann, and some other Editors, here and elsewhere, Acts x. 34. James ii. 9. So πρόσλημψις below, xi. 15.

This form with μ is probably an Alexandrine one. (Sturz. de Dialect. p. 130.) But it is very doubtful whether it ought to be admitted into the N. T.; or, if it is admitted into the N. T., it ought, by parity of reason, to be received also into the editions of Herodotus, Thucydides, and Plato, inasmuch as it is found in ancient MSS. of those Authors. But it is probably due to a vicious pronunciation of the copyists, who sounded β and π as μ. See Thilo, Cod. Apocryph. N. T. p. 288, and Fritzsche, p. 110, here.

12. ἀνόμως] without the written law. For all have some Law (v. 15), otherwise they could not sin; for where no Law is, there is no transgression. (Rom. iv. 15; v. 13. 20, and 1 Cor. xv. 56.) Sin is the transgression of the Law. (1 John iii. 4.)

— ἀνόμως καὶ ἀπολοῦνται] Will also perish without the written Law; that is, they will not be dealt with according to the rigour of that Law; but they will be judged by that Code which is written, not on tables of stone, but on the fleshly tables of the heart (2 Cor. iii. 3, and see v. 15),—"the common law of the world" (Bp. Andrewes, i. 290), the code of Conscience and of Reason.

13. νόμου] of the Law. Elz. has τοῦ νόμου, but τοῦ is not in A, B, D, G.

14. Ὅταν γὰρ ἔθνη, τὰ μὴ νόμον ἔχοντα] For whenever Gentiles —that is, any Gentiles—they who have not the Law. He does not say τὰ ἔθνη, the Gentiles, for that would be contrary to the supposition of the general moral depravity of the Heathen world, already described, i. 22—32.

— τὰ μὴ νόμον ἔχοντα] They who have not the Law, the written Law. See below, v. 17. He does not say τὰ μὴ ἔχοντα νόμον, but he says τὰ μὴ νόμον ἔχοντα. The word νόμον is placed emphatically as the first word; and the possession denied to the Gentiles is that of the Law, not of a Law; for all men have some law.

— φύσει τὰ τοῦ νόμου ποιῇ] When they do by nature the precepts of the Law of Moses. When they do them φύσει, by Nature, as distinct from θέσει or written Law. When they do them φύσει, by Nature rightly understood, and as distinguished from the vices of a corrupt Nature, in which sense St. Paul uses φύσις, Eph. ii. 3.

In the nature of Man, rightly understood, Conscience reigns and judges, and exercises royal Supremacy, and Sovereignty, and Judicial authority over the Will and Appetites of Man, and is, as it were, the Governing Power (subject always to the Supreme Law of God) in the constitution of Human Nature considered as a whole.

This dominion of Conscience is called by Origen here, "Naturalis Lex quæ communiter omnibus hominibus inest."

Consequently, whenever Passion domineers over human nature, it is guilty of usurpation; and when man allows this to be the case, he is guilty of violating the Law of his Nature, which is the work of God.

See Bp. Butler's Sermons ii. and iii. on Human Nature on this text of St. Paul, and see also the Preface to those Sermons.

On this important subject the reader may consult the expositions of Hooker, Bp. Sanderson, and Bp. Butler, brought together in Vol. i. of the Christian Institutes of the late Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, Dr. Wordsworth, i. pp. 121. 145, note. 174. 562. 569. 572, 573.

See also the Edition of the three Sermons of Bp. Butler, published by his successor, one of the principal restorers of the true System of Ethics in that University, the Rev. William Whewell, D.D., and the Sermon of their great predecessor, Dr. Isaac Barrow, "On the Being of God, proved from the frame of Human Nature," Works, iv. p. 163—183.

The subject is fully treated in the fourth Lecture of Bp. Sanderson, de Conscientiâ (Vol. iv. p. 65—90), particularly p. 71—81, following Hooker, II. ii. 1—6, and II. viii. 6, 7, and confuting the Puritan theories that man is subject to no Law but that of the Written Word; and the tenets of the school of Hobbes, followed by Locke and others, that there are no principles of Ethics written by the finger of God in the heart of man. Against such a system of Philosophy the Heathens themselves reclaimed. See Soph. Antig. 450—455, and even Juvenal, xiii. 192.

— ἑαυτοῖς εἰσι νόμος] They are to themselves Law. Νόμος is not to be rendered a Law (for a Law may be an unjust Law, and there is but one Moral Law), nor yet does it here mean the Mosaic Law, as far as it was Mosaic, and was delivered specially to the Jews, and as distinguished from the antecedent, unwritten, universal Code of Morality, engraven on the Human Conscience, and promulgated by God, at the beginning of the World, as the Common Law of Human Nature.

The Apostle means, that when Gentiles, which have not the Law of Moses, do the works of that Law (which was only a republication of the primeval Code of Ethics), they are to themselves Law, in her abstract dignity, "whose seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world." (Hooker, I. xvi. 8.) Cp. Aristot. Eth. Nic. iv. 14, ὁ ἐλεύθερος οὕτως ἕξει, οἷον νόμος ὢν ἑαυτῷ.

15. οἵτινες ἐνδείκνυνται τὸ ἔργον τοῦ νόμου] Inasmuch as they display the work of the Law, even of the Mosaic Law itself, written on their hearts; for there is but one Moral Law, Eternal, Immutable, Universal; and the Mosaic Law, in its moral enactments, was only a Transcript and Republication of the Original and Eternal Law of Ethics, graven on Man's Conscience, Reason, and Heart, in the time of his innocency, and grounded on the everlasting foundation of the Attributes of God.

On this use of οἵτινες, quippe qui, see i. 25. 32, Meyer, Philippi, and "Revised Version," p. ix.

— μεταξὺ ἀλλήλων] between one another; invicem, inter se. On this use of μεταξὺ, see Acts xv. 9, διέκρινε μεταξὺ ἡμῶν καὶ αὐτῶν. Matt. xviii. 15.

Man needs not external witnesses or accusers. He has them in his own breast, αὐτόθεν ἐξ αὐτῶν λογισμῶν ἡ ἁμαρτία παρίσταται. Œcumen.

The λογισμοὶ here specified are man's inward reasonings, reckonings with himself, with which he audits the accounts of his own conduct at a "Session holden in his own heart, which is a forerunner of the great Session that is to ensue." Bp. Andrewes (iii. 334).

The λογισμοὶ of man are here represented as Witnesses testifying, and as Advocates pleading, inter se, i. e. for and against him in the court of his Συνείδησις or Conscience, which is God's Vicegerent and Deputy, holding an assize in his heart, and administering Justice in God's Name, according to the Law, which is given by Him Who is the only Lawgiver that is able to save and to destroy. (James iv. 12.) Cp. Bp. Sanderson, de Conscient. Præl. ii. 2, Vol. iv. p. 24, who cites Menander, p. 358, βροτοῖς δικασιν ἡ Συνείδησις θεὸς, and Prælect. iv. Serm. iv. 9, Vol. ii. p. 113, and Serm. vi. 23—25, Vol. iii. p. 237, and iv. pp. 15. 72.

Not but that these λογισμοὶ themselves are acts of Conscience also, which performs the part of a Monitor and Counsellor de faciendis, a Testis de factis, and also a Judex de rectène an malè factis. See Sanderson, Præl. i. 27, who observes that St. Paul is speaking here of Heathens; and that he teaches here that every man, however unholy, has a conscience, though depraved; and that, at the Fall of Man, Conscience itself was not lost, but its rectitude and integrity were impaired; and that when we are born again in baptism we do not receive the infusion of another Conscience, but our Conscience, which was before unclean, is washed by the blood of Christ, and is cleansed by Faith, in order that it may please God.

16. ἐν ἡμέρᾳ] This seems to follow on v. 10; the introduction and continuation of the Parenthesis being marked by the conjunction γάρ, repeated four times, vv. 11, 12, 13, 14. Still there is a connexion between this verse and what immediately precedes. For, as Origen observes, Conscience, which exercises a judicial office in the present life, will exercise it in a special and solemn manner at the Great Day. It will be the accuser of the evil, the acquitter of the good. It will be even, as it were, an Assessor of the Judge Himself.

17. Εἰ δέ] Elz. has ἴδε, but εἰ δὲ is found in A, B, D*, E, K, and the preponderance of MSS. is in its favour, and is received by Griesb., Scholz., Lach., Tisch., Alf., Bloomf.

But if thou art entitled a Jew, Ἰουδαῖος, one who by his very name professes to praise God. (See v. 29, and Rev. iii. 9.) If thou art a Jew in name, show thyself one in deed. (Origen.)

Elz. has τῷ before νόμῳ, but it is not in A, B, D*; and νόμος has the force of a proper name, as in v. 14, and signifies here as usual the positive written Law. See Meyer, Alf., and Philippi, p. 59.

18. δοκιμάζεις τὰ διαφέροντα] Discernest the things that are more excellent. Having the touchstone of the written Law in thy hand, art able to ascertain and recognize that which is genuine and true, and to distinguish it from what is spurious and false, and (as far as thy reason is concerned) approvest it as such. See above, i. 28, and 1 Cor. iii. 13; and below, Phil. i. 10.

— κατηχούμενος] Being orally instructed. See Luke i. 4, and on Luke ii. 46, as to the use of catechetical instruction among the Jews.

20. μόρφωσιν] model; 'formam honesti,' Cic. de Off. i. 5. So exemplar, effigies, species, τύπος, are used in the philosophical writings of Antiquity, for an ideal personification of Virtue. See Bentley on Freethinking, p. 278, near the end.

21, 22. κλέπτεις—μοιχεύεις] See the sins charged, and the woes denounced, by our Lord on the Jewish Teachers and Rulers, Matt. xxiii. 13—28; and the description given by St. James of the state of morals at Jerusalem, v. 1—4; and by Josephus at the time of the siege, B. J. iv. 3. 3; v. 9. 4. 13. 6; and his remarkable confession, v. 10. 5, that "no city had ever suffered such miseries, nor did any age produce a generation more fruitful in wickedness, since the beginning of the World."

As to the prevalence of μοιχεία among the Jews, see John viii. 9.

— ἱεροσυλεῖς] Thou who abhorrest the idols of the heathens, dost thou rob the temple of God? Particularly in robbery of tithes and offerings. (Mal. i. 8. 12. 14; iii. 10.) A very common sin among the Jews, and for which Ananias, the High Priest, was specially notorious (Joseph. Ant. xx. 9. 2); thus imitating the sin for which his namesake, Ananias, was struck dead by God. (Acts v. 2. 5.)

The profanation of the Temple, twice punished by our Lord, was also a public example of ἱεροσυλία. (Matt. xxi. 13. John ii. 14.)

24. καθὼς γέγραπται] as it is written. He proves the sinfulness of the Jews from their own Scriptures, on the ground of which they claimed pre-eminence over the Gentiles. Cp. Isa. lii. 5. Ezek. xxxvi. 19. Surenhus. p. 437.

27. κρινεῖ] κατακρινεῖ (Matt. xii. 41). Will rise up in the judgment against thee. (Œcumen.) Ἐλέγξει σὲ (so read for ἐλέγξῃ σε) ὁ τὸ σημεῖον μὴ ἔχων, τὰ δὲ τοῦ σημείου κατορθώσας, ὡς μὴ κατορθώσαντα. Origen (in Caten. p. 4).

— ἡ ἀκροβυστία] the Uncircumcision, i. e. of the Gentile world, as the Jews are called ἡ περιτομή, the Circumcision. See Phil. iii. 2.

On the word ἀκροβυστία, see 1 Cor. vii. 18.

— τὸν διὰ γράμματος καὶ περιτομῆς παραβάτην νόμου] Thee, who through the letter and circumcision transgressest the law. Διὰ signifies here something more than the state in which the agent is (as iv. 11; xiv. 20. 2 Cor. ii. 4; iii. 11); it intimates in the present passage (as an aggravation of the sin) that the Jew breaks through the barriers with which the Law fences him in. So iv. 11, οἱ πιστεύοντες δι' ἀκροβυστίας, those who, being in uncircumcision, overcome, and, as it were, pass through its hindrances and believe. See also on xiv. 20, τῷ διὰ προσκόμματος ἐσθίοντι, and cp. Winer, § 47, p. 339.

29. περιτομὴ καρδίας] Circumcision has a moral and spiritual meaning: εἴ τις οὐκ ἐκκόπτεται τὰ πάθη (his sinful affections), ἀκρόβυστός ἐστιν. Photius.

— ἐν πνεύματι] The spirit, the inner man, as opposed to the flesh. Theodor. Mopsuest.

— οὗ ὁ ἔπαινος] The praise whereof, not merely of whom: the praise and reward is applicable to the whole character and subject described in vv. 28, 29. Cp. Meyer.

Ch. III. 1. Τί οὖν τὸ περισσόν] What then is the acknowledged pre-eminence of the Jew? A question from a Jewish objector,—If what you have said be true, what becomes of the preference given by God Himself to us, His chosen people the Jews? Does not your argument contravene that? Does not it involve an assertion that we Jews have no pre-eminence at all, except one of present guilt and future punishment? Does it not tend to subvert the Law, which is from God?

No, replies the Apostle; and he now proceeds to prove that his argument is in perfect harmony with the divine choice of the Jews, as a peculiar people, and that it establishes the Law. See v. 31.

On τὸ περισσὸν, cp. Matt. v. 37. 47.

2. ἐπιστεύθησαν τὰ λόγια] They (the Hebrew Nation) were entrusted with the Oracles of God.

On the grammatical structure, see above 1 Thess. ii. 4. So far am I from disparaging the Law, that I affirm your greatest privilege to be in possessing the Law; your greatest prerogative is that you have been entrusted with the Oracles of God (cp. Acts vii. 38. 1 Pet. iv. 11), the Law, and the Prophets.

But observe also, that in them, as will now be shown, God has declared His wrath against sin, and He has shown the universal sinfulness of mankind, whether Jew or Gentile, and their universal need of a Redeemer, and of His righteousness; and by consequence He has revealed His wrath against you for your sins, and your need of that gracious method of Justification which He has provided for all through Faith in Christ.

The Apostle thus confirms his argument concerning the greater responsibility of the Jews, and consequent guilt, proportionate to the greater knowledge communicated to them by God in the Holy Scriptures. He also prepares the way for his quotations from the Law and the Prophets, the λόγια Θεοῦ, in their hands (see 10—19), concerning their own sinfulness, and concerning Justification by Faith in Christ.

This Text is also an important testimony concerning the Canon of Holy Scripture. Cp. ix. 9.

The Holy Spirit, by the mouth of St. Paul, declares here that those Writings which were committed to the charge of the Hebrew Nation, as "the Oracles of God," are what that Nation esteemed them to be, the inspired and perfect Written Word of God, as far as it had then been delivered to the Church.

Therefore—

(1) Those Writings are to be revered as such by all who hope to be saved; and

(2) No other writings are to be so regarded, such as the Apocrypha, which then existed, but were not committed as λόγια Θεοῦ to the Hebrew Church, nor were ever received by it as such. See Bp. Cosin on the Canon, chap. ii.; and the authorities cited in the Editor's 2nd, 3rd, and 4th Lectures on the Canon of Scripture and on the Apocrypha, 1851, p. 27—128, as to the functions of the Hebrew Church as the divinely constituted Trustee and Guardian of the Old Testament.

3. Τί γάρ] For what, albeit some (among the Jews) were unbelieving? He solves an objection raised from their disobedience to the Law which God committed to their trust. Photius.

— μὴ ἡ ἀπιστία αὐτῶν τὴν πίστιν τοῦ Θεοῦ καταργήσει;] Shall the unfaithfulness of them nullify the faithfulness of God?

There is a paronomasia in the words ἐπιστεύθησαν, ἠπίστησαν, ἀπιστία, πίστιν, which ought to be observed, but is difficult to express in English. The phrase πίστιν τοῦ Θεοῦ (which is an unusual one) is best explained by the assertion πιστὸς ὁ Θεὸς, God is faithful. (1 Cor. i. 9; x. 13. 2 Cor. i. 18.) Πίστις is used for a pledge and promise. (Acts xvii. 31. 1 Tim. v. 12.)

4. μὴ γένοιτο] Heaven forbid that this should be so! "Minimè vero!"

On the phrase μὴ γένοιτο, containing a very strong negation, and often used by St. Paul in this Epistle and that to the Galatians, and only once in all his other Epistles, 1 Cor. vi. 15, see above on Gal. ii. 17; iii. 21; below, vv. 6. 31; vi. 2. 15; vii. 7. 13; ix. 14; xi. 1. 11.

— γινέσθω—ψεύστης] Let God be accounted true. Let Him become true, i. e. subjectively, even to those who now suspect Him to be not so. Let the truth of His promises be acknowledged by all (he does not venture to say ἔστω, but γινέσθω), although that recognition should involve the admission that every man is false. Photius.

Nothing that is in man can annul the faithfulness of God; neither the original unworthiness of God's children, nor their actual unfaithfulness. Still God will be glorified in the truth and faithfulness of His promises. Bp. Sanderson, Serm. ii. Vol. ii. p. 41, where he gives an exposition of verses 5—8.

— Ὅπως ἄν] In order that. (See Ps. li. 5.) David does not mean that he had committed sin with the intention of glorifying God. By so doing he would have exposed himself to the condemnation pronounced in v. 8 here. But he means that the evil of his sin had been overruled by God for good, in order that even it might be conducive to the greater manifestation of the Divine Justice. Cp. Bp. Sanderson, Prælect. ii. 8.

With this use of ὅπως ἄν, indicating a providential design, compare that of ἵνα above, 1 Cor. i. 15. 2 Cor. i. 9; iv. 7, and note.

David does not excuse his sin on the ground that in its pardon God's mercy will be glorified, although he says that this will be the result (Ps. li. 6); but he grieves over his sins, and declares that God will judge the world (ix. 8; lviii. 10); and that the wicked shall be punished by Him for ever (ix. 17).

God may, and does, exercise His power, and wisdom, and love, in educing the greatest good from the worst evil; but this is the effect of His own incommunicable attributes, and not of man's sins, which are not "ordinabilia ad bonum finem."

God never does evil in order to elicit good from it, nor does He permit any man to do evil in order that good may come. It is indeed very important, with what intention a thing is done. But whatever is sinful is never to be done on the plea of good intention. S. Augustine (de Mendacio, c. 7).

— Ὅπως ἂν δικαιωθῇς] In order that thou mayest be justified, i. e. be accounted just. By using this word here St. Paul puts into our hand a key for unlocking the meaning of his argument concerning Justification. The sense in which David used the word צָדַק (tsadak), and its compounds, and in which his LXX Translators used δικαιῶν and δικαιοῦσθαι, is the sense in which he is about to use them. See below, v. 24—26.

— καὶ νικήσῃς] and prevail judicially in thy cause.

5. Εἰ δὲ—ὀργήν] But if the unrighteousness of us men manifests the righteousness of God; if our sin lays a foundation on which God builds His righteousness as a superstructure, what then shall we say? If our sin sets forth in a clear light the righteousness of God, is God unrighteous, He Who sends down (ὁ ἐπιφέρων) the wrath by which our unrighteousness is punished?

On the use of συνίστημι, constituo, colloco, and thence manifesto, φανεροῦν, βεβαιοῦν (Hesych.), and thence to introduce and present by a commendatory letter, see above, Gal. ii. 18 and 2 Cor. vii. 11; and below, v. 8 and xvi. 1.

Here is another objection, suggested by the mention of the sin of David, to which he had just referred. David himself had said, in the words just quoted by the Apostle, Against Thee only have I sinned, in order that thou mightest be justified in thy words, and prevail when thou art judged.

Thus (it might be alleged) David, by sinning, was like one who built up and displayed God's righteousness to the world. Is God then unrighteous in inflicting the punishment upon the sin, which had been, as it were, the groundwork of his own righteousness (this question is a general one)? For all sin and all evil will in the end be overruled by God for Good.

On the use of μὴ, num (not nonne), see Winer, § 57, p. 453. St. Paul would not venture to ask, "Is not God unjust?" It is enough for him to allow the question to be put, as if it admitted a doubt, and he apologizes even for that.

7. Εἰ γὰρ ἡ ἀλήθεια] For if the truth of God abounded by my lie unto His glory, why am I still as a sinner liable to be judged?

Another objection which St. Paul rejects with indignation. See a parallel instance of an objection thus suddenly introduced, as in a dialogue, between the Apostle and an interlocutor in 1 Cor. x. 29.

"My lie," that is, mine, or any one's. On the practice of St. Paul, thus introducing the objections of others (in which he by no means concurs) in his own name, see above on Gal. ii. 18, and 1 Cor. vi. 12.

8. Καὶ μὴ, καθὼς βλασφημούμεθα] And why do we not rather say, as we are blasphemously reported, and as some affirm that we do say, "let us do those things that are evil (τὰ κακὰ) in order that those things which are good (τὰ ἀγαθὰ) may come?"

The imputation to him of such a doctrine as this, that "we may do evil in order that good may come," is resented by St. Paul as a blasphemous slander; and all who hold such a doctrine as that are thus denounced by him, their "condemnation is just."

See Bp. Sanderson's Sermon (A.D. 1626) on this text, Vol. ii. p. 41—75, where (p. 48) he mentions with approval two interpretations, viz. the damnation is just of those,

(1) Who unjustly slander us in this manner, or

(2) Who adventure to do any evil under whatsoever pretence of good to come.

The former appears to be the preferable sense. Compare his Prælect. de Consc. ii. 5, where he says: To understand the full scope and design of this passage, we are to observe that, of all the Apostles of our Lord, St. Paul asserts every where in the most copious manner, the extensive mercy and compassion of God in entering into a covenant of grace with sinners, and fulfilling faithfully the promises of the Gospel, notwithstanding the wickedness and infidelity of mankind, who were corrupted at the heart, and in their daily practice betrayed their impiety and want of faith; and yet so far was the sinner from vacating the Evangelical promises, and making them of none effect, that his very sins contributed to God's glory, and made His truth and grace still more illustrious; for where sin abounded, grace did much more abound. (Rom. v. 20.)

From this doctrine of the Apostle, not only the Sophisters and Impostors took occasion to defame and undermine the authority of St. Paul, but the Hypocrites and Libertines of the age made use of it to countenance and give them a security in their vices. And no wonder; for if the preaching of the Apostle were true, that the sins of men redounded to the glory of God, the divine justice could not reasonably exert itself in the punishment of sinners; there would be no encouragement for Virtue or Religion; nay, men were obliged to sin more abundantly, that God might receive the more abundant glory; and it would be their duty, upon all occasions, to do evil, that good might come. Other aspersions that were thrown upon the Apostle by his enemies, he confuted by proper arguments. But this he thought unworthy of an answer; he only expostulates with indignation, and resents it as the vilest slander, and as a degree of blasphemy. Bp. Sanderson (Prælect. de Consc. Vol. ii. p. 73, English Translation. Lond. 1783).

9. Τί οὖν; προεχόμεθα;] What then? Do we Jews excel them, the Gentiles? No; in no wise. The word προεχόμεθα seems to be the middle voice (not passive), and may be compared with σεαυτὸν παρεχόμενος τύπον, Tit. ii. 7. And the sense is, Do we occupy a higher position in virtue than they do? So Vulg., 'præcellimus eos;' and similarly Origen, Theophyl., Theodoret, and Tholuck, De Wette, Philippi, Bloomf. Cod. Boerner. has προκατέχομεν περισσὸν, which gives the same sense.

This exposition is combined by some of these interpreters and others, with the sense, 'Are we preferred by God?' But the Apostle is not dwelling on God's favour, but on man's sin; and he shows that the Jews are not at all superior to the Gentiles in holiness.

Some recent Interpreters render the words, Have we any pretext or excuse for ourselves? But this rendering does not cohere with the argument.

The Apostle employs the pronoun we (as usual) to conciliate the Jews, by associating himself with his countrymen. See above, ii. 2.

The περισσὸν or prerogative of the Jews was, that they were the appointed keepers of the books of the Law (v. 2); he now goes on to show that this περισσὸν is, by their sin, made rather an argument for their condemnation, because they have not kept the precepts of the Law, of which they were the appointed guardians.

— Οὐ πάντως] No; in no wise. Winer, p. 489. Matt. xxiv. 22, and below, v. 20.

— προῃτιασάμεθα] we before charged or arraigned both Jew and Gentile as under sin. See i. 18; ii. 1.

10. καθὼς γέγραπται—18. αὐτῶν] His argument against the Jews is grounded on the Jewish Scriptures, as before;

This ground of the Scriptures is properly taken by him,

(1) Because the Jews charged him with disparaging the Law contained in the Scriptures, by his doctrine of Justification by Faith.

(2) Because the custody of the Scriptures was the great privilege of the Jews (v. 1).

(3) Because his doctrine of Justification by Faith establishes the Law contained in those Scriptures.

Accordingly, he repeats the words καθὼς γέγραπται, as it is written, or γέγραπται, or the like, no less than nineteen times in this Epistle: i. 17; ii. 24; iii. 4. 10; iv. 17. 23; viii. 36; ix. 13. 33; x. 5. 15; xi. 8. 26; xii. 19; xiv. 11; xv. 3, 4. 9. 21.

He convinces the Jews of guilt by the testimony of their prophetical Scriptures, especially the Psalms, which denounce punishment on the sin of those who reject Christ.

19. Οἴδαμεν δέ] Now we know that whatsoever the Law (the Old Testament, which he has just been quoting) saith, it saith to them that are under the Law; and therefore the descriptions of sin which have just been cited from the Old Testament, are to be applied by you, who are Jews, to yourselves, as representing your own guilt before God.

20. διότι ἐξ ἔργων νόμου—σὰρξ] Because no flesh shall be justified in His sight by works of the Law.

Here is the reason why all mankind, including the Jews, are liable to sentence of condemnation. The Law gives clearer knowledge of sin, but does not enable any one to be sinless, nor provide any expiation for sin.

— Διὰ νόμου ἐπίγνωσις ἁμαρτίας] through the Law, is a clear knowledge of sin, and nothing more; and sins of knowledge are greater than sins of ignorance. Œcumen.

21—26. Νυνὶ δὲ—Ἰησοῦ] But now (in the Christian dispensation) apart from the Law (of Moses), the Righteousness of God, namely, that Righteousness which appertains to God alone (for all men are sinners), and which is not only imputed, but imparted, to man through the Incarnation of Jesus Christ "the Righteous," Who is the "Lord our Righteousness" (see above, i. 17, and 1 Cor. i. 30), has been made manifest in the Gospel; that Righteousness which was before attested by the Law and the Prophets; yea (δὲ) the Righteousness of God, conveyed through Faith in Jesus Christ unto all, and upon all, so as to extend as a gift to all, and so as to cover all (see Gal. iii. 27), that believe; the Righteousness of God in Christ, the Eternal Word, reaching to all, and flowing like a stream upon all, and cleansing all whose nature He has taken, and who are made members of Him, and so are partakers of the Divine Nature, by Faith. (2 Pet. i. 4.)

For, all alike need a Redeemer; and Christ, "Who is God over all" (ix. 5), has taken the nature of all, and died for all; there is no difference. All sinned, and fall short of the glory of God. Being justified freely by His grace and favour, not by their own works, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, Whom God set forth as a propitiation through faith, by the shedding of His blood for the manifestation of God's Judicial Righteousness, which might otherwise have been questioned, because of the passing over of the former sins (which appeared to deserve punishment, and did not receive it, and were winked at by God) in the forbearance of God, for the manifestation of His Judicial Righteousness in the present season, to the intent that God may be just, and yet also at the same time be justifying the man who rests on the Faith that is in Jesus, and grows as it were out of that Faith (and not on his own works) as the root of his Christian life.

This passage brings before us the following important points:

(1) That δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ, Righteousness, not devised by man for himself, but by God for man, has now been made manifest in the Gospel.

(2) That it is χωρὶς νόμου, apart from the Mosaic Law, independent of the Law,—not of the Law as a rule of Practice, but of the Law as a Covenant. See v. 31.

(3) That it was preannounced and 'attested' by the previous and preparatory 'witness of the Law and the Prophets,' and therefore is not contrary to 'the Law and the Prophets,' but is the fulfilment of them.

(4) That it is available to all universally by Faith in Christ.

(5) That it is needed by all; for all men sinned. Observe the aorist; all men sinned in Adam, all men fell in him (v. 12), and there is no man who sinned not. The universal sinfulness of mankind is summed up as it were in one act. All sinned, all come short of the glory of God (v. 23), and cp. v. 2, ἐπ' ἐλπίδι τῆς δόξης τοῦ Θεοῦ.

(6) That it is not purchased or procured by man for himself, but is given freely by the grace of God; so that God looks on man no longer as man is in his fallen nature, stripped of original righteousness, wounded and naked (as the traveller in the road from Jerusalem to Jericho, see on Luke x. 31); but God beholds man as created anew in Christ, and as invested with the robe of His Righteousness, with Whom the Father is well pleased; and as "accepted in the Beloved." (Eph. i. 6.)

(7) That this Righteousness is given by God's free grace and favour, through the Redemption or Ransom (ἀπολύτρωσις) in Christ Jesus, Who as Jesus, or man, was able to suffer, and also, as Christ, the Son of God, was able to satisfy for us all, whose nature He has taken, and so became our second Adam, and joined our nature to the nature of God.

(8) That this Redemption has been provided by God, Who set forth Christ for Himself (προέθετο), so as to satisfy His offended Justice, to be a propitiatory Victim for our sins.

Some Expositors (Theophyl., Œcumen., Erasmus, Luther, following Theodoret) suppose ἱλαστήριον here to signify the Propitiatorium, the Propitiatory, or the Mercy-Seat, or Throne of Grace, on which God's presence and favour rests, and in which His Shechinah or Glory manifests itself, as it did between the Cherubim overshadowing the Ark (Ps. lxxx. 1), and which is sprinkled by our Great High Priest with His own Blood. (Exod. xxv. 17. Levit. xvi. 14—18.) Cp. Heb. ix. 5.

This exposition (which deserves consideration, and was adopted by many ancient Interpreters, and has been ably maintained by Philippi, p. 106), does not seem so suitable to the context as that which renders ἱλαστήριον a sin-offering, or propitiatory Victim. See the authorities in Fritz., p. 193, and in Meyer, De Wette, and Alf.

For, the fact on which the Apostle here dwells, is the blood-shedding of Christ, by which He paid the price of our Redemption (ἀπολύτρωσις), and appeased the anger of God, and cleansed us from sin, and displayed the sternness of God's Justice and Wrath against it; and showed that the temporary prætermission (πάρεσις, v. 25) on God's part, of the past sins of mankind, was not due to any indifference on His side to the guilt of sin (as some might have imagined, Ps. x. 12; l. 21), and yet enabled Him (if we may venture so to speak), without any compromise of His Justice, to be the Justifier of all who build their foundation on Faith in Jesus, the Saviour of all.

Besides (as Stuart observes), the word προέθετο, He publicly set forth (cp. Thucyd. ii. 34), is not applicable to the covering of the Mercy-Seat, which was concealed from the people, and even from the priests, and which is, as its name, ἱλαστήριον, כַּפֹּרֶת, capporeth, or covering (Levit. xvi. 2. Exod. xxv. 17, 18—22. Cp. Heb. ix. 5) signifies, the covering of our sins by Christ's Righteousness, by which ἀνεκαλύφθησαν αἱ ἁμαρτίαι. Rom. iv. 7. 1 John ii. 2.

(9) That the blood of the Son of God was shed for an exhibition of (εἰς ἔνδειξιν) God's Justice,—requiring no less a sacrifice than one of infinite value; and because (διὰ) of the prætermission (πάρεσιν), passing-by, or overlooking of sins that had been committed in past times, which sins had been winked at by God (Acts xvii. 30),—not because He was indifferent to sin, but in His long-suffering (ἀνοχή).

But this prætermission necessitated such an exhibition of God's hatred against sin, as Christ's Death was, lest men should suppose that God is only merciful, and not also just: and that He will not punish sin; whereas the truth is, that God in Christ is not only the Justifier of sinners, but also just in punishing sin.

By this assertion the Apostle also obviates the objections of Jews, and also of Socinians, against the doctrine of the Atonement, as if it were an arbitrary act of severity. He shows that it is grounded in the everlasting attributes of the Godhead—Justice and Holiness.

πάρεσις, the temporary prætermission (cp. Acts xvii. 30) is to be distinguished from ἄφεσις, total remission. God παρῆκεν ἁμαρτίας before Christ's Passion, but He ἀφίησιν ἁμαρτίας, in, by, and after it. The former was a work of ἀνοχή, or forbearance, the latter of χάρις, or grace.

Whenever He forgave sins under the old dispensation it was by reason of the Blood of Christ, presupposed, and having a retrospective efficacy. Cp. Heb. ix. 15.

On the sense of πάρεσις, see Fritz. p. 199, 200; Meyer, p. 117; Alford, Trench Syn. xxxiii.

(10) That this sacrifice was provided for the manifestation of His Justice in the present season (καιρῷ), that of the Gospel dispensation), so that He might be proved to be Just (according to the Moral Law) in punishing the sins of mankind, represented by His own well-beloved Son, obeying and suffering in their Nature, and as their Proxy; and in accepting a competent satisfaction offered to Him in amends for the debt due to Him, and in reparation of the injury done to Him; and in consequence thereof acquitting the debtor and remitting the offence. (Rom. iii. 24. 26.) And therefore Justification is expressed as a result of Christ's redemption,—a proper and immediate effect of our Saviour's

24. δικαιούμενοι] being justified.

26. δικαιοῦντα τὸν ἐκ πίστεως Ἰησοῦ] justifying him who builds by Faith on Jesus as his foundation, and springs from Him as the source of his life, and the root of his spiritual being. On this use of ἐκ, see i. 17; ii. 18.

On FAITH, as the instrument by which we are justified, see below on v. 1, and above p. 199, 200.

These paragraphs require an investigation of the meaning of the word ΔΙΚΑΙΟΩ, as used by St. Paul.

St. Paul has given a clue for the interpretation of this word by the use he has already made of it in i. 17; ii. 13; iii. 4.

Its sense had also been declared by the usage of the Septuagint Version, where δικαιοῦν is equivalent to צִדֵּק (hitsedik), justificavit, and has the force of acquitting or accounting and declaring righteous, in opposition to condemning and pronouncing guilty. Cp. below, viii. 33, with the use of the word by the LXX in Gen. xxxviii. 26; xliv. 16. Exod. xxiii. 7. Deut. xxv. 1. 2 Sam. xv. 4. Ps. lxxxii. 3. Isa. v. 23.

This meaning is further illustrated and confirmed by the use of the word δικαιόω in the Gospels and Acts. See Matt. xi. 19; xii. 37. Luke vii. 29. 35; x. 29; xvi. 15; xviii. 14. Acts xiii. 39, where see notes.

In all these cases the word δικαιοῦν signifies to account and declare righteous, and to regard and to treat as such. But it does not signify to make righteous.

This appears to be the proper sense of the word, as used by St. Paul.

Here then we are led to advert to the controversies that have arisen in the Church concerning the words Justification and to justify, as applied to man.

It is affirmed by some that they intimate an imputation of the righteousness of another (viz. of Christ) to us.

Others assert that they also represent the infusion of His righteousness (δικαιοσύνη) into us.

Perhaps the truth may best be cleared by saying, that while it is true, that the word δικαιοῦν, strictly rendered, signifies to account righteous by imputation, and not to make righteous by infusion; and that the formal act, wherein Justification, properly understood, consists, is the imputation of the righteousness of Christ to us, and the declaration of our acquittal and restoration to God's favour by virtue of the meritorious acts and sufferings of Christ; yet that in this statement there is no denial, but rather a declaration, that we are also made righteous by our union with Christ, and that God's Righteousness (δικαιοσύνη) is not only imputed, but also is imparted to us in Him. See above on 1 Cor. i. 30. 2 Cor. v. 21. Rom. i. 17; iii. 21, 22.

This work is done by the grace received from God through Christ by the operation of the Holy Ghost; but this work of infusion of grace is not properly to be called Justification, but rather to be designated as Sanctification.

On this point we may refer to the language of Hooker (Serm. ii. on Justification, Vol. iii. p. 484), where he examines the doctrine of the Council of Trent, which teaches that Justification itself is a righteousness in us inherent (whereas St. Paul teaches that we are to be found in Christ if we are faithful, not having our own righteousness, Phil. iii. 9), and that Grace is applied by good works to the meriting of more Grace and more Justification.

This, says Hooker, is the "mystery of the Man of sin" (p. 489).

And he adds (p. 491), Now concerning the righteousness of Sanctification, we grant that, unless we work, we have it not. Only we distinguish it as a thing in nature different from the righteousness of Justification.

Of the one St. Paul speaks (Rom. iv. 5); of the other, St. John (1 John iii. 7), He that doeth righteousness is righteous.

Of the one, St. Paul proves by Abraham's example that we have it of faith without works (Rom. iv.); of the other, St. James proves by Abraham's example that by works we have it, and not only by Faith. (James ii.)

St. Paul doth plainly sever these two parts of Christian Righteousness from one another (Rom. vi. 22), "Being freed from sin, and made servants unto God;" this is the righteousness of Justification. "Ye have your fruit unto holiness;" this is the righteousness of Sanctification. By the one we are interested in the right of inheriting; by the other we are brought to the actual possessing of eternal bliss. And so the end of both is Everlasting Life. Hooker.

An appropriate sequel to these words of Hooker may be found in Bp. Andrewes' Sermon on Justification in the Name of Christ, "the Lord our Righteousness," Jer. xxiii. 6 (Works, v. pp. 104. 113), where he says, God hath given Christ's very Righteousness to us, to the end that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him. (2 Cor. v. 21.)

In the Scripture there is a double Righteousness set down. Abraham believed, and it was accounted unto him for righteousness. (Gen. xv. 6.) A righteousness accounted. And again in the next line, Abraham will teach his house to do righteousness. A righteousness done. In the New Testament likewise; the former in one chapter (the fourth to the Romans) no fewer than eleven times, reputatum est illi ad justitiam (Rom. iv. 3. 5, 6. 8, 9, 10, 11. 16. 22, 23, 24); the latter in St. John (1 John iii. 7), He that doeth righteousness is righteous. The former is an act of the Judge declaring or pronouncing righteous: the other is a quality of the party. The one is ours by account or imputation; the other ours by influence or infusion. That both these there are, there is no question. He then compares this doctrine with the Roman theory. Bp. Andrewes. See also Vol. v. p. 555.

To these may be added the following from Dr. Barrow "on Justifying Faith" (Serm. iv. Vol. iv. p. 89—117), and particularly "on Justification by Faith" (Serm. v. Vol. iv. p. 117—140).

(1) God, in regard to the obedience and intercession of His beloved Son, is so reconciled to mankind, that unto every person that doth sincerely believe the Gospel He doth, upon the solemn profession of that Faith, by Baptism entirely remit all past offences, receiving him into His favour. (Acts ii. 38; iii. 19; v. 31. 2 Cor. v. 19. Rom. iii. 24.)

(2) He doth, in regard to the same performances and intercession of His Son, remit sin, and restore such a person, on his repentance, to His favour.

(3) He doth, to each person continuing in steady adherence to the Gospel, afford His Holy Spirit, as a principle productive of all inward sanctity and virtuous dispositions in the heart; that which is by some termed making a person just, infusion into his soul of righteousness. (Rom. viii. 14. Gal. iv. 6. 1 Cor. ii. 12. 2 Tim. ii. 7. Eph. ii. 10; iv. 23.)

The question is, to which of these three acts the word Justification is most properly and strictly applicable; and particularly in what sense is it used by St. Paul?

On this question, he says, after investigating the use of the word in the Ancient Scriptures,

"I do observe and affirm that God's justifying, solely or chiefly, doth import His acquitting us from guilt, condemnation, and punishment, by free pardon and remission of our sins, accounting us and dealing with us as just persons, upright and innocent in His sight."

This he confirms from St. Paul's argument;

"Justification is opposed to condemnation; and as condemnation does not infuse any inherent unrighteousness into man, so neither doth God, formally by Justification, put any inherent righteousness into him. Although to every believer, upon his faith, is bestowed the Spirit of God, as a principle of righteousness,—and such a righteousness doth ever accompany Justification,—yet it doth not seem implied by the word according to St. Paul when he discourseth about Justification by Faith."

And he concludes thus (p. 140):

"All good Christians may be said to have been justified. (Cp. Rom. v. 1. 9. Tit. iii. 7. 1 Cor. vi. 11.)

"(1) They have been justified by a general abolition of their sins, and reception into God's favour in Baptism.

"(2) They have so far enjoyed the virtue of that gracious dispensation, and continued in a justified state, as they have persisted in faith and obedience.

27 Ποῦ οὖν ἡ καύχησις; Ἐξεκλείσθη. Διὰ ποίου νόμου; τῶν ἔργων; Οὐχί· ἀλλὰ διὰ νόμου πίστεως· 28 λογιζόμεθα γὰρ πίστει δικαιοῦσθαι ἄνθρωπον χωρὶς ἔργων νόμου.

29 Ἢ Ἰουδαίων ὁ Θεὸς μόνον; οὐχὶ δὲ καὶ ἐθνῶν; Ναὶ καὶ ἐθνῶν, 30 ἐπείπερ εἷς ὁ Θεὸς, ὃς δικαιώσει περιτομὴν ἐκ πίστεως, καὶ ἀκροβυστίαν διὰ τῆς πίστεως.

31 Νόμον οὖν καταργοῦμεν διὰ τῆς πίστεως; Μὴ γένοιτο· ἀλλὰ νόμον ἱστῶμεν.

s Acts 13. 39. Gal. 2. 16.

t ch. 4. 2. Gal. 3. 8.

"(3) They have, upon falling into sin, and rising thence by Repentance, been justified by particular remissions; so that, having been justified by Faith, they have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. (Rom. v. 1.)"

These statements may be concluded by a reference to Waterland's Summary View of the Doctrine of Justification, (Works, edited by Bp. Van Mildert, Vol. ix. p. 428—470, Oxford, 1832, p. 432, "on the difference between Justification and Sanctification,") the former of which he defines as "God's gracious act towards us," the latter "an infused and inherent quality, God's work within us." Compare what is said above, p. 198.

This doctrine of Justification is to be maintained—

(1) Against Pharisaical pride, claiming justification as a debt for its own deserts. (Rom. iv. 4.)

(2) Against Pelagian presumption, magnifying human ability, and depreciating divine grace.

(3) Against Tridentine Divines (Session vi. can. 32), (1) setting up a merit of congruity in works preceding Justification; and (2) maintaining a merit of condignity with respect to works following Justification (see Art. XIII. of Church of England); and (3) teaching works of Supererogation (see Art. XIV.).

(4) Against Socinians, relying on their own works, and rejecting the ἱλαστήριον διὰ τῆς πίστεως ἐν τῷ Χριστοῦ αἵματι (iii. 25).

(5) Against Antinomians and Solifidians, destroying the Law, as a Rule of Conduct, by a perversion of this doctrine, which, as St. Paul affirms, "establishes the Law," v. 31.

(6) Against Calvinistic and Methodistical Fanaticism, relying on its own personal assurance of God's present and unfailing favour, and thus endeavouring to justify itself.

(7) Against those who despise the instrumentality of the Holy Sacraments, by which the Holy Spirit applies the merits of Christ's death for our Justification. See above, p. 199.

28. λογιζόμεθα γάρ] For we reckon, or rather pronounce, as the sum total of our calculations. See viii. 18.

Γὰρ is in A, D, F, G, and is received by Griesb., Scholz., Lachm., Tisch., Alf., Meyer, for οὖν.

— πίστει δικαιοῦσθαι ἄνθρωπον χωρὶς ἔργων νόμου] that a man is justified by Faith apart from the works of the Moral Law, as a cause of the bestowal of Justification, but not without them as a condition of its continuance. See St. Paul's words (Titus iii. 8), πιστὸς ὁ λόγος, καὶ περὶ τούτων βούλομαί σε διαβεβαιοῦσθαι, ἵνα φροντίζωσι καλῶν ἔργων προΐστασθαι οἱ πεπιστευκότες τῷ Θεῷ· ταῦτά ἐστι τὰ καλὰ καὶ ὠφέλιμα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις.

To the imputation of Christ's death for remission of sins we teach Faith alone to be necessary; whereby it is not our meaning to separate thereby Faith from any other quality or duty which God requireth to be matched therewith; but from Faith to seclude, in Justification, the fellowship of worth through precedent works, as St. Paul doth. (Rom. i. 17; v. 1; ix. 32. Gal. ii. 16.)

Nor doth any Faith justify, but that wherewith there is joined both hope and love. Yet justified we are by Faith alone, because there is no man whose works in whole, or in particular, can make him righteous in God's sight. As St. Paul doth dispute for Faith without works, so St. James is urgent for works with Faith.

To be justified, so far as remission of sins, it sufficeth to believe what Another hath wrought for us. But whosoever will see God face to face, let him show his faith by his works; for in this sense Abraham was justified, that is to say, his life was sanctified. Hooker, Book v. Appendix, p. 553.

"Faith doth not shut out Repentance, Love, and the Fear of God, to be joined with Faith in every man that is justified; but it shutteth them out from the office of justifying." Homily on Salvation, Part i.

Cp. also Bp. Beveridge on Art. XI.

Though it is by Faith we are justified, and by Faith only, yet not by such Faith as has no works springing out of it. Every such Faith is a dead Faith. And yet it is not from the works that spring out of Faith, but from the Faith which is the root of works, that all are justified.

The word Faith is used to signify that theological virtue, or gracious habit, whereby we embrace with our minds and affections the Lord Jesus Christ as the only-begotten Son of God, and alone Saviour of the world, casting ourselves wholly upon the mercy of God through His merits for remission and everlasting salvation. It is that which is commonly called Justifying Faith, whereunto are ascribed in Holy Writ many gracious effects, not as to their primary cause, but as to the instrument whereby we apprehend and apply Christ, whose Merits and Spirit are the true causes of all those blessed effects. Bp. Sanderson (ii. 108).

The causes of our Justification are as follows:—

(1) The Principal cause of our Justification is the Love of God the Father.

(2) The Meritorious cause of our Justification is the active and passive obedience of God the Son.

(3) The Efficient cause is the operation of God the Holy Ghost. (John iii. 5. 1 Cor. vi. 11; xii. 13.)

(4) The Instrumental cause in our Justification is the Ministry of the Word and Sacraments, particularly the Sacrament of Baptism (Acts ii. 38; ix. 6; xxii. 6. Rom. vi. 3), in which is the first reception of Justification, to be afterwards continued by the use of the Word and of the other Sacrament.

(5) The instrumental cause for the reception of Justification on our part is Faith in Christ's blood. (Rom. i. 17; iii. 22. 30; v. 2; ix. 32. Gal. ii. 16; iii. 8. 11. 14. 22. 24. 26; v. 5. Phil. iii. 9.)

Faith is the eye of the soul, which looks to Christ as the only meritorious cause of Justification (as the Israelites did to the brazen serpent, Num. xxi. 8); and it is also the hand which embraces God's promises in Christ, and receives Him into the heart, and lays hold on the white robe of Christ's righteousness (Gal. iii. 27. Rev. vi. 11), and clasps it to itself, and lives and dwells in Christ.

Obedience and Charity are necessary conditions or qualifications in adults for the reception of Justification, but they are not the organs by which it is received.

(6) The Final cause on our side is the remission of our sins (v. 25), and eternal life and glory (2 Pet. i. 3), by virtue and holiness of life (Rom. ix. 23; xv. 7). Cp. Waterland on Justification (ix. p. 436—453); and see further below, v. 1, and above, Introduction to this Epistle, pp. 198—200.

30. ἐπείπερ] So D, E, F, G, I, K, and Elz. A, B, C, D have εἴπερ. But ἐπείπερ is more suitable to the sense, and it is more likely that ἐπείπερ should have been changed by copyists than εἴπερ. Meyer.

— περιτομὴν ἐκ πίστεως, καὶ ἀκροβυστίαν διὰ τῆς πίστεως] The Jews, or children of Abraham, are justified out of or from the Faith which Abraham their father had, and which they are supposed to have in him, being already in the Covenant with God in Christ, Who is the Son of Abraham. See John viii. 56.

The Gentiles, oi ἐξω, must enter that door of the faith of Abraham, and pass through it (διὰ) in order to be justified.

There is but one Church from the beginning. Abraham and his seed are in the household of faith in Christ, but they must live and act from its spirit, the Heathen must enter the house through the door of that faith in Him.

On the use of the words "Circumcision" and "Uncircumcision," for Jews and Gentiles, see Vorst. de Heb. p. 240.

31. νόμον ἱστῶμεν] We establish the Law of Moses by the Doctrine of Justification by Faith in the meritorious sacrifice of Christ;

This appears as follows:

(1) Because the doctrine of Justification by Faith is grounded on the Testimony of the Law, that "all are under sin" (iii. 21—23: cp. v. 10—19). Cp. Theodoret here.

(2) Because the Sacrifice of Christ on the Cross had been preannounced in the Law by the Passover, and in all the other Sacrifices of the Law, and had been prefigured by its Types, and had been foretold by the Prophecies of the Law; and therefore that Sacrifice is the fulfilment of the Law, and establishes the Truth of the Law.

IV. 1 [a] Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν Ἀβραὰμ τὸν πατέρα ἡμῶν εὑρηκέναι κατὰ σάρκα; [a] Isa. 51. 2.
2 εἰ γὰρ Ἀβραὰμ ἐξ ἔργων ἐδικαιώθη, ἔχει καύχημα, ἀλλ' οὐ πρὸς Θεόν· 3 [b] τί [b] Gen. 15. 6. Gal. 3. 6. James 2. 23.
γὰρ ἡ γραφὴ λέγει; Ἐπίστευσε δὲ Ἀβραὰμ τῷ Θεῷ, καὶ ἐλογίσθη

(3) Because the Law reveals God as a just Judge who will judge all (ii. 12. 16).

(4) Because being a just Judge, and sin being an offence against His Divine Majesty, He needs an adequate propitiation for sin, and He cannot consistently with His attribute of Justice, as revealed in the Law, justify sinners without a propitiation of infinite value (iii. 26).

(5) Because the Death of Christ, the Son of God, is set forth by God in this doctrine as such a propitiation.

(6) Because the dignity of the Moral Law is thus displayed in the clearest light, inasmuch as Sin, which is the breaking of the Law (iv. 15), required and received for its expiation a no less sacrifice than the Blood of the Son of God.

(7) Because Christ the Redeemer (v. 24), thus set forth as a Propitiation (25), is so set forth on the ground of His fulfilling all righteousness by His perfect Obedience to the Law, both in doing and suffering.

(8) Because Christ by His perfect obedience to the Commandments of the Law, proved that the requirements of the Law are just and holy, and thus established the moral dignity of the Law.

(9) Because the Doctrine of Justification by Faith in the Sacrifice and Satisfaction made by Christ for sin, obliges men to new degrees of Love to God for His free gift in Christ, and to greater abhorrence of sin, for which Christ suffered the anguish of the Cross, and to new efforts of zeal for showing forth Love to God, which is the fulfilling of the Law (xiii. 10).

(10) Because the Moral Law is to be supposed to desire its own performance. Yet it did not give grace and power for that end. But Faith in Christ procures grace. Therefore Faith fulfils the Law. Cp. Chrys., Œcumen.

(11) Because by Justification, which is conveyed in Baptism, we are engrafted into the Body of Christ, God and Man; and as members of Him we are obliged to be holy as our Head is holy, and to imitate Him in His perfect obedience to the Law, and in doing and suffering according to the Will of God.

(12) Because the Justification bestowed by God on our Faith in Christ, is accompanied in Baptism, and the other succeeding means of grace, with a bestowal of new abilities to keep the Law; and thus establishes the Law.

— ἰστῶμεν] So Elz. with D, E, I, K. Some recent Editors have adopted ἱστάνομεν from A, B, C, D, F, G; and with so much authority from the Uncial MSS., there is much in favour of that reading. On the other hand, the remark of another modern learned Expositor is entitled to consideration, who says "that he prefers ἱστῶμεν, because it closes the period with greater gravity and power (than ἱστἄνὄμἔν, especially after two short syllables, νὄμὸν), and corresponds more harmoniously to the preceding καταργοῦμεν, and that it is much to be desired that the Editors of St. Paul's Epistles would pay attention to the symmetrical structure and musical cadences of the Apostle's sentences, and that then no one would be found to allege that he wrote with abrupt and reckless impetuosity." Fritzsche, p. 210.

CH. IV. 1. Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν—κατὰ σάρκα;] What then shall we say that our father Abraham has found according to the flesh? What shall we say that he has gained by his own efforts, in the flesh, as distinguished from the grace of God?

The words κατὰ σάρκα, according to the flesh, describe,—

(1) Man's working by his own outward act, ἐν σαρκὶ, in the flesh, apart from God's grace (see v. 4), quickening his πνεῦμα, spirit, or inner man. Cp. Theodoret, and compare above, 2 Cor. i. 17; v. 16.

(2) They also refer here to the covenant ratified with Abraham by the seal of circumcision in his flesh (see v. 11), and distinguishing him and his seed, by an outward mark in the flesh, from the rest of the world.

These words contain the statement of an objection;

The Apostle proceeds to answer it by showing,—

(1) that Abraham did not procure Justification for himself by any outward act of his own. For God expressly declares in Scripture that he was justified by Faith (v. 2), that is, by not relying on himself, but by putting his whole trust in God. And

(2) that he did not attain Justification by Circumcision in his flesh. For he was justified before he was circumcised (v. 10).

(3) But what he did, and what he obtained, was due solely to God's grace.

(4) The Jews boasted themselves to be the seed of Abraham (John viii. 33), and they relied on Circumcision, which God instituted as the special mark of Abraham's seed, to distinguish them as the favoured people;

But St. Paul shows that the Gentiles also are children of Abraham if they imitate his faith (v. 12).

This he proves by showing that Abraham was justified by Faith (v. 2) before the Law was given, and before he received Circumcision (v. 3. 9), and that he was designated by God as the Father of many nations (v. 18), and as the Father of all (v. 16) who partake in his Justification by Faith in Christ (v. 23, 24).

Abraham was justified by Faith, and not by works. Therefore Justification was not awarded to him as wages due to any external work done by him, but was given him for Faith, which has its groundwork and resting-place in God.

It was by Faith, which has an object external to itself, and that object God, that Abraham was justified. It was by God's Love and Power, laid hold on by Abraham's Faith, and not by any act proceeding forth from Abraham's own flesh, that Abraham was justified.

It must be remembered, that the Apostle is here arguing with the Jews, who evolved Justification out of themselves, and grounded it on their own presumed Merits, and on their fancied Obedience to the works of the Law; and imagined that they could earn heaven, as wages due to their own works, and that, therefore, they did not need a Redeemer; and that, consequently, the new dispensation of Grace, in the Gospel of Christ, was superfluous.

St. Paul therefore shows them that even Abraham their Father did not earn Justification as a debt due to his works, but was justified by dependence on God.

— πατέρα] A, B, C have προπάτορα, and so Lachm.

A, C, D, F, G have εὑρηκέναι Ἀβραὰμ, which is adopted by Lachmann, but that reading seems to have been an alteration in order to combine Ἀβραὰμ and κατὰ σάρκα.

2. ἔχει καύχημα, ἀλλ' οὐ πρὸς Θεόν] he has a ground for glorying, but not with respect to God.

Some Expositors place a full stop at καύχημα, and begin a new sentence at ἀλλ' οὐ πρὸς Θεόν.

The construction then would be, Abraham has a ground for glorying. But not before God. For, God Himself testifies in Holy Scripture, that Abraham was justified by Faith, and not by works.

But there is another interpretation of this passage, which is recommended by the majority of ancient Greek interpreters (Theodoret, Chrys., Œcumen., Theophyl.), and is also received by some modern Expositors (e. g. Meyer, p. 126), as follows:

If Abraham was justified by his own works, then he has matter for glorying in himself, and in his own flesh (σὰρξ) and independent strength, but not with regard to God—that is, irrespectively of God, in Whom alone man ought to glory (1 Cor. i. 31).

But such a supposition (argues the Apostle) is contrary to the declaration of God Himself. For, what saith the Scripture? Abraham believed in God, and that was reckoned to him for righteousness.

The Scripture therefore grounds Abraham's Justification upon that which is relative to God (πρὸς Θεὸν), viz. Faith, and which has its foundation in God, and not in Abraham himself.

This Exposition is confirmed by the repetition of the word God. Holy Scripture founds Abraham's righteousness in his belief in God. But if he were justified by any works of his own, his Justification would spring from himself, and not be derived from God. It would be something independent and absolute in himself, and not dependent on, and relative to, God (πρὸς Θεόν).

This Interpretation seems to be preferable, as having more authority in its favour, and as best cohering with the structure of the sentence; and the words πρὸς Θεὸν are better rendered in respect to God, than before God, or in the eye of God.

3. ἡ γραφή] the Scripture (Gen. xv. 6). Abraham did not receive Circumcision till thirteen years after this sentence of his Justification by Faith had been pronounced by the divine oracle upon him. See Gen. xvii. 24, 25.

— Ἐπίστευσε] He believed. He resolved all into the promise of God, and he grounded every thing on the faithfulness of God. He did not rely on himself, but he built every thing on Him.

And he did this, although what was promised by God seemed to be impossible, and, humanly speaking, was impossible. Thus he became an example of Faith, and the Father of the Faithful.

The prerogative of God extendeth as well to the Reason, as to the Will, of man; so that, as we are to obey His Law, though we find a reluctation in our Will, we are to believe His Word, though we find a reluctation in our Reason. For if we believe only what is agreeable to our sense, we give consent to the matter, and not to the Author. But that "Faith which was accounted to Abraham for Righteousness" was of such a point, as whereat Sarah laughed, who therein was an image of Natural Reason. Lord Bacon (Advancement of Learning, p. 256).

4. ὀφείλημα] Elz. prefixes τὸ, which is not in the best MSS.

6. χωρὶς ἔργων] apart from works.

7. Μακάριοι] He refers them to the example of Abraham, and the beatitudes of David (Ps. xxxii. 1, 2). Another proof that he does not disparage the Law.

9. Ὁ μακαρισμὸς—ἀκροβυστίαν;] Is then this declaration of blessedness pronounced over the Circumcision only, namely, the Jews alone, or over the Uncircumcision, or Gentiles, also?

On περιτομὴ, thus used, see iii. 30. On μακαρισμὸς, see above, Gal. iv. 15.

10. Οὐκ ἐν περιτομῇ] See on v. 3.

11. σφραγῖδα] "signaculum rei actæ, non pignus agendæ:" a seal of the justification which he had already received by his faith already existing, and not an instrument of righteousness to be received, οὐ δικαιοσύνης ποιητικήν. Œcumen.

— τῶν πιστευόντων δι' ἀκροβυστίας] those who believe in God through uncircumcision; that is, those who have not the same benefits as the Jews, and overcome the hindrances of heathenism, and accept the Gospel, and profess their faith in Christ.

On this use of διὰ, through, see ii. 27.

— τὴν δικαιοσύνην] the same righteousness.

12. τοῖς οὐκ ἐκ περιτομῆς μόνον, κ.τ.λ.] to them who are not only of the circumcision, but to them also who walk in the steps of the faith of our Father Abraham, which he had while in uncircumcision.

This Scripture declares the important truth, that there is but one Visible Church of God from the beginning:

All the Saints who ever lived belong to the Church. For let us not suppose that Abraham, who lived so long before Christ's birth, does not belong to us who were made Christians long after the Passion of Christ. For the Apostle says we are children of Abraham, by imitating the faith of Abraham.

If, then, we are admitted to the Church by imitating Abraham, shall we exclude him from the Church? Augustine (Serm. 4).

Observe also, that the place of peace and joy, to which the departed spirits of the righteous are carried by Angels, after that they are delivered by death from the burden of the Flesh, and in which they abide together till the glorious Resurrection of their bodies, is called by Our Lord Himself in the Gospel, Abraham's Bosom (Luke xvi. 22).

13. Οὐ διὰ νόμου] The promise to Abraham was not through the Law; it did not come by its means. For the Law had not been given, nor had a single line of Scripture as yet been written.

Abraham was justified

(1) Before Circumcision, and

(2) Before the delivery of the Law.

Therefore he was justified by something independent of both, i. e. by Faith in Christ to come.

— κόσμου] Elz. prefixes τοῦ, not in A, B, C, D, E, F, G, and rejected by Griesb., Scholz., Lach., Tisch., Alf.

14. οἱ ἐκ νόμου] those who are of the Law: that is, they who spring forth from it, and rest upon it, as a tree does from, and upon, its root.

Thus οἱ ἐκ νόμου is the opposite to οἱ ἐκ πίστεως, iii. 26; iv. 16; v. 1; x. 6.

If they who endeavour to derive Justification from the Law, and who rely on that for salvation, instead of seeking it from Faith in Christ, are heirs (not "the heirs"), then the Faith and the Promise are voided.

— κεκένωται] has been made void. Because Faith and the Promise are prior to the Law, and therefore not able to derive any benefit from the Law, which did not then exist (Œcumen.), and also because the Law worketh wrath, and manifests the work of God's anger against sin. And where wrath is, there the Inheritance cannot be.

15. οὗ δὲ οὐκ ἔστι νόμος, οὐδὲ παράβασις] but where there is no Law, there is not even any transgression; for the essence of sin is this, that it is a transgression of the Law. See ii. 12; iii. 20; v. 13. 20. 1 Cor. xv. 56. 1 John iii. 4.

Hence, by reason of man's corrupt nature, the Law aggravated man's guilt. See below on v. 20, and vii. 7—14. So far is the Law from bringing Justification or acquittal from sin.

V. [1] [a] Δικαιωθέντες οὖν ἐκ πίστεως εἰρήνην ἔχομεν πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν διὰ τοῦ a Eph. 2. 13.

— ζωοποιοῦντος] quickening in Christ those who are dead in trespasses and sins.

In saying to Abraham, that in him "all Nations should be blessed," Almighty God promised life to all Nations who were then spiritually dead. And He gave him a pledge, by raising the promised seed from Abraham and Sarah, in their old age, when his body and her womb were dead (v. 19). And He has given us a further pledge thereof, by raising the promised Seed, Christ, from the dead (v. 24), Who was delivered to death for our sins, and was raised for our Justification (v. 25).

— καλοῦντος τὰ μὴ ὄντα ὡς ὄντα] calling those things which are not, as though they were.

(1) In His promise to Abraham, God spoke of all Nations, and pronounced them blessed in him. He spoke of those Nations, and called them blessed before they had any being. He described them as having an existence, yes, and a blessed existence, in Abraham's seed, although he in whose seed they were to be blessed was no better than dead on account of his old age, and it seemed impossible that he should have any seed in whom they should be blessed.

God called all Nations blessed in Abraham's seed (which is Christ), as He called Josiah and Cyrus by name (1 Kings xiii. 2. Is. xliv. 28; xlv. 1), and described their acts before they were born.

(2) The sense of the word calling may also be extended here, so as to convey the idea of calling to Himself, as His own children, those who before the call had no existence, so that, by means of that Divine vocation, they might come into being, and into a blessed existence in Christ, the Seed of Abraham. See above, 1 Cor. i. 24. 26. 28, which affords a clear elucidation of this passage.

18. παρ' ἐλπίδα] against hope as man, but upon hope in God. Severian.

— εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι] in order that he might become—for he never would have become, if he had not believed; and he believed, in the full hope and confident purpose of being ministerial to such a result.

19. οὐ κατενόησε] he regarded not, οὐκ ἀπεῖδεν εἰς. Theodoret.

21. πληροφορηθεὶς] fully persuaded. See Luke i. 1, and below, xiv. 5.

25. παρεδόθη] was delivered. See Matt. xx. 28. Gal. i. 4; ii. 20. Rom. v. 8. Eph. v. 2. Tit. ii. 14. Heb. ix. 14; and that this was a sacrifice and satisfaction for the sins of all, to ransom all from guilt and death, see Rom. viii. 32. 1 Tim. ii. 6. Heb. ii. 9, and above, on Matt. xx. 28.

— ἠγέρθη διὰ τὴν δικαίωσιν] He was raised again for our Justification. For if Christ had not been raised, it would not have been evident that the sacrifice which He offered by His death for our sins, had been accepted, as meritorious and satisfactory, by God. See 1 Cor. xv. 17.

But by raising Him from the dead, God declared that He has accepted that sacrifice as a plenary propitiation for the sins of the whole world; and that He now regards us as acquitted and justified, and as restored to His favour in Christ, and as sons by adoption in Him risen from the dead; and He has begotten us again in Him to a lively hope of a glorious immortality. Cp. 1 Pet. i. 3.

See above on 2 Cor. v. 15, particularly the quotation from Dr. Barrow.

So Bp. Pearson (on the Creed, Art. v.), following Chrysostom here: "By His Death we know that Christ has suffered for sin; by His Resurrection we are assured that the sins for which He suffered were not His own. If no man had been a sinner, He had not died; if He had been a sinner, He had not risen again. But dying for those sins which we had committed, He rose again to show that He had made full satisfaction for them,—that we, believing in Him, might obtain Remission of our sins, and Justification of our persons."

God sending His own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh for sin, condemned sin in the flesh (Rom. viii. 3), and raising up our Surety from the prison of the grave, did actually absolve and manifestly acquit Him from the whole obligation to which He had bound Himself; and in discharging Him, acknowledged that full satisfaction had been made by Him for us. See viii. 33.

Some Interpreters suppose that St. Paul means that Christ was raised because our Justification had been already effected by the sacrifice of His Death. So Bp. Horsley (Serm. i.). Grotius (de Satisf. Christi, c. 1). Dr. Burton on Bp. Bull, Harm. Apost. p. 12.

But this interpretation seems to be at variance with St. Paul's statement, that "if Christ has not been raised, we are still in our sins." (1 Cor. xv. 17.)

It has been said by others (e. g. Newman on Justification, p. 234), that St. Paul affirms that Christ arose for our Justification, because our Justification is through that second Comforter, Whom that Resurrection brought down from heaven.

But the first interpretation is undoubtedly the true one. Christ was raised from the dead for our Justification,—that is, for our acquittal by God, for a public and permanent declaration in the sight of men and of angels, that we who believe in Christ are no longer in a condition of guilt and condemnation; that we are raised together with Him, and are absolved and justified in Him.

Hence arises our obligation to walk in newness of life. "If ye be risen with Christ, seek those things that are above, where Christ sitteth on the Right Hand of God." (Col. iii. 1.)

Hence, also, in the Sacrament of Baptism, where Justification is first consigned to us by God, we are rightly reminded that "Baptism doth represent unto us our Profession, which is to follow the example of our Saviour Christ, and to be made like unto Him; that, as He died and rose again for us, so we, who are baptized, should die from sin, and rise again unto righteousness, continually mortifying all our evil and corrupt affections, and daily proceeding in all virtue and godliness of living." (Office of Public Baptism of Infants.)

CH. V. 1. Δικαιωθέντες οὖν ἐκ πίστεως] Having therefore been justified by Faith. Having been justified; that is, having been already acquitted and declared just by God. See above, iii. 24.

Observe the aorist tense here. He speaks of Justification as an act already done, and done once; that is, done at the time when we laid hold of Christ by Faith, and received remission of our sins through His blood, and were accounted righteous by virtue of our incorporation in Him; that is, at our Baptism. See above on iii. 22—24, and Introduction to this Epistle, p. 199; and note above on 1 Cor. vi. 11.

— ἐκ πίστεως] by Faith; that is, from Faith or dependence on God, and not on ourselves, as the root and spring (on our part) of Justification.

On this subject of Justification by Faith (in addition to the references in the preceding note), we may cite the following important testimony of one of St. Paul's fellow-labourers, who says:

b John 10. 9. & 14. 6. 1 Cor. 15. 1. Eph. 2. 18. & 3. 12. Heb. 3. 6. & 10. 19.

Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, [2] [b] δι' οὗ καὶ τὴν προσαγωγὴν ἐσχήκαμεν τῇ πίστει εἰς τὴν χάριν ταύτην ἐν ᾗ ἑστήκαμεν· καὶ καυχώμεθα ἐπ' ἐλπίδι τῆς

The ancient Patriarchs were not glorified or magnified by means of themselves or their own works, or by any acts of righteousness that they wrought, but by the will of God. Likewise we, who have been called through His will in Christ Jesus are justified (δικαιούμεθα), not by means of ourselves, nor through our own wisdom, or prudence, or holiness, or works which we have done in piety of heart, but through Faith, by means of which the Omnipotent God justified (ἐδικαίωσεν) all from the beginning of the world. Clemens Rom. 32.

That the Faith which justifies is grounded on the merits of Christ alone, is thus declared by another primitive writer: "In whom can we who are unrighteous be justified, except in the Son of God alone?" (Epist. ad Diognet. 9),—and the principal cause of our Justification is to be found in God's mere mercy and love to us. "Nostra justitia non ex proprio merito sed Dei consistit misericordiâ" (Jerome, adv. Pelag. i. 3); and it is laid hold on and applied, on our side, by the spiritual organ of Faith. "Non in hominis merito, sed in Dei gratiâ est justitia, Qui, sine legis operibus, credentium suscipit Fidem." Jerome (adv. Pelag. ii. 7), and (ad Gal. iii.) "Solâ fide justificati sunt credentes."

To this may be annexed the following clear statement from two of our own best divines, Richard Hooker and Dr. Waterland:

The general cause which hath procured our remission of sins is the blood of Christ. Therefore in His blood we are justified; that is to say, cleared, and acquitted from all sin.

The condition required in us for our personal qualification hereunto is Faith.

Sin, both original and actual, committed before belief in the promise of salvation through Jesus Christ, is through the mere mercy of God taken away from them which believe. Justified they are, and that not in reward of their good, but through the pardon of their evil, works.

For, albeit they have disobeyed God, yet our Saviour's Death and Obedience performed in their behalf doth redound to them. By believing it they make the benefit thereof to become their own; so that this only thing is imputed unto them for righteousness, because to remission of sins there is nothing else required.

Remission of sins is grace, because it is God's own free gift. Faith which qualifieth our minds to receive it is also grace, because it is an effect of His gracious Spirit in us; we are therefore justified by Faith without works, by grace without merit.

Neither is it (as Bellarmine imagineth) a thing impossible that we should attribute any justifying grace to sacraments, except we first renounce the doctrine of justification by faith only. To the imputation of Christ's death for remission of sins, we teach Faith alone necessary; wherein it is not our meaning to separate thereby Faith from any other quality or duty which God requireth to be matched therewith, but from Faith to seclude in justification the fellowship of worth through precedent works, as the Apostle St. Paul doth. Hooker (Appendix, book v. p. 701).

Faith is the instrument or mean in the hand of the recipient, man, by which he receives Justification from God.

It cannot be for nothing that St. Paul so often and so emphatically speaks of man's being justified by Faith, or through Faith, in Christ's blood; and that he particularly notes it of Abraham, that he believed, and that his Faith was counted to him for justification: when he might as easily have said, had he so meant, that man is justified by Faith and Works,—or that Abraham, to whom the Gospel was preached, was justified by Gospel-Faith and Obedience. Besides, it is certain, and is on all hands allowed, that, though St. Paul did not directly and expressly oppose Faith to Evangelical Works, yet he comprehended the works of the moral law under those works which he excluded from the office of justifying; and farther, he used such arguments as appear to extend to all kinds of works: for Abraham's works were really evangelical works, and yet they were excluded.

Add to this, that if Justification could come even by evangelical works, without taking in Faith in the meritorious sufferings and satisfaction of a Mediator, then might we have "whereof to glory," as needing no pardon; and then might it be justly said that "Christ died in vain."

It is true, St. Paul insists upon true holiness of heart, and obedience of life, as indispensable conditions of salvation, or justification,—and of that, one would think, there would be no question, among men of any judgment or probity; but the question about conditions is very distinct from the other question about instruments; and therefore both parts may be true, viz. that faith and obedience are equally conditions, and equally indispensable, where opportunities permit,—and yet Faith, over and above, is emphatically the instrument both of receiving and holding justification, or a title to salvation.

Faith is emphatically the instrument whereby we receive the grant of justification. Obedience is equally a condition, or qualification, but not an instrument; not being that act of the mind whereby we look up to God and Christ, and whereby we embrace the promises.

"Faith is the substance of things hoped for" (Heb. xi. 1), as making the things subsist, as it were, with certain effect in the mind. It is the "evidence of things not seen," being, as it were, the eye of the mind, looking to the blood of Christ, and thereby inwardly warming the affections to a firm reliance upon it and acquiescence in it. But this is to be understood of a firm and vigorous Faith, and at the same time well grounded. Faith is said to embrace (salute, welcome) the things promised of God, as things present to view, or near at hand. (Heb. xi. 13.)

There is no other faculty, virtue, act, or exercise of the mind, which so properly does it as Faith does; therefore Faith particularly is represented as that by which the Gentile converts laid hold on justification, and brought it home to themselves.

And as Faith is said to have healed several in a bodily sense, so may it be also said to heal men in a spiritual way; that is, to justify, being immediately instrumental in the reception of that grace more than any other virtues are. For as, when persons were healed by looking on the brazen serpent, their eyes were particularly instrumental to their cure, more than the whole body; so Faith, the eye of the mind, is particularly instrumental in this affair, more than the whole body of graces with which it is accompanied; not for any supereminent excellency of faith above every other virtue (for charity is greater), but for its particular aptness, in the very nature of it, to make things distant become near, and to admit them into close embraces.

The Homilies of our Church describe and limit the doctrine thus: "Faith doth not shut out repentance, hope, love, dread, and the fear of God, to be joined with Faith in every man that is justified; but it shutteth them out from the office of justifying;" that is to say, from the office of accepting or receiving it; for as to the office of justifying, in the active sense, that belongs to God only, as the same Homily elsewhere declares (Homily of Salvation, part ii. pp. 22, 23, and part iii. p. 24. Among the later Homilies, see on the Passion, pp. 347. 349; and concerning the Sacrament, part i. pp. 376. 379. Conf. Nowelli Catech., p. 41. Gul. Forbes, Consid. Modest., pp. 23, 24. 38. Hooker, Disc. on Justific., p. 509. Tyndal, pp. 45. 187. 225. 330, 331. Field, pp. 298. 323. Conf. Augustan. Art. XX. pp. 18, 19. Spanheim, tom. iii. pp. 141. 159. 761. 834. Le Blanc, pp. 126. 267). The doctrine is there further explained thus: "Because Faith doth directly send us to Christ for remission of our sins: and that, by Faith given us of God, we embrace the promise of God's mercy, and of the remission of our sins (which thing none other of our virtues or works properly doth), therefore the Scripture useth to say, that faith without works doth justify;" not that this is to be understood of a man's being confident of his own election, his own Justification, or his own salvation in particular (which is quite another question, and to be determined by other rules), but of his confiding solely upon the covenant of grace in Christ (not upon his own deservings), with full assurance that so, and so only, he is safe, as long as he behaves accordingly.

Take we due care so to maintain the doctrine of Faith, as not to exclude the necessity of good works, and so to maintain good works, as not to exclude the necessity of Christ's atonement, or the free grace of God. Take we care to perform all evangelical duties to the utmost of our power, aided by God's Spirit; and when we have done, say that we are unprofitable servants, having no strict claim to a reward, but yet looking for one, and accepting it as a favour, not challenging it as due in any right of our own, due only upon free promise, and that promise made not in consideration of any deserts of ours, but in and through the alone merits, active and passive, of Christ Jesus our Lord. Dr. Waterland (Summary of the Doctrine of Justification, pp. 451—470.)

— ἔχομεν] we have. A, C, D, J, K, have ἔχωμεν, let us have. And so Scholz., Fritzsche, and Lachmann; but this seems to be out of place here, and it is observable that ἔχομεν was the original reading in B; and has been altered by a later copyist to ἔχωμεν. See Mai, p. 330.

3. ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσιν] We can exult, not only in our joys present and future, but even in our afflictions; and he adds the reason.

4. ὑπομονήν] patient endurance.

— δοκιμήν] Not so much experience as proof. 2 Cor. viii. 2. δοκιμὴ θλίψεως. Phil. ii. 22. In prosperity we ourselves know not whether we love God for His own sake, or for the sake of the temporal blessings which He gives us. Affliction is our touchstone. It is a Lapis Lydius, or βάσανος, which proves us (δοκιμάζει. See above, i. 28; ii. 18. 1 Pet. i. 7. 1 John iv. 1), and shows to ourselves and others whether we are good coin, or mere κίβδηλα νομίσματα. And it also smelts away, as by fire, our dross, and purifies us. See 1 Pet. i. 7. Job xxiii. 10. Ps. lxvi. 10. Prov. xvii. 3.

Thus δοκιμὴ, or proof, worketh in us hope.

The word δοκιμὴ properly follows the mention of Abraham, who was proved by God by the most severe test; as Œcumen., following up the metaphor of metallurgy, observes, ἐπείρασεν αὐτὸν ὁ Θεὸς, καὶ ἐχώνευσεν χωνείαν φρικτὴν, τῦν τοῖς ἐγκάτοις ὑφάψας, ὅτι σφάξαι προσέταξε τὸν υἱόν.

6. Ἔτι—ἔτι] The first ἔτι is in A, C, D*, E, K, and many Cursives; the second ἔτι is in A, B, C, D*, F, G; and this seems to be the true reading, and is to be rendered, Besides, when we were yet weak . . . The first ἔτι introduces a new argument. Cp. Luke xiv. 26. Acts ii. 26; xxi. 28.

— κατὰ καιρόν] at the season,

(1) when we were reduced almost to despair. Eph. ii. 12.

(2) and which had been pre-defined by ancient Prophecy. See Matt. ii. 15, πεπλήρωται ὁ καιρός. Tit. i. 3. Eph. i. 10.

(3) and in our season of probation. 2 Cor. vi. 2.

7. Μόλις γὰρ κ.τ.λ.] For scarcely, for a righteous man will any one die, yet haply for the good man (or for him that is good) some one doth even adventure to die.

It may be observed here, that

(1) δίκαιος, righteous, and ἀγαθὸς, good, are distinguished as in Euseb. iv. 11, τὸν μὲν δίκαιον, τὸν δὲ ἀγαθὸν ὑπάρχειν: i. e. the one righteous, the other good, merciful, benevolent.

(2) δίκαιος here has not the article, which ἀγαθὸς has;

(3) there is a double reference in these words to our relation to God when Christ died for us. At that time

(1) we were not righteous (δίκαιοι), but sinners (v. 8), and

(2) we were not ἀγαθοὶ, but enemies (v. 10).

Hence we arrive at the following exposition.

Scarcely will a person be persuaded to die for a man who is upright in the abstract (i. e. without any reference to the party dying for him), though perhaps some may be found who may bring himself to die for the man who is specially and singularly good to him. For instance, Orestes died for Pylades, his alter ego, and Alcestis for Admetus, her husband; and others died for others because they were the cherished friends, or benefactors, ἀγαθοεργοὶ, specially dear and kind to the persons so sacrificing themselves (cp. Horace, Od. i. 14. 5) as their ἀντίψυχοι. See on 1 Cor. iv. 13, and cp. Winer, § 18, p. 106.

Hence appears the strength of the Apostle's argument:

(1) Some with difficulty may be found ready to die for one who is strictly just. We were not that, but (as has been shown already) were guilty before God.

(2) A person peradventure may be found willing to die for the man who is amiable for his goodness, and is the special object of his affections, and endeared to him by special acts of tenderness and benevolence, called by St. Paul ἀγαθωσύνη (xv. 14).

But we could not be said to be in that relation to God and Christ; we were enemies and rebels against them by our wicked works. (Col. i. 20, 21.) Herein is love; not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins. (1 John iv. 10.) And therefore the Apostle adds (v. 10), being yet enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son.

This exposition derives some confirmation even from the errors which were derived by some from this passage in ancient times;

"Quo sensu accipiendum sit (asks S. Jerome) quod in Epistola legimus ad Romanos: Vix enim pro justo quis moritur. Nam pro bono forsitan quis audeat mori?

"Duæ hæreses ex occasione hujus testimonii, diverso quidem errore, sed pari impietate blasphemant;

12. Διὰ τοῦτο, ὥσπερ κ.τ.λ.] For this cause, as through one man (Adam) sin came into (εἰσῆλθεν) the world, and Death through sin; and thus Death came abroad (διῆλθεν) unto all men, in that all sinned (in Adam).

The great truths contained in this Apostolic declaration have been made more manifest, and have been more firmly established, under God's Providence (blessing the labours of holy men, particularly S. Jerome and S. Augustine), even through the occasion of that Heresy, by which they were impugned in early times, and which led to a fuller examination of the testimonies of Scripture concerning them—the Pelagian Heresy;

It was affirmed by Pelagius that death is not a consequence of sin; and that Adam would have died even if he had not sinned. Augustine (Serm. 219).

It was a branch of the error of Pelagius, to think our mortality no punishment inflicted by the hand of the supreme Judge, but a part of that state and condition which, as Creator, He hath imposed on mankind. Hooker (Appendix to book v., where is a short history of the Pelagian controversy).

Connected with this assertion were the other tenets of Pelagius: viz.

(1) That man may be saved by his own deeds and deservings.

(2) That divine Grace, though beneficial in aiding human free will, is not necessary.

(3) That Infants are born as free from sin as Adam was; and are to be baptized, not because they need regeneration and remission of sins, but in order to be dignified by the sacrament of adoption. See S. Jerome, Epist. 43, ad Ctesiphont. Vol. iv. p. 474; and his three Dialogues adv. Pelagianos, Vol. iv. pp. 486—546; and the treatises of S. Augustine contained in the Tenth Volume of the Benedictine Edition of his works.

The following historical summary is from the Benedictine Preface to S. Jerome's Epist. 43:—

"Pelagius, Brito Monachus, post Arium secessit, novi erroris auctor: Celestinoque ac Juliano fautoribus et adjutoribus multos in suam pertraxit factionem. Is tantum tribuit libero arbitrio, ut diceret absque gratiâ Christi, solis meritis hominem posse salutem consequi. Atque super hâc re primum increpatus à fratribus, eatenus cessit admonitioni, ut non excluderet gratiam; sed diceret, hâc accedente facilius posse perveniri ad salutem: quasi et absque hâc perveniri posset, licet difficilius. Orationes quæ fierent in Ecclesiâ, vel pro fidelibus, ut supervacuas damnabat: quod diceret id quod precatur, sibi quemque suâ industriâ præstare posse. Verum hoc in Concilio Antiocheno, quum metueret ne damnaretur, recantavit: etiam si non desierit deinceps in scriptis suis eadem docere. — εἰσῆλθε—διῆλθε] These two words are very expressive, especially as combined with the word παρεισῆλθε in v. 20. Sin εἰσῆλθε, Death διῆλθε, and the Mosaic Law παρεισῆλθε.

Sin came into the world by Adam, and so Death came forth in every direction upon all; but the Law of Moses came in only obiter, and, as it were, by a side door.

Sin entered into the world boldly and openly by the royal road and principal Gate, even by Adam himself, and so passed into every street of the City of this World, and infected the whole human race. But the Mosaic Law came in only by a postern gate, not by the direct road and highway of the city. See on v. 20.

There never was a time when Mankind was not under a Law;

Adam was under the primeval Law. If he had not been under a Law, he could not have sinned. (See iv. 15.) All who were born in the interval between Adam and Moses were under a Law, though not under the Law of Moses, as such. See ii. 14, and on v. 13 here.

The Moral Law of Moses (the Decalogue) was only a Republication of the Original Law of Morals given by God to man at the beginning. That Republication was necessitated by man's transgressions; by his degeneracy and apostasy from the primeval Code. It came therefore in, as it were, indirectly; and not as Sin and Death had done, before the Law.

— ἐφ' ᾧ πάντες ἥμαρτον] in that all sinned, or inasmuch as all sinned.

Ἐφ' ᾧ is equivalent to ἐπὶ τούτῳ ὅτι. See 2 Cor. v. 4. Phil. iii. 12.

Observe the aorist tense, ἥμαρτον, they all sinned; that is, at a particular time. And when was that? Doubtless, at the Fall. All men sinned in Adam's sin. All fell in his Fall. Cp. Origen, Chrys., Theophyl., Bengel, Philippi, Meyer.

All men were that one man, Adam. Augustine (de Peccator. merit. c. 1). All men were in him, as a river is in its source, and as a tree is in its root. We are all by nature in the First Adam, as we are all by grace in the Second Adam, Christ. We all fell and died in the first Adam; but, by God's free favour and love, we all rise and live in the Second Adam, Who is the Antitype of the first. See v. 14.

Compare the use of the same tense in a similar sense, with reference to the same subject, in v. 15, ἀπέθανον, all died in and by the transgression of the one man, the natural parent of all, Adam.

See above, on 1 Cor. xv. 22, which is the best commentary on this passage.

This is the true sense of ἥμαρτον here, and is to be carefully borne in mind, as the clue to the Apostle's reasoning in what follows.

13, 14. ἄχρι γὰρ νόμου—Ἀδάμ] Having said that Death diffused itself unto all men, inasmuch as all men sinned in Adam, the common Father of all, he goes on to affirm that Sin, which is the source of Death, was in the world, that is, in mankind universally, from the time of Adam even to the delivery of the Law of Moses.

What was the proof of this?

The proof of the universality of Sin was to be seen in the universality of Death, which is the penalty of sin; and which showed by its infliction that sin was imputed to all. All, therefore, must have sinned, because all died.

But what is Sin?

It is the breach of a Law. This is the definition of Sin. "Where there is no Law, there is no transgression." (See iv. 15.) All therefore broke a Law. But how? Some, namely infants, committed no actual sin as Adam did. Yet even infants died. Sin therefore was imputed to them, although they did not sin by actual transgression in the likeness of the transgression of Adam.

Wherefore, then, was sin imputed to them? Why did infants die? Because they were all in Adam, and sinned in Adam, and broke a Law in Adam, and fell in Adam. Therefore they paid the penalty of sin, which is death.

He thus prepares the way for showing that the Law delivered by Moses was not the first, original Law given by God, but that it came in, as it were, only parenthetically and accidentally (παρεισῆλθεν), as a consequence of sin (v. 20), which could not have been committed, and could not have prevailed, even from the beginning, as it did, and have been punished as it was by Death, unless there had been contemporaneously and concurrently a Law from the beginning also, the breach of which was Sin, and the penalty of that breach, Death.

He thus also replies to a supposed objection. He had just said that all sinned. But how could this be (it might be asked), when the Law was not yet given? Did you not just now say that where there is no Law there is no transgression (Rom. iv. 15)? How could the Law be transgressed before it existed? How then could all, before and until the Law, be sinners?

The proof of universal sinfulness is from the universal prevalence of Death, which is the punishment of sin. Death reigned as a King, and triumphed as a Conqueror, in the World, from the days of Adam even to those of Moses, the Giver of the Law, over those who did not sin in the likeness of the transgression of Adam, and did not therefore subject themselves to death by actual sin like his. Death reigned and triumphed even over Infants who were incapable of actual sin (Chrys., Theodoret). And since Death comes by sin, and is its consequence and penalty, and since Death had dominion and lorded it over all, therefore all are proved to have sinned. And since all could not have sinned by actual transgression, it remains that they sinned by the taint of a corrupt nature inherited from the common Parent of all, who is the type, in some respects by similarity, and in others by antithesis or opposition, of Him Who was to come, Christ.

As is well said by Hooker (App. book v. p. 721), Death, even in new-baptized Infants, yea, in Saints and Martyrs, we must acknowledge to be a punishment, which God inflicteth in judgment, and not in fury, but yet a punishment.

In opposition to the argument of the Apostle, Pelagius said that our Death is not from sin, but from Nature; and that Adam

15 [m] Ἀλλ' οὐχ ὡς τὸ παράπτωμα οὕτω καὶ τὸ χάρισμα. Εἰ γὰρ τῷ τοῦ ἑνὸς παραπτώματι οἱ πολλοὶ ἀπέθανον, πολλῷ μᾶλλον ἡ χάρις

m Isa. 53. 11. Matt. 20. 28. & 26. 28.

would have died even if he had not sinned. See above, preceding note.

The Apostle, then, having laid the ground in the fact of Universal Sinfulness, proved from the universality of Death, builds upon it the doctrine of Universal Redemption.

On this fact of Original Sin passing from Adam upon all his descendants, the Church grounds her practice of Baptism of Infants, who are thereby grafted in Christ;

Why do Infants die? As to their own deeds they are innocent. They have no sin but what they derive from Adam. But to them the Grace of Christ is necessary, in order that they who are dead in Adam may live in Christ; and that they who are tainted in their birth, may be cleansed in their new birth. Augustine (c. Julian. Pelagian. iii. 3).

The first man, Adam, tainted all his progeny. Therefore welcome, O welcome, be to the Second Adam! Let Him come Who liveth, that He may find us who are dead. Let Him die for us, in order to succour us who are dead, and to rescue us from death, and raise us to life, and destroy death by dying. His Grace is the only Grace which redeems Infants and men, the small and the great together. Augustine.

The following is from S. Augustine's contemporary and fellow-labourer in the same controversy:—

Critob. Dic, quæso, et me omni libera quæstione, quare infantuli baptizentur?

Attic. Ut eis peccata in baptismate dimittantur.

Crit. Quid enim commeruere peccati? Quisquamne solvitur non ligatus?

Att. Me interrogas? Respondebit tibi Evangelica tuba, Doctor Gentium, vas aureum in toto orbe resplendens: Regnavit mors ab Adam, usque ad Moysen; etiam in eos, qui non peccaverunt, in similitudinem prævaricationis Adam, qui est forma futuri. Quod si objeceris dici, esse aliquos qui non peccaverunt; intellige eos illud non peccasse peccatum, quod peccavit Adam prævaricando in Paradiso præceptum Dei. Cæterùm omnes homines, aut antiqui propagatoris Adam, aut suo nomine tenentur obnoxii. Qui parvulus est, parentis in baptismo vinculo solvitur. Qui ejus ætatis est, quæ potest sapere, et alieno et suo, Christi sanguine liberatur. Ac ne me putes hæretico sensu hoc intelligere, beatus Martyr Cyprianus, in Epistolâ quam scribit ad Episcopum Fidum de Infantibus baptizandis hæc memorat: "Porrò autem si etiam gravissimis delictoribus, et in Deum multo ante peccantibus, quum postea crediderint, remissio peccatorum datur; et à baptismo atque gratiâ nemo prohibetur: quanto magis prohiberi non debet infans, qui recens natus nihil peccavit, nisi quòd secundum Adam carnaliter natus, contagium mortis antiquæ, primâ nativitate contraxit? Qui ad remissionem peccatorum accipiendam hoc ipso facilius accedit, quod illi remittuntur non propria, sed aliena peccata; et idcirco, frater charissime, hæc fuit in Concilio nostra sententia, à baptismo atque gratiâ Dei, qui omnibus misericors et benignus et pius est, neminem per nos debere prohiberi."

Scripsit dudum vir sanctus et eloquens Episcopus Augustinus ad Marcellinum, duos libros de Infantibus baptizandis contra hæresim vestram, per quam vultis asserere baptizari infantes, non in remissionem peccatorum, sed in regnum cœlorum. Tertium quoque ad eumdem Marcellinum contra eos, qui dicunt idem quod vos, posse hominem sine peccato esse, si velit, absque Dei gratiâ. S. Jerome (adv. Pelagian. Dial. iii. p. 545).

Compare the Preamble of the Office for Baptism of Infants (the strongest practical protest against the Pelagian Heresy) in the Book of Common Prayer.

14. ὅς ἐστι τύπος τοῦ μέλλοντος] who (Adam) is a figure of Him Who was to come, namely, of Christ.

For as the old Adam, by his sin, subjected all men to punishment, although they had not sinned, so Christ justifies all, although they have not done things worthy of Justification. Theophyl.

The Apostle, having declared the doctrine of Original Sin, and the universal liability of all Adam's posterity to death, consequent thereon, next confirms and harmonizes that doctrine, and comforts the heart of Mankind by displaying to them the counterpart of it in the Universal Redemption effected for them by the Second Adam, Jesus Christ.

After the first and universal ruin consequent on Adam's transgression, in which by one man Sin entered into this World, and Death by Sin, and so Death passed through to all men, in that all sinned (in Adam), there would have been no escape from the Dominion of the Devil, no liberation from captivity, no hope of pardon from God, and of reconciliation with Him, no restoration to life, unless the Son of God, Coeternal and Coequal with the Father, had come to seek and save that which was lost (Luke xix. 10), in order that, as Death came by Adam, so Resurrection from the Dead might come by Christ (1 Cor. xv. 22) even to all. For we are not to suppose, that because, according to the inscrutable purpose of God, the Word was made Flesh in these the last days, therefore the Birth of Christ was only profitable to those who live in the last days, and did not pour back its life-giving stream on former ages. No; on the contrary, all past generations of those who worshipped the true God, the whole company of Saints who lived in the holy faith and pleased God, received pardon and life through Christ; and none of the Patriarchs or Prophets, none of the Saints of old, were justified in any other way than by the Redemption achieved for us by our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. S. Leo (Serm. 50, p. 119).

The Doctrine of Original Sin, here stated by St. Paul, is indeed a hard saying, unless it be coupled (as it ought always to be coupled) with the Doctrine of Universal Redemption.

By asserting the doctrine of Original Sin, and of the Universal Sinfulness of Mankind in every age, St. Paul has here proved, against his Jewish opponents, the Universal need of a Redeemer. And by passing on to show that this need has been recognized by God, and that a Redeemer has been provided, Who sums up all mankind (even from the beginning of the world) in Himself, by becoming Incarnate, and taking the common nature of all, and Who has paid the debt due for all by His own Passion, and Who was given to us by God in His Love, in order to reconcile us to Himself, and Who died of His own accord for us when we were yet sinners and enemies (see vv. 6—10), the Apostle has taken off the edge of the objection that would otherwise lie to the doctrine of Original Sin.

We are no parties to Adam's sin (says Bp. Andrewes, ii. 214), and yet we all die, because we are of the same nature whereof he is the first Person. Death came so certainly. And it is good Reason Life should do so likewise;

To the question, Can the Resurrection of One (Christ), a thousand six hundred years ago, be the cause of our Rising? it is a good answer, Why not? as well as the Death of one (Adam), five thousand six hundred years ago, be the cause of our dying?

The ground and reason is, that there is like ground and reason of both;

By what law do they die (viz. who do not commit actual sin)? By the law of attainder. And the restoring of men came in the same manner; the Attainder came by the first Adam, the Restoration comes by the second Adam, Christ. Bp. Andrewes.

15. Ἀλλ' οὐχ ὡς τὸ παράπτωμα κ.τ.λ.] But not as was the transgression of Adam, so the free gift of grace in Christ. For the evil of the one has been far surpassed and outweighed by the good of the other. For if the many, that is, all men, died (see on ἥμαρτον, v. 12) by the transgression of the one Adam, much more did the grace of God and His free gift by the grace of the One Man, Who is Jesus (and therefore our Saviour), and is also Christ (the Anointed One, anointed with the full outpouring of the Unction of Grace of the Holy Ghost, shed on Him and by and through Him on all His Members), abound to the many, that is, to all.

Adam, indeed (as he had just said), was a type of Christ. But the Grace (χάρισμα) in Christ, the Second Adam, was far more abundant in its consequences than the sin in the first Adam. For if it is true (εἰ γὰρ), as it is, that all died by the sin of the one father of all, Adam, in a much greater degree did the grace of God overflow upon all; and His gift also overflowed by the grace of the one Saviour of all, Jesus Christ, in Whom dwelleth all the Fulness of the Godhead (Col. ii. 9), and Who has taken our Nature, and into Whose Body we all are engrafted, and of Whose Fulness we all receive, and grace for grace. (John i. 16.)

We are more blessed in and by Christ, than we are injured in and by Adam. Theophyl.

Justification and Sanctification in Christ is a far more exuberant work, a more glorious triumph of divine love and mercy, than universal Death, consequent on original Sin from Adam, is of Divine justice and severity.

Adam deprived us of Paradise, but Christ gives us Heaven; and in proportion as Heaven is higher than Paradise, so is our gain in Christ greater than our loss in Adam. Cp. Bp. Andrewes, ii. 153.

Thus, where Sin abounded, there did Grace much more abound.

Besides, the First Adam was only Man; and as children of Adam we are only men: but the Second Adam is God and Man, and in Him our Nature is joined to the Nature of God, and by

His Incarnation, and by our baptismal incorporation into Him, we have been made God's children, and partakers of the divine nature (2 Pet. i. 4), and so are advanced to a far higher dignity than ever Adam enjoyed, or we could have enjoyed as children of Adam.

— οἱ πολλοί] the many, i. e. all. See Winer, p. 100, and the following observations of Dr. R. Bentley (Sermon on 2 Cor. ii. 17, p. 244, ed. 1838):

After the Apostle had said (v. 12), that by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men (εἰς πάντας ἀνθρώπους), for that all have sinned: in the reddition of this sentence (v. 15), he says, for if through the offence (τοῦ ἑνὸς) of one (οἱ πολλοί) many be dead (so our Translators), much more the grace of God by (τοῦ ἑνὸς) one man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded (εἰς τοὺς πολλοὺς) unto many. Now who would not wish that they had kept the articles in the version, which they saw in the original? If through the offence of the one (that is, Adam), the many have died, much more the grace of God by the one man Jesus Christ hath abounded unto the many. By this accurate version, some hurtful mistakes about partial redemption and absolute reprobation, had been happily prevented; our English readers had then seen what several of the Fathers saw and testified, that οἱ πολλοί, the many, in an antithesis to the one, are equivalent to πάντες, all (in v. 12), and comprehend the whole multitude, the entire species of mankind, exclusive only of the one. So again (v. 18 and 19 of the same chapter), our Translators have repeated the like mistake, where, when the Apostle had said, that as the offence of one was upon all men (εἰς πάντας ἀνθρώπους) to condemnation, so the righteousness of one was upon ALL MEN to justification: for, adds he, as by (τοῦ ἑνὸς) the one man's disobedience (οἱ πολλοί) the many were made sinners, so by the obedience (τοῦ ἑνὸς) of THE ONE (οἱ πολλοί) the many shall be made righteous. By this version the reader is admonished and guided to remark that the many in v. 19 are the same as πάντες, all, in the 18th, that is, as before, τῶν πάντων, of the whole race of men, exclusive of himself, agreeably to that of St. John (1 Epist. ii. 2), He is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for those of the WHOLE WORLD; and to that of St. Paul (1 Tim. ii. 6), Christ Jesus, Who gave Himself (ἀντίλυτρον ὑπὲρ πάντων) a ransom for ALL.

16. Καὶ οὐχ κ.τ.λ.] And not, as through one who sinned were the consequences of that sin, so likewise was that which was given in Christ. For the judgment indeed came from one, Adam, to condemnation of his posterity (see v. 18), all mankind; but the free grace in Christ came forth from many transgressions (actually committed by mankind) to their state of acceptance with God.

The sin of Adam brought, by a natural consequence, judgment on himself, and condemnation on his posterity. They were by virtue of their descent from him, in a condemned state. And besides this, they were guilty of many actual sins (παραπτώματα, prævaricationes) in their own persons. But Christ not only takes away the guilt of original sin (in their Baptism), but He also remits actual sin by the cleansing and saving efficacy of His Blood.

On the words δικαίωμα, δικαίωσις, δικαιοσύνη, as used here and v. 18, it is to be observed that the usual sense of the verb δικαιοῦν in the LXX and New Testament, is to deem and account just and righteous. See above, iii. 4. 24; v. 1.

Hence δικαίωμα is that which is accounted just, and signifies,—

(1) what is ordained as such; as a statute or decree. See i. 32; ii. 26; viii. 5. Compare the Latin jubeo, jussum, jus, justum. And

(2) a state of acceptance as righteous by God (Rev. xix. 2), a recognized condition of being counted just and approved by Him.

The word δικαίωσις represents the action of the Legislator or Judge, either

(1) in promulgating a decree as just, or

(2) in declaring a person righteous, and recognizing him as such, i. e. in Justification.

The word δικαιοσύνη signifies the habit or quality of him who is δίκαιος, or righteous, as God is, the Author of all righteousness; or as man, in whom he is made a member of Christ, "the Lord our Righteousness." See above on i. 17; iii. 21.

The word δικαίωμα must bear the same meaning here as in v. 18; and that meaning, as illustrated by the context, seems to be, a condition of approval, and state of acceptance, as righteous, with God.

17. Εἰ γάρ] For if by the transgression of the one man, Adam, Death reigned as a King over us, by means of that one man, much more shall they, who are the recipients of the superabundance of grace (which in blessing far exceeds the curse inherited from Adam), and of the free gift of righteousness in Christ their Head, "God manifest in the flesh," and who have in those gifts a present pledge of future and eternal glory, reign as kings in life by means of the one man who is Jesus their Saviour, and the Christ, the Anointed One of God.

Instead of τῷ τοῦ ἑνὸς, A, D, E have ἐν ἑνί, which is received by Griesb. and Tisch., and D, E have ἐν τῷ ἑνί.

The reading in the text has high authority in its favour, and is retained by Lachm. and Alford.

18. Ἄρα οὖν] Therefore as through one transgression of Adam, the sentence was unto all men to condemnation, so through one state of acceptance with God, namely, through the justified condition of Jesus Christ "the righteous" (who has been declared by God to be righteous, by His Resurrection from the Dead: see above, iv. 25), and by His Ascension into heaven, and by His Session in glory, in our Human Nature, at God's Right Hand in heaven, the sentence of condemnation is reversed; and the sentence now is unto all men to Justification of life; namely, to that Justification, which is the beginning of our life in Christ, and has its fuller growth in our Sanctification, and its final consummation in Life everlasting with Him in heavenly Glory.

Some learned Expositors render δικαίωμα righteous act here, and Justification in v. 16.

But the word (δικαίωμα) must bear the same sense in both places; and if δικαίωμα is only a righteous act, it can hardly be distinguished from ὑπακοή in v. 19.

Besides, it is not so much by Christ's righteous act in dying for us, that we are declared righteous, as by his justified state after His Resurrection, to which that act led. See on iv. 25.

It is by His Resurrection, whereby we rose in Him from the grave, and it is in His glorified humanity that we are recognized by God to be righteous, as seen in Christ risen from the dead. Our δικαίωσις εἰς ζωὴν is a sentence consequent on His δικαίωμα, and His δικαιοσύνη is specially imputed and imparted to us in our Baptism, which is a representation of His Resurrection; and then, by God's act of Justification (δικαίωσις) we enter into a justified state (δικαίωμα), and are solemnly and publicly accepted by God "in the Beloved" (Eph. i. 6).

See the beginning of the next Chapter with reference to Baptism (vi. 2—4).

20. Νόμος δὲ παρεισῆλθεν] But the Law came in, incidentally. This is an answer to a supposed objection;

ἡ ἁμαρτία, ὑπερεπερίσσευσεν ἡ χάρις, [21] ἵνα ὥσπερ ἐβασίλευσεν ἡ ἁμαρτία ἐν τῷ θανάτῳ, οὕτω καὶ ἡ χάρις βασιλεύσῃ διὰ δικαιοσύνης εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον, διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν.

If what you have said be true, what was the use of the Law? Do you not condemn the Law, and disparage its Giver, God?

No, replies the Apostle, the Law παρεισῆλθεν, i. e. it came in, as it were, aside and parenthetically, "per occasionem," and not by any direct essential necessity. For the Moral Law given by Moses was only a republication of the Natural Law.

On this point, see Bp. Andrewes on the Ten Commandments, p. 62 (Lond. 1650, fol.), who says, "The Law Moral was known before Moses—written in men's hearts;" and this he proves, going through each commandment of the Decalogue seriatim, p. 63—65.

But by reason of men's corruption and Satan's malice blinding their eyes, their light became dim (p. 68), and they walked in the vanity of their hearts. And then the Moral Law was written on Tables by God. Thus the Law παρεισῆλθεν, as it were per accidens, by occasion of man's sin, by way of digression or episode—it came in, as it were, by a side door (see above on v. 12), and it came in, as it were, into a side-Chapel, i. e. to a particular nation, and not to the general Temple of the World; and it came in merely as a passenger, to tarry only for a short time, as far as it was a special dispensation to a particular Nation, the Jews; and it was not even a full restoration of the Original Law, for it said nothing of many duties, e. g. of Prayer, and it was in its letter mainly negative and prohibitory. It was reserved for the Gospel to display the Moral Law as given at the beginning, and in more than all its original amplitude, dignity, beauty, and purity.

See this excellently proved by Bp. Taylor, Preface to his Life of Christ, p. xxvi—xl, ed. Lond. 1811.

— ἵνα πλεονάσῃ τὸ παράπτωμα] in order that the transgression might abound. He does not say that the Law came in, in order that sin (ἁμαρτία) might abound; but in order that transgression might abound. παράπτωμα, transgressio, prævaricatio, is properly a swerving-aside, and declension from a fixed standard of right, or a trespass across a line of demarcation. One and the same act of sin becomes more clearly an act of transgression, in proportion as the Standard of right is more clearly displayed, and the line of demarcation is more clearly drawn.

In the Mosaic Law the Standard of Right (which had been distorted by men's sins) was more clearly set up, and the line of demarcation (which had been almost effaced by the overflowing of iniquity) was clearly traced. And thus sin became more clearly transgression: and the Law was given for this express purpose, that this character of sin, as "delictum," might be evident, and that thus the transgression might be multiplied.

The Law came in, not in order that man might be more sinful, heaven forbid! (Œcumen.) but in order that sin might more clearly be shown to be transgression. It proved the superabundance of the inundation, as graduated posts in a river mark the rising of a flood. St. Paul interprets himself (vii. 13) ἵνα φανῇ ἁμαρτία.

The Law came forth from God to convince the world of its frailty, and of its degeneracy from the original divine Law of primeval Tradition, and from the Law of Conscience and Reason; and in order to chasten and heal men's pride and presumption, and to reduce men to a humble and teachable state, and to call all to Repentance, and to prepare them to receive with gratitude the Gospel of Grace, and to show the gracious mercy of its message, and the priceless value of Christ's Blood, and the blessedness of Faith, so that where Sin had reigned by Death, Grace might reign by Justification to Eternal Life through Christ.

This has been admirably expressed by S. Augustine, describing the moral state of Mankind before the delivery of the Law, and God's design in giving the Law:

"Qui ægrotabant, sanos se esse putabant; acceperunt Legem, quam implere non poterant; didicerunt in quo morbo essent, et imploraverunt manus medici: voluerunt sanari, quia cognoverunt se laborare: quod non cognoscerent, nisi datam Legem implere non possent. Innocens enim homo sibi videbatur, et ex ipsâ superbiâ innocentiæ falsæ insanior fiebat. Ad domandam ergo superbiam, et ad denudandam, data est Lex; non ad liberandos ægrotos, sed ad convincendos superbos. Data est Lex, quæ proderet morbos, non quæ tolleret. Utilis ergo erat Lex ad prodenda peccata, quia reus homo abundantius factus ex prævaricatione Legis, posset edomitâ superbiâ implorare auxilium miserantis. Attendite Apostolum: Lex subintravit ut abundaret delictum; ubi autem abundavit delictum, superabundavit et gratia. Quid est Lex subintravit ut abundaret delictum? Sicut alio loco dicit, Ubi enim non est Lex, nec prævaricatio (iv. 15). Peccator homo potest dici ante Legem, prævaricator non potest. Cùm autem acceptâ Lege peccaverit, non solum peccator, sed etiam prævaricator invenitur.

"Cùm ergo prævaricatio adjuncta sit peccato, ideo abundavit delictum. Abundante autem delicto, discit humana superbia tandem subjici, et confiteri Deo, et dicere Infirmus sum. Dicere etiam verba illa Psalmi, quæ non dicit nisi anima humiliata: Ego dixi, Domine, miserere mei, sana animam meam, quoniam peccavi tibi (Ps. xli. 4). Dicat ergo hoc anima infirma, saltem convicta per prævaricationem; et non sanata, sed demonstrata, per Legem." S. Augustine (Serm. 125).

"Ad hoc Lex (Moysis) data est ut superbo infirmitatem suam notam faceret, infirmo pœnitentiam suaderet. Ad hoc Lex data est, ut vulnera ostenderet peccatorum quæ Gratia (Evangelii) benedictione sanaret." Augustine. See on Ps. 102, Tract. 3 in Iohan.

See above, Introduction to the Epistle, p. 188—190, and Gal. iii. 19, and below, vii. 7. 13. 25.

21. ἐβασίλευσεν] reigned as a King over us. By this word, in which Sin is described as a βασιλεὺς opposed to Christ our true King, and as having a Kingdom opposed to the βασιλεία of Christ, St. Paul prepares us for his argument founded on this comparison in the next chapter.

— διὰ δικαιοσύνης εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον] for righteousness unto eternal life. Thus Christ is declared to be our Righteousness, not only for our delivery from eternal death, but also for inheritance of eternal life.

This is carefully to be noted, because in this important matter the truth has been obscured by the teaching of a large portion of the Western Church.

See Bp. Andrewes' Sermon on Justification in Christ's Name, "This is the Name whereby He shall be called, The Lord our Righteousness." (Vol. v. p. 104—126.)

So far as it concerneth the satisfaction for sin, and our escaping from eternal death, the Church of Rome taketh this Name ("The Lord our Righteousness") aright; and that term, which a great while seemed harsh unto them, now they find no such absurdity in it that Christ's righteousness and merits are imputed to us. So saith Bellarmine: Et hoc modo non esset absurdum, si quis diceret, nobis imputari Christi justitiam et merita, cùm nobis donentur et applicentur, ac si nos ipsi Deo satisfecissemus. (De Justif. 2. 10; 2. 11.) And again, Solus Christus pro salute nostrâ satisfacere potuit, et re ipsâ ex justitiâ satisfecit, et illa satisfactio nobis donatur et applicatur et nostra reputatur, cùm Deo reconciliamur et justificamur.

So that this point is meetly well cleared now. Thus they understand this Name in that part of righteousness which is satisfactory for punishment; and there they say with us, as we with Esay, In Jehovâ justitia nostra.

But in the positive justice, or that part thereof which is meritorious for reward, there fall they into a fancy that they may give it over, and suppose that justitia à Domino, "a righteousness from God," they grant, yet inherent in themselves without the righteousness that is in Christ, will serve them; whereof they have a good conceit that it will endure God's justice, and standeth not by acceptation. So by this means shrink they up the Name; and though they leave the full sound, yet take they half the sense from it.

And as we blame them for that, so likewise for this no less, that if they will needs have it a part of justice, they allow not Christ's Name as full in this part as in the former. For there they allow imputation, but here they do not. For I ask, What is the reason why in the other part of satisfaction for sin we need Christ's righteousness to be accounted ours? The reason is, saith Bellarmine, Non acceptat Deus in veram satisfactionem pro peccato nisi justitiam infinitam, quoniam peccatum offensa est infinita. (De Justif. 2. 5.) If that be the reason, that "it must have an infinite satisfaction, because the offence is infinite," we reason, à pari, there must also be an infinite merit, because the reward is no less infinite. Else by what proportion do they proceed, or at what beam do they weigh these twain, that cannot counterpoise an infinite sin but with an infinite satisfaction, and think they can weigh down a reward every way as infinite with a merit, to say the least, surely not infinite? Why should there be a necessary use of the sacrifice of Christ's death for the one, and not a use full as necessary of the oblation of His life for the other? Or how cometh it to pass, that no less than the one will serve to free us from eternal death, and a great deal less will serve to entitle us to eternal life? Is there not as much requisite to purchase for us the crown of glory, as there is to redeem us from the torments of hell? What difference is there? are they not both equal, both alike infinite? Why is His death allowed solely sufficient to put away sin? and why is not His life to be allowed like solely sufficient to bring us to life? If in that the blessed saints themselves,—were their sufferings never so great, yea, though they endured never so cruel martyrdom,—if all those could not serve to satisfy God's justice for their sins, but it is the death of Christ must deliver them; is it not the very same reason, that were their merits never so many, and their life never so holy, yet that by them they could not, nor we cannot, challenge the reward; but it is the life and obedience of Christ that de justitiâ must procure it for us all? For sure it is that Finiti ad infinitum nulla est proportio. Especially if we add hereunto, that as it cannot be denied but to be finite, so withal that the ancient Fathers seem further to be but meanly conceited of it, reckoning it not to be full but defective, nor pure but defiled; and if it be judged by the just judge, districtè or cum districtione examinis; they be S. Gregory's and S. Bernard's words,—indeed, no righteousness at all. (S. Greg. Mor. 9. 14. S. Bernard in Fest. Om. SS. Serm. 1, post. med.)

This then is the interpretation or meaning of this Name, that as well in the one sense as the other Christ is "our righteousness;" and as the prophet Esay putteth it down, in the plural number, in Domino justitiæ nostræ, as it were prophesying of these men, "All our righteousnesses," this as that, one as well as the other, "are in the Lord." (Isa. xlv. 24.) No abatement is to be devised, the Name is not to be mangled or divided, but entirely belongeth to Christ full and whole, and we call Him by it, "JEHOVAH JUSTITIA NOSTRA." (Bp. Andrewes.)

CH. VI. 1. ἐπιμένωμεν τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ κ.τ.λ.] May we continue in sin? Is it right that we should remain on in sin, in order that Grace may abound?

Another supposed objection.

If, as you have just said (v. 20, 21), where sin abounded Grace did much more abound, may we then continue in sin, in order that Grace may abound?

He proceeds to reply to this question raised by the Jews, and also gives a caution against a licentious perversion, on the part of Gentile Christians, of his doctrine of Free Grace into a cloak of Licentiousness. Cp. 1 Pet. ii. 16.

Elz. has ἐπιμενοῦμεν here; but the reading in the text, ἐπιμένωμεν, which is in A, B, C, D, E, F, G, is preferable, as putting the question (involving so monstrous a supposition) more modestly, and as not assuming that the parties supposed are continuing in sin; which all who are Christians have renounced in their Baptism, as he proceeds to show. Cp. v. 15.

2. οἵτινες ἀπεθάνομεν τῇ ἁ.] we who died to sin. Observe the aorist, we who died to sin at a certain time, namely (as he proceeds to show in the next verse), in our Baptism.

The pronoun οἵτινες is more expressive than οἱ, and involves a logical argument. Since we died to sin, how can we live in it? See i. 25.

3. ὅσοι ἐβαπτίσθημεν εἰς] all we who were baptized into Christ.

To be baptized into Christ is—

(1) To be born anew in Him (Tit. iii. 5), to be incorporated by Baptism into His Body (1 Cor. xii. 13), to be made a Member of Him, and a partaker of those blessings which are derived from Him as Man and God.

And (2) to enter into a solemn engagement, and make a public profession of Faith and Obedience to Him.

— εἰς τὸν θάνατον αὐτοῦ ἐβαπτίσθημεν] we were baptized into His Death.

(1) We were baptized into a belief of the redeeming and saving efficacy of that Death as a propitiation for our sins, and the sins of the whole world.

(2) We were baptized into it so as to partake of its benefits. All baptismal grace flows from one source, the wounded side of Christ dying on the Cross, from which "came forth blood and water" (John xix. 34) for the redemption and cleansing of all whose nature He took, Who died in that nature for sin, and to deliver them from its guilt and power, in order that we might live by grace, here on earth, a life of holiness, and hereafter live for ever in glory.

(3) Into conformity to it; that is, as Christ died and rose again, so are we therein dead to sin, and alive to God. Being baptized into that death, which was for sin, we, by the terms of our Christian Being (begun in Baptism), are dead unto sin, and alive unto righteousness. Our Baptism pledges us to this. And we should be contradicting the first principles of our existence if we continued in sin. See Cyril (in Catenâ, pp. 58, 59).

In virtue of Christ's Baptism in His own blood doth all our Water-Baptism work; and therefore we are baptized into it, into His Cross-Baptism, into His death. And we must die for sin. And we must count ourselves dead unto sin. And that we do when there is neither action, nor affection, nor any sign of life in us toward sin, no more than there is in a dead body. Bp. Andrewes (iii. 247; v. 431).

In Baptism our sins are drowned and buried. (Chrys.) We renounce them and are delivered from them, and leave them there, as the Israelites did their enemies the Egyptians in the depths of the Red Sea. And we emerge from the Baptismal Red Sea of Christ's Blood, in order to enter on the road which leads us to our heavenly Canaan.

From Baptism we rise to newness of life. And whatever was transacted on the Cross of Christ, in His Burial, in His Resurrection, in His Ascension into heaven, was so transacted as to be a configuration of our Christian Life. For because of Christ's Cross, the Apostle says, "They who are Christ's have crucified the flesh with its sinful affections and lusts" (Gal. v. 24); and because of His Burial he says, "We are buried with Him by Baptism into His Death;" because of His Resurrection, "that as Christ rose from the dead, so ought we to walk in newness of life" (Rom. vi. 4); and because of His Ascension and Session at God's right hand, he says, "If ye have risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God" (Col. iii. 1). Augustine.

4. συνετάφημεν] Not only did we die with Christ, Who died for sin, but we were also buried with Him into His death (εἰς τὸν θάνατον); because we have not only a negative work, but a positive one also; we have not only died unto sin, but we have risen unto Righteousness. And Burial is necessary as prior to Resurrection. We are therefore "buried with Him in Baptism, wherein also we are risen with Him through the faith of the operation of God" (Col. ii. 12).

5. Εἰ γὰρ σύμφυτοι γεγόναμεν κ.τ.λ.] For if we have become connate (or born together) with Him by the likeness of His death, surely we shall also become connate with Him by the likeness of His resurrection.

The meaning of the term "likeness of Christ's Death" is explained by the words, ὥσπερ ... οὕτω so, used in the preceding verse. We have been already made like to Christ in our Baptism. We have become connate with Him by that likeness, inasmuch as we have died therein to sin, and have been born thereby to the new life in Him, in order that we may grow and bear fruit in Him.

Σύμφυτος, from συμφύω, is connate. See 3 Macc. iii. 22. Sap. xiii. 13. Hence it is used to signify what coalesces with something else, as in Amos ix. 13, LXX, and so signifies what grows together, as Trees in a forest. (Zech. xi. 2, LXX.)

As to its use in secular authors, see Blomf. Æschyl. Ag. 106, 148, and the use of the verb συμφύεσθαι in Xenophon (Cyrop. iv. 3, 4), and to describe the growing together of man and horse in the Centaur, Lucian (Dial. Mort. i. p. 404), εἰς ἓν συμπεφυκότες ἄνθρωπος καὶ θεός. Cp. Fritzsche, p. 370.

The sense here is, We have become connate with Christ in the likeness of His Death in our Baptism. We have been made members of Him, "bone of His bone, and flesh of His flesh" (cp. Eph. v. 30), and we shall also be connate with Him in the likeness of His Resurrection.

For "He will then change our vile bodies, so as to be made like unto His own glorious body" (Phil. iii. 21). Cp. 1 Cor. xv. 49. 1 John iii. 2.

Some learned Interpreters construe σύμφυτοι with ὁμοιώματι, and render it "united with the likeness;" but this seems rather to weaken the force of the words, and we can hardly be said to be σύμφυτοι with a thing; but it is an instructive and cheering truth, that we are σύμφυτοι, connate, with a Person, and that Person Christ. And St. Paul himself seems to suggest the supplement of the substantive Χριστῷ after σύμφυτοι, by using the verb συνεσταυρώθη in a similar manner in the next verse.

This sense is expressed by S. Cyril here (in Catenâ, p. 61), τὸ μὲν σύμφυτοι, τὸ οἱονεὶ σύμμορφοι καὶ ταυτοειδεῖς, and Diodorus says (adopting the metaphor from a tree or shrub, φυτὸν, which many ancient Expositors rightly, as it seems, suppose to be used in this passage), "As shrubs (φυτὰ) coalesce one with another, so they who are baptized into Christ's death are united with Him by Faith."

The Apostle regards Christ's death as a tree bearing fruit, and considers us as engrafted on that tree, and thus made partakers of its life and fruitfulness. See Origen. Similarly Chrys., Photius, and others, and the Syriac, and Vulg., and Arabic render σύμφυτοι by "planted together."

6. ὁ παλαιὸς ἡμῶν ἄνθρωπος συνεσταυρώθη] our old man was crucified together, i. e. with Christ, Who, by the satisfaction and meritorious obedience of His Death, in our nature, and as our Representative, paid the penalty of our sins, and reconciled us to God, and raised us whose nature He has taken, and Who has incorporated us with Himself, Who is God as well as man, and has made us coheirs with Himself the New Man, and has raised us as His members to a higher dignity in the Second Adam than that which we lost in the First Adam, and has infused into us a new life, and enables us by His grace to mortify the deeds of the body, and to bring forth fruit unto holiness. See Cyril here.

He did all this in order that we His members might be holy, as He our Head is holy; and that as we have been born anew, by our incorporation in the New Man, we should walk in newness of Life.

Thus the Apostle teaches that the doctrine of our New Birth in Baptism is a practical doctrine, and is indeed the root of all Christian Practice. See above on Gal. ii. 20.

— ἵνα καταργηθῇ τὸ σῶμα τῆς ἁμαρτίας] in order that the body of Sin might be destroyed.

Sin is personified by the Apostle; it is represented as a King (vv. 12. 14), and as a Commander; and so the Body of Sin is here our body, so far as it is the seat and instrument of Sin, and the Slave of Sin. Cp. Origen (in Cat. p. 68).

Compare the expression τὸ σῶμα τῆς ταπεινώσεως ἡμῶν, "the body of our humiliation" (Phil. iii. 21); that is, our body, so far as it is the seat and sphere of the vileness and debasement of this lower world, as contrasted with the body of future glorification. In neither case is the personal identity of the body destroyed; but the condition and functions of the body are altered.

Our Old Man was crucified with Christ, in order that this Body of Sin might be destroyed in us by Christ's death, the virtue of which was conveyed to us at our Baptism, when we were engrafted into Him.

Therefore the Church teaches in her Catechism that the inward grace of Baptism is "a death unto sin, and a new birth unto righteousness;" and declares in her Baptismal Office that our "Christian Profession is to follow the example of our Saviour Christ, and to be made like unto Him, that, as He died for us, so should we who are baptized die from sin, and rise again unto righteousness, continually mortifying all our evil and corrupt affections, and daily proceeding in all virtue and godliness of living." And, adopting the language of the Apostle, she prays in her Baptismal Office, "O merciful God, grant that the Old Adam in this child may be so buried, that the New Man may be raised up in him; grant that all carnal affections may die in him, and that all things belonging to the Spirit may live and grow in him; grant that he being dead unto sin, and living unto righteousness, and being buried with Christ in His death, may utterly abolish the whole body of sin; and that as he is made partaker of the death of Thy Son, he may also be partaker of His resurrection."

St. Paul does not say, and this prayer does not affirm, that the body of sin has been already utterly abolished, but that a power has been given us to strive against it, and to be no longer, what we were before, the Slaves of Sin as our Master, the Soldiers of Sin as our Leader. "Quamdiu vivis, peccatum necesse est esse in membris tuis. Saltem illi regnum auferatur; non fiat quod jubet." Augustine (in Iohan. Tract. 41). Gennadius (in Caten. p. 68).

To cease from sin, understanding by "sin," from sin altogether, that is a higher perfection than this life will bear, but, as the Apostle expoundeth himself in the next words, "Ne regnet peccatum" (Rom. vi. 12); that is, from the dominion of sin to cease, we may come thus far "ne regnet," that Sin reign not, wear not a crown, sit not in a throne, hold no parliaments within us, give us no laws,—that we serve it not. (v. 6.) To die to the dominion of sin, that by the grace of God we may, and that we must, account for. Bp. Andrewes (ii. p. 200).

7. ὁ γὰρ ἀποθανών] he that is dead hath been set free from the bondage of sin. "The small and the great are there (in the grave), and the servant is free from his master" (Job iii. 19). Cp. 1 Pet. iv. 1, ὁ παθὼν ἐν σαρκὶ πέπαυται ἁμαρτίας. And S. Basil (de Baptismo, 1, 2, § 15) interprets St. Paul's word δεδικαίωται by ἠλευθέρωται, ἀπήλλακται.

8. Εἰ δὲ ἀπεθάνομεν σὺν Χριστῷ] But if we died with Christ . . in our baptism. (See v. 3.) This death takes place once. Christ died once, we are baptized once. There is no second Baptism, as there is no second death of Christ. (Diodorus.)

9—11. Χριστὸς ἐγερθεὶς] As Christ, having died once, and having risen from the dead, dieth no more again, but liveth eternally to God, so we Christians, who have been baptized into Christ's death, and at our Baptism died once for all to sin, can no more (if we live consistently with our Christian name and profession) re-enter the grave of sin; but having risen from that grave by a spiritual Resurrection in our Baptism, we are pledged to live for ever, in newness of life, to God in Christ.

We who have passed the Red Sea in our Baptism, and have left our ghostly enemies in its waters, cannot return to Egypt, but must march onward to Canaan, if we are true Israelites. Cp. Bp. Andrewes' Sermon on these verses, ii. p. 187—205.

10. ὃ γὰρ ἀπέθανε, τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ ἀπέθανεν ἐφάπαξ] for in that He (Christ) died, He died unto sin once for all.

Christ died unto sin, not as to any hold which sin had on Him personally, but as to that power which sin exercised over the whole human race, of which He was the Representative and Proxy, bearing their sins, and receiving the wages due for those sins, namely Death.

But now, after He has paid once for all that penalty by His Death, Death has no more any claim upon Him; it cannot exercise any more dominion over Him. Cp. Heb. ix. 28, the best comment on this text.

— ζῇ τῷ Θεῷ] He liveth to God, Who is Everlasting, cp. Luke xx. 38; and therefore He cannot be overcome by Death. He now liveth to God, having been raised by Him from the Grave, and being enthroned at His right hand, and having all power given to Him in heaven and earth (Matt. xxviii. 18), and as having all Judgment committed to Him by the Father (John v. 22), till He has put all His enemies, among whom is Death itself, under His feet, when He, as God-Man, will reign with the Father for ever, and so God will be all in all. See 1 Cor. xv. 24—28.

12. ἐν τῷ θνητῷ ὑ. σώματι] in your mortal body. The consideration of the mortality of the body is suggested as an argument against submission to the dominion of sin; since the body must soon die, the pleasures of sin, in the body of sin (v. 6), can be but only of short duration; and since Death will be followed by Resurrection and Judgment, when we must give an account of the works done in our mortal bodies, and receive bodies clothed with immortal glory, or bodies condemned to everlasting shame.

We have risen now from the death of sin, in order that we may rise from the grave to everlasting glory hereafter. (Theodorus.)

13. ὅπλα] Do not wield arms for sin. Do not be soldiers in an army fighting in such a cause, under such a General; you, who have been enlisted under the banner of the Cross as soldiers of Christ, the Captain of your salvation. See above on v. 6, below on v. 23.

— παραστήσατε] Observe the change of tense from παριστάνετε to παραστήσατε, showing an act to be done once for all, and never to be revoked or to need repetition.

15. Τί οὖν;] What then? He meets an objection started by a Jewish opponent. (Gennadius.)

— ἁμαρτήσωμεν] may we commit sin? So A, B, C, D, E, I, K. Elz. ἁμαρτήσομεν (see v. 1). The inadmissible hypothesis is put more gently in the conjunctive.

— οὐκ ἐσμὲν ὑπὸ νόμον] we are not under the Law. Can it then be said that Christians are released from obedience to the Moral Law? Certainly not. This (says Bp. Sanderson, iii. p. 294) is a pestilent error, and of very dangerous consequence. Great offenders this way are the Libertines and Antinomists, who quite cancel the whole Law of God under pretence of Christian Liberty. Cp. Augustine (c. Faustum Manich. libb. xvii. xviii.). Not to wade far into a controversy, it shall suffice to propound one distinction which, well heeded and rightly applied, will clear the whole point concerning the abrogation and the obligation of the Moral Law in the New Testament. The Law then may be considered either as a Rule, or as a Covenant. Christ hath freed all believers from the rigour and curse of the Law considered as a Covenant, but He hath not freed them from obedience to the Law considered as a Rule. We are now translated from the Covenant of the Law into the Covenant of Grace. But what is all this to the Rule? That is still where it was, even as the nature of Good and Evil are still the same. Bp. Sanderson.

Hence St. Paul tells them (v. 18) that by being made free from sin, they have become servants to righteousness; and he condemns ἀνομία, or law-less ness (v. 19).

On this point see on Gal. ii. 19; iii. 13, and below on vii. 4—6.

17. Χάρις δὲ τῷ Θεῷ, ὅτι ἦτε] Thanks be to God that ye were formerly, but no longer are. This is a mode of speaking where a bad thing is represented as comparatively good, so that the superiority of what is contrasted with it may appear more clear. See on Matt. xi. 25. Luke x. 21.

Winer (Gr. Gr. 554) resolves it into ὄντες ποτὲ . . . . ὑπηκούσατε. Cp. Luke xxiv. 18.

— εἰς ὃν παρεδόθητε τύπον] You readily obeyed the mould of Christian Faith and Practice, into which, at your baptism, you were poured, as it were, like soft, ductile, and fluent metal, in order to be cast, and take its form. You obeyed this mould, you were not rigid and obstinate, but were plastic, and pliant, and assumed it readily.

A metaphor, suggesting itself to the Apostle in the city where he was writing this Epistle, Corinth, famous for casting statues, &c., in bronze. Cp. vii. 8. The Philosophers of Greece and Rome used a somewhat similar figure, drawn from sculpture and metallurgy, speaking of the ideal εἰκὼν τοῦ καλοῦ, the "effigies, forma, facies, species, honesti." See above on ii. 20, and the Notes on Cicero, de Oratore i. v. 1, and on Aristophanes, Nubes 995, Αἰδοῦς τἄγαλμ' ἀναπλάττειν.

The Christian Life consists in having Christ's image formed in the soul, and in displaying it visibly in the life (Rom. viii. 29. Col. iii. 10).

19. Ἄνθρώπινον λέγω] I am speaking humanly (see Gal. iii. 15; 1 Cor. ix. 8); in discoursing of divine things, I am using similitudes taken from man and his condition, i. e. as a slave, under a hard master, Sin (v. 6. 12. 16, 17), or as dead (v. 2. 7), or as soldiers serving in a camp under a General (see v. 13, and 23). You were slaves to Sin once, and then you were in a hard bondage; you have been emancipated by Christ, and your liberty consists in serving Him. Therefore obey Him, and so be free. You died to sin in your baptism, and so you were made alive; but if you fall back into sin, you die. You were once slaves in the household of Sin, receiving wages, which is death (v. 23). Now you are servants of Christ, Who gives you everlasting life.

— διὰ τὴν ἀσθένειαν τῆς σαρκὸς ὑμῶν] I am using these figures, drawn from human affairs, not as if they were perfect illustrations of divine things, but on account of the infirmity of your flesh requiring such a mode of instruction. Cp. above, Gal. iv. 13, and 1 Cor. iii. 2.

— τῇ ἀκαθαρσίᾳ καὶ τῇ ἀνομίᾳ] to Impurity (namely, Sin relative to yourselves as members of Christ, and temples of the Holy Ghost) and to Lawlessness, namely, to Sin, as opposed to God's Law, which you perhaps imagine that you have obeyed, and on which you have placed your hopes of Justification.

— εἰς τὴν ἀνομίαν] unto Lawlessness; as the result of all your labour. Ye yielded your members slaves to Lawlessness (τῇ ἀνομίᾳ), not so as to derive any fruit to yourselves from your service, or as ever to be freed from it, but so as to remain in your abject slavery to it as the sum and substance, the end and reward of all your drudgery. How different from the work of Faith (i. 17), and from the service of God! (vv. 22, 23.)

— ἁγιασμόν] sanctification.

20. ἐλεύθεροι ἦτε τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ] ye were free in regard to Righteousness. Miserable freedom! Slavish Liberty! Emancipation from serving God, which is perfect freedom, and deliverance to the service of Satan, in penal chains of everlasting fire.

21. τὸ γάρ] B, D*, E, F, G have τὸ μὲν γάρ, approved by Lachm. and Meyer, perhaps rightly.

Here is the second answer to the question, "May we sin because we are under Grace?"

The first reply was, No; surely not; for in our Baptism we died to sin (see v. 2—12). Now follows the second answer. No; surely not; for by Sin we violate our allegiance to God, Who gives life eternal to His servants, and (v. 23) we are like fugitives and renegades from Him, our heavenly Master, and we become slaves, slaves of the worst master (see v. 16), whose "wages are death."

23. Τὰ γὰρ ὀψώνια] The wages. Sin had been personified by the Apostle as a Master, having subjects and slaves, and also as a General, having soldiers, wielding their arms in his service (see v. 13), and now he speaks of them as receiving ὀψώνια, military pay, from him, and that pay is death (Theod., Theoph.). "Mors diabolicæ militiæ ut debitæ redditur." Augustine (de gratiâ et lib. arb. 9).

— τὸ δὲ χάρισμα] Eternal Life is not like ὀψώνια, or wages due for service to God, as death is wages due for service to Sin. But Eternal Life is a χάρισμα, or donative, a gratuity, or free gift of God.

This difference is appropriately marked by the Apostle, who speaks of wages as received from Sin, and of a free-gift as received from God. For neither does God give, what He gives, as wages due for service from us, but as a free gift; nor does Sin give, what it gives, as a free gift, but as wages due. Besides, the Apostle thus teaches, that death, which is the enemy of Christ (1 Cor. xv. 26), is not designed for man by God, but that death is given by Sin as wages to those who submit themselves to its rule, and do its work. Origen.

When God rewards our works He crowns His own gifts. Augustine.

— Χ. Ἰ. τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν] Jesus Christ our Lord. Not Sin; but Christ is your real Lord and Master. Be ye, therefore, His Slaves, and ye shall be free; be ye His Soldiers, and ye shall conquer, and receive an unfading crown of glory.

CH. VII. 1. ὁ νόμος κυριεύει τοῦ ἀνθρώπου] The Law (of Moses) is lord over the man—the human creature—whether man or woman, as long as he or she lives. Cp. Chrys., Theodoret, Aug. qu. 83.

2. ἡ γὰρ ὕπανδρος γυνή] The married woman has been bound, and is bound, by the law to her living husband, i. e. to her husband for his lifetime. But if her husband shall have died, she is released from the law, which her husband exercises over her. See 1 Cor. vii. 39.

On the force of the perfect δέδεται, see Winer, 243. Cp. παραδέδοται Luke iv. 6, ἐλήλυθε v. 3. Heb. x. 14, τετελείωκεν.

3. χρηματίσει] she shall be called. See Acts xi. 26.

4. ἐθανατώθητε τῷ νόμῳ] ye were made dead to the law of Moses, through the body of Christ, slain on the cross.

Ye were then made dead to the Law, that is, to its rigour and curse, not to its moral requirements, as far as it was a republication of the Law of Nature, now fully proclaimed in the Gospel. See above on Gal. ii. 19, and Rom. vi. 15, and below here on verse 6.

The Apostle here speaks of the Mosaic Law as a Husband, and of Human Nature as a Wife. He shows that, according to the Mosaic Law itself, the bond of Matrimony is dissolved by death.

His comparison would naturally lead him to say that the Law is dead; and that Human Nature has now been absolved from its obligation to the Law, by the death of the Law, so that Mankind may now be married to another Husband,—Christ.

But, in the application of his comparison, he speaks of the wife as liberated by her own death from obligation to her husband.

How did this application arise, and wherefore?

(1) He had prepared the way for it, by saying (v. 1) that the Law is lord of the human creature, man or woman, who is subject to it, as long as that person lives, and that by death he or she is freed from that Law. And

(2) It is evident that a husband's death is also the death of the wife, as a wife to him; for she is no longer capable of bearing children by him.

(3) He was not willing to speak of the Mosaic Law as dead, because in its morality, as a Rule, the Law lives for ever in the Gospel (see v. 12); and also because he would not offend the Jews by speaking of the Law as dead. Chrys., Œcumen.

(4) He does not speak of the Law being dead to them; but he speaks of their being dead to the Law; because this death of theirs was the beginning of their new Life in Christ, and of their espousals to Him, their Second Husband.

They had been made dead to the Law through the body of Christ, the Second Adam, who was their Representative, and who underwent, as the universal Proxy of Mankind, the curse due for Disobedience, and so liberated them from the Law. They had become dead to the Law, through His body offered for them on the cross, and thus they were released from the Law, and were now enabled to marry another Husband. See Gal. ii. 19, and iii. 13, the best interpretation of this text.

They were made dead to the Law through the body of Christ, so that they might marry another Husband, inasmuch as they died in Christ their Head, and were formed out of Him, as Eve was out of Adam's wounded side, and became His Bride. Gennadius.

Ye have become the spouse of that Husband who has been raised from the dead. Origen.

Ye were espoused to Him in baptism, when the benefits of His death were conveyed to you, and ye were made members of His Body; and He is now your Husband and Head. (Eph. v. 29—32. 2 Cor. xi. 2.)

— ἵνα καρποφορήσωμεν] in order that we may bear fruit—as in a prolific marriage.

5. Ὅτε ἦμεν ἐν τῇ σαρκί] While we were in the flesh—and not in the spirit.

— τὰ παθήματα τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν τὰ διὰ τοῦ νόμου] the passions of sins, those passions which were through the Law; by occasion of the Law (see v. 7), but not caused by, the Law.

Let it not be imagined that the Apostle disparages the Law, and so gives countenance to the Manichæan heresy. "Absit hoc ab animo qualiscunque Christiani!" Aug. (Serm. 153.)

When we were as yet in a carnal state, and had not been engrafted into Christ, and had not as yet received the gift of the Holy Ghost, these passions were then working in us, through the Law; because the essence of the carnal mind is Lawlessness; in its pride it resents all control; and it rebels against the Law of God, even because it is Law, and because it comes from God, Whose Nature and Commandments, being essentially holy and spiritual, are opposite to the nature and desires of the impure and carnal mind. As the Apostle says, "the carnal mind is Enmity against God, for it does not subject itself to the Law of God, neither is it able to do so." (Rom. viii. 7.)

Thus the fleshly motions of unregenerated Nature worked in us through the Law, and brought forth Death. Cp. Cyril (in Catenâ, p. 79), and below, v. 8; and see above, Introduction to this Epistle, p. 189, 190.

6. κατηργήθημεν ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου] but now we have been set free from the Law, i. e. from the curse and rigour of the Law as a Covenant, not from the duty of obedience to the Law as a Rule, which was first promulgated at the beginning by God Himself, and was written by Him in the fleshly tables of men's hearts, and which Christ came not to destroy, but to spiritualize and to fulfil, and which St. Paul declares to be spiritual, and which he says that in his mind—his nobler part—he serves, and in which he delights after the inner man (v. 14—22).

It must be carefully borne in mind that the Moral Law existed before Moses, and has not been abrogated or invalidated, but has been explained, enlarged, and confirmed by the Gospel. It was before Adam. As is well asked by Origen here, "Was it by the Law of Moses that Adam acknowledged his sin, and hid himself from the presence of the Lord? (Gen. iii. 8.) Was it by the Law of Moses that Cain owned his sin? (Gen. iv. 13.) Or was it by the Law of Moses that Pharaoh acknowledged his sin, and said, The Lord is righteous, and I and my people are wicked? (Exod. ix. 27.)"

What then does the Apostle intend, when he says here that we have been made free from the Law?

This question has been discussed by Bp. Sanderson (see above, vi. 15, and on Gal. ii. 19; iii. 13), and Bp. Andrewes (on the Commandments, p. 60), "The moral Law is not changed; but the curse is taken away by Christ's Grace. But the bond of keeping the Law remaineth still." See also his Sermon on Ps. ii. 7, Vol. i. p. 288, and Dr. Barrow (Sermon on Universal Redemption, lxxiv. Vol. iii. p. 419). The Law, in its rigour, as requiring exact obedience, and as denouncing vengeance to them who in any point violate it, is by reason of our weakness and inability to perform it, an Enemy to us (Gal. ii. 16; iii. 11; v. 2. Rom. vii. 13. 1 Cor. xv. 56. Heb. vii. 19, &c.), justifying no man, perfecting no man, aggravating, quickening, declaring sin, and working wrath, ministering death and condemnation, subjecting us to a curse, as St. Paul teacheth us.

But our Lord, by mitigating the extreme rigour thereof, by procuring an acceptance of sincere though not accurate obedience, by purchasing and dispensing pardon for transgression upon repentance, by conferring competent strength and ability to perform it in an acceptable degree, hath brought under this Adversary; hath redeemed us from the curse of the Law (Gal. iii. 13; v. 18), and we are delivered from the Law, as to those effects of it—condemning, discouraging, enslaving us—we cease to be under the Law in those respects, being under Grace, being led by the Spirit, as St. Paul tells us. (Rom. iii. 21. 28; iv. 8; vi. 14; vii. 4. 6.)

The Law indeed is still our Rule, our Guide, our Governor. But it ceases to be a Tyrant over us, a Tormentor of us. Dr. Barrow.

"No Christian man whatsoever," says the Church of England, Art. VII., "is free from the obedience of the commandments, which are called moral."

The moral law is that eternal and unchangeable rule of justice and equity that is in God; yea, the eternal will of God is the fountain of this Law, which is to be the Rule of our lives. Bp. Beveridge (on the Articles, p. 238).

Jesus Christ, as the divine and eternal Logos, or Word, is the Author and Revealer of all Law to man; and there is but one Law of Morals, which He revealed at the creation of the world, which He afterward renewed by Moses, and lastly explained, and confirmed, and fulfilled by Himself. So Christ is the Beginning and the End, the Alpha and the Omega, of the Law.

— ἀποθανόντες] having died to that master, lord, and husband, under whose sway we were held (by the rigour and curse of the Law); so that we should now obey its rule in the Gospel, in the newness of the Spirit, which is given us in the Gospel, and enables us to obey the will of God; not in the oldness of the letter of the Law, which could not give grace, any more than the table of stone or parchment on which a code is written can enable men to obey it.

See viii. 2, where the Apostle says that the Law of the Spirit of that life which we have in Christ has freed us from the Law which was the occasion of sin and death. We are dead to the curse of the Law, and by that death we live, in order to obey the precepts of the Law. See also on Eph. ii. 15, and Col. ii. 14, where the Apostle pursues this subject.

Elz. has ἀποθανόντος here, which seems to have little authority. D, E, F, G have τοῦ θανάτου. Ἀποθανόντες is in A, C, I, K, and many Cursives, Fathers, and Versions.

— ὥστε δουλεύειν] so as to serve. Remark therefore that, even under Grace, he regards himself as a servant of the Law. Indeed, Grace is given in order that he may be able and willing to render cheerful service to the Law.

7. Ἀλλά] Nevertheless, though the Law is not sin, but is "holy, just, and good" (vii. 12), yet I should not have known sin (to be sin) except by means of the Law, which showed me to myself as a sinner; and my sin became more sinful, because it was a breach of a Law plainly written by God. By the pronoun I, the holy Apostle personifies Human Nature, and identifies it with himself, and says, in his own name and person, what he means to be applied to Mankind generally, in their unregenerate state.

Though he himself is now a chosen vessel of divine grace, and a temple of the Holy Ghost, and is writing under His inspiration, and though he no longer lives in the flesh, but Christ liveth in him (Gal. ii. 20), yet he does not forget what he would have been if he had been left to himself, without divine grace; and he, as it were, throws himself backward into his own natural condition, and sympathizes with Humanity in all its weakness and its woes.

This he does in his Christian modesty and humility, claiming no personal superiority over those with whom he is arguing, but intimating thereby, that whatever good he has within him is not of himself, but by the grace of God.

This is a very common practice with St. Paul, to put a general proposition in his own name, as if it were his own case. See above, iii. 7, and note from Bp. Sanderson on 1 Cor. vi. 12; and see 1 Cor. vi. 15; vii. 7; x. 23. 29, 30; xiv. 11, and throughout the present chapter; and Gal. iv. 3—5, where the diction and subject are similar.

— τὴν ἁμαρτίαν οὐκ ἔγνων] I should not have known and understood the sinfulness of sin, except by the Law, which showed its sinfulness by prohibiting it under terrible penalties.

He who, before the delivery of the Law, was unacquainted with his own evil doings, was taught them by the Law, and saw his own sins revealed to him by it, and recognized as evil what before he had imagined to be good. Augustine (Serm. 158).

St. Paul, in his modesty, depreciates himself, and wins his adversaries by self-humiliation. As a wise doctor of the Church, he takes upon himself the person of the weak. Origen. Cp. Bp. Taylor on Repentance, c. viii. §§ 1 and 2, who says: St. Paul, in the viith to the Romans, does not describe the state of himself really, or of a regenerate person. He is identifying himself with the natural and unregenerate man, and with the world in its degeneracy and apostasy from God at the time previous to, and at the delivery of, the Law; and when, in consequence of its idolatry, it had been given over by God to a reprobate mind (i. 28), and its moral sense was blinded, and its conscience seared, and its judgment perverted, and its will depraved by evil habits, so that it had no just notion of the sinfulness of sin, and it was sold into slavery under Satan; so that it wrought uncleanness with greediness, and consented with those who wrought it. (Eph. iv. 19. Rom. i. 32.) See Cyril, Chrys., Basil, Jerome, Œcumen., and others here; and the authorities in the Catena first published by Dr. Cramer, which is very copious and valuable on this chapter.

— ἐπιθυμίαν οὐκ ᾔδειν] I had not known concupiscence: I should not have considered and known it as it is,—namely, sinful. He does not say, I should not have felt it, but I should not have known it. Origen, repeated by Aug., Serm. 153. I should not have understood what its true character was, except by the voice of the Law saying to me, οὐκ ἐπιθυμήσεις.

On this sense of ᾔδειν see Acts xxiii. 5. Ἐπιθυμία, concupiscentia, is used here as a general term for any evil desire. See Jerome below on v. 12.

The Heathen thought little of the sin of evil thoughts, and their views with regard to πορνεία may be seen on Acts xv. 20.

What says the Apostle? I had not known lust. In my natural state I ran after my own pleasures, and in them I took great delight.

Who was ever brought before an earthly judge for such things as Harlotry or Intoxication? These things are done with impunity as far as concerns the tribunal of this world, but not before the court of Heaven. They are not punished by the world, but they are punished by the Creator of this world. The Law of God comes forth and proclaims to man "Non concupisces;" and thus he learns that concupiscence is sin. Augustine (Serm. 153).

Cp. Theodor. Mops. here, in Catená, p. 88.

8. Ἀφορμὴν δὲ λαβοῦσα κ.τ.λ.] But Sin, having found an occasion (of attack on me) through the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiscence.

Sin is personified here, and below in v. 11, as an armed Enemy, taking possession of a stronghold or fortress, from which to sally forth, and by which to assault his adversary. Sin converts the Law itself, which was designed as a fortress against sin, into a castle, from which to sally forth and attack mankind; as the Spartans converted the Deceleian fortress of Attica into the means for aggressive warfare against Athens itself. (Thucyd. vii. 18, 19. 27.)

The promulgation of the commandment was like a starting-place to Sin, from whence it rushed forth upon me.

How was this?

(1) Because what before were sins of ignorance, and so comparatively venial, now (after the delivery of the Law) became wilful sins, or sins of presumption—deliberate sins against light and knowledge bestowed by a Revelation from God, and so more sinful. Œcumen.

Just as the Gospel itself was a starting-place of greater sin and woe to the Bethsaidas, Chorazins, and Capernaums, and other cities, who heard our Lord's preaching and did not repent (Luke x. 13); and therefore it will be more tolerable even for Tyre and Sidon, and Sodom and Gomorrah, than for them. (Matt. xi. 21. Luke x. 13.)

(2) Because the natural man, of whom the Apostle is speaking, is proud and self-willed, and resents God's Law, even because it is God's Law. (See v. 5; and above, Introduction to this Epistle, p. 189.)

Men champ against the bit, and are made more furious by restraint, and being under the dominion of Satan, who envies man the joys promised to obedience (Photius), and is a rebel against God, and exults in doing outrage to Him, and in exciting men to mutiny and insurrection against God; they commit acts of rebellion against God's Law, with greater recklessness and rage than they would commit them if they were not forbidden by God's Law.

Satan deceived Eve, and tempted her to eat of the forbidden tree (see Theodor. Mops. here), because it was forbidden: and he would never have tempted her to eat of that tree, if it had not been forbidden. So after the giving of the Law, Satan tempts men to sin in a spirit of despite and defiance to the Law, and of blasphemy against its divine Giver.

Men take occasion at the very goodness of God to strengthen themselves in malice. Hooker (ii. 588).

Thus offences abounded by occasion of the Law. (Cp. v. 13—20.)

St. Paul uses the preposition διὰ, through, here and in v. 11 (and not ἀπὸ, from, or ἐκ, out of, it); because Sin did not make an attack on man from or out of the Law, directly, but mediately. Sin perverted the Law from its direct purpose, into means by, and through, which to injure man.

There was nothing in the Law itself which was designed to promote such an attack. Far from it. In itself the Law is holy, just, and good (v. 12). But Sin abused the Law to be an instrument for an end the very opposite to that for which the Law had been given by God.

— χωρὶς γὰρ νόμου ἁμαρτία νεκρά] for apart from the Law sin is dead. For where no Law is, there is no transgression. See iv. 15; v. 20, and 1 Cor. xv. 56, "the strength of sin is the Law,"—the best comment on this passage.

He does not mean to say that the natural man had no Law (for if so, he would not have been sold under sin as he describes him to be, v. 14); but he had not that clear knowledge of Law which the Commandment gave him by showing him the sinfulness of sin. Chrys.

Sin was dead before the Law came. What does he mean by its being dead? It was not apparent. It was as it were hidden in a grave. But when the Law came it rose up again from the dead (ἀνέζησεν), and took up arms against me. Aug. (Serm. 153.)

It rose up again: because though a Law had been given to me in Adam, yet that Law was as it were dead and buried by my ignorance. Cp. Luke xv. 24, and Diodor. in Caten. p. 93, and Meyer, and see above, Introduction to this Epistle, p. 187—190.

9. Ἐγὼ δὲ ἔζων—ἀπέθανον] And I was alive without the Law formerly: but, when the Law came, Sin came to life, and I died. Why? because the Law gave me knowledge of sin. And also, because when the Law came and forbad sin, then sin was imputed to me, as wilfully committed against God's command, and I died,—that is, I became subject to death, the wages of sin. Cp. Origen here.

He is speaking here comparatively. He does not mean that the natural man, who lived before the giving of the Mosaic Law, was innocent. No; for then he could not have said that the Heathens were guilty before God, as he has proved them to be in the beginning of the Epistle (i. 18—32). But he means, that the very essence of sin is, that it is a breach of Law; and that where there is no Law there is no sin, and in proportion as the Law is clear, so is sin sinful; and consequently, the state of the natural man, before the Law was given, was a state of life, compared with that condition of death, in which mankind was under the Law.

10. αὕτη] itself, ipsa,—even it which was designed for life, became to me, by my sin, an occasion of death. The editions generally have αὐτη, which is less emphatic.

11. Ἡ γὰρ ἁμαρτία—ἐξηπάτησέ με] For sin, having got a place of attack against me, deceived me through the commandment, and slew me, as it did our first parents by occasion of the commandment to them, Gen. iii. 1. See above on v. 8.

12. ἁγία] See the description of the Law in 1 Tim. i. 8.

The Law is good if it is kept; but, if it is broken it will become an evil thing to him who, by breaking it, has lost the good. And thus sin is made exceeding sinful by occasion of the Law. Origen. See Aug. and Jerome below on v. 13.

13. Τὸ οὖν ἀγαθὸν ἐμοὶ ἐγένετο θάνατος;] Elz. γέγονε. But A, B, C, D, E have ἐγένετο, and so Lachm. and Alford. And this is more consistent with the argument. For the Law is not now Death to him in his regenerate state.

The sense is: Did the Law become Death to me?

No; but Sin, in order that it might be made manifest to be sin, working death in me, even through the Law which is good, and was given by the Author of all good,—it was Death to me. Μοὶ, to me, is emphatic; and is thus placed to show that the Law, good in itself, became evil to me, on account of my sin.

The Law is not Death, but Sin is Death. He had before said, that "Sin without the Law was dead" (v. 8). For, before the Law, Sin was not known to be Sin. Observe then, how fitly he says here, that Sin, in order that it might be made apparent to be sin, worked death in him, even by means of that which was good. He does not say, "in order that it might be sin," because sin existed before the Law, but it was not clearly known to be sin. See Augustine (Serm. 153).

took occasion to slay me, through the commandment) might become exceeding sinful through the commandment.

The Commandment was given in order to show man's moral disease, and not to remove it. It was given in order to tame the pride of which he was guilty in trusting to himself, and in imagining himself to be holy. It was given in order to show his need of a Redeemer, and of Divine Grace, and to make him more desirous of them.

But man rebelled against the Commandment (see above, v. 7), and so sin became exceeding sinful, inasmuch as it was committed wilfully and presumptuously against the declared Will and Word of God.

See Augustine, Serm. 125 and 152.

The following excellent exposition of the Apostle's meaning in this and the preceding verses, is from a contemporary and friend of S. Augustine, S. Jerome;

He first speaks of the Mosaic Law.

"Quomodo Medicina non est caussa mortis, si ostendat venena mortifera, licet his mali homines abutantur ad mortem, et vel se interficiant, vel insidientur inimicis; sic Lex data est, ut peccatorum venena monstret, et hominem malè libertate suâ abutentem, qui prius ferebatur improvidus, et per præcipitia labebatur, freno Legis retineat, et compositis doceat incedere gressibus, ita ut serviamus in novitate spiritûs, et non in vetustate litteræ, id est, vivamus sub præcepto, qui prius in moduñ brutorum animalium dicebamus, Manducemus et bibamus, cras enim moriemur. (1 Cor. xv. 32.)

"Quod si, subintrante Lege (quæ docet quid facere, et prohibet quid non facere debeamus) vitio nostro et incontinentiâ feramur contra scita legalia, videtur Lex caussa esse peccati: quæ, dum prohibet concupiscentiam, quodammodo eam inflammare cognoscitur.

"Sæcularis apud Græcos sententia est, 'Quidquid licet, minus desideratur.' Ergo è contrario, 'quidquid non licet, fomentum accipit desiderii.' Unde et Tullius de parricidarum suppliciis apud Athenienses Solonem scripsisse negat, ne non tam prohibere, quàm commovere videretur.

"Igitur Lex, apud contemtores, et legum præcepta calcantes, videtur esse occasio delictorum: dum prohibendo quod non vult fieri, ligat eos vinculis mandatorum, qui prius absque lege peccantes non tenebantur criminibus."

He then thus speaks of the Natural Law:

"Ista Lex quæ in corde scribitur omnes continet nationes; et nullus hominum est, qui hanc legem nesciat. Unde omnis mundus sub peccato, et universi homines prævaricatores legis sunt: et idcirco justum judicium Dei est, scribentis in corde humani generis, Quod tibi fieri nolueris, alteri ne feceris.

"Quis enim ignoret homicidium, adulterium, furtum, et omnem concupiscentiam esse malum, ex eo, quòd sibi ea nolit fieri? Si enim mala esse nesciret, nequaquam doleret sibi esse illata.

"Per hanc naturalem legem et Cain cognovit peccatum suum, dicens: Major est caussa mea, quàm ut dimittar. Et Adam et Eva cognoverunt peccatum suum, et propterea absconditi sunt sub ligno vitæ. Pharao quoque, antequàm Lex daretur per Moysen, stimulatus lege naturæ, sua crimina confitetur, et dicit, Dominus justus, ego autem et populus meus impii.

"Hanc legem nescit pueritia, ignorat infantia, et peccans absque mandato non tenetur lege peccati. Maledicit patri et matri, et quia necdum accepit legem sapientiæ, mortuum est in eo peccatum."

He then compares the coming of the Mosaic Law to the dawn of Intelligence in Childhood;

"Quum autem mandatum venerit, hoc est, tempus intelligentiæ appetentis bona, et vitantis mala, tunc incipit peccatum reviviscere et ille mori, reusque esse peccati.

"Atque ita fit, ut tempus intelligentiæ, quo Dei mandata cognoscimus ut perveniamus ad vitam, operetur in nobis mortem, si agamus negligentius, et occasio sapientiæ seducat nos atque supplantet, et ducat ad mortem.

"Non quòd intelligentia peccatum sit. Lex enim intelligentiæ sancta et justa et bona est: sed per intelligentiam peccatorum atque virtutum mihi peccatum nascitur, quod priusquàm intelligerem, peccatum esse non noveram. Atque ita factum est, ut quod mihi pro bono datum est, meo vitio mutetur in malum; et, ut hyperbolicè dicam, novoque verbo utar, ad explicandum sensum meum, peccatum, quod, priusquàm haberem intelligentiam, absque peccato erat, per prævaricationem mandati incipiat mihi esse peccantius peccatum."

He thus speaks of St. Paul's use of the word ἐπιθυμία, or "concupiscentia:"

"Quæramus quæ sit ista concupiscentia, de quâ Lex dicit: 'Non concupisces?'

"Alii putant illud esse mandatum, quod in decalogo scriptum est: Non concupisces rem proximi tui. Nos autem per concupiscentiam omnes perturbationes animæ significatas putamus, quibus mœremus et gaudemus, timemus et concupiscimus."

He rightly affirms that St. Paul is speaking throughout this chapter in the name of, and in the person of, Human Nature:

"Et hoc Apostolus, vas electionis, cujus corpus templum erat Spiritûs Sancti, non de se loquitur, sed de eo, qui vult post peccata agere pœnitentiam: et, sub personâ suâ, fragilitatem describit conditionis humanæ; quæ duorum hominum interioris et exterioris pugnantium inter se bella perpetitur. Interior homo consentit, et scriptæ et naturali legi, quòd bona sit, et sancta et justa, et spiritualis." S. Jerome (ad Algasiam, p. 199).

14. ὁ νόμος πνευματικός ἐστιν] the Law is spiritual. He here speaks of the Law as a Rule, but not as a Covenant. See above, v. 6.

— σάρκινος] fleshly, nothing but flesh; in my unregenerate state, without the Spirit of God. So A, B, C, D, E, F, G. A stronger word than σαρκικὸς, the reading of Elz. See 1 Cor. iii. 1. σάρκινος is carneus, σαρκικὸς is carnalis.

15. Ὃ γὰρ κατεργάζομαι οὐ γινώσκω] For that which I perform I know not: that is, under the violence of the sinful affections and lusts of my corrupt nature, I am carried out of myself, namely, out of that which is really myself, my true nature, in which Reason and Conscience hold the sway; and I am become like a man beside himself, or like one in a trance, or in a state of intoxication, who is not conscious of what he does. Cyril, Chrysostom.

— ὃ μισῶ τοῦτο ποιῶ] what I hate, that I do. The natural Conscience, even in heathens, uttered similar declarations, as by Medea, καὶ μανθάνω μὲν οἷα δρᾶν μέλλω κακὰ, θυμὸς δὲ κρείσσων τῶν ἐμῶν βουλευμάτων.

And

"Video meliora proboque, Deteriora sequor." Ovid. Met. vii. 19.

See Wetstein here.

17. νυνὶ δὲ οὐκ ἔτι ἐγὼ] so now it is no longer I that perform it.

Do not therefore imagine that I am condemning my nature, which is God's work, and in which, when rightly understood, Conscience reigns supreme, and keeps the appetites in check, and is itself regulated by God's Law. (See above, ii. 14.) No: it is not I,—it is not that essence in which I am really myself. It is not my spirit—my inner man (v. 22), my αὐτὸς ἐγὼ (v. 25), that does all this. But it is the sin which has entered and reigns in me, that does it, thereby subverting my moral nature, and causing me to revolt and rebel against that natural Law which God gave me for my guide.

Therefore, to vindicate God from the charge of being the Author of Sin which man commits, he says that he delights in the Law of God as to his own inner man, which is his proper self, and ought to sway his actions, and not to allow Satan and Sin to enter in and usurp dominion over him, and that he finds a law in his bodily members, which ought to be kept in control, as plebeian subjects of his moral monarchy; and that the Law in his members mutinies, and involves his moral being in anarchy and rebellion, and takes up arms against the Law of his mind, which ought to reign over them, and even imprisons its lawful Sovereign, and keeps it in the chains of Sin.

O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the Body of this Death? Thanks be to God, I have been delivered by Christ! He has given me the Spirit of Grace, He has pardoned me my old sins, and enables me for the future to obey Him in all sincerity and heartiness of endeavour. Cp. Bp. Taylor on Repentance, viii. 4.

21. Εὑρίσκω ἄρα τὸν νόμον] I find then this Law in me, namely, that when I desire to do good, evil is present with me. There is a conflict therefore between my flesh and my inner man.

22. Συνήδομαι] I delight in the Law of God, in my inner man. Listen to the Apostle showing to you that the Law is good; and yet he could not avoid sin except by the grace of God. For the Law issues prohibitions and commands. But it cannot heal that which does not permit us to obey the Law. But Grace can do this. The Apostle says, I delight in the Law of God, as to my inner man. That is, I acknowledge the evil of that which the Law forbids; and I recognize the good of that which the Law commands. But I perceive a different Law in my members bringing me into captivity to the Law of Sin, which is in my members.

This moral state is the penalty of sin from the inheritance of death; from the condemnation of Adam.

The Law comes and convicts him of sin. Blessed conviction! For now being convicted of sin, he is no longer proud, but cries out for pardon. Feeling that he is in prison, he prays for deliverance. Wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me! Augustine (Serm. 125). See above, v. 20. Cp. Bp. Taylor on Repentance, viii. 4.

23. ἕτερον νόμον] a different law. Cp. Gal. i. 6.

24. ἐκ τοῦ σώματος τοῦ θανάτου] who shall deliver me from the body of this death? from the body as far as it is the seat and instrument of spiritual death. Compare above, vi. 6, τὸ σῶμα τῆς ἁμαρτίας, the body of sin. He calls it also the body of death, as opposed to the body of life, into which he has now been incorporated by Baptism, into the Body of Christ, the Second Adam, Who has taken our Nature, and engrafted us as members in Himself, and gives us His own Body to be our spiritual food and sustenance, and assures us of a glorious Resurrection unto life eternal in our Bodies, transformed into the likeness of His own glorified Body. (Phil. iii. 21.)

25. Εὐχαριστῶ] So Elz., with A, I, K, Syriac and Gothic Versions, and Origen in Catenâ, and Chrys. and Theodoret. B has χάρις, and so Lachm., Tisch., Alf. D, E, F, G have ἡ χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ.

— Ἄρα οὖν αὐτὸς ἐγὼ—ἁμαρτίας] So then I myself serve the Law of God with my mind, but with my flesh I serve the Law of sin. And in proportion as my mind is nobler than my flesh, and is more properly my very self (αὐτὸς ἐγὼ), so am I bound to serve the Law of God rather than that of Sin. And this I am now enabled to do by the grace of Christ, Who has taken my flesh, and has redeemed me from the rigour and curse of the Law, and has procured pardon for my sins, on condition of my faith and repentance, and has incorporated me in Himself. And therefore there is now no condemnation to me, or to any of those who are in Christ Jesus. (viii. 1.)

Ch. VIII. 1. Οὐδὲν ἄρα νῦν κατάκριμα τοῖς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ] There is then no condemnation to those who are engrafted by Baptism in Christ's body, and abide as living members in Him, in Whom dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead (Col. i. 19), and of whose fulness we all receive, and grace for grace (John i. 16). See vi. 3. Here is the cause of our Justification.

There is no condemnation to those who are in Christ Jesus, although the desires of the flesh, to which they do not yield, and the Law in their members war against the law of their mind. Still there is no condemnation to them, because by the Grace given in the laver of Baptism, the guilt with which they were born has been remitted to them. There is now no condemnation to them. There was condemnation formerly. Their Birth brought with it that evil; but their new Birth brought with it this good. For the Law of the Spirit of Life in Christ delivered them from the Law of Death and Sin. Ye have been set free from that Law. Therefore, being now free, fight against it. Take care that you be not again enslaved by it. Hard is the conflict, but the conquest will be glorious. The trial is toilsome, but gladsome will be the triumph. Augustine (Serm. 152).

So far from there being any condemnation (κατάκριμα) to them now, the Apostle goes on to show that, even by means of our flesh, assumed by Christ, God condemned sin (v. 3), which reigned over us by and in our Flesh.

Observe the connexion of κατέκρινεν with κατάκριμα.

After these words, Elz. adds μὴ κατὰ σάρκα περιπατοῦσιν ἀλλὰ κατὰ πνεῦμα, which are not authorized by the majority of MSS., and seem to be a gloss imported from v. 4.

2. Ὁ γὰρ νόμος] For the gracious, vivifying, enabling Law of the Spirit of Life in Christ, set me free from the rigorous, literal, and condemnatory Law, which made Sin to be more manifestly sinful (vii. 8), and which provided no means of grace to keep the Law, nor of pardon for breaking it, but brought the curse of death on those who broke it.

3. Τὸ γὰρ ἀδύνατον τοῦ νόμου] For what the Law had not ability to do, not by reason of any imperfection in itself, for it is good, just, and holy (vii. 12), but on account of its weakness, consequent on our Flesh, that God did, by sending His own Son in the reality of human flesh, and in the likeness of sinful flesh; and so delivered me by that very thing, my flesh, which by its corruption was my bane.

It was God's will to redeem the flesh of sin by means of a like substance; that is, by a fleshly substance, bearing a resemblance to sinful flesh, but not being itself sinful. Herein was the Power of God, to effect the salvation of the Flesh by means of the substance of the Flesh. Tertullian (c. Marcion. v. 14).

By taking Flesh, Christ conquered the Sin of the Flesh. By suffering Death He overcame Death. Augustine (Serm. 152).

God sent His Son in the likeness of sinful Flesh, but not in sinful Flesh. All other Flesh of Man is sinful Flesh. The flesh of Christ alone is sinless. Augustine.

A strong testimony against the novel doctrine of the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin. The original words of this and other similar authorities may be seen quoted in a Sermon by the Editor, on that subject, p. 11, 12.

Christ's flesh was created in the ὁμοίωμα, or likeness of sinful flesh, in that it was subject to the weaknesses of humanity consequent on Sin (as Aug. says, Serm. 152). But out of this weakness we were made strong. Because it was by reason of this weakness that He was able to die; and by His Death we live for evermore.

— περὶ ἁμαρτίας] for sin, on account of sin, which was the reason of Christ's mission from the Father. Heb. x. 6. 18. "Propter peccatum," Vulg. in MS. Amiatin.

St. Paul's doctrine here has been expounded in clear and strong language by the Author of Paradise Lost, speaking of the Contest between the Son of God Incarnate and our ghostly Enemy, in the following Address of Michael to Adam:

"To whom thus Michael. Dream not of their fight
As of a duel, or the local wounds
Of head or heel: Not therefore joins the Son
Manhood to Godhead, with more strength to foil
Thy enemy, nor so is overcome
Satan, whose fall from Heaven a deadlier bruise
Disabled, not to give thee thy death's wound
Which He, Who comes thy Saviour, shall secure,
Not by destroying Satan, but his works
In thee and in thy seed. Nor can this be,
But by fulfilling that which thou dost want,
Obedience to the Law of God, imposed,
On penalty of death; and suffering death;
The penalty to thy transgression due,
And due to theirs which out of thine will grow.
So only can high Justice rest appaid.
The Law of God exact He shall fulfil,
Both by obedience and by love, though love
Alone fulfil the law; thy punishment
He shall endure, by coming in the flesh
To a reproachful life; and cursed death;
Proclaiming life to all who shall believe
In His Redemption; and that His Obedience,
Imputed, becomes theirs by Faith; His merits
To save them, not their own, though legal, works.
For this He shall live hated, be blasphemed,
Seized on by force, judged, and to death condemned
A shameful and accursed, nailed to the cross
By His own Nation; slain for bringing life:
But to the cross He nails thy enemies,
The Law that is against thee, and the sins
Of all mankind; with Him there crucified,
Never to hurt them more, who rightly trust
In this His satisfaction; So He dies;
But soon revives; Death over Him no power
Shall long usurp; ere the third dawning light
Return, the stars of morn shall see Him rise
Out of His grave, fresh as the dawning light;
Thy ransom paid, which man from death redeems,
His death for man, as many as offered life
Neglect not, and the benefit embrace
By Faith not void of works."

(Paradise Lost, book xii. v. 385.)

— κατέκρινε τὴν ἁμαρτίαν ἐν τῇ σαρκί] He condemned Sin, in the flesh, that is, in and by the flesh He condemned Sin.

Sin had tyrannized over us (ἐν σαρκί) in our flesh as the seat of its empire; and by our flesh, as its instrument and weapon. But God used our flesh as an instrument for our deliverance, and for the condemnation of Sin, and for the establishment of His own empire in us. And how? By the Incarnation of His own Son. By sending His own Son to take our flesh, and to dwell in it; and to be our Emmanuel, God with us, "God manifest in the flesh."

He condemned Sin,—

(1) By the sinless obedience of Christ, God in our flesh; a visible witness of the sinfulness of Sin, and pronouncing Judgment against it.

(2) By Christ's sacrifice of His own flesh on the cross, condemning Sin, as exceeding sinful, in that it required no less an expiation than the Death of the Son of God.

(3) Further, He condemned Sin as a culprit, by means of our Flesh, in and by which God-Christ triumphed over Sin, and destroyed Sin, and condemned Sin to Death, even by His own Death. (Heb. ii. 14.)

Thus God used the flesh, by which, and in which, Sin had reigned over us, as an instrument for the condemnation and destruction of Sin. Cp. below on Col. ii. 15.

4. ἵνα τὸ δικαίωμα] in order that the righteous requirement of the Law might be fulfilled.

Christ became incarnate, not to destroy the Moral Law as a right rule (δικαίωμα) of practice, but in order to fulfil it, and to enable us by His grace to fulfil it.

On the word δικαίωμα, see above, i. 32; ii. 26. Some Expositors render δικ. τ. ν. that which the Law itself stipulated for, and required. It rather appears to mean that which God enacted as just, and what He required by the Law delivered by Him.

Do not therefore imagine (says the Apostle to the Jews) that I am disparaging the Law. On the contrary, I am declaring to you the true and the only way of fulfilling it. Christ came to take away the curse, but He came also to enable us to fulfil the command of the Law.

— τοῖς μὴ κ. σ. περιπατοῦσι] to those who do not walk according to the flesh. The μὴ indicates that the not walking after the flesh, but the Spirit, is the fulfilling of the Law.

6. τὸ φρόνημα τῆς σαρκός] the mind of the flesh.

7. οὐδὲ γὰρ δύναται] for it has not even the ability to obey.

8. οἱ δὲ—οὐ δύνανται] and they which are after the flesh, have not the ability (which comes only by grace) to please God.

On these two verses (7 and 8) a seasonable caution is given by S. Augustine (Serm. 155, who cannot be charged with any leanings to Pelagianism), lest while we rejoice in, and are thankful for the blessings of Grace, we fall into Manichæanism, and calumniate the Law, or into the no less dangerous error of some in modern times, who confound Human Nature (which is God's work) with its corruptions, which are due to Satan's wiles and to man's sins.

The constitution of Human Nature, the Moral Law, and Divine Grace, are all of them gifts of God: and all and each of them will be revered by those who love Him in all His works.

The caution above mentioned is as follows:

What does the Apostle mean by saying, "Neither can it be subject to God?" He does not mean that Man cannot, that the soul cannot, nor even that the flesh cannot, being, and so far as it is, a creature of God. But St. Paul means that the lust of the flesh cannot be subject to God. Corruption cannot,—not Nature. Therefore God provides a remedy that the corruption of man may be removed, and his Nature be healed. The Saviour has come to Human Nature. He finds it sorely diseased: therefore a Great Physician is come.

Observe what the Apostle adds. They who are in the flesh cannot please God. Who are they? They who trust in the flesh; they who follow the lusts of the flesh; they who live in them; they who place their happiness in them; these are they of whom the Apostle is speaking. They cannot please God. He does not mean that they who are in the body cannot please God in this life. What! did not the holy Patriarchs please Him? Did not the holy Prophets please Him? Did not the holy Martyrs please Him, who suffered in the body, and confessed Christ, and endured severe bodily pain for His sake? They carried the flesh, but were not carried by it. So it is then; Not they who live in this world, but they who live a life of carnal pleasure in this world, they cannot please God. Augustine.

10. τὸ μὲν σῶμα νεκρόν] your body is still dead, subject to death; it is still as it were a corpse on account of sin original and actual (see next verse), but your spirit is not dead. No; it is even ζωὴ—Life—a living principle through righteousness, namely, through the perfect righteousness of Him Who is "the Lord our Righteousness," Who took our Nature, and Who has reconciled and united you in that nature to God, and Who has ascended in that nature to heaven, and has sent down the Holy Spirit upon you to make your bodies His Temples, and in Whom ye are incorporated, and live by Faith in Him; so that you are accounted righteous through His Righteousness, and receive new powers of Righteousness by His sanctifying grace.

— νεκρόν] And not only so, but although your body is subject to death, for sin, yet if the Divine Spirit which has been given you continue to dwell in you, He Who raised Christ from the dead (ἐκ νεκρῶν) will vivify your mortal body, through His Spirit dwelling in the mortal tenement as a ναὸς or temple of your body, where it abides. Cp. 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17; vi. 19. 2 Cor. vi. 16.

11. διὰ τὸ—ἐν ὑμῖν] The reading of this passage was disputed by the Macedonian heretics, who denied the Divinity and Personality of the Holy Ghost. They affirmed that the true reading here is διὰ τὸ ἐνοικοῦν αὐτοῦ Πνεῦμα, and that it is to be translated, On account of His Spirit which dwelleth in you.

It was replied by their opponents, that another reading, διὰ τοῦ ἐνοικοῦντος αὐτοῦ Πνεύματος, i. e. 'by the agency of His Spirit which dwelleth in you,' is found in all the earliest MSS. ἐν ὅλοις ἀρχαίοις ἀντιγράφοις. See Maxim. Dial. c. Macedon. in Athanasius, ii. pp. 228. 234, and so this text is cited by Clemens Alex. (Strom. iii. p. 334), Methodius apud Epiphan. Hær. lxiv. Basil c. Eunomium, iii. p. 267, Ambrose, Athanasius (ad Serapion. i. 179), Augustine, and by Chrys., 1 Cor. xv. 45, who thence asserts, that it is the work of the Holy Spirit to quicken what is dead.

St. Paul himself also may perhaps be thought to confirm the latter reading by a parallel passage in 1 Cor. vi. 14, ὁ δὲ Θεὸς καὶ τὸν Κύριον ἤγειρε, καὶ ἡμᾶς ἐξεγερεῖ διὰ τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ.

But the preponderance of extant MSS. here seems rather to be in favour of διὰ τὸ ἐνοικοῦν, which is in B (as stated by Tregelles and in Mai's edition) and in D, E, F, G, J, K. See Tisch., Fritz., and Alford.

The Editors are divided in their conclusions. Griesb., Scholz., Tholuck, Meyer, Fritzsche, Alford, Philippi, are for the accusative, διὰ τὸ ἐνοικοῦν. Elz., Lachm., Tisch., De Wette, prefer the genitive, διὰ τοῦ ἐνοικοῦντος. But if διὰ τὸ ἐνοικοῦν is the true reading—as seems, on the whole, to be most probable,—yet the sense might still be, By means of the Holy Ghost. See John vi. 57, ζῶ διὰ τὸν πατέρα, καὶ ὁ τρώγων με ζήσεται δι' ἐμέ. Cp. Rev. xii. 11, ἐνίκησαν διὰ τὸ αἷμα, and Winer, p. 356.

Bp. Pearson (on the Creed, Art. xi.) thus expounds the words: "The Saints of God are endued with the Spirit of Christ, and thereby their bodies become Temples of the Holy Ghost. Now as the promise of the Spirit was upon the Resurrection of Christ, so the gift and possession of the Spirit is an assurance of the Resurrection of a Christian."

There is also another consideration in favour of the translation, 'by means of His Spirit.' An analogy is exhibited in Scripture between our first Resurrection in Baptism to a life of grace, and our second Resurrection hereafter to a life of glory. See on John v. 25—28. And as the former of these two Resurrections is due to the in-working of the Holy Ghost, so also is the latter.

In like manner, the first birth of Christ our Head from the womb of the Virgin was due to the operation of the Holy Ghost, so likewise His Second Birth,—namely, from the Grave, by which He became the first-born from the dead, the first-begotten from the dead,—is ascribed to the energy of the same Spirit. See above on i. 4.

It seems probable that the Apostle is here speaking of the quickening virtue of the Holy Spirit, Who dwells in Christ's members, and makes their bodies to be His temple, and vivifies them by His power dwelling in them, and Who is described in Holy Scripture as the Giver of life. See John vi. 63. 2 Cor. iii. 6.

12—17.] For an exposition of these verses, see Aug. Serm. 156.

14. υἱοί εἰσι Θεοῦ] So B, F, G.—Elz. has εἰσιν υἱοὶ Θεοῦ.

15. Οὐ γὰρ ἐλάβετε] Ye received not (at your baptismal incorporation in Christ; cp. vi. 17) the spirit of bondage to bring you back—or, that you should turn back—to the slavish fear of a spiritual Egypt, but you received the Spirit of adoption; and we may be permitted to add, with reverence, of you likewise was true what God said of the literal Israel, and of Christ as the Head of the spiritual Israel,—out of Egypt have I called My Son. (Hos. xi. 1; cp. Matt. ii. 15.) You have left behind you your foes drowned in the Red Sea of your Baptism in Christ's blood, and you are now on your march, like your fathers of old, to your paternal inheritance and everlasting rest in heaven.

— Ἀββᾶ, ὁ Πατήρ] Abba, Father. This is the cry of the heart, which, though the mouth be shut, sounds to the ear of God; for God is the hearer of the heart. Aug. (Serm. 156), Tertullian.

(1) He uses the Chaldee word אַבָּא from the Hebr. אָב, father, to remind them of their origin from God, by Ab-raham, and of the deliverance of their race, God's Israel, His First-born (Jer. xxxi. 9), and so symbolizing Christ Himself (see on Matt. ii. 14); those deliverances of the literal Israel from Egypt and Babylon being typical of redemption by Christ.

(2) He adds the Greek ὁ Πατὴρ to show, that the Gentiles as well as Jews are, by adoption in Christ, the Eternal First-born,—made equally children of Ab-raham and of God, and co-heirs with Christ (v. 17). "Quare voluit utrumque, Abba et Πατὴρ ponere? Quin videbat lapidem angularem quem reprobaverunt ædificantes, et factus est in caput anguli, sic dictum, quia recepit utrumque parietem (i. e. Judæos et Gentes) de diverso venientem." Augustine (Serm. 157).

The Spirit of adoption is said to cry not only Abba in the hearts of the Jews, but also Πατὴρ in the hearts of the Gentiles. Therefore our Saviour would not have His own name to be entirely Hebrew or entirely Greek, but the one Hebrew, Jesus, the other Greek, Christ: to show that He is "our Peace, Who of two hath made one." (Eph. ii. 14. 21.) Bp. Andrewes (v. p. 468).

The same combination of the Hebrew Abba with the Greek Πατὴρ occurs in our Lord's prayer in His Agony, when He was bearing the load, and was about to take away the guilt, of the sins of both Jew and Gentile. Mark xiv. 36. See note there, and on Gal. iv. 6.

16. Πνεῦμα συμμαρτυρεῖ] the Holy Spirit witnesseth, together with our spirit, by the fruits of the Spirit, i. e. goodness, righteousness, truth, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, faith, meekness, temperance (Eph. v. 9. Gal. v. 22, 23), which by His aid we bring forth in our lives. The Spirit thus testifies to us that we are sons of God by adoption, and encourages us to call Him our Father.

Let every one look into his own heart and see whether he says "Abba, Father," from the lowest depths of his soul, and with fervent charity, and he will see whether he has the witness of the Spirit. Augustine (Serm. 156).

18. Λογίζομαι] I reckon. I have added up the items of suffering on the one side of the account, and the grace and glory on the other; and having made the calculation I now strike the balance, and declare the result. On St. Paul's peculiar qualification for making this estimate, see on 2 Cor. xii. 4. These words are quoted by the Churches of Lyons and Vienne, relating the sufferings of their martyrs in the second century. Euseb. v. 1.

St. Paul here answers an objection of the Jews, who asked, If you Christians are the "children of God," how is it that you are exposed to such severe afflictions in this world?

We Israelites (they argued) are God's people, and our obedience to Him has always been attended with worldly blessings and temporal prosperity. And He assured us that this would be the evidence of His approval and of His favour.

So it would also be with you, if you were, as you profess to be, the chosen people, and favoured children of God.

St. Paul shows (in reply to such allegations as these),

(1) That evil, physical and moral, came into the world by the first Adam (v. 20).

(2) That the light sufferings of Christians lead them to eternal glory, in and through Christ.

(3) That the whole Creation was originally created very good, and was afterwards subjected to evil, in and by the first Adam (Gen. iii. 17), and now waits and groans for the liberation to be accomplished in and by the second Adam, Christ.

(4) That thus the whole Creation is a witness to the need of Redemption, and to the blessedness of that Redemption which is in Christ.

19. τὴν ἀποκάλυψιν] the manifestation: to be explained by ἀποκαλυφθῆναι in the preceding verse. Their full manifestation as sons; the glorious spring-time, in which, after the wintry bareness of earth, all their beauty will be revealed and burst forth, like foliage, in full glory; or as the sun comes forth in its splendour, after having been veiled for a while by clouds. That manifestation will be when the Judge will say, "Come ye blessed of my Father," Who is your Father also. (Matt. xxv. 34.) Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun, in the kingdom of their Father. (Matt. xiii. 43)

20. ἡ κτίσις] the creation was made subject to vanity (not of its own choice, or will, but) by reason of Him Who made it subject,—in hope, that even the creation itself shall be set free from the bondage of corruption (in which it now groans) into the liberty of the glory of the children of God.

By the Fall of Man, the whole creation has been reduced from the high estate of perfect goodness in which it was formed at the beginning (Gen. i. 4. 10. 12. 18. 21. 25. 31), and it has been subjected to vanity in consequence of the Fall of Man, the lord of the creatures.

After the Fall God said to Adam, "Cursed is the ground for thy sake" (i. e. on account of thy sin), "in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground, for out of it thou wast taken; for dust thou art and to dust thou shalt return." Gen. iii. 17—19.

Thus, by the sin of the first Adam, not only did death come into the world, but the whole creation, which had been made "very good" by God, and had been blessed by Him, was marred, and made subject to vanity and to a curse. Weeds and thorns, briars and thistles, deform its beauty; and the earth is riven by earthquakes and volcanoes, and desolated by floods, and is reserved for dissolution by fire. (2 Pet. iii. 10.)

But it has been so subjected involuntarily, and by no fault of its own; and it has been subjected in a hope, that as it sympathizes with man in his shameful bondage in Adam, so will it also share in his glorious deliverance in Christ.

— ματαιότητι] הֶבֶל (hebel), vanity, weakness; symbolized by the first death after the Fall—that of Abel, whose name is ματαιότης (Gen. iv. 2—10), and was a proper expression of the ματαιότης, or vanity, to which man was reduced by the Fall, and to which the creation was reduced with him its lord and master. Hence the Psalmist says, הֶבֶל אָדָם (col Abel col Adam); omnis Adam (i. e. man) totus Abel (i. e. vanity); "every man is altogether vanity." (Ps. xxxix. 6; cp. Ps. cxliv. 4.)

But this name Abel, ματαιότης, or vanity, contained also a promise of revival and resurrection.

The first blood shed on the earth being the blood of him whose sacrifice was accepted by God (Gen. iv. 4. Heb. xi. 4), and being shed by his brother Cain (1 John iii. 12), whose sacrifice was not accepted (Gen. iv. 5), preached of a Resurrection, and Judgment to come. And the first blood shed in the world—that of "the righteous Abel" (as Christ calls him, Matt. xxiii. 35), the feeder of sheep—was typical of the blood of the Good Shepherd, laying down His life for His sheep, which speaks better things than even that of Abel, the world's Proto-Martyr (Matt. xxiii. 35), prefigured Him Who is ὁ Μάρτυς ὁ πιστὸς καὶ ἀληθινὸς (Rev. i. 5; ii 13; iii. 14), Jesus Christ, in Whom all are made alive, and Who will change the vile bodies of His servants so as to be made like unto His glorious body (Phil. iii. 21) in the blessed day of "the redemption of the body," when they will be "delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God."

— διὰ τὸν ὑποτάξαντα] by reason of Him Who subjected the creation to vanity: on account of the Fall of Man, which brought death into the world, and covered the earth with the thorns and thistles of the curse consequent upon the Fall (Gen. iii. 17, 18; cp. Mede's Works, p. 230); and the creation was subjected in hope of a glorious restoration, and of the coming of that kingdom which shall not perish. The κτίσις of God is symbolized by Abel in its ματαιότης, and also in its hopes. See preceding note, and 2 Pet. iii. 10—13, and cp. Bp. Andrewes, v. 394.

The children of God are symbolized by Abel, as those of the Evil One are by Cain, 1 John iii. 12. "Adam utriusque generis pater, id est, et cujus series ad terrenam, et cujus series ad cœlestem, pertinet civitatem." Aug. (de Civ. Dei, xv. 17).

21. τοῦ Θεοῦ] Not of Adam only, but of Him Who is the Father of Adam, God. Luke iii. 38.

22. πᾶσα ἡ κτίσις—συνωδίνει] the whole creation (πᾶσα ἡ κτίσις, Mark xvi. 15. Col. i. 23) groans together universally, as with one heart, moved by the same sorrow and desire, and yearns and longs for a better state. The whole Creation is as it were in the throes of parturition, even from the Fall to the end of the world. These ὠδῖνες will become still more intense, in the troubles physical, civil, and ecclesiastical, the earthquakes, famines, and wars of the Latter Days, as Christ declares, Matt. xxiv. 8. Mark xiii. 8. He speaks of them as ἀρχαὶ ὠδίνων (Mark xiii. 9), as preparatory to the terrible crisis of the Great Day, which is compared by St. Paul to the pangs of childbirth. (1 Thess. v. 3.) Then the new creation will be born. The Abel of this world will be delivered from its ματαιότης, and rise to eternal glory through the Birth-pangs of death, to the Palingenesia, or New Birth of a glorious Immortality. Cp. on Matt. xix. 28. Acts ii. 24.

23. οὐ μόνον δὲ] Not only does the creation crave for emancipation, but we ourselves also yearn for the adoption—the redemption of our bodies from corruption.

Under the words "the whole creation," the Apostle may perhaps include the unregenerate heathen, who, weary of their wanderings, and unsatisfied with the pleasures of earth, panted and yearned for something that they could not find. See Alex. Knox, Remains, i. 6—18.

So Christ is the ἀπαρχὴ τῶν κεκοιμημένων (1 Cor. xv. 20. 23), the Wave-sheaf which presignified and sanctified the Universal Harvest of the Resurrection.

— ἡμεῖς] So Elz. and Alf. B omits ἡμεῖς, and so Tisch., D, F, G transfer it to before the first αὐτοὶ, and A, C place it before καὶ, and so Lachmann.

— τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν τοῦ σώματος] the redemption of our body from its present bondage of corruption. See on 2 Cor. v. 2.

24. ἐσώθημεν] we were saved, that is, as far as God's design and desire are concerned. He wills us to be saved, and has done all that is requisite for our salvation. It remains only that we should do our part. See below, vv. 28, 29, and Acts ii. 47. The three Christian graces, Faith, Hope, and Charity, wait on the new birth of the Christian Soul, and therefore the Church prays at Baptism that "being stedfast in faith, joyful through hope, and rooted in charity, it may so pass the waves of this troublesome world, that finally it may come to the land of everlasting life."

26. Ὡσαύτως δὲ καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα] In like manner the Spirit also. Not only does Nature bear witness to the need of a Redeemer, not only does all Creation, even from the Fall of Man, yearn for Redemption, and so testify to the reasonableness of our hopes, but the Spirit also prays for the glorious consummation which we desire.

— τῇ ἀσθενείᾳ] So A, B, C, D. Elz. ταῖς ἀσθενείαις.

— ὑπερεντυγχάνει] intercedes for us with God.

The Spirit of God, Who knoweth the secrets of the counsel of God, will make that prayer for us which shall be both for our good, and also according to God's will (Bp. Andrewes, v. 387), who, however, expresses an opinion that it "cannot be verified that the Holy Spirit, which is God, either prayeth or groaneth," and says that the Apostle's meaning is, "teaches and enables us to pray."

This is the exposition of some of the Fathers, as Origen here, Ambrose, Ep. 23, Aug. Ep. 121, Greg. Moral. ii. 22, "de orando Deo." Cp. Matt. x. 20, where the Holy Spirit is said to speak, because He teaches the Apostles to do so. See A Lapide.

But others of the Ancients explain it of an intercessory work performed by the Holy Spirit Himself, i. e. "de postulationibus Spiritûs Sancti in consistorio Sacro Sanctæ Trinitatis, ubi desideria nostra, quasi Paracletus noster exponit." See Thom. Aquin. 3, p. 9. 21, a. 4. A Lapide. And this meaning is adopted by Bp. Pearson (on the Creed, Art. viii. p. 471. 499, and notes), who says, "from which intercession especially, I conceive, He hath the name of Paraclete given Him by Christ." (John xiv. 16. 26; xv. 26; xvi. 7.)

After ὑπερεντυγχάνει, Elz. adds ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, not in A, B, D, F, G.

— ἀλαλήτοις] "inenarrabilibus," not to be expressed by human language, but inwardly felt by the Spirit; and God, Who sanctifies the heart, knows what their meaning is.

28. Οἴδαμεν δέ] A new argument. Though you Jews may appeal to our sufferings as arguments that we are not God's people and children, yet we know that all things work together for good to them who love Him, and are "conformed to the image of His Son"—Who was given up by Him, to suffer for us (v. 29—32).

— τοῖς ἀγαπῶσι τὸν Θεόν] to them that love God. Thus at the beginning of his argument on this subject, St. Paul bids us to judge of our Predestination from the practical evidence of our lives shown by works of love to God.

If we see there the fruits of love, then we may feel a comfortable assurance of God's love to us, for it is He Who gives us grace to love Him. And we may also see a proof of His love to us in the fact that He has called us into His Church; and we may cherish a good hope that if we abide in His love, and continue faithful members of His Church, all things will work together for our good. He had already asserted man's free will, and consequent responsibility; and had affirmed that God gives Grace in order to help man's will. "We are debtors not to the flesh, to live after the flesh, for, if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die, but if by the Spirit, ye mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live; For as many as are led by the Spirit of God (that is, as follow and comply with His godly motions) are sons of God" (vv. 12—14).

— τοῖς κατὰ πρόθεσιν κλητοῖς οὖσιν] to those who are called according to His purpose, not according to works done or foreseen in them, but according to His eternal counsel in Christ (see Eph. i. 5. 11; iii. 11; 2 Tim. i. 9), and who are made members of His ἐκκλησία or Society of the Called.

This word κλητοὶ, called, had been already applied by St. Paul to all the members of the Visible Church at Rome (i. 6, 7). Similarly he applies it to all the members of the Church at Corinth (1 Cor. i. 2), in which were divisions (1 Cor. xi. 18, 19) and even heresies (1 Cor. xv. 12).

St. Paul having said that to them that love God all things work together for good, namely, to them who are called by Him into His Church according to His purpose, now adds, Because those whom He foreknew He also preordained to be conformed to the image of His Son, so that He may be the Firstborn among many brethren: and whom He (secretly) foreordained these He also (visibly) called, and whom He called He also justified, and whom He justified, He also glorified.

On this and the following paragraphs, see above, Introduction to the Epistle, p. 194—197.

29. ὅτι] because.

St. Paul now goes on to adduce proofs, that all things work together for good to them that love God.

These proofs are found in the facts, that God has shown His love to them by a visible call of them, and by a visible act of Justification (in their Baptism), exhibiting and declaring (what would otherwise have been secret) that He had foreknown them from eternity.

Προώρισε συμμόρφους is equivalent literally to He foreordained for partakers in the form, or, to be conformed to the likeness of. See Phil. iii. 21. Matt. Gr. Gr. § 420. Cp. i. 4, ὁρισθέντος υἱοῦ Θεοῦ, and Eph. i. 5, and on the genitive after συμμόρφους, Bernhardy, Syntax, p. 171, Kühner, ii. p. 172.

St. Paul's meaning, therefore, here is: God hath not only predestinated them from eternity, to everlasting life, but, inasmuch as that predestination is secret, and could not therefore give any assurance to them, He has also discovered to them His eternal design and desire for their salvation, by an actual call of them into a visible Society, named the Church, and has incorporated them therein by an outward act, in Baptism, as members of the body of Christ.

Thus He has openly displayed His eternal love toward them in Christ, and has given them a blessed hope and assurance of salvation, if they do their part, as He has done His, and if they abide, and bear fruit, in the body of Christ, in which He has engrafted them.

b ch. 9. 24. 1 Cor. 1. 24. 1 Pet. 2. 9.

30 [b] οὓς δὲ προώρισε, τούτους καὶ ἐκάλεσε· καὶ οὓς ἐκάλεσε, τούτους καὶ ἐδικαίωσεν· οὓς δὲ ἐδικαίωσε, τούτους καὶ ἐδόξασε.

30. οὓς προέγνω—οὓς δὲ προώρισε—ἐδόξασε] (1) Before we inquire into the meaning of this text, we must consider the design of the Apostle in writing this Epistle.

His purpose was, to prove to the Jews that, though they were God's chosen people for a time, yet that God had chosen an Universal Church from Eternity (see Eph. i. 11; iii. 11) to be His people in Christ; that He is the Seed promised to Abraham, that in Him all Nations are blessed; that Blessedness cometh by Faith on the Uncircumcision as well as on the Circumcision (iv. 10); that both Jews and Gentiles are guilty before God; that all have sinned (iii. 23); that all need a Redeemer; that a Redeemer has been provided for all in Christ; that God is the God of the Gentiles as well as the Jews (iii. 29); that there is no difference (iii. 22) between them; that in raising Christ, the Head of every man, from the dead, and in setting Him at His own Right hand, He has given to all men a pledge and earnest of glory; that in Christ, honour and peace is assured to every man that worketh good (ii. 10); and that God's primary will and desire is that all men should be saved (1 Tim. ii. 4).

The best explanation of the word foreknew, as used here, is to be found in the Apostle's own use of the same word, in a following chapter of this same Epistle, "Has God rejected His own People Whom He foreknew?" (ὃν προέγνω.)

As the Apostle applies the word there to the entire Ancient Church, that of the Jews, God's chosen People, so he here applies the same word to the whole Universal Church, who are now God's chosen People, in Christ.

Indeed, the Apostle's purpose is here to teach the Jews, that they may not presume upon being God's People, on the ground of His foreknowledge, unless they obey His call to them in Christ; and that all are God's people who imitate the faith of Abraham, and accept the Gospel of Christ; and also to cheer the Gentiles by the assurance that they who were formerly not a people may be God's People by becoming, and by continuing to be, living and faithful members of the Universal Church of Christ.

(2) It must be borne in mind, that Holy Scripture, in order to produce more assurance in us, often describes things as done which God (Who is immutable and Almighty) desires should be done.

Accordingly all members of the Visible Church are called "Saints," because God desires and designs them so to be: and the whole Visible Church is called Holy, because such she is in His will and deed. Similarly Christ is called the Saviour of the world (John iv. 42), and God is said to be the Saviour of all men (1 Tim. iv. 10), because He desires all to be saved (1 Tim. ii. 4), and has done all that could be expected on His part, in order that all should be saved.

Hence St. Paul has already spoken in this chapter of our salvation as a thing done, saying, that we were saved (v. 24), i. e. in God's will and on His part. See also Eph. ii. 5. 2 Tim. i. 9.

In the Apostolical writings (says Dr. Barrow, iii. 369) the title of σωζόμενοι and σεσωσμένοι, with others equivalent, viz. justified, sanctified, regenerated, quickened, are attributed to all the visibly faithful indifferently.

(3) St. Paul declares in this Epistle God's gracious design and desire, and also (as far as He is concerned) what has been, and is, His merciful act and deed to all mankind, adopted by Him in Christ, His own Son, Who has taken the nature of all, and has commanded that His Gospel should be preached to all, and that all should be baptized into His Body, and who are permitted to cry Abba, Father, and yearn for restoration; and for whom the Holy Spirit pleads (v. 26).

We may therefore confidently say, on the authority of God's holy Word, that God predestinates every man to eternal salvation in Christ. This is His primary design and desire. This, as far as He is concerned, is also His act and deed.

That this primary desire, and universal predestination, will not take effect in all cases, is not due to any failing on His side, but on ours.

In His Will all are called. Christ Himself assures us of this. It is not the will of your Father which is in Heaven that one of these little ones should perish (Matt. xviii. 14). He has invited all, by the universal commission, Go ye into all the world. Baptize all nations. Preach the Gospel to the whole creation. He has made it our duty to evangelize all (Matt. xxviii. 19. Mark xvi. 15). God is not willing that any should perish (2 Pet. iii. 9), but will have all men to be saved (1 Tim. ii. 4). He shut up all under sin in order that He might have mercy upon all (Rom. xi. 32). Redemption in Christ is as universal as Sin and Misery are in Adam. As in Adam all die, even so in Christ all are made alive (see Rom. v. 14—18. 1 Cor. xv. 22). God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ (1 Thess. v. 9). God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself (2 Cor. v. 19. Col. i. 20). God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life (John iii. 16). He is the Saviour of the world, He is the propitiation not only for our sins, but for the sins of the whole world (1 John ii. 2). He gave Himself a ransom for all men (Rom. xi. 32). He died for all (2 Cor. v. 14, 15). As St. Paul declares in this Epistle, Every one who believes on Him will be saved; for the same God is Lord of all, and is rich in mercy to all who call upon Him; for every one who calls on the name of the Lord shall be saved (Rom. x. 12, 13). He tasted death for every man (Heb. ii. 9, 10). And therefore St. Paul teaches that it is possible by bad example to destroy souls for which Christ died (1 Cor. viii. 2. Rom. xiv. 15), and that men may pollute the blood of Christ, by which they were sanctified (Heb. x. 29); and St. Peter says that by heresies men may deny the Lord that bought them (2 Pet. ii. 1), which could not be true, if Christ had not died for all, even for those who would not be saved by His Death. "Incarnatio Dei mysterium est universæ salus Creaturæ." Ambrose (de Paradiso, 8).

Hence St. Paul, in other places, speaks of salvation as a thing done; because as far as God is concerned it is done. The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared unto all men (Titus ii. 11), and according to His mercy He saved us (Titus iii. 5), by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost; and He hath saved us and called us with a holy calling (2 Tim. i. 9).

This certainty of salvation, as a thing already done on God's part, and the consequent assurance to us that He will never fail to continue to do all that is requisite on His side for the salvation of every believer, is strongly expressed by St. Paul in this present passage, by his use of the past tenses, He justified, He glorified.

Let us remember also that St. Paul is inspired by God. He speaks in God's name, and (if we may so say) from His point of view.

(4) In order also to guard against any narrow interpretations of this particular passage, St. Paul expressly declares here that God spared not His own Son, but gave Him up to death for us all (v. 32).

(5) The Apostle is here consoling and cheering the Roman Christians, especially the Jewish Christians, with the glorious offers of the Gospel.

But it would have been no encouragement to them to tell them that God had only called an unknown few among them.

It was indeed gracious intelligence, that God had loved all believers from eternity, in Christ, that He calls them all, justifies them all, offers the glory of heaven to all.

(6) It would be inconsistent with, and in contradiction to the whole scope of the Apostle in this Epistle, to suppose that God limits His offers to a few. The main drift of St. Paul in the present Epistle, is to eradicate such a notion from the mind of the Jews, who imagined that God's favours were confined to themselves; and to show the universality of God's love in Christ. He has proved that all are under sin, and that all, both Jews and Gentiles, need a Saviour, and that a Saviour has died for all, Who is no other than God's own Son, Who has taken the nature of all.

(7) If the word προώρισε, He predestinated, or foreordained, is to be limited (as some allege) to an unknown few among them, so must also the word ἐκάλεσε, He called.

But St. Paul begins this Epistle by addressing them all as called (i. 1). Therefore all the faithful are supposed by him to be predestinated by God to be conformed to His Son's image. And St. Paul applies the same word 'called' in another place to all Christians. See Eph. i. 5. 11, which affords a clear interpretation of this passage. And he had said to the Corinthians (i. 21—24), to whom he was declaring the freeness and fulness of grace in Christ, that "it pleased God to save them that believe" in Christ crucified, Who is the power of God and the wisdom of God unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks.

S. Ignatius confirms this sense remarkably, by applying the word προωρισμένη (predestinated) to the whole Church of Ephesus, which he calls a Church predestinated from eternity,

31 [c] Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν πρὸς ταῦτα; εἰ ὁ Θεὸς ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, τίς καθ' ἡμῶν; 32 [d] Ὃς γε τοῦ ἰδίου Υἱοῦ οὐκ ἐφείσατο, ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν πάντων παρέδωκεν αὐτὸν, πῶς οὐχὶ καὶ σὺν αὐτῷ τὰ πάντα ἡμῖν χαρίσεται;

c Ps. 118. 6. 2 Kings 6. 16.
d Isa. 53. 5, 7. John 3. 16. ch. 4. 25. & 5. 6, 9. 2 Pet. 2. 4. 2 Tim. 2. 13.

προωρισμένην πρὸ αἰώνων ἐκκλησίαν (Eph. i.). Similarly St. Peter speaks of the Christian calling as already effected on God's side, and he exhorts all who are called to make that calling and election sure, by a right use on their part of God's grace (2 Pet. i. 10); and he speaks of a whole Church as elect (1 Pet. v. 13). Cp. 1 Thess. i. 4, and see Hussey, Acad. Sermons, p. 307—309.

(8) On the whole, it appears that the Apostle teaches here that God foreknew, not the Jews only, as they imagined, but He from the beginning loved all men in Christ; In due time He calls all by Him and His Apostles. He offers to justify and acquit all freely by Faith in His Blood. He in mind and desire gives the glory of heaven to all.

We were all called when we were made Christians.

Behold, men were baptized, and all their sins were forgiven them; they were justified from their sins. We have been justified. Let each one of you, having been already placed in a state of Justification by receiving remission of sins in the Laver of Regeneration, and having received the Holy Ghost, go onward day by day, and grow in grace till he is perfected. Augustine, Serm. 158.

(9) Therefore the Church of England, in her Catechism, teaches all her children to say that they have been called to a state of salvation; and she says at the baptism of every several infant, "Doubt ye not, but earnestly believe that Christ will favourably receive this present Infant, that He will embrace him with the arms of His mercy, that He will give him the blessing of eternal life, and make him partaker of His everlasting kingdom."

And after the Sacrament of Baptism is administered, she gives thanks to God for these benefits as already received.

Thus she teaches us in what sense we are to understand St. Paul's προέγνω, ἐκάλεσε, ἐδικαίωσε, ἐδόξασε, He foreknew, He called, He justified, He glorified. She considers these things as done: for in God's will and on His side they are done, for all members of the visible Church of Christ.

(10) But in thus stating God's will and deed, the Church does not forget that man has his work to perform, and that unless we perform our part, all God's gracious purposes towards us will fail of their effect, and only increase our condemnation.

She therefore adds, "Ye have heard that our Lord Jesus Christ hath promised in His Gospel to grant all those things that ye have prayed for, which promise He, for His part, will most surely keep and perform. Wherefore after this promise made by Christ, this Infant must also faithfully for his part promise," &c.

According to God's will and deed, all are called, justified, and glorified in Christ. He has done His part that they should be so, effectually.

But this act of God's Will does not take away man's Free Will. It is God's will, that man's will should be free.

God gives man grace, in order to sanctify and quicken his will, but not to destroy it.

Man's free will is God's work, and no one of God's works runs counter to any other. By the very fact of his freedom, man may abuse his will. And it is by abuse of his will—by not conforming it to God's will, but by setting it against that will—that man destroys himself.

God's foreknowledge of man's future state does nothing to determine that state.

Nothing will be, because God knows that it will be; but because it will be, it is known by God, before it is. Judas became a traitor, and the Prophets foretold that he would be so. The Prophets foretold it because it would be so; but it was not so because they foretold it. Origen.

Our salvation is from God's love in Christ; but our destruction (if we are destroyed) is from ourselves.

The above statements on these important points may be illustrated and confirmed by the testimony of two of the wisest Anglican Divines, who have treated this subject with great labour and skill, Richard Hooker and Isaac Barrow; the former in certain papers recently brought to light, and deserving careful perusal, as follows;—

Prescience, Predestination, and Grace, impose not that necessity by force, whereof man in doing good hath all freedom of choice taken from him.

If Prescience did impose any such necessity, seeing Prescience is not only of good but of evil, then must we grant that Adam himself could not choose but sin; and that Adam sinned not voluntarily, because that which Adam did ill was foreseen.

If Predestination did impose such necessity, then was there nothing voluntary in Adam's well-doing neither, because what Adam did well was predestinated.

Or, if Grace did impose such necessity, how was it possible that Adam should have done otherwise than well, being so furnished as he was with Grace?

Prescience extendeth unto all things, but causeth nothing. Predestination to life, although it be infinite ancienter than the actual work of creation, doth notwithstanding presuppose the purpose of creation; because, in the order of our consideration and knowledge, it must first have being that shall have a happy being. Whatsoever the purpose of creation therefore doth establish, the same by the purpose of predestination may be perfected, but in no case disannulled and taken away. Seeing then the natural freedom of man's will was contained in the purpose of creating man (for this freedom is a part of man's nature), Grace contained under the purpose of predestinating man may perfect and doth, but cannot possibly destroy the liberty of man's will. That which hath wounded and overthrown the liberty, wherein man was created as able to do good as evil, is only our original sin, which God did not predestinate, but He foresaw it, and predestinated Grace to serve as a remedy. Freedom of operation we have by Nature, but the ability of virtuous operation by Grace; because, through sin our nature hath taken that disease and weakness whereby of itself it inclineth only unto evil. The natural powers and faculties therefore of man's mind are, through our native corruption, so weakened, and of themselves so averse from God, that without the influence of His special grace they bring forth nothing in His sight acceptable; no, not the blossoms or least buds that tend to the fruit of eternal life.

Which powers and faculties notwithstanding retain still their natural manner of operation, although their original perfection be gone, man hath still a reasonable understanding, and a will thereby frameable to good things, but is not thereunto now able to frame himself. Therefore God hath ordained Grace to countervail this our imbecility, and to serve as His hand, that thereby we, which cannot move ourselves, may be drawn, but amiably drawn.

If the grace of God did enforce men to goodness, nothing would be more unpleasant unto man than virtue; whereas contrariwise, there is nothing so full of joy and consolation as the conscience of well-doing.

Shall we think that to eternal torments God hath, for the only manifestation of His power, adjudged by an eternal decree the greatest part of the very noblest of all His creatures, without any respect of sin foreseen in them? Lord, Thou art just and severe, but not cruel. And seeing all the ancient Fathers of the Church of Christ have evermore with uniform consent agreed that reprobation presupposeth foreseen sin as a most just cause whereupon it groundeth itself; sin at the least original in them whose portion of eternal punishment is easiest, as they that suffer but the only loss of the joys of heaven; sin of several degrees in them, whose plagues accordingly by the same act of reprobation were proportioned; let us not in this case of all other remove the limits and bounds which our fathers before us have set. If we look upon the rank or chain of things voluntarily derived from the positive will of God, we behold the riches of His glory proposed as the end of all, we behold the beatitude of men and angels ordained as a mean unto that end, graces and blessings in all abundance referred as means unto that happiness, God blessed for evermore, the voluntary Author of all those graces.

But concerning the heaps of evils which do so overwhelm the world, compare them with God, and from the greatest to the least of them, He disclaimeth them all. He refuseth utterly to be entitled either Alpha or Omega, the beginning or the end, of any evil. The evil of sin is within the compass of God's prescience, but not of His predestination, or foreordaining will.

The evil of punishment is within the compass of God's foreappointed and determining will, but by occasion of precedent sin. For punishments are evil, because they are naturally grievous to him which must sustain them.

Yet in that they proceed from justice thereby revenging evil, such evils have also the nature of good; neither doth God refuse, but challenge it as an honour that He maketh evil-doers which sow iniquity to reap destruction, according to that in the Prophet (Amos iii. 6), There is no evil in the city which I the Heb. 1. 3. & 7. 25. 1 Pet. 3. 22. 1 John 2. 1. g ch. 4. 25. & 5. 6—10. & 14. 9. Matt. 20. 28. John 14. 19.

Lord have not done. God therefore, with the good evil of punishment, revengeth the evil good of sin.

Sin is no plant of God's setting. He seeth and findeth it a thing irregular, exorbitant, and altogether out of course. It is unto Him an occasion of sundry acts of mercy, both an occasion and a cause of punishment; by which mercy and justice, although God be many ways greatly glorified, yet is not this glory of God any other in respect of sin, than only an accidental event. We cannot say therefore truly, that as God to His own glory did ordain our happiness, and to accomplish our happiness appoint the gifts of His grace, so He did ordain to His glory our punishment, and for matter of punishment our sins.

For, punishment is to the will of God no desired end, but a consequent, ensuing on sin; and in regard of sin, His glory an event thereof, but no proper effect. Which answereth fully that repining proposition, If man's sin be God's glory, why is God angry?

As therefore sin hath entered into the nature of man, notwithstanding the general will of God's inclination to the contrary, so the same inclination of will in Him for the good of man, doth continue still, notwithstanding sin. For sin altereth not His nature, though it change ours. His general will, and the principal desire whereunto of His own natural bent He inclineth, still is, that all men may enjoy the full perfection of that happiness which is their end.

Signs of the general inclination of God are all the Promises which He maketh in Holy Scripture, all the Precepts which He giveth of godliness and virtue, all Prohibitions of sin, and threatenings against offenders; all Counsels, Exhortations, Admonitions, Tolerations, Protestations, and Complaints; yea, all the works of His merciful Providence in upholding the good estate of the world, are signs of that desire which the schoolmen therefore term His signified will, and which Damascen calls the principal will of God. (De Orthodox. Fide, ii. 29.)

And according to this will He desireth not the death, no, not of the wicked (Ezech. xviii. 23. 32), but rather that they may be converted and live. He longeth for nothing more than that all men might be saved. He that willeth the end, must needs will also the means whereby we are brought unto it. And our Fall in Adam being presupposed, the means now which serve as causes effectual by their own worth to procure us eternal life, are only the merits of Jesus Christ, without Whom no heathen by the law of nature, no Jew by the law of Moses, was ever justified. Yea, it were perhaps no error to affirm, that the virtue of the blood of our Lord Jesus Christ being taken away, the Jew, by having the Law, was farther removed from hope of salvation and life, than the other by wanting the Law; if it be true which Fulgentius hath (de Incarn. 1, and Grat. 16), that without the graces of belief in Christ, the Law doth more heavily condemn being known than unknown; because by how much the ignorance of sin is made less, by so much his guiltiness that sinneth is greater. And St. Paul's own doctrine is, that the Law, severed from Christ, doth but only aggravate sin.

God being desirous of all men's salvation, according to His own principal or natural inclination, hath in token thereof for their sakes whom He loved, bestowed His beloved Son.

The self-same affection was in Christ Himself, to Whom the wicked at the day of their last doom will never dare to allege as their own excuse, that He which offered Himself as a sacrifice to redeem some, did exclude the rest, and so made the way of their salvation impossible. He paid a ransom for the whole world; on Him the iniquities of all were laid, and as St. Peter plainly witnesseth, He bought them which deny Him, and which perish because they deny Him. (John vi. Isa. liii. 1 John ii. 2 Cor. v. 2 Pet. ii. 1.) As in very truth, whether we respect the power and sufficiency of the price given, or the spreading of that infection, for remedy whereof the same was necessary, or the largeness of His desire which gave it, we have no reason but to acknowledge with joy and comfort that He tasted death for all men, as the Apostle to the Hebrews noteth. (Heb. ii. 9.) Nor do I think that any wound did ever strike His sacred heart more deeply than the foresight of men's ingratitude, by infinite numbers of whom that which cost Him so dear would so little be regarded; and that made to so few effectual through contempt, which He of tender compassion in largeness of love had provided to be a medicine sufficient for all.

But, if God would have all men saved, and if Christ through such His grace have died for all men, wherefore are they not all saved?

God's principal desire touching man's happiness is not always satisfied. It is on all sides confessed, that His will in this kind oftentimes succeedeth not; the cause whereof is a personal impediment making particular men uncapable of that good which the will of His general providence did ordain for mankind. So that from God, as it were by a secondary kind of will, there groweth now destruction and death, although otherwise the will of His voluntary inclination towards man would effect the contrary. For the which cause the wise man directly teacheth, that death is not a thing which God hath made or devised with intent to have so many thousands eternally therein devoured (Wisdom i. 13—16, "God made not death, but ungodly men with their works called it to them"); that condemnation is not the end wherefore God did create any man, although it be an event or consequent which man's unrighteousness causeth God to decree.

The decree of condemnation is an act of hatred; the cause of hatred in God is not His own inclination thereunto; for His nature is, to hate nothing which He hath made; therefore, the cause of this affection towards man must needs be in man some quality whereof God is Himself no author. The decree of condemnation is an act of divine justice. Justice doth not purpose punishment for an end, and faults as means to attain that end; for so it should be a just thing to desire that men might be unjust; but justice always presupposing sin which it loveth not, decreeth punishment as a consequent wherein it taketh otherwise no pleasure.

Finally, if death be decreed as a punishment, the very nature of punishment we know is such as implieth faultiness going before; without which we must give unto it some other name, but a punishment it cannot be. So that the nature of God's goodness, the nature of justice, and the nature of death itself, are all opposite to their opinion, if any will be of opinion, that God hath entirely decreed condemnation without the foresight of sin as a cause. The place of Judas was locus suus, a place of his own proper procurement. Devils were not ordained of God for hell-fire, but hell-fire for them; and for men so far forth as it was foreseen that men would be like them. Hooker (in papers recently discovered by Archdn. Cotton and Dr. Elrington, and printed in the latest Oxford editions as an Appendix to Book the Fifth of the Ecclesiastical Polity).

God strongly asserts, He earnestly inculcates, He loudly proclaims to all, His readiness to pardon, and His delight in showing mercy; the riches of His goodness, and forbearance, and long-suffering. He declares that whoever is faithful in using the smallest power shall be accepted and rewarded. He represents Himself impartial in His judgment and acceptance of men's persons and performances; any man, in any nation, by his sincere, though imperfect, piety and righteousness, being acceptable to Him.

The final ruin of men is not to be imputed to any antecedent defect lying in man's state, or God's will, to any obstacle on God's part, or incapacity on the part of man, but wholly to man's blameable neglect, or wilful abuse, of the means conducible to his salvation. No want of mercy in God, or of virtue in the passion of our Lord, are to be mentioned, or thought of; infidelity (formal or interpretative) and obstinate impenitency disappointing God's merciful intentions, and frustrating our Lord's saving performances and endeavours, are the sole banes of mankind. Here (saith our Lord) is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil. And, I speak these things that ye might be saved; but ye will not come to me that ye might have life. And, How often have I willed to gather thy children, as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings, but ye would not? The Sower (our Lord) did sow in the field (the world) the good seed of heavenly truth, but some would not admit it into their heads or hearts; from others temptation bare it away; in others worldly cares and desires choked it. And, Despisest thou the riches of God's goodness, and forbearance, and long-suffering, not considering that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance? So St. Paul expostulates with the incredulous Jew. And, How, saith the Apostle to the Hebrews, shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation? So do our Lord and His Apostles state the reason of men's miscarrying in this great affair; signifying all requisite care and provision to be made on God's part for their salvation, and imputing the obstruction solely to their voluntary default of compliance with God in His conduct and management thereof. Jesus is the Saviour of all men (we say), as having perfectly discovered and demonstrated the way, and means of salvation; the gracious purposes of God concerning it; the duties required by God in order to it; the great helps and encouragements to seek it; the mighty determents from neglecting it; the whole will of God and concernment of man in relation thereto; briefly, all saving truths He hath revealed unto all men; mysteries of truth (Col. i. 26), which were hidden from ages and generations (Rom. xvi. 25), which no fancy of man could invent, no understanding could reach, no reason could by discussion clear (concerning the nature, providence, will, and purpose of God; the nature, original, and state of man, concerning the laws and rules of practice, the helps thereto, the rewards thereof, whatever is important for us to know in order to happiness), He did plainly discover and bring to light, He did with valid sorts of demonstration assert and confirm. The doing which (as having so much efficacy toward salvation, and being ordinarily so necessary thereto), is often called saving, as particularly by St. James, when he saith, He that turns a sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death. (James v. 20.) And by St. Paul: Take heed to thy word and doctrine, for so doing thou shalt save thyself and thy hearers. (1 Tim. iv. 16.)

That our Lord hath thus (according to His design, and according to reasonable esteem) saved all men, we are authorized by the holy Scripture to say (1 Cor. ix. 22. Rom. xi. 14. 2 Tim. iii. 15); for He is there represented to be the light of the world (John viii. 12), the true light that enlighteneth every man coming into the world (John i. 9), the day-spring from on high that hath visited us, to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, and to guide our feet into the way of peace. (Luke i. 79.)

By Him the saving grace of God hath appeared unto all men. (Tit. ii. 11; iii. 4.) By Him (as Esay prophesied and St. John the Baptist applied it) all flesh did see the salvation of God. (2 Tim. i. 10. Luke iii. 6.) Of Him it was also foretold (as St. Paul teacheth us), I have set thee for the light of the nations, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth. Coming He preached peace to them that were far and them that were near,—that is, to all men every where. (Acts xiii. 47. Eph. ii. 17.) While I am in the world, said He, I am the light of the world; shining, like the sun (John ix. 5), indifferently unto all; and when He withdrew His corporal presence, He further virtually diffused His light; for He sent His messengers with a general commission and command to teach all men concerning the benefits procured for them and the duties required from them: Going into the world, make all nations disciples, teaching them to observe all that I commanded you. (Matt. xxviii. 19, 20.) Going into the world, preach the Gospel unto every creature (or to the whole creation). (Mark xvi. 15.) So it ought to be, that in His name should be preached repentance and remission of sins unto all nations (Luke xxiv. 47); that God's intentions are not to be interpreted, nor His performances estimated by events depending on the contingency of human actions, but by His own declarations and precepts, together with the ordinary provision of competent means, in their own nature sufficient to produce those effects which He declares Himself to intend or to perform. What He reveals Himself to design He doth really design it; what He says, that He performeth; He (according to moral esteem,—that is, so far as to ground duties of gratitude and honour, proceedings of justice and reward) doth perform, although the thing upon other accounts be not effected. Barrow (Sermons on Universal Redemption, Vol. iii. p. 397).

32. Ὅς γε] Who even. Kühner, ii. p. 400. Meyer. Stronger than ὅς,—and the words τοῦ ἰδίου, His own, strengthen the emphasis.

— παρέδωκεν] For since God spared not even His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how is it possible that He will not also with Him freely give us all things?

Here is the reason why the Apostle speaks, in v. 30, of our future glory as a thing accomplished.

God delivered up His own Son not only for the Saints, but altogether for all in the Church. Origen. The Father delivered up the Son, the Son delivered up Himself (Gal. ii. 20), and Judas delivered up his Master. "Sed quid hic fecit Judas nisi peccatum?" Aug. (Serm. 52.)

— τὰ πάντα] all the things necessary for salvation.

33. ἐκλεκτῶν] the elect. See above, 1 Thess. i. 4; below, xvi. 16. Eph. i. 4.

34. ἐν δεξιᾷ τοῦ Θεοῦ] Here is another reason why he had spoken of our glorification as a thing already done. Christ has carried our Nature into heaven. He has placed it at God's right Hand. In His exaltation we may see our own.

35. Τίς ἡμᾶς χωρίσει κ.τ.λ.] If I suffer persecution, and confess Christ before men, I am sure that He will confess me before His Father. If hunger assails me, it cannot hurt me, for I have the Bread of Life. Nakedness cannot harm me, for I am clothed with Christ. I will not fear danger, for Christ is my safety. The sword cannot terrify me, for I have the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God. Origen.

No one can separate me from the Love of God by menaces of death, for the Love of God cannot die, and it is death not to love God. Neither height nor depth can separate me, for what joy can they offer to tempt me from the Creator of Heaven? Or why should Hell itself terrify me, so as to make me forsake God, since I can never know Hell except by forsaking Him? Augustine (de Moribus Eccl. 1, 2. Cp. A Lapide).

— ἡ μάχαιρα] the sword, the instrument of St. Paul's own future martyrdom.

36. θανατούμεθα] we are being put to death, present tense. 1 Cor. xv. 31. 2 Cor. iv. 10.

38. οὔτε δυνάμεις] So placed by A, B, C, D, E, F, G. Elz. puts it after ἀρχαί.

39.] The following practical observations and encouragements may be added here in the words of Hooker:—

No man's condition so sure as ours: the prayer of Christ is more than sufficient to strengthen us, be we never so weak; and to overthrow all adversary power, be it never so strong and potent. But His prayer must not exclude our labour. Their thoughts are vain who think that their watching can preserve the city which God Himself is not willing to keep. And are not theirs as vain who think that God will keep the city for which they themselves are not careful to watch? The husbandman may not burn his plough, nor the merchant forsake his trade, because God hath promised "I will not forsake thee." And do the promises of God concerning our stability, think you, make it a matter indifferent for us to use or not to use the means whereby, to attend or not to attend to reading, to pray or not to pray that we "fall not into temptation?" Surely, if we look to stand in the faith of the sons of God, we must hourly, continually, be providing and setting ourselves to strive. It was not the meaning of our Lord and Saviour, in saying (John xvii. 11), "Father, keep them in Thy Name," that we should be careless to keep ourselves.

To our own safety, our own sedulity is required. And then blessed for ever and ever be that mother's child whose faith hath made him the child of God.

The earth may shake, the pillars of the world may tremble under us, the countenance of the heaven may be appalled, the sun may lose his light, the moon her beauty, the stars their glory; but concerning the man that trusteth in God, if the fire have proclaimed itself unable as much as to singe a hair of his head, if lions, beasts ravenous by nature and keen with hunger, being set to devour, have, as it were, religiously adored the very flesh of the faithful man, what is there in the world that shall change his heart, overthrow his faith, alter his affection towards God, or the affection of God to him? If I be of this note, who shall make a separation between me and my God? "Shall tribulation, or anguish, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?" No; "I am persuaded that neither tribulation, nor anguish, nor persecution, nor famine, nor nakedness, nor peril, nor sword, nor "Of the certainty and perpetuity of faith in the Elect").

Preliminary Note to the NINTH Chapter.

For a right understanding of this and the two following chapters, it must be borne in mind,

(1) Who the parties were, whom the Apostle is addressing, and what was their position and their feelings; and

(2) What is the connexion between the subject of these chapters and that of the foregoing chapters of the Epistle.

(1) He is addressing himself to the Jews.

They supposed themselves to be the Elect people of God. They imagined that they possessed some special merit of their own which entitled them to be distinguished by Him from the other Nations of the world. They knew that they had been kept apart from all other Nations by God Himself, and they did not suppose it possible that other Nations could be put on a par with themselves, and be blended with them in one society; and much less that they themselves could be cast off by God.

The very notion of such contingencies appeared to them to involve a charge against God Himself, as either not endued with Divine Prescience, or as subject to human infirmities, and as swayed by passion, levity, fickleness, and caprice.

(2) In the previous part of the Epistle St. Paul has shown,

I. That all mankind, the Jews no less than the Gentiles, were guilty before God.

II. That all needed a Redeemer.

III. That a Redeemer had been provided for all in Christ Jesus on equal terms.

IV. That in His Divine Mind God had foreknown and foreordained an Universal Church in Christ, and that Christ had died for all (viii. 32); and that all who accept by Faith the terms of salvation offered them in Christ, are the elect people of God; and that all the faithful had been foreknown by Him in Christ (viii. 29–32), and that He, on His part, gives them freely Justification and Salvation in Him.

(3) Such declarations as these would, the Apostle well knew, excite the jealousy of the Jews. They contravened the national persuasion that the Jew was the favoured son of God's love; and they brought with them the tremendous accusation that the Jewish Nation, in crucifying Jesus of Nazareth, had crucified the Christ Who had been foretold by Moses and the Prophets; and that in rejecting Him, and in continuing to reject Him Who was now preached to the Gentiles as the Saviour of the World, and was gladly recognized by them as such, they had disinherited themselves; that they were no longer God's elect people, but had been supplanted in His favour by the Heathen World.

The Apostle, therefore, had now the task of maintaining the doctrines already stated of Universal Sinfulness on the part of mankind, and of Universal Redemption in Christ, and of showing the harmony of these doctrines with the History of God's dealings with the Jews, and of soothing their minds and allaying their emotions of envy, jealousy, and exasperation, and of administering comfort to those among them who were touched with remorse and contrition, and of proving to them that they would forfeit nothing, but rather gain infinite benefits by accepting the gracious terms now offered freely to all Nations in Christ.

(4) These considerations may serve the purpose of clearing the subject handled by the Apostle in this and the two following Chapters, of some perplexities with which it has been embarrassed.

When these Chapters are considered in their natural relation to the Apostle's design in this Epistle, it will be seen that it was no part of his purpose to discuss here the question of the particular predestination of individuals.

Were the Jews, as a Nation, the Elect People of God? Had God chosen from Eternity an Universal Church in Christ? Was Christ to be the Deliverer of the Jews, or was He to be the Deliverer of all Nations (Hag. ii. 7), the Saviour of the World?

These were the questions to be discussed; and all that he says, in this and the two following Chapters, is subordinate to these questions.

The Calvinistic interpretations of this chapter fail altogether of supplying any answer to the objections of the Jew, or of ministering any comfort to him in his dejection; from which he can only be raised by the blessed assurance with which St. Paul concludes this chapter, that "he that believeth in Christ shall not be put to shame."

Consequently we find that the great body of ancient Expositors, in commenting on this portion of St. Paul's Epistle, never assigned to it such a meaning as has been imputed to it by some in more recent times. Indeed, the ancient Expositors regarded this Epistle generally, and this portion of it particularly, as a store-house of divine teaching on the great doctrines of Universal Redemption, and of Free Grace offered to all in Christ.

It has been well said (by Professor Blunt, Lectures on the Early Fathers, p. 625), that it is remarkable that St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans is singled out as the very ground on which Irenæus contends for the doctrine of man's Liberty of choice to do good or evil, and of God's consequent right to assign to him his reward accordingly. Irenæus (iv. 37. 1). So Clemens Alexandrinus (Strom. iv. 11; vii. 7) regards "the Elect" and "the Predestinate" as the whole body of Christians, and refers to the Epistle to the Romans as confirming his own opinion, which is thus expressed (Strom. vii. 2): "The Son of God, Who for our sake took a body that could suffer, cannot be indifferent towards us. Assuredly He cares for all, as becomes the Lord of all. He is our Saviour, not a Saviour of some and no Saviour of others. But He dispenses His benefits accordingly as every one is disposed to receive them, to Greeks and Barbarians, to the predestinated out of either race, called, according to his own time, faithful, elect. Neither can He be jealous of any, Who hath called all alike."

Justin Martyr (Dial. c. 42) applies the term οἱ προεγνωσμένοι, 'the foreknown,' to those whom God foreknew from eternity as good and virtuous men, and of whom He foreknew that they would be saved because they would be good and virtuous. See Apolog. i. 45, and cp. Dialog. c. 140, and Irenæus, iv. 6. 5.

See further above, Introduction to this Epistle, p. 194—6.

CH. IX. 1. Ἀλήθειαν λέγω ἐν Χριστῷ] I speak in Christ the truth. Not to be rendered "I speak the truth in Christ." What the Apostle means is, that he is speaking, not as a man merely, but as a member of Christ, in His Name, as His Apostle. And so he comforts the Jews with the assurance that his sympathy with them is not only his own sympathy, but the sympathy of Christ, even of Him Whom they had crucified.

He confirms this assurance by a similar assertion concerning the Holy Ghost the Comforter. What I say to you is said by me in the name of Christ and of the Holy Spirit.

On the connexion of this statement with the foregoing chapter, see the preliminary note.

2. λύπη—ὀδύνη] sorrow and pang: cp. ὠδίν.

3. ηὐχόμην] I could wish, supposing such a thing to be possible. On this use of the imperfect tense, see Gal. iv. 20. Winer, § 41, p. 253.

— ἀνάθεμα εἶναι αὐτὸς ἐγώ] This is the order of the words in the best MSS. Elz. αὐτὸς ἐγὼ ἀνάθεμα εἶναι, which is less forcible.

Ἀνάθεμα = חֵרֶם (cherem), devoted to destruction as abominable. (Lev. xxvii. 28. Num. xxi. 3. Deut. vii. 25, 26; xiii. 15. 17. Isa. xxxiv. 2.) See above, Gal. i. 8, 9.

Observe that this expression follows τίς ἡμᾶς χωρίσει ἀπὸ τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Χριστοῦ; viii. 35 and 39, 'Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?' Therefore his desire to be ἀνάθεμα ἀπὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ for the sake of his brethren, is not to be regarded as a possible contingency, but is uttered in an hyperbolé of love.

Chrysostom, Theophylact, and others rightly suppose this to be a heroic expression of charity and self-devotion. And it is an evidence of the genuine spirit of the Gospel of Christ: not like the jealous spirit of Judaism grudging the communication of its own privileges to others, but ready to suffer for the Jews, who pursued the preachers of Christianity with malevolence and hatred.

Χριστοῦ ὑπὲρ τῶν ἀδελφῶν μου, τῶν συγγενῶν μου κατὰ σάρκα, [4] [d] οἵτινές εἰσιν Ἰσραηλῖται, ὧν ἡ υἱοθεσία καὶ ἡ δόξα, καὶ αἱ διαθῆκαι καὶ ἡ νομοθεσία, καὶ ἡ λατρεία καὶ αἱ ἐπαγγελίαι, [5] [e] ὧν οἱ πατέρες, καὶ ἐξ ὧν ὁ Χριστὸς τὸ κατὰ σάρκα ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ πάντων Θεὸς εὐλογητὸς εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, ἀμήν.

There was never any Philosophy or Religion that so highly exalts the good which is communicative, and depresses that which is private, as the holy Faith; for we read that the Elect Saints of God have wished themselves anathematized and razed out of the Book of Life in an ecstasy of charity and infinite feeling of communion. Lord Bacon (Adv. of Learning, p. 92).

St. Paul, in writing to the Romans, might be not unmindful of Roman examples of self-sacrifice, the Curtii and Decii; and he might well endeavour to conciliate the Jews by imitating, indeed by exceeding, the self-devotion of their great Lawgiver. (Exod. xxxii. 32.)

As is observed by S. Jerome (Algasiæ, Vol. iv. p. 203): Optat anathema esse à Christo et perire, ut alii salvi fiant. Sed si consideremus Moysis vocem rogantis Deum pro populo Judæorum, atque dicentis, Si dimittis eis peccatum suum, dimitte: si autem non vis, dele me de libro tuo quem scripsisti, perspiciemus eumdem et Moysis et Pauli erga creditum sibi gregem affectum. Pastor enim bonus ponit animam suam pro ovibus suis. (Ioh. x. 11.) Et hoc ipsum est dicere, optabam anathema esse à Christo: et, dele me de libro tuo quem scripsisti. Qui enim delentur de libro viventium, et cum justis non scribuntur, anathema fiunt à Domino. Simulque cerne Apostolum quantæ charitatis in Christum sit; ut pro Illo cupiat mori, et solus perire, dummodo omne in Illum credat hominum genus.

This expression therefore is a tribute of love to Christ as well as to the Jews.

The glory of God is advanced by the happiness of His children. The honour of the Saviour of Mankind, whose Apostle I am, is promoted by the multitude of the saved. The glory and honour of God in Christ is more magnified by the salvation of a Nation than of any Individual in it. "Melius pereat unus, quàm unitas."

Therefore we may say with Bp. Sanderson (i. 331), It was not merely a strain of rhetoric, to give his brethren by that hyperbolical expression the better assurance of his great love towards them, that the Apostle said that "he could wish himself to be accursed, to be made an anathema, to be separated and cut off from Christ for their sakes." But he spake it advisedly, yea, upon his conscience and upon his oath. Not that he wished their salvation more than his own; understand it not so . . . but he preferred the glory of God before both his own salvation and theirs. Insomuch that if God's glory should so require—hoc impossibili supposito—he could be content with all his heart to lose his own part in the joys of heaven that God might be more glorified, than that God should lose any part of His glory for his salvation.

A different and lower view has been taken of this text by Waterland in his Sermon upon it (Vol. ix. p. 252), and also, it would seem, by Richard Hooker in the original draught of his Sixth Book of the Ecclesiastical Polity, as may be inferred from George Cranmer's note in the Appendix to it, p. 135.

4. οἵτινες] inasmuch as they are; 'quippe qui sint.' See i. 25; vi. 2.

4, 5. Ἰσραηλῖται — ἀμήν] The Apostle here, with graceful courtesy, recites the claims made by the Jews themselves to be regarded as the Elect people of God, and he crowns the whole with a beautiful consummation, which, while it disarms them of their objection against the adoption of an Universal Church by God as His own People in Christ, reminds them of the source of their true spiritual comfort, and of their highest national glory, namely, that—of themselves according to the flesh, CHRIST came, Who is over all, God blessed for ever.

— ἡ δόξα] The Shechinah.

— αἱ διαθῆκαι] The covenants frequently repeated. The Law was one, and given once; but the Covenants were various, and iterated at various times.

— ἡ λατρεία] The service of the Tabernacle and Temple; the true worship of God.

5. ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ πάντων Θεὸς—ἀμήν] He that is existing above all, God Blessed for ever. There is a special emphasis on ὁ ὤν. He that is; He Who is the being One; JEHOVAH. See John i. 18; Rev. i. 4. 8; iv. 8; xi. 17; xvi. 5, compared with Exod. iii. 14, ἐγώ εἰμι, ὁ ὤν. And compare on Gal. iii. 20.

Therefore these words ought not to be treated merely as a copula (as they are in the rendering of some Interpreters, "Who is God"), but they contain a distinct truth, and assert the eternal pre-existence of Christ, and are very appropriately added after the mention of His Incarnation. He Who came of the Jews, according to the flesh, is no other than ὁ ὤν, the BEING ONE, JEHOVAH. Cp. our Lord's words, John viii. 58, πρὶν Ἀβραὰμ γενέσθαι, Ἐγώ εἰμι.

The addition of ἐπὶ πάντων marks Christ's supremacy as coequal with the Father. Cp. Col. i. 15—20, the best exposition of this text.

Therefore we have in this passage five distinct assertions concerning Christ, viz.

(1) His Incarnation, in κατὰ σάρκα.
(2) His Existence from Everlasting, in ὁ ὤν.
(3) His Supremacy, in ἐπὶ πάντων.
(4) His Divinity, in Θεός.
(5) His claim to be called "the Blessed One," see Mark xiv. 61.

Thus the Holy Spirit ascribes to Christ the incommunicable titles of Jehovah and of Elohim, in the highest sense of the words, and so provides a safeguard not only against Socinianism and Arianism, but also against Nestorianism, by declaring that God and Man are one Christ.

It has been said by some in modern days (e. g. Semler, Reiche, Köllner, Winzer, Fritzsche, Glöckler, Schräder, Krehl, Meyer) that this passage may be regarded simply as a Doxology to God; and it has been said (e. g. by Meyer, p. 283) that it was not quoted in ancient times against the Arian heresy, as it would have been if it had been anciently applied to Christ.

But this is an error. It is adduced against the Arians by S. Athanasius (Orat. c. Arianos, i. § 24, p. 338), where he says, "No one can patiently listen to them who allege that God was not always a Father, but became a Father, in order that they may pretend that there was a time when the Word of God did not exist. No one can listen to them when they say this, since John affirms that the Word was in the beginning (John i. 1), and Paul asserts that He is the splendour of His Father's Glory (Heb. i. 1), and is the Being One, over all, God Blessed for ever" (Rom. ix. 5).

So again S. Gregory Nyssen (c. Eunom. in Catenâ, p. 317), If the Saviour is God above all, why do they who separate Him from the substance of the Father, and call Him a Creature, give Him as in mockery a false name? why do they even call Him God, and pay Him worship as to idols, since they estrange Him from the true God? Therefore either let them not acknowledge Him to be God, since they allege Him to be a Creature, in order that they themselves may judaize; or if they confess Him Who is created to be God, let them own themselves Idolaters.

So Cyril (in Catenâ, p. 318). Indeed the entire body of ancient Interpreters (Origen, Cyprian, Epiphanius, Chrysostom, and others) agree in applying these words to Christ.

They who regard them merely as an ascription of praise to God, do violence to the natural sequence and flow of the words of the Apostle, and desert the consentient judgment and catholic tradition of ancient Interpreters for an invention of modern times.

It may suffice to refer further on this point to Irenæus, iii. 16. 3; Tertullian, c. Praxeam, c. 13. 15; Hippolytus, c. Noetum, c. 2. 6; Origen, in Rom. lib. vii. c. 13.

The following remarks are from more recent authorities:—

It is evident that Christ is here called God, even He Who came of the Jews, though not as He came of them, that is, according to the flesh, which is here distinguished from His Godhead.

He is so called God as not to be any of the many gods, but the one supreme or most high God; for He is God over all.

He hath also added the title of Blessed, which of itself elsewhere signifieth the supreme God, and was always used by the Jews to express that one God of Israel.

Wherefore it cannot be conceived St. Paul should write unto the Christians, most of whom then were converted Jews or proselytes, and give unto our Saviour not only the name of God, but also add that title which they always gave unto the one God of Israel, and to none but Him, except he did intend they should believe Him to be the same God whom they always in that manner and under that notion had adored. As therefore the Apostle speaketh of the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is Blessed for evermore (2 Cor. xi. 31), of the Creator who is blessed for ever, Amen (Rom. i. 25), and thereby doth signify the supreme Deity, which was so glorified by the Israelites; and doth also testify that we worship the same God under the Gospel which they did under the Law, so doth he speak of Christ in as sublime a style, who is over all, God blessed for ever, Amen (Rom. ix. 5), and thereby doth testify the equality, or rather identity, of His Deity. Bp. Pearson on the Creed (Art. ii. p. 348).

Another divine title ascribed to the Son in Holy Scripture is, over all, God blessed for ever. (Rom. ix. 5.) That this is said of Christ, not of God the Father, appears from the whole context and the very form of expression. (Comp. 2 Cor. xi. 31.) Ὁ ὤν naturally refers to the person of Christ, immediately before spoken of; and the antithesis (comp. Rom. i. 3, 4) between what He is according to the flesh and what according to the spirit, requires it. Thus all the ancients, Catholics and Heretics, constantly understood the words, referring them to Christ, as here called over all, God blessed for ever. Our blessed Lord is not only here called God, but God with a very high epithet, over all, ἐπὶ πάντων, the very same that is applied to the Father Himself (Eph. iv. 6), and is there rendered above all. Besides this, there is the addition of εὐλογητὸς εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, Blessed for ever; which again is the very same that St. Paul applies to the eternal Creator (Rom. i. 25). Add to this, that the title of blessed, as Bp. Pearson observes, "of itself elsewhere signifies the supreme God, and was always used by the Jews to express that one God of Israel." Waterland (Moyer Lecture vi.).

— ἀμήν] amen. A solemn conclusion to this solemn declaration, resembling the close of a Creed. Cp. below, xvi. 27; and above, Introduction, p. 185.

6. Οὐχ οἷον] Not as if God's choice has failed of its effect, and been frustrated. For we all, who believe in Christ, are blessed in Him; we are the Seed of Abraham, who saw Christ's day, and was glad. (John viii. 56.) Cp. Gal. iii. 6—9. 29; above, iv. 16.

7. ἀλλ' ἐν Ἰσαάκ] but in Isaac shall thy seed be called. The Apostle demonstrates his cause to the Jews by reference to their own Scriptures and History,—

(1) In the Annals of the Patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (v. 7—13).

(2) In God's word to Moses at the delivery of the Law (v. 15).

(3) In the History of Pharaoh (v. 17).

(4) By God's declarations by their Prophets (v. 25—33).

8. εἰς σπέρμα] for the seed. Cp. Gal. iii. 29.

10. Οὐ μόνον δὲ, ἀλλά] But not only so, but—. The Apostle proves by a double argument, that the "Israel of God," the true "Seed of Abraham," is not a progeny of the Flesh, but of Faith.

(1) God limited the promise to Isaac, though other children came forth from the loins of Abraham, besides Isaac.

(2) God limited the promise to Jacob, or Israel, though he had a brother Esau (Mal. i. 2, 3), from the same father, and from the same mother, and born also at the same birth.

11. μήπω γὰρ γεννηθέντων] for when as yet they had not been born—. The scope of the argument is,

(1) To show the Supremacy of God's Will.

(2) That it is His will to save the Gentiles as well as the Jews.

(3) That all, of every nation, are the true seed of Abraham, if they follow the steps of the Faith of Abraham. (Rom. iv. 12.)

(4) That the Jews have forfeited their birthright by pride and unbelief. If they had been Abraham's seed, they would have done the works of Abraham. (John viii. 39.)

He shows this from the Jews' own Patriarchal History, by personal types, inheritors of temporal promises, as by

(1) Isaac preferred to Ishmael, the elder son of Abraham.

(2) Jacob preferred to Esau his elder brother from Isaac. (Gen. xxv. 23.)

— κακόν] A, B have φαῦλον, and so Lachm., Tisch., Alf. Cp. 2 Cor. v. 10, where C reads φαύλου.

— ἵνα ἡ κατ' ἐκλογὴν πρόθεσις τοῦ Θεοῦ μένῃ] in order that God's purpose according to election might abide. God chose Jacob. But choice supposes difference in the thing chosen (Photius, in Cat. p. 329), and God's choice is not arbitrary and capricious, but is regulated by His other attributes of Foreknowledge, Justice, and Wisdom. What He chooses He chooses rightly. But (says Photius here) how could they who as yet had done nothing, be said to differ the one from the other? True, to human eyes they did not differ. But God does not choose with the eyes of man. To His eyes they differed much. And as He foresaw, so was the result. For the one (Jacob) pleased God; the other did not. See also below on v. 13.

12. ὁ μείζων] the elder brother—Esau. A warning to the Jews. They boast themselves to be Israelites, they claim to be the Seed of Jacob, but they become like Esau by despising their spiritual birthright, and rejecting Christ.

The Gentiles, the younger Son, become the true Israel, by accepting Him.

13. τὸν δὲ Ἠσαῦ ἐμίσησα] but Esau I hated.

Known and loved from the beginning to God is His own work (Acts xv. 18), and He hateth nothing that He hath made (Ps. cxlv. 9. Ezek. xxxiii. 11. 2 Pet. iii. 9). And what God loved in Jacob was not any thing that Jacob did by his own working; it was nothing in Jacob, as Jacob, but what God loved in him was Jacob created by Himself, and redeemed by Christ, and using his own free will (which was God's gift) according to the will of God, and profiting by the grace given to him by God.

We may not say, that any work or merit of Jacob himself, personally and independently, foreseen by God, was the cause of God's election of Jacob, lest we fall into the error of Arminianism.

The cause of Jacob's election was God's love, beholding His own work in Jacob.

But God's foresight causes nothing; and Jacob would not have been chosen by God, if he had been foreseen to be a profane person, like Esau, marring God's work in himself. Jacob's right use of God's own gifts to him, being foreseen by God, may then be called a condition of his election, though not the cause.

On the other hand, what God hated in Esau, was what Esau chose for himself; it was Esau's profaneness in bartering away his privileges for a carnal indulgence. This is what God clearly foreknew, justly hated, and righteously punished in Esau.

And that this was an act of Esau's own free will, deliberately choosing evil, and bringing down rejection on himself, is intimated by St. Paul, saying, "Lest there be any fornicator or profane person as Esau, who for one morsel of meat sold his birthright." (Heb. xii. 16.)

All the ancient Fathers of the Church (says Hooker) have evermore with uniform consent agreed that Reprobation presupposeth foreseen sin, as a most just cause whereupon it groundeth itself.

See above on viii. 28—30, and Cyril here (in Catenâ, p. 335—339), and the Introduction to this Epistle, p. 192.

14—29.] The following remarks of S. Jerome deserve consideration here (Epist. ad Hedibiam, iv. p. 180):

Μὴ γένοιτο· [15] ° τῷ Μωϋσῇ γὰρ λέγει, Ἐλεήσω ὃν ἂν ἐλεῶ, καὶ οἰκτει- ° Exod. 33. 19.

[17] ᵖ Λέγει γὰρ ἡ γραφὴ τῷ Φαραώ, Ὅτι εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἐξήγειρά σε, ᵖ Exod. 9. 16.

"Quid significet illud quod Apostolus Paulus disputat, ad Romanos scribens? Quid ergo dicemus? Numquid iniquitas apud Deum? absit, usque ad eum locum, ubi ait: Nisi Dominus Sabaoth reliquisset nobis semen, &c.

"Si pro voluntate suâ Deus miseretur Israeli, et indurat Pharaonem, ergo frustra queritur atque causatur, nos vel bona non fecisse, vel fecisse mala, quum in potestate Ipsius sit et voluntate, absque bonis et malis operibus, vel eligere aliquem, vel abjicere, præsertim quum voluntati Illius humani fragilitas resistere nequeat?

"Quam validam quæstionem brevi Apostolus sermone dissolvit, dicens, O homo! tu quis es qui respondes Deo?

"Et est sensus; ex eo quod respondes Deo, et calumniam facis, et de Scripturâ tanta perquiris, ut loquaris contra Deum et justitiam voluntatis Ejus incusas, ostendis te liberi esse arbitrii, et facere quod vis, vel tacere vel loqui.

"Si enim in similitudinem vasis fictilis te à Deo creatum putas, et Illius non posse resistere voluntati, hoc considera, quia vas fictile non dicit figulo, quare me sic fecisti? Figulus enim habet potestatem de eodem luto, aut eâdem massâ, aliud vas in honorem facere, aliud in contumeliam. Deus autem æquali cunctos sorte generavit, et dedit arbitrii libertatem, ut faciat unusquisque quod vult, sive bonum sive malum. In tantum autem dedit omnibus potestatem, ut vox impia disputet contra Creatorem suum, et causas voluntatis Illius perscrutetur,—

"Sin autem Deus volens ostendere iram, et notam facere potentiam suam, sustinuit in multâ patientiâ vasa iræ, apta ad interitum, ut ostenderet divitias gloriæ suæ in vasa misericordiæ, quæ præparavit in gloriam: quos et vocavit, non solùm nos ex Judæis, sed etiam ex Gentibus, si, inquit, patientia Dei induravit Pharaonem, et multo tempore pœnas distulit Israelis, ut justiùs condemnaret, quos tanto tempore sustinuerat, non Dei accusanda est patientia et infinita clementia, sed eorum duritia, qui bonitate Dei in perditionem suam abusi sunt.

"Alioquin unus est solis calor, et secundùm essentias subjacentes, alia liquefacit, alia indurat, alia solvit, alia constringit. Liquatur enim cera, et induratur lutum: et tamen caloris non est diversa natura. Sic et bonitas et clementia Dei vasa iræ quæ apta sunt in interitum, id est, populum Israel, indurat: vasa autem misericordiæ quæ præparavit in gloriam, quæ vocavit, hoc est, nos, qui non solùm ex Judæis sumus, sed etiam ex gentibus, non salvat irrationabiliter, et absque judicii veritate; sed causis præcedentibus, quia alii non susceperunt Filium Dei, alii autem recipere suâ sponte voluerunt.

"Hæc autem vasa misericordiæ non solum populus Gentium est; sed etiam hi qui ex Judæis credere voluerunt, et unus credentium effectus est populus. Ex quo ostenditur, non Gentes eligi sed hominum voluntates; atque ita factum est, ut impleretur illud quod dictum est in Osee: Vocabo non plebem meam, plebem meam, hoc est, populum gentium; et quibus prius dicebatur, non plebs mea vos, nunc vocentur filii Dei vivi.

"Quod ne solùm de Gentibus dicere videretur, etiam eos qui ex Israeliticâ multitudine crediderunt vasa misericordiæ et electionis appellat. Clamat enim Isaias pro Israel: si fuerit numerus filiorum Israel quasi arena maris, reliquiæ salvæ fient, hoc est, etiam si multitudo non crediderit, tamen pauci credent.

"Quumque testimonia proposuisset, quibus duplex vocatio prædicitur, et Gentium et populi Judæorum, transit ad cohærentem disputationem; et idcircò dicit Gentes quæ non sectabantur justitiam, apprehendisse justitiam, quia non superbierint, sed in Christum crediderint; Israelis autem magnam partem ideo corruisse, quia offenderit in lapidem offensionis et petram scandali, et ignoraverit justitiam Dei, quæ Christus est."

15. Ἐλεήσω] I will have mercy. He does not say, I will reject whom I will reject, but I will extend My mercy; though thou mayest wish to restrain it. Compare the Parable of the Labourers in the Vineyard (Matt. xx. 15), and of the Prodigal Son (Luke xv. 20).

St. Paul reminds the Jews that even at the delivery of the Law, God intimated to Moses that His mercy would be enlarged to others than the Jews. (Exod. xxxiii. 19.)

Let it not, however, be imagined that God's Foreknowledge of Esau caused Esau's sin. "God's Prescience extends to all things, but causes nothing" (Hooker, ii. p. 539). It foresees from eternity every individual who will either thankfully receive, or stubbornly refuse, God's gracious offers to all in Christ. But this Infinite Prescience does not cross God's Almighty Will, which willed from everlasting that man's will should be free. It does not compel any man to receive, nor restrain any man from receiving those gracious offers which God, before the foundation of the world, willed to make to all in Christ. (Eph. i. 4. 9; iii. 11. 1 Pet. i. 20.)

16. οὐ τοῦ θέλοντος οὐδὲ τοῦ τρέχοντος] It is not of him that willeth, as Abraham was willing that the blessing should descend to Ishmael (Gen. xvii. 18), and as Isaac was willing to give the blessing to Esau (Gen. xxvii. 4), nor is it of him that runneth as Esau ran for the venison (Gen. xxvii. 5), but it is of God, Who had mercy on the world, and willed to convey His free gift by Isaac and Jacob.

Human Will and Works are not a cause of man's acceptance with God. The only cause is God's Will: but this Will is ever moved by Love (Ps. cxlv. 9. 1 John iv. 8), guided by Wisdom (Eph. i. 11), and regulated by Justice, and executed by Power (Isa. xlvi. 10).

Nor does God's Will overrule or constrain the freedom of man's Will. God gives grace freely, in order that man may use his free-will rightly. Hence the appeals made to man in Scripture for the exercise, and right exercise, of his Will.

As Augustine says (the most earnest assertor of the power of divine Grace),—In order that God may be willing to give, you must lend your Will tŏ receive. How can you expect that Grace will fall upon you, unless you open the lap of your Will ("sinum voluntatis") to receive it? God gives not His Righteousness without your Will. Righteousness is only His. And volition is only yours. God's Righteousness exists independently, without your will, but it cannot exist in you, against your will. Unless our Will is in our own power, it is not Will. Augustine (Serm. 165, 169, and de Liber. Arbit. iii.).

The cause why all men are not drawn, or not so drawn as to come to God, is the corrupt will of men, not the absolute will of God. Bp. Andrewes (on the Lambeth Articles, p. 120).

17. Φαραώ] Pharaoh, the oppressor of Israel, the representative of Satan himself, from whom the true Israel are delivered by Baptism into Christ, as the literal Israelites were delivered from Pharaoh by being baptized in the Red Sea, even Pharaoh, the type of Antichrist, is here set forth as a warning to the Jews of what they themselves may become by hardening their hearts against God's warnings and miracles, and by rejecting Christ.

— εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἐξήγειρά σε] for this very cause raised I thee up, in order that I might show in thee My Power, and that My Name may be published abroad in all the earth.

God exalted Pharaoh to his royal throne in order that He might show His Power by means of Pharaoh.

God does not say, that He raised Pharaoh up in order that Pharaoh might resist Him; but He says that He raised up Pharaoh, in order that His Power might be magnified by means of Pharaoh, whether Pharaoh obeyed Him or not.

God raises up all the Kings of this world, in order that His own Power may be glorified in them. His revealed Will is, that they should use their power in His service, and for His glory, and that thus He may be magnified in them and by them.

But, even if they rebel against Him, He is not frustrated in His design.

Indeed, it may be said, that the more they rebel against Him, the more is He magnified through their means.

For, His Power is manifested by crushing their rebellion, and by making it ministerial to the display of His Sovereignty.

The fierceness of man turns to His praise (Ps. lxxvi. 10). His victorious Omnipotence appears most glorious in the subjugation of proud and haughty Princes who rise up against Him. And thus He is glorified not only by means of good Kings, who obey Him, but also by means of the Pharaohs, Sennacheribs, and Neros, who rise up in insurrection against Him.

Ἐξήγειρά σε is הֶעֱמַדְתִּיךָ, "stare te feci." I made thee to stand. I not only raised thee up, but gave thee power to continue on thy throne. Hence the LXX have διετηρήθης, thou hast been maintained on thy throne.

Pharaoh's power was from God (as St. Paul teaches in this Epistle, xiii. 1, 2). But his abuse of it was from himself. God's will and word to Pharaoh were, that he should let His people Israel go to serve Him (Exod. v. 1; viii. 1). And it was God's design and desire to be thus glorified by means of Pharaoh, who would then have used his power, derived from God, according to God's will and word, and would have been blessed thereby.

But if, after reiterated commands, threats, and plagues,

Pharaoh refuses to use his power for God's glory, and his own welfare, temporal and eternal, God's Will is not to be defeated by the abuse of the power which Pharaoh had from Him. No, rather after that Pharaoh had hardened his heart (Exod. viii. 15. 32), and had exalted himself against God (ix. 17), God declares that Pharaoh's exaltation is from Him, that his continuance in life and on his throne is from Him, in order that, whether willingly or unwillingly, he may be a vassal of God, and subserve the manifestation of His glory. God will be magnified through Pharaoh the King of Egypt, though a rebel against Him; and God's Power and Majesty will be made manifest by the rout and ruin of the King and his host, and by the miraculous deliverance, made more signal by Pharaoh's resistance, and executed over and by the Elements themselves, which are shown to be His Ministers, and made the executioners of His vengeance on the rebel, and of His mercy to His People, that so it may be known and acknowledged by the world that God is all powerful and just. See above, Introduction, p. 192.

Some Divines have said that Pharaoh is an example, and the only example in Scripture, "of total spiritual dereliction before death. And the reason of this is set down (Rom. ix. 17). God keeps him alive, after the time due to his excision, that He might show in him His power. And such singular examples ought no further to be taken into consideration by us than to warn us that we keep as far as possible from the like provocation." Hammond (in Bp. Sanderson's Works, v. 346).

18. σκληρύνει] He hardens. For the exposition of this text, it is to be remembered,—

(1) That the Freedom of the Human Will is a necessary consequence of the doctrine of Future Rewards and Punishments. Neither Reward nor Punishment can justly be awarded to one who is good or bad by necessity, and not by choice. Tertullian (c. Marcion. ii. 6).

(2) "Deus non est auctor eorum quorum est ultor." Fulgentius.

It abhorreth from the nature of God to be outwardly a sharp prohibitor, and underhand an Author, of Sin. Hooker (App. book v. p. 567).

(3) God is not wanting to the world in any necessary thing for the attainment of Eternal Life (Ibid. p. 571. 573), and He longeth for nothing more than that all men may be saved.

Why then does St. Paul say—whom He wills He hardeneth? This is to be explained from the history just cited of Pharaoh. God hardened Pharaoh's heart (Exod. vii. 13; ix. 12; x. 1. 20. 27; xi. 10). Yes. But first, Pharaoh hardened his own heart, he and his servants (Exod. viii. 15. 32; ix. 34. 35). And God punished Pharaoh by means of his sin. Because he rejected God's counsel (Luke vii. 30), God gave him over to a reprobate mind (Rom. i. 28), and chastened him by the consequence of his own wickedness (Jer. ii. 19), that the world might know that men are tormented by their own abominations (Wisdom xii. 23). Wherewithal a man sinneth, by the same also shall he be punished. See Wisdom xi. 11, where is an excellent comment on the History of Pharaoh, and a happy illustration, by a Jewish writer, of this argument of St. Paul with the Jews. And St. Paul has explained himself already (Rom. ii. 5). Thou according to thy own hardness, κατὰ τὴν σκληρότητά σου, and impenitent heart, storest up to thyself wrath, θησαυρίζεις σεαυτῷ ὀργήν.

God hardens no man's heart who does not first harden his own heart. He does every thing to soften man's heart, as He did to Pharaoh. And when this softening process is resisted by man's sin, then God, Who desired to show His love by the former, proceeds to display His power by the latter: and so He is glorified in all, even by those who resist Him. Cp. Bp. Andrewes (ii. 68; v. 447).

The following remarks may be cited as showing the judgment of Christian Antiquity on this subject;

God hardened Pharaoh's heart; but then he had deserved ruin to be prepared for him, because he had denied God, and rejected His ambassadors. And God, by desiring that man should be restored to life, shows that He never appointed him to death; for He would rather have the repentance of a sinner than his death. Tertullian (c. Marcion. ii. 14). See also c. Marcion. iii. 6. Blunt on the Early Fathers, p. 622.

Origen (de Princip. iii. 1—8) refers to this ninth chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans for the support of the doctrines of Human Free Will, and of Universal Redemption. And he says, "Let us begin with what is said in Holy Scripture concerning the hardening of Pharaoh's heart, and together with this we will inquire into what is said by the Apostle, 'whom God wills He pities, and whom He wills He hardens.'

"These texts are used by certain heterodox persons, who almost destroy Free Will by introducing the doctrine of natures incapable of salvation, and of others incapable of being lost." Origen.

On the whole we may conclude in the words of Bp. Pearson (Minor Works, i. p. 251), "This Ninth Chapter of the Epistle to the Romans, which now appears to be the groundwork of the whole doctrine of Predestination and Reprobation, was never so interpreted by the Fathers of near four centuries so as to have any direct reference to that doctrine."

Cp. Blunt, Early Fathers, p. 630.

19. τῷ γὰρ βουλήματι αὐτοῦ τίς ἀνθέστηκε;] For who resisteth His Will?

True, no one can resist God's Will. But it must be remembered that God's Will is regulated by God's Wisdom, Equity, and Love. He doeth every thing "by the counsel of His Will" (Eph. i. 11, where see note); and He wills that all men should have free will, and He offers grace to all, and sets before them life and death, and commands them to choose life (Deut. xxx. 19). And Christ came into the world to do His Will (Heb. x. 7), and to save the world; and God willeth all men to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of His truth. (1 Tim. ii. 4.)

Observe also that St. Paul does not say θελήματι here, but βουλήματι.

Doth St. Paul here mean God's revealed will? Surely not. Thousands have resisted and daily do resist that will, the will and commandments of God. But he meaneth it of His secret will, the will of His everlasting counsel and purposes; and that too of an effectual resistance, such as shall hinder the accomplishment of that Will. All resistance is vain as to that end. (Ps. cxviii. 6; cxxxv. 6. Isa. viii. 9, 10.) Bp. Sanderson (iii. p. 340). See also Bp. Andrewes (v. 398, 399).

But although no one can resist God's secret will, yet it is not to be imagined that God can will any thing that is unjust, or against those very rules whereby He hath taught us to judge what Equity requires. Hooker (App. book v. p. 563).

20. Μενοῦνγε] Nay, but. Cp. Rom. x. 18.

21—23. Ἢ οὐκ ἔχει ἐξουσίαν] Is it so, that the Potter hath not authority (ἐξουσίαν, lordship, dominion, not δύναμιν, mere physical force) over the clay to make from the same lump one vessel to honour, and another to dishonour?

But if (εἰ δὲ, not pressing this comparison) God, in the exercise of His Will (θέλων) to manifest (by examples) His Wrath, and to make known His Power, endured with much long-suffering vessels of wrath fitted for destruction (by themselves), and in order that He might make known the riches of His glory on vessels of mercy, which He Himself before prepared unto glory.

Observe the words σκεῦος, σκεύη ὀργῆς, σκεύη ἐλέους, and compare the phrase σκεῦος ἐκλογῆς applied to St. Paul himself, x Hos. 1. 9, 10. Isa. 43 6. John 11. 52. 2 Cor. 6. 18.

23 καὶ ἵνα γνωρίσῃ τὸν πλοῦτον τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ σκεύη ἐλέους, ἃ προητοίμασεν εἰς δόξαν, 24 οὓς καὶ ἐκάλεσεν ἡμᾶς, οὐ μόνον ἐξ Ἰουδαίων, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐξ ἐθνῶν, 25 [v] ὡς καὶ ἐν τῷ Ὡσηὲ λέγει, Καλέσω τὸν οὐ λαόν μου λαόν μου, καὶ τὴν οὐκ ἠγαπημένην ἠγαπημένην. 26 [x] Καὶ ἔσται ἐν τῷ τόπῳ οὗ ἐρρήθη αὐτοῖς, Οὐ λαός μου ὑμεῖς, ἐκεῖ κληθήσονται υἱοὶ Θεοῦ ζῶντος. 27 [y] Ἡσαΐας δὲ κράζει ὑπὲρ τοῦ Ἰσραήλ, Ἐὰν ᾖ ὁ ἀριθμὸς τῶν υἱῶν Ἰσραὴλ ὡς ἡ ἄμμος τῆς θαλάσσης, τὸ κατάλειμμα σωθή-

y Isa. 10. 20—23. ch. 11. 4—6.

Acts ix. 15, where see note. Σκεύη ὀργῆς are objects of God's wrath; σκεύη ἐλέους, persons receiving mercy.

The metaphor is from a vessel,

(1) Receiving into itself either what is bitter or sweet;

(2) Beautiful, or the reverse;

(3) To be broken in pieces, or to be stored up. See Vorst, de Heb. c. ii. p. 34.

(1) St. Paul does not say that God endured the vessels of wrath as if they were a certain fixed definite number, but he says "vessels of wrath," without the article. And σκεύη ὀργῆς, vessels of wrath, are said to be κατηρτισμένα εἰς ἀπώλειαν, made fit for destruction, a remarkable oxymoron, intimating that destruction is the very opposite of the design for which they were made; that it is a perversion of their constitution. Compare the similar oxymoron in 1 Cor. viii. 10, he shall be edified to eat meats offered to idols, to his own destruction.

These Vessels have not thus been fitted for destruction, thus made to be unmade, by their Divine Maker; but by their own sin abusing the Free Will and Grace which He has given them.

(2) And observe, in speaking of σκεύη ἐλέους, vessels of mercy, St. Paul changes his language, and says that God prepared them for glory.

(3) St. Paul does not say that God makes vessels like clay, destitute of free will, and for destruction. He asks whether the Potter has not power to make some vessels to honour and some to dishonour? But he does not even put the case of a Potter making any vessel for destruction. God has absolute sovereignty over all. But it is a part of the Will of the Divine and Almighty Artificer (Jer. xviii. 6. Isa. xiv. 7; xlv. 9) that the human Vessels which He makes from the clay of the earth should have free will. He has breathed into that clay a living soul (Gen. ii. 7); He has made it in His own Image (Gen. i. 27; 1 Cor. xi. 7), not destroyed after the Fall nor after the Flood. (Gen. ix. 6.) He has made that rational divinely-inspired vessel to be a casket of divine Grace. (2 Cor. iv. 7.) He has united it to the Godhead by the Incarnation of Christ. He has made it to be a shrine of the Holy Ghost. (1 Cor. iii. 16, 17; vi. 19. 2 Cor. vi. 16.) He has made every vessel a vessel of honour, and has made no vessel to be a vessel of wrath. He has, indeed, given each vessel free will to choose evil as well as good (Exod. viii. 32); but He exhorts and commands them to choose good, and does every thing short of compulsion in order that they may choose it, and be saved.

St. Paul sufficiently explains himself by saying that God, with much long-suffering, endures (not makes) vessels of wrath. And he declares in another place, that whosoever shall cleanse himself from evil, shall be a vessel to honour, sanctified and fit for the Master's use, and prepared for every good work (2 Tim. ii. 20).

Cp. the excellent remarks of Origen here in Catenâ, p. 340—346.

God does not make, but find, vessels of wrath. He does not find, but make, vessels of grace. And He wills no one to be a vessel of wrath, but every one to be a vessel of grace. Therefore all murmuring is excluded on the one hand, and all boasting on the other. They who are rejected, are rejected for their sins; they who are elected, are chosen by God's mercy in Christ.

The Apostle completes his argument by saying to those whom he is addressing, those even whom he is censuring and confuting, and whom he desires to comfort as well as censure and confute, that even they, as well as the Gentiles, are called to be vessels of mercy, and in God's will and desire are inheritors of Glory. See vv. 24. 33.

No man's heart was created stony by God, but becomes so by sin (Origen, de Princip. iii. c. 1); who ascribes to the Valentinian heretics those doctrines which have been propagated in modern times by the adherents of Calvin.

Origen's words are, "Some say that certain persons are created ψυχικοὶ (animal), and that others are created πνευματικοὶ (spiritual). The followers of Valentinus say this. But what is this to us, who belong to the Church, and who censure those who introduce (the doctrine of) natures constituted for salvation, and others constituted for perdition? Φύσεις ἐκ κατασκευῆς σωζομένας, ἢ ἐκ κατασκευῆς ἀπολλυμένας."

On this important subject, and the controversies emerging from it, the student may be referred to Hooker's Papers mentioned above, p. 240; Bp. Andrewes on the Lambeth Articles in Minor Works, p. 294—300, and printed separately in English, Lond. 1700; Bp. Sanderson's Papers and Correspondence with Hammond, v. 254—354; Dr. Hammond's Χάρις καὶ Εἰρήνη, Vol. i. p. 546 of his Works; Playfere's Appello Evangelium, Lond. 1651; Barrow on Universal Redemption, iii. p. 315—425; Sermons on Justifying Faith, Vol. iv. p. 105; Professor Browne on the XVIIth Article; Archdeacon Winchester and Waterland on the case of Arian Subscription, Vol. ii. p. 375—386 (ed. Van Mildert); and to some other authorities cited in the present Editor's Occasional Sermons, No. iii. p. 78, and vi. p. 148.

23. ἃ προητοίμασεν εἰς δόξαν] whom He prepared before unto glory. The προετοιμασία of God, as far as it respects individuals, is (as our XVIIth Article expresses it) a counsel secret to us. God foreknows from Eternity every one, who will stand on the right hand, and who will stand on the left hand, at the Great Day. But He has not divulged this secret to any man, even to His greatest Saints (1 Cor. ix. 27), except perhaps by special revelation on the eve of death for His sake. (2 Tim. iv. 8.)

Man cannot foreknow his own eternal state or the future state of any one. Therefore the Apostles designate all members of the Visible Church as Elect. (1 Pet. i. 2. Col. iii. 12. 1 Thess. i. 4. 2 John i. 2. 13. Rom. viii. 33.) So S. Ignatius calls the Church of Ephesus elect (Eph. i.), and the Church of Tralles ἐκλεκτή (c. 1); and the ἐκλεκτοὶ are opposed to heathens. (Martyr. Polyc. c. 6.) The whole Church Visible is elect, in the eye of man.

Therefore it is a desperate doctrine to say, "If I shall be saved, I shall be saved;" and it is rightly so called by Bp. Bancroft (Hampton Court Conf. 1604, pp. 178. 180, ed. Cardwell). We ought (he says) to reason ascendendo thus: I live in obedience to God, and in love with my neighbour, therefore I trust that God hath elected me to salvation. And not thus to reason descendendo, God hath predestinated me to Life, therefore, though I sin never so grievously, I shall not be damned, for whom He once loveth, He loveth to the end.

This, indeed, as our XVIIth Article teaches, "is a most dangerous downfall."

Hereupon follow these duties—

(1) We are not curiously to inquire and to search out God's secret Will touching personal Election or Reprobation, but to adore it.

(2) His Revealed Will doth especially concern us. And this Will is expressed in His Commandments and in His Promises contained in His Holy Word. And our study must be to form our lives according to that Will and Word. And the Revealed Will of God is, that every one who seeth the Son and "believeth on Him, should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John iii. 16).

(3) We are to avail ourselves thankfully of all those means of "Grace, whereby God inviteth the whole world to receive wisdom, and hath opened the gates of His visible Church unto all, testifying His Will and Purpose to have all saved, if the let were not in themselves." Hooker, ii. p. 588. Bp. Andrewes, v. p. 398.

25—33. ὡς καὶ ἐν τῷ Ὡσηέ] He continues his endeavour to convince the Jews from their own prophetical Scriptures, that what he is endeavouring to prove is no new doctrine, but had been already clearly revealed to them by God in the sacred books which they had in their hands, viz.

(1) That the Gentiles should be called (Hos. ii. 23);

(2) That the Jews, however prosperous and numerous, should be reduced to a small remnant of faithful men;

(3) That this was due to their own act in stumbling on the elect precious Stone of Sion, as it had been foretold they would do. (Isa. viii. 14; xxviii. 16.)

27. ὑπὲρ τοῦ Ἰσραήλ] concerning Israel. (2 Cor. viii. 23.)

— τὸ κατάλειμμα] the remnant, i. e. only the small number of those who believe in Christ. Cp. Chrys., Cyril, Theodoret. A, B have ὑπόλειμμα, and so Lach., Tisch., Alf.

The prophetical reference was principally to the small residue of the Captivity who would return to Palestine. This is applied by the Apostle, in a secondary sense, to the faithful remnant of believers in Christ.

28. λόγον γὰρ συντελῶν καὶ συντέμνων ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ] for God will be consummating and cutting short His account, or reckoning, in righteousness. These words are from the LXX Version of Isaiah x. 23, where the Original has כָּלָה נֶחֱרָצָה שֹׁטֵף בָּאֲדֹנָי יְהוִה צְבָאוֹת, a consummation is decided, or cut short, abounding in righteousness; because the Lord of Hosts will make a consummation, and that a decided one, one cut short, in the midst of all the earth.

There seems to be here, in the mind of the Prophet, a contrast between the paucity of the numbers to which the Israelites are to be reduced, and the abundance of righteousness vouchsafed to them. The quantity will be small, but the quality will be good. See the note of Drusius here.

The Seventy Interpreters give a paraphrase (not a literal translation) which embodies this sense, and which is adopted by the Apostle.

The word λόγος, as used by them, appears to signify an account or reckoning, and, derivatively, a sum or catalogue of people.

The sense therefore is; "Summing up and cutting short the reckoning." The λόγος is the account or muster-roll of the people.

The census of the Israelites will be cut short to a small number, but the smallness of number will be amply compensated by the righteousness with which God will endue it by virtue of its Faith in Christ.

Therefore the Prophet Isaiah proceeds to comfort Israel in this its diminution and decay. See x. 24 and xi. 1—10, where he speaks of Christ having righteousness as the girdle of His loins.

This interpretation harmonizes well with the tenor of St. Paul's argument, who is administering comfort to the Jews at the same time that he is showing them that very many of their nation would reject God's proffered offer of Justification through Faith in Christ.

30, 31. Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν;] What then shall we say? That Gentiles, they which follow not after Righteousness (as you Jews understand the word, that of the Law), attained to Righteousness (not such Righteousness as you follow after, but [δὲ] the Righteousness which is of Faith); but that Israel, following after the Law of Righteousness, did not reach the standard of the Law, which has only been attained by the perfect obedience of Christ, which is imputed to us through Faith.

Also in v. 32 Elz. adds νόμου after ἔργων, but it is not in A, B, F, G.

V. 33 Elz. inserts πᾶς before πιστεύων against the authority of the best MSS.

Here the Apostle returns to his main position, which is, that the Gentiles (that is, all of every nation under heaven), who believe in Christ, and are incorporated in Him, are the true Israel, the Elect People of God, whom He foreknew from Eternity. See also v. 33.

CH. X. 1. Ἀδελφοί] Brethren; a conciliatory address, introducing an affectionate expostulation with the Jews.

— ἡ εὐδοκία] the good will of my heart, and my prayer to God on their behalf, is for their salvation.

Εὐδοκία is beneplacitum, in which I should acquiesce with joy, as a blessed consummation. Probably he uses this word, rather than ἐλπὶς or ἐπιθυμία, because he wishes to represent the salvation of the Jews as a thing so consonant to God's wishes and counsel, that as far as He is concerned it is as good as done; and the Apostle delights in looking back, in imagination, upon that blessed result, the salvation of Israel, as already accomplished.

Besides, this word εὐδοκία appropriately connects their salvation with the Song of the Angels which proclaimed the glad tidings of Salvation to the world. (Luke ii. 14.)

The reading of this verse is revised according to the best MSS. Elz. has ἡ πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν ὑπὲρ τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ ἐστιν κ.τ.λ.

— εἰς σωτηρίαν] for their salvation. He assumes, therefore, that, although now rejected by God for their rejection of Christ, they may (if they will return to Him) be saved.

3. ἀγνοοῦντες τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ δικαιοσύνην] They not knowing, not considering, the Righteousness of God, Who alone is Righteous, and Who alone can communicate Righteousness, and Who has given it to us in Christ, "the Lord Our Righteousness" (see above on i. 17; iii. 21), and desiring to build up the crazy superstructure of their own Righteousness on the sandy foundation of Works done by themselves.

Contrast with this St. Paul's declaration concerning himself; I count all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung that I may win Christ and be found in Him, not having mine own righteousness, which is from the Law, but that which is through Faith in Christ, the righteousness from God bestowed upon Faith (Phil. iii. 7—9).

4. τέλος γὰρ νόμου Χριστός] for Christ is the end of the Law for Righteousness to every one that believeth. For through His Incarnation and perfect Obedience in our Nature, and by our Incorporation and In-dwelling in Him, we are regarded by God as righteous in Him Who is our Righteousness. See Gal. iii. 24, and above, Introduction to this Epistle, p. 185. 198.

5. τὴν δικαιοσύνην τὴν ἐκ τοῦ νόμου] the righteousness which proceeds from the Law, as distinguished from that righteousness which is from Faith. (ix. 30. Phil. iii. 9.)

— ὁ ποιήσας] See on Gal. iii. 10—13. 24.

6—9. Μὴ εἴπῃς—Τίς ἀναβήσεται—σωθήσῃ] Say not in thine heart who shall ascend into heaven? The Holy Spirit, speaking by the Apostle, gives here a divine Exposition of the words of God, spoken by Moses (Deut. xxx. 11. 14); and declares that the Levitical Law was a preparation for the Gospel; and, that however complex the system of the Law might appear to be, how much soever it might deal with external observances, and however difficult it might seem to be to perform, yet that it was, in its sum and substance, simple, spiritual, and easy; a truth which was fully realized in Christ, Who is the End of the Law.

"The Righteousness that is of Faith" is introduced here as speaking. It is, as it were, personified. For Christ is our Righteousness. (See Jer. xxiii. 6; xxxiii. 16.) He is made to us Righteousness. (1 Cor. i. 30.) He offers Himself to us. He obeys for us, and in us. He is our Emmanuel, God with us, and in us. He is in our mouth and our heart. Christ liveth in us. (Gal. ii. 20.) By Him, and in Him alone, we think, speak, and do what is pleasing to God. Thou art not required to do any great thing to save thyself. Christ has come down to thee; He has taken thy nature, He has raised Himself, and in raising Himself He has raised thee. He has fulfilled the Law for thee, and thus brought it home to thee, and clothed thee with His Righteousness. Believe in what He has done for thee. Put thy trust in Him as God every where present (Ps. cxxxix. 7, and cp. Origen here), and yet Incarnate as Man. Rise with Him from the grave of sin, and thou shalt rise to everlasting glory. Cp. Aug. Serm. 143, and see on John xx. 17, and on 2 Cor. v. 16.

9. Κύριον Ἰησοῦν] The Lord Jesus. Jesus as Jehovah. He is referring to Jer. xxiii. 6, and to what he is about to cite in v. 13, Joel ii. 32.

Our Saviour in the New Testament is called Lord, as that name is the interpretation of Jehovah. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. ii. p. 238. See above on ix. 5, and below, v. 12.

10. ὁμολογεῖται εἰς σωτηρίαν] confession is made unto salvation.

We may not think that we glorify God sufficiently, if with the heart we believe in Him, unless with the mouth also we be ready to confess Him. Bp. Sanderson, i. 344.

In the heart Faith is seated, with the tongue confession is made; between these two salvation is completed. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. i. p. 23, where see more on the necessity of a public confession of the Faith, which necessity (says Bp. Pearson) the Church hath thought a sufficient ground to command the recitation of the Creed at the first initiation into the Church by Baptism, and a particular repetition of it publicly as often as the Sacrament of the Eucharist is administered, and a constant inculcation of the same by the Clergy to the People.

12. ὁ γὰρ αὐτὸς Κύριος πάντων] for the same is Lord of all, being abundant in riches of mercy unto all them that call upon Him. Cp. v. 9, where Jesus is called Lord; and here He is presented as an object of divine worship.

13, 14, 15.] ἐπικαλέσωνται—πιστεύσωσιν—ἀκούσωσι—κηρύξωσιν] Elz. has the future indicative here. But B and other Uncials have the conjunctive aorist, which appears to be preferable, and is adopted by Lachmann and Alf. See above on vi. 1.

14. Πῶς οὖν ἐπικαλέσωνται] How then can they call on Him in whom they have not believed? The desire of God, as expressed in the foregoing verse, is that all men should call upon Him and be saved. And God who desires that end, must be supposed to desire also the means necessary for the attainment of that end. He who desires that all should be saved, desires that the Gospel of salvation should be preached to all.

For, how can they call upon Him on Whom they have not believed, and how believe in Him of Whom they have not heard, and how can any one hear without a preacher, and how can any one preach except he be sent of God?

Here then, says St. Paul, am I, sent to preach to you and to the world; and the other Apostles and Evangelists are sent for this end. Therefore be not ye exasperated against me, the Apostle of the Gentiles. Do not say, with your brethren at Jerusalem, when I announced my mission to them, "Away with him, it is not fit that he should live" (Acts xxii. 21, 22). My mission is from God, He has willed that all, both Jews and Gentiles, should receive the Gospel; and He who wills that all should hear and believe and call upon Him, also wills that we should preach to all. He has sent us, the Apostles of Christ, to you and to them. And accordingly, our Hebrew Prophets, so far from envying the Gentiles the glad tidings of the Gospel, rejoiced in spirit to behold the Apostolic Heralds going forth to preach it to all Nations, and blessed the feet of them who carry it throughout the world. (Isa. lii. 7.) Imitate your own prophet Isaiah; receive them whom he rejoiced to see.

16. Ἀλλ' οὐ πάντες] Howbeit all did not hearken to the Gospel. He thus states an objection.

You may say to me, if what you preach concerning Christ is from God, would it not be universally received?

No. The same Prophet who hails the messengers of the Gospel goes on to predict that all will not believe the message (Isa. liii. 1), "Who hath believed our report (ἀκοῆς)?" So asks your Prophet, Isaiah, when he is about to deliver that celebrated prophecy, concerning Christ's humility, and sufferings, and the expiatory sacrifice offered, and the vicarious and plenary satisfaction made by His death for the sins of the world, and their justification (v. 11) thence ensuing. Thus your unbelief is even a proof of the truth of the Gospel. Observe, also, Isaiah calls the Gospel our report. He appropriates it as his own message, as the message of himself and your other Hebrew Prophets, as well as of us, Christ's Apostles.

He calls it a report (ἀκοή). Therefore belief comes by report, and report (ἀκοή, Matt. iv. 24) by the word of God.

Ἀκοή is שֵׁמַע (shema), what comes by hearing, and therefore requires oral communication, preaching. Hence in the New Testament ἀκοὴ "significat concionem, prædicationem." Vorst. de Hebr. N. T. p. 64.

18. Μενοῦν γε] Nay verily; in God's will and desire, as our Hebrew King and Psalmist has prophesied, the Gospel is preached every where; the world of Grace is commensurate with the world of Nature. The Church of God is not limited to Judæa, or to the Jewish nation (as you Jews would confine it), but as David himself, the Jewish Prophet and King, declares, comparing it with the elements of the Natural Universe, it is co-extensive with the world. The light of Christ is like that of the Sun. Christ is the Sun of Righteousness. His Voice is universal like that of the Elements themselves. (Ps. xix. 5—8.)

Jerusalem itself had seen a glimpse of the future fulfilment of this prophecy, when, on the Day of Pentecost, the Jews, who were dispersed in every climate under heaven, and had come up to Jerusalem for the Feast, saw the outpouring of the Holy Ghost, and heard the Gospel preached by the Apostles who were sent and ordained by God to evangelize the world, and when they all heard in their own tongues the wonderful works of God. (Acts ii. 5—11.)

20. ἀποτολμᾷ καὶ λέγει] Casting away all fear of the Jews, and discarding all national prepossessions and prejudices, Isaiah boldly declares the preference given to the Gentiles. (Isa. lxv. 1, 2.)

21. τὸν Ἰσραήλ] Winer, p. 103.

— ἀντιλέγοντα] gainsaying. The very word used by the Jews at Rome to describe the treatment received by the Gospel from themselves (Acts xxviii. 22). See there v. 22—29, in illustration of this chapter.

CH. XI. 1. Μὴ ἀπώσατο ὁ Θεὸς τὸν λαὸν αὐτοῦ;] Did God cast off His own people? Observe the aorist. When God accepted an Universal Church, from all Nations, in Christ, did He, by so doing, cast off His own People, the Jews?

St. Paul thus introduces an answer to the Jewish objection, that his doctrine of the Divine foreknowledge and election of a Church Universal in Christ (see on viii. 29), and of Universal Redemption by Him, and of the filial adoption of the Gentiles by God, exposed God Himself to the charge of fickleness, and of injustice to the Jews.

The question between the Apostle and the Jews, as discussed in this chapter, has been very well stated as follows by Hooker;

Thus it stood with the Jewish nation—that all those spiritual favours of grace which God had bestowed upon them were voluntary; that His choice of the Jews before others was free, and on their part without desert; that He in His promise made to their fathers remained stedfast; but the true construction thereof they did not conceive, because they were obstinate, and would not understand; finally, that whereas the light, which their fathers would have greatly rejoiced to see, had presented itself to them, and was rejected; if God did now depart from them, being thus repelled, and were content to be found of the Gentiles, who sought not Him, but He them, as the one had no cause to grudge, so neither had the other any to boast.

All this the Apostle proveth in the Ninth, the Tenth, and Eleventh to the Romans. At the length, in consideration that the Jews sometimes were a people whom God so wonderfully did affect; a people to whom He had given so many privileges, honours, pre-eminences, above the rest of the whole world; a people, with whose forefathers He had made so many covenants and leagues of mercy; a people, for whose advancement so mighty nations had been quelled; a people, for whose defence the Angels had taken arms, the sun and moon had been stayed in their course; a people that had filled heaven with so many Patriarchs, Prophets, Saints, Martyrs; a people that had been the well-spring of life to all nations; a people, the top of whose kindred sitteth at the right hand of God, and is the Author of Salvation unto all the world; these things, considered in such sort as we may think an Apostolic spirit did consider them, after long discourse against them, the question is moved, Hath God then cast off His people? (xi. 1.) Is there no hope, that the very Nation itself shall recover what it now hath lost? Have they stumbled that they might fall? God forbid. Nay their fall hath occasioned salvation to arise unto the Gentiles; and the Gentiles not unlikely to be a mean of restoring salvation unto them again; that as now they are losers to our gain, so in time our gain may be their abundance. Hooker (App. bk. v.).

— ἐγὼ Ἰσραηλίτης] For I also am an Israelite by birth, a Hebrew of Hebrews, of the tribe of Benjamin, the son of Israel by his beloved wife Rachel, not by Leah, or by one of their handmaids. Cp. Acts xxii. 3. 2 Cor. xi. 22. Phil. iii. 5. God did not cast off the Jewish nation, when He admitted all Nations to His Church; for I who address you in the Name of Christ am a Jew.

He says this not only to the Jews, but also to the Gentiles (see v. 13), lest they should imagine that God had rejected the Jews for their sakes, and so be elated with pride, and fall by presumption, and look on the Jews with disdain.

There is, therefore, a remarkable propriety in this reference to himself. He is not speaking of himself, as an individual, but as an Apostle of Christ; as the Apostle of the Gentiles (xi. 13). Do not imagine (he says to the Jews) that God cast off His ancient People when He admitted the Gentiles to the Church. No; I who am His chosen instrument for admitting them (cp. Acts ix. 15; xxii. 21; xxvi. 17) am a Jew. They to whom I am sent, owe their admission, under God, to one of your nation. They are spiritual children of a Jew. God admits them by me. He has not therefore cast off you, whose fellow-countryman I am.

On the other side, he reminds the Gentiles of what they owe to the Jews, who are used by God as His chosen instruments to bring them to Christ.

2. ὃν προέγνω] whom He foreknew, and chose, with this divine foreknowledge, not for any merit of their own, but because He foresaw and foreknew them obeying the Law of that Nature which was His own work, and not marring that image of Himself in which He created them, and not rebelling against the Law of that Nature, by enslaving themselves to the debasing corruptions of that Nature, and to the evil dominion of Satan, and because He foreknew them, not trusting in themselves, or in any supposed righteousness of their own, but as building themselves in God's truth, and as relying on His promises in Christ, and as dwelling by Faith in Him, as Abraham did. (John viii. 56. Rom. iv. 3. 9.) See above on viii. 29.

— ἐν Ἠλίᾳ] in the history of Elijah (I Kings xix. 10. 18). Cp. Mark xii. 26.

— ὡς ἐντυγχάνει τῷ Θεῷ] how he expostulates with God, and appeals against Israel, as if they had all fallen from the right faith.

The sense is, If even Elijah was deceived in his estimate of the number of God's faithful servants, how much more may you reckon then amiss.

k Acts 13. 46. ch. 10. 19.

This passage affords no countenance to the notion, which has been deduced from it by some, that the Church of God ever ceases to be Visible. See Rom. viii. 29. Hooker iii. 1. 8.

After Ἰσραήλ, Elz. adds λέγων, which is not in the best MSS.

3. τὰ θυσιαστήρια] Elz. prefers καί, not in the best MSS.

4. ὁ χρηματισμός] the response of God (cp. Matt. ii. 12. 22), Who alone can read the heart, and Who now sees a faithful remnant in Israel, as He did even in the worst times of its history.

— τῇ Βάαλ] to Baal. Observe the feminine article, τῇ. The Hebrew בַּעַל (Baal) is masculine, but in the Septuagint, both in the Canonical Books and in the Apocrypha, Βαὰλ has sometimes the masculine, sometimes the feminine, article. Cp. Num. xxii. 41. 1 Kings xvi. 31, with 1 Sam. vii. 4. Hos. ii. 8. Tobit i. 5. Meyer (p. 232), Fritz. (ii. p. 440.)

The reason why the Septuagint sometimes used the feminine, and why St. Paul adopts it here, appears to be, because not only a heathen god, but a goddess also (Astarté) was worshipped under the name of Baal, and because by this variety of gender the reader is reminded that there was no principle of unity in this heathen worship; and thus the vanity of the worship itself is declared.

6. εἰ δὲ ἐξ ἔργων—ἔργον] Not in A, C, D, E, F, G, nor in Vulg., Coptic, Sahidic, Æthiopic, and Armenian Versions. But it is found in B (omitting the first ἐστὶ after ἔτι, and having χάρις instead of the second ἔργον), J, and the Greek Fathers, and in the Syriac and Arabic Versions, and in almost all the Cursive MSS. Cp. iv. 5. Eph. ii. 8, 9.

The probabilities against interpolations, especially of so many words, in so ancient and numerous authorities, seem to be greater than for omission, especially as the clause in question might be regarded by some copyists as tautologous. The clause is therefore retained in the text, with a change in the accentuation of ἐστι, so that the sense may be—there is no longer any place for the existence of Grace. Cp. a somewhat similar omission in xiv. 6.

The sense of the whole seems to be as follows. But if the election is not by man's merit, but by God's free Grace, it is no more of works; for, if this were so, Grace thus becomes no longer Grace, but would be like wages paid as due for a work done. If the election is of human works, that is, if the remnant chosen by God, is chosen on the ground of its own human merit, there is no longer such a thing as Divine Grace; for, if there were, then the work would not be work entitled to wages as a due, but it would receive that which it receives only as a boon.

7. τοῦτο] So the best MSS. Elz. τούτου.

— ἡ ἐκλογή] the Election. The faithful remnant which has profited by the free grace given to it by God. Ἐκλογὴ is the abstract for the concrete ἐκλεκτοί, elect, as περιτομὴ, for the Jews, and ἀκροβυστία, for the Gentiles (ii. 26; iii. 30; iv. 9).

— οἱ δὲ λοιποί] the rest, those Jews who were left behind when the others (the ἐκλογὴ) were chosen.

— ἐπωρώθησαν] were hardened. πώρωσις is a medical term applied to the bones or induration of the flesh, so as to become like porous stone, πῶρος. Hesych.

Observe the aorists here, ἐπέτυχεν and ἐπωρώθησαν. The same event, the Crucifixion of Christ, brought with it Righteousness to the one party, and Obduration to the rest. He was there set on the Cross for the fall, and also for the uprising of many in Israel. (Luke ii. 34.) He was a stone of stumbling to the one, but the Rock of Salvation to the other. (1 Pet. ii. 6. 8.)

8. πνεῦμα κατανύξεως] a spirit of stupor. κατάνυξις is the word used by the LXX here (Isaiah xxix. 10) for the Hebrew תַּרְדֵּמָה (tardemah), torpor, numbness, slumber, insensibility, from root רָדַם in Niphal, to be insensible.

It is supposed by some (e. g. Grotius? Rosenm.) that the word κατάνυξις, as used here by the LXX, is not formed from κατα-νύσσω, depungo, but from κατα-νύω, an unknown root, equivalent to κατανεύω, whence καταννστάζω, to nod in slumber.

But this would seem to be a forced deduction.

The true meaning of κατάνυξις, as used by the LXX here and in Ps. lx. 3, is what the word κατανύσσω properly imports, namely,

(1) de-figo, to nail down, to rivet, so as to make insensible, whether by lethargy, fear, consternation, sorrow, pain, or any strong passion. Hence Lev. x. 3, κατενύχθη Ἀαρὼν, and 1 Kings xxi. 27, κατενύγη Ἀχαὰβ, he was struck dumb with sorrow, and so remained, as it were, nailed to the ground. So the Latin "defixus metu, mœrore." Cp. Bentley's note on the use of affigo, as applied to the mind. Horat. Serm. ii. 2. 79. So προσηλοῦν, προσπερονᾶν τὴν ψυχὴν τῇ γῇ. Cp. Kuinoel on Acts ii. 37, κατενύγησαν τῇ καρδίᾳ, and the word is therefore rightly explained by Chrysostom here, by ἐμπαγῆναι, καὶ προσηλῶσθαι.

(2) What is transfixed becomes insensible even from pain, and so S. Cyprian, quoted by A Lapide, seems to have understood the word (Epist. lib. i. 3), "Judæi, transpunctione mentis alienatione dementis, Dei præcepta contemnunt, medelam vulneris negligunt."

(3) And they were thus more obstinately riveted in their own prejudices. See Chrys., Theoph., Œcum.

On the sense of the prophecy, see next note.

9. Δαυίδ.] See Ps. lxix. 22. A Psalm spoken in the person of the Messiah on the Cross, and there pronouncing, as from a prophetic seat, and from a judicial throne, a prediction and a verdict on the Jews, for their scorn, rejection, and crucifixion of Himself. See v. 22. A Psalm therefore used by the Church on Good Friday.

This consideration may serve to remove the objections that have been made against the Psalmist, as if these were words of human passion and vindictive retribution. He who there speaks is Christ, the Divine Prophet, the Righteous Judge of all. And the judgment which He pronounces is more awful because pronounced by Him in His humility.

This reflection also may explain the cause of the rejection of those Jews who were rejected by God. He sent them a spirit of stupor. He made their table to be a snare. The tables of God's Word, the tables of the Decalogue, the tables of the Shewbread, the table of the Paschal Lamb itself, became snares to them. He cursed their blessings (Mal. ii. 2) because they rejected the Blessed One Who came from Heaven to save them.

11. μὴ ἔπταισαν] did they stumble in order that they should fall? fall utterly, as it were, down a precipice, so as to be irrecoverably lost? Was this God's purpose in allowing them to stumble, and in punishing them by their own stumbling?

25 [u] Οὐ γὰρ θέλω ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν, ἀδελφοὶ, τὸ μυστήριον τοῦτο, ἵνα μὴ ἦτε παρ'

Some of them, it is true, fell, ἔπεσον (v. 22), they who stubbornly resisted God's grace, and died in unrepented sin. But taken as a whole, the Jewish Nation has not fallen. Their condition is not described as a πτῶμα, but a παράπτωμα. They have fallen aside from the right path, but they have not fallen down utterly, so as never again to arise.

— τῷ αὐτῶν παραπτώματι ἡ σωτηρία τοῖς ἔθνεσιν—12. πλοῦτος κόσμου] We are not so to understand these expressions (see v. 15) as if it was necessary for the Jews to stumble, in order that the Gentiles might rise.

The offer of the Gospel to all Nations, on equal terms with the Jews, and without submission to the Levitical Law, was, through the envy of the Jews, and through their sin, the occasion of their fall, and was the cause of salvation to the Gentiles.

The reception of the younger brother, in the Gospel, was the occasion of eliciting the sullen anger and the proud self-righteousness, and unfraternal censoriousness and unfilial murmuring of the elder brother (Luke xv. 28—30), and of his going out of his father's house into the field, and of his refusal to come in, and of his being himself an outcast and an exile. But it was not the cause. He himself was the cause of his banishment. If his heart had been right toward God, he would have been among the first to welcome his father's son into his father's house. (Luke xv. 31, 32.) O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself. (Hos. xiii. 9.)

— παραπτώματι] by their falling aside. They have not utterly fallen down a precipice, but they have fallen aside, παρὰ, so that the Gentiles, at their side, may excite them to rise (παραζηλῶσιν).

— εἰς τὸ παραζηλῶσαι αὐτούς] in order to provoke them to jealousy. God's adoption of an elect people from the whole world was ordered by Him in mercy, to provoke the Jews to jealousy, so that they might be more eager to receive the Gospel when they saw others enjoying its privileges.

12. ἥττημα αὐτῶν] their lessening and worsening in regard to God's favour and spiritual wealth and dignity, as well as numerical strength. See 1 Cor. vi. 7.

13. ἐφ' ὅσον μὲν οὖν] in so far, therefore, as I am the Apostle of the Gentiles, I glorify mine office. I am not magnifying myself, but I am doing honour to my ministry to you Gentiles by endeavouring to make it subservient, through your means, to the glorious consummation of the recovery of the Jews.

15. ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν] life from the dead. The restoration of the Jews to God's favour will be like the revival of the dry bones of the valley of Ezekiel (xxxvii. 1—11).

St. Paul seems also to be referring to our Lord's parable as recorded in St. Luke's Gospel,—the Gospel of St. Paul, the Gospel of the Gentile world,—which displays, in a beautiful picture, the subject now before him. (Luke xv. 31.)

Remember, you Gentiles, that you are the younger Brother; you were once dead, and you were received by your Father as alive from the dead. Of you it was once said by your loving Father, "It was meet that we should make merry and be glad, for this thy brother was dead and is alive again." (Luke xv. 32.) Your elder Brother is now dead, but he also will revive. This indeed will be life from the dead, and it is your part to hasten that revival.

16. ἀπαρχὴ] The ἀπαρχὴ differs from the ῥίζα.

The ἀπαρχὴ is the first-fruits of a harvest; the corn which is ground into flour, and kneaded; and so represents the Apostles and first Jewish Christians, particularly those converted on the Day of Pentecost; the earnest and pledge of the world's φύραμα (properly lump or batch) leavened by the Gospel. (Matt. xiii. 33.)

Hence φύραμα is explained by σπέρμα, or seed, in Hesych., Gloss. Alberti, p. 107. And this sense corresponds with the use of the word φύραμα in other places (Gal. v. 9. 1 Cor. v. 6), where it signifies a whole.

The ῥίζα, or root, is Abraham and the Patriarchs. (Jer. xi. 16.) Theodoret.

17. ἀγριέλαιος ὢν ἐνεκεντρίσθης] being a wild olive, thou wast grafted in. Observe the emphatic ἀγριέλαιος made more clear by παρὰ φύσιν (v. 24). Quis inseret oleastrum in olivâ? Oliva solet in oleastro, oleastrum in olivâ nunquam vidimus. Quisquis fecerit, non inveniet baccas nisi oleastri. Hoc ostendens Apostolus, ad Omnipotentiam Dei revocans, Si tu, &c. contra naturam. Augustine (in Ps. lxxii.).

— πιότητος] See Judges ix. 9.

18. μὴ κατακαυχῶ] boast not thou against the branches; but and if thou boastest against them, remember, it is not thou that bearest the root, but it is the root that beareth thee.

19. κλάδοι] branches, not 'the branches.' Elz. prefixes οἱ, but it is not in A, B (see Mai), C, F, G, J.

21. φείσεται] A, C, D, F, G. Elz. φείσηται.

22. τοὺς πεσόντας] those who fell. Some did fall, but not all; see v. 11.

25. ἀπὸ μέρους] in part: not totally; for example, I, the Apostle of the Gentiles, am a Jew (v. 1).

— ἄχρις οὗ τὸ πλήρωμα τῶν ἐθνῶν εἰσέλθῃ] until the fulness of the Gentiles shall have come in. Πλήρωμα is a word specially applied to ships. The full complement of the Gentile world shall enter the Sacred Vessel of the Church, the Ark of Salvation.

Another parallelism with (if not a reference to) St. Luke's Gospel, ἄχρις οὗ πληρωθῶσι καιροὶ ἐθνῶν. (Luke xxi. 24.)

26. πᾶς Ἰσραὴλ σωθήσεται] and so all the Israel of God,—whether literally from the seed of Abraham, or from the Gentile world, children of Abraham's Faith, all true Israelites will be saved. (Theodoret, Augustine, S. Jerome in Isa. xi.) Then the number of the elect will be complete (Rev. vii. 3. 9), and the Harvest of the World will come. (Rev. xiv. 16.)

— ὁ ῥυόμενος] The גֹּאֵל (Goel), the Redeemer. (Isa. xliv. 6; xlvii. 4; lix. 20, 21.)

28. Κατὰ μὲν τὸ εὐαγγέλιον] According to the Gospel, and in relation to it. If they are regarded in this respect, they are enemies of God, and of you also. But this enmity has been occasioned by the extension of God's favour to you (see on v. 11); and so they are ἐχθροὶ δι' ὑμᾶς, enemies through you, and therefore have a claim to your pity; and if they be regarded à parte ante, they are beloved of God on account of their fathers, particularly Abraham, whose children by faith you are, and therefore you are their brethren. Origen.

29. Ἀμεταμέλητα] Not to be repented of; not of such a kind as ever to be revoked by Him. "God is not a man that He should lie, or the son of man that He should repent" of His promises and gifts. (Numb. xxiii. 19. See Rom. iii. 3; ix. 6.)

God chose a people to Himself, and God hath not repented of His own choice; He did not cast off His people (xi. 1, 2.)

30. γάρ] Elz. adds καί, not in the best MSS.

— ἠπειθήσατε] ye disobeyed.

31. ὑμετέρῳ ἐλέει] mercy toward you. So τὴν ἐμὴν ἀνάμνησιν. (Luke xxii. 19. 1 Cor. xi. 24. Cp. Rom. xv. 4. 1 Cor. xv. 31.) Winer, § 22. 7.

32. Συνέκλεισε—τ. π. εἰς ἀπείθειαν] He shut up the whole (race of mankind, τοὺς πάντας, see iii. 9) into Disobedience, in order that He might have mercy upon all. (Luke v. 6. Cp. Gal. iii. 22.) Because they sinned against Him, God punished them by means of their sin. He gave them over to themselves and their own devices (see i. 28). Their Disobedience was like a Prison in which they were held captives. "Peccati pœna Peccatum." "Blindness of heart (says Augustine c. Julian. Pelagian. v. 3) is not only a sin, but it is a punishment by which the proud heart of man is chastised with a fit retribution." But God did this with a merciful intent, in order that He might have compassion on all.

33. Ὦ βάθος κ.τ.λ.] Κρίματα are God's decrees, = מִשְׁפָּטִים (mishpatim); and ὁδοὶ = דְּרָכִים (derachim) are His ways of bringing them to pass.

35. τίς προέδωκεν αὐτῷ] Who first gave to Him? Quis prior dedit illi, quasi suorum gratiâ meritorum? Quis prævenit gratiam, quæ gratis datur? In ipso sunt omnia. Quæ utique? nisi omnia bona quæ ab Illo accepimus; et accepimus ut boni simus? Aug. (Serm. 26); and cp. de Lib. 36. ἐξ αὐτοῦ καὶ δι' αὐτοῦ καὶ εἰς αὐτόν] All our store, as it issued from the fountain of God's grace, so should it issue into the ocean of His glory. For to Him and through Him are all things. Bp. Sanderson (i. 334).

CH. XII. 1. Παρακαλῶ οὖν ὑμᾶς] I exhort you therefore. Observe the conjunction οὖν, therefore, introducing the result of the whole.

After the great argument of the preceding portion of the Epistle on some of the most abstruse questions of Christian Doctrine, St. Paul sums up all with plain rules of Christian Practice;

He thus teaches, that "Love is the fulfilling of the Law" (xiii. 10); that Justification is of no avail without Sanctification; and that all speculations concerning the nature of Faith ought to lead onward to the active performance of Good Works. (Tit. iii. 8.)

On the practice of St. Paul in his Epistles, "after he hath discussed some main points of doctrine or discipline, to propose several good advices and rules, in the observance of which, the life of Christian practice doth consist, and from which might well be compiled a Body of Ethics," see the remarks of Dr. Barrow, Serm. vi. Vol. i. p. 107.

— τὴν λογικὴν λατρείαν ὑμῶν] the rational service of you. Remark ὑμῶν, of you, more emphatic than ὑμετέραν, yours. The Levitical λατρεία, עֲבוֹדָה (abodah) of the Temple (ix. 4), which consisted in great degree of manual service and in bloody sacrifices, has been succeeded in the Christian Church by the sacrifice of Body, Soul, and Spirit, a sacrifice living, not slain,—and λογική, rational, not ὀργανική, or mechanical (Heb. xiii. 15). "Hujus hostiæ altare est cor," the Altar of this victim is the heart. Gregor. (Hom. 22 in Ezek.); and cp. Waterland's Charge on Distinctions of Sacrifice, 1740, p. 58—6.

gion; and Barrow's excellent observations on this subject, Serm. xiii. Vol. iv. p. 303, "On the Truth and Divinity of the Christian Religion."

2. μὴ συσχηματίζεσθε τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ] and be ye not conformed, or configured, to this world. For at your Baptism you renounced it.

A, B, D, E, F, G have the infinitive συσχηματίζεσθαι and μεταμορφοῦσθαι here, and so Lachmann, Alf. But the imperative seems to be preferable. It is in B*, J, and Vulg., Syriac, Æthiopic, and Arabic Versions, and in those of Cod. Aug. and Boerner. And this transition from the Infinitive to the Imperative ("be not ye conformed") gives life, spirit, and beauty to the address, and is quite in the manner of St. Paul. See 1 Cor. x. 1—7. The confusion in the MSS. between αι and ε is so common (from identity of sound in the ancient pronunciation), that the choice between them must be determined by internal considerations.

— μεταμορφοῦσθε] be ye transfigured in your minds; as Christ, in His human body, was transfigured (μετεμορφώθη) on the Mount. (Matt. xvii. 2.)

— εἰς τὸ δοκιμάζειν—τέλειον] in order that you may not follow your own will, but may examine and appreciate what, and how wise and holy, the will of God is; that will, which alone (and not man's will) is the good, and acceptable, and perfect will. See Eph. v. 10, the best comment on this text.

Δοκιμάζειν is not merely to discern nor to try, but to assay the value of. See 1 Thess. v. 21. 1 Cor. iii. 13. 1 Pet. i. 7.

Only the regenerate man, who is renewed in the spirit of his mind by the Holy Ghost, can ascertain and assay God's will, and form a just estimate what it is.

Let no one therefore among you be staggered by the objections of unregenerate persons, whether Jews or Heathens, arguing from the defective and erroneous grounds of unsanctified Reason, against what I, who am the Apostle of Christ, and am inspired by the Holy Ghost, and speak in their Name, "according to the grace given me," declare to be God's will. Spiritual things are spiritually discerned (1 Cor. ii. 14); and the more you grow in grace, the more you will be able to understand and admire the operations of God's will, and the more will your will be conformed to it.

3. μὴ ὑπερφρονεῖν] not to be minded above what he ought to be minded, but to be minded so as to be sober-minded.

On the paronomasia here, see above on 2 Thess. iii. 11, and on Philem. 10. 20, and Winer, p. 560.

— ἑκάστῳ ὡς ὁ Θεὸς—πίστεως] according as God hath dealt out to each man his measure of Faith. The measure of Faith which God has allotted to each man (and not the amount of mere unregenerate Reason, or of pride and confidence which he has in his own intelligence) is to be the Rule according to which he is to be minded.

From the word μερίζω, to allot, to apportion (cp. 1 Cor. vii. 17. Heb. ii. 4), St. Paul is led to speak of each Christian in his proper character as a member (μέλος) of the mystical body of Christ, and thence to prescribe rules of mutual love for the edification of the several members and of the whole Church.

He begins with the higher gift of προφητεία, and then descends to διακονία: he then returns to two branches of προφητεία, namely, διδασκαλία, and παράκλησις, and then speaks of the duty of the πιστοὶ, or faithful Laity; he then re-ascends to the official functions of the προϊστάμενοι, or Clergy; and finally extends himself to the duties of all.

5. οἱ πολλοὶ] we the many (οἱ πολλοὶ) are one body in Christ; where it is plain that in this construction, in this opposition to one, "the many" denote the whole multitude, the complex and aggregate body of Christians. Bentley. See above on v. 15; and so οἱ πολλοὶ is equivalent to all.

— τὸ δέ] So A, B, D, D*, F, G.—Elz. has ὁ δέ. The sense is: But as individuals, members one of another.

— καθ' εἷς] severally. By our Christian calling we are knit together into one mystical body, σύσσωμοι. And thus we are individually one another's members, as all of us collectively are members of Christ. Cp. Bp. Sanderson, i. 212; ii. 277. For similar instances of καθ' εἷς see Mark xiv. 19. John viii. 9. Winer, p. 223.

As to the use of τὸ see xii. 18.

6. προφητείαν] Not here so much prophesying in the sense of foretelling the future; as (1) Preaching: (2) Expounding or Interpretation of Scripture. See this use of προφητεία 1 Thess. v. 20, προφητεύω 1 Cor. xi. 4; xiv. 3, 4. 39.

St. Paul distinguishes προφητεία from διακονία. The first is peculiarly the office of Bishops and of Presbyters; the second of Deacons in the Church. Rosenm.

Indeed the Diaconate was instituted in order that they whose special office it is to teach, might have more leisure to give themselves to Prayer and the Ministry of the Word. Acts vi. 2—4.

— κατὰ τὴν ἀναλογίαν τῆς πίστεως] according to the proportion of the Faith.

The word πίστις is used here as in Eph. iv. 5, "There is one Lord, one Faith;" i. e. there is one and the same body of Christian Doctrine to be believed and professed by all.

And this is the sense in which the word πίστις is used by St. Jude, where he says that it is the duty of all to contend earnestly for "the Faith, once for all delivered to the Saints." (Jude 3.)

It is to be regretted, that the sense of this important declaration of St. Paul has been obscured, and its force weakened, by some who understand the words τὴν ἀναλογίαν τῆς πίστεως to signify merely according to the proportion of your faith; i. e. the faith by which ye believe.

The true meaning of the word πίστις, or Faith, as here used, has been long since declared by Irenæus, i. 2: The Church, although diffused throughout the world, has received the Faith from the Apostles and their disciples; and (c. 3) this Faith she carefully guards, as if she dwelt in one house, though she is dispersed throughout the world; and she uniformly preaches and delivers the same things, as if she had but one mouth .... since there is but one and the same Faith for all, μιᾶς καὶ τῆς αὐτῆς πίστεως οὔσης.

Cp. Hooker's observations (III. i. 5), and the remarks of Anselm, Estius, Beza, and others here. See also some excellent observations on this sense of the word πίστις in Fritz. i. 5, p. 17.

Ἀναλογία is Proportion: e. g.

As the Head is to the Body, so is Christ to the Church.

Or again;

As one member in the natural Body is to another member in the same natural body, and to the whole body, so is one Christian to another Christian, and to the whole Church, or mystical Body of Christ.

All things are to be done in the Church with a constant regard to this law of Ἀναλογία, or Proportion.

And the special purport of the Apostle's precept here is to declare, that Preaching is to be exercised, and that Scripture is to be expounded,

(1) Not according to men's private notions;

(2) Nor, from one or two texts or chapters taken singly and by themselves;

(3) But, according to the proportion of the Faith; that is, according to the general symmetry and harmony of the whole body of Christian Doctrine, and according to the relation or proportion (ἀναλογία) of each special doctrine preached, or text expounded, to that entire body of doctrine.

Hence Tertullian says, "Adversus regulam fidei nihil scire, est omnia scire" (Præscr. Hæret. c. 14; cp. 13, and Iren. i. 19); and Augustine (in Joann. Tract 18, and elsewhere) insists on the necessity of preaching and interpreting Scripture "secundum sanam fidei regulam."

On the other hand, it has always been the characteristic of heretics to interpret the words of Scripture μονόκωλα, i. e. piecemeal, without due regard to the general tenour of the whole. See S. Hippol. c. Noet. 2, Vol. ii. p. 7, ed. Fabric. Their will is that the sense of the whole Bible should give way to (their interpretation of) two or three sections of it. This is the characteristic of Heresy. Tertullian (c. Praxeam 20).

Private notions on particular texts are to be conformed to the Regula Fidei, and not the Regula Fidei to be made (like a Lesbian rule) to bend to private notions on particular texts.

This Regula Fidei is the Canonical Scripture, and every exposition is to be so framed as to be in unison with the general scope and tenour of Holy Scripture. And the true sense of Scripture is Scripture. And this true sense is propounded by the Church Catholic, the divinely appointed Interpreter of Scripture, in her public symbols of Faith.

Hence Archbp. Cranmer and our Reformers (in Reformatio Legum, i. 13) command all Preachers and Expositors to have always before their eyes the Creeds, "ne quid contra Symbola aliquando interpretemur." And Bp. Andrewes, in his admirable Sermon "on the Worshipping of Imaginations," v. 57 (a Sermon worthy of being placed by the side of Tertullian's Præscriptiones Hæreticorum), justly censures those Preachers, who arbitrarily and presumptuously domineer over the Faith of their Flocks, by delivering as God's Word their own private misconstructions of it, instead of reforming their own private imaginations by that Word as interpreted by the consentient voice and public practice of Christ's Church from the beginning. "This," says he, "is the disease of our age." See also Waterland's Essay on the Use and Value of Eccl. Antiquity, Works, Vol. v. p. 265—275.

This Rule of Scripture Interpretation is of great value; and perhaps it is no where more so, than in expounding this Epistle to the Romans, in which the rule is delivered. If it had been carefully attended to, the world would have been saved from many of the pernicious and exclusive notions (concerning partial redemption and other matters) which have been erroneously deduced by some from one or two texts of this Epistle taken singly, in contravention of the plain sense of the whole.

Cp. St. Peter's warning on this subject, 2 Pet. iii. 16.

Heretical teachers lay hold of a few sentences of this Epistle, and endeavour to overturn thereby the whole sense of Holy Scripture, which proclaims that man has received Freedom of Will as a gift from God. Origen.

It is therefore a happy characteristic of the Church of England, that she reads the whole of the New Testament, and a great part of the Old, through publicly to her congregations, and thus endeavours to protect her Clergy and her people against the danger of dwelling exclusively on particular texts, and directs them to interpret each several portion of Scripture "according to the Proportion of the Faith" as displayed in the whole Bible.

The above explanation of the words κατὰ τὴν ἀναλογίαν τῆς πίστεως has been recently well illustrated by Philippi, p. 513, and has been adopted by Bengel, Flatt, Klee, Glöckler, Schräder, Köllner, and others.

8. ὁ μεταδιδοὺς, ἐν ἁπλότητι] he that giveth time or substance in works of piety and charity, let him do it with disinterestedness and with honest openness and guilelessness of heart, and with a single eye (ἁπλοῦς ὀφθαλμός, Matt. vi. 22) to God's glory; and not looking askance with oblique glances at himself, or for the praise of men (Theodoret), so as to worship the creature with the Creator; but with one sole desire in his heart, one thought in his mind, one aim in all his actions—Soli Deo Gloria!

Compare the notes above on 2 Cor. viii. 2, and on ix. 13, concerning the sense of the word ἁπλότης.

9. Ἡ ἀγάπη ἀνυπόκριτος, ἀποστυγοῦντες] Literally,—Charity without pretence; ye hating. On this remarkable structure see Heb. xii. 9; and cp. the Anacoluthα in Eph. iv. 2. Col. iii. 16. 2 Cor. ix. 10—12. Winer, p. 505.

11. τῇ σπουδῇ] in your haste be not idle. In your busi-ness be not lazy. Observe the order of the words, and the word σπουδὴ, from σπεύδω, to hasten, Engl. speed.

There is a happy paradox, or oxymoron (a favourite figure of speech with the Apostle), in these words, which do not seem to have been generally understood. We may compare Horace's "strenua nos exercet inertia." (1 Epist. xi. 28.) Our lives are spent in busy sloth, and bustling indolence; where there is much haste, but little speed.

See a similar figure of speech 1 Thess. iv. 11, and cp. 2 Thess. iii. 11.

There may be, and often is, much idleness in men's work; much unprofitable vanity in their restless hurrying to and fro. There may be laziness in haste. Mary was more busy in her quietness than Martha in her bustle. Therefore the Apostle says τῇ σπουδῇ μὴ ὀκνηροὶ, be not "in strenuitate inertes," "nihil agentes operositate," et "operosi nihil agendo." Let all your haste bring you nearer and nearer to the goal of eternal life.

— τῷ Κυρίῳ δουλεύοντες] Some Authorities have here τῷ καιρῷ δουλεύοντες, serving the season. And it seems probable, that if St. Paul had written such a plain precept as τῷ Κυρίῳ δουλεύοντες (serving the Lord), which he inculcates elsewhere, Acts xx. 19. Rom. xiv. 18; xvi. 18. Eph. vi. 7. Col. iii. 24; and which, it is true, has high MSS. authority in its favour here (A, B, D, E, I), and is received by Elz., Lachmann, Tischendorf, and others, and is therefore not to be lightly disturbed, the copyists would hardly have substituted what at first sight is much less intelligible, viz. τῷ καιρῷ δουλεύοντες (serving the season), and which yet is found in D*, F, G. F has καιρῷ, and in its Latin Version it has both 'tempore' and 'Dno' (viz. 'Domino'). G has καιρῷ and 'tempori;' and this reading is as old as S. Jerome's days (see Jerome ad Marcell. ep. 27), and even as Cyprian's, and is preferred by Luther, Erasmus, Colinæus, Mill, Semler, Griesbach, Olshausen, Meyer, and Fritz., whose note here deserves attention: "Lectio difficilior eligenda." Besides, this verse seems intentionally designed to be a string of Christian paradoxes. "Be not slothful in your haste. Be fervent in spirit. Serve the present season," ἐξαγοράζεσθε τὸν καιρόν. See Eph. v. 16. 1 Cor. vii. 29. νῦν καιρὸς εὐπρόσδεκτος, 2 Cor. vi. 2, "be 'downright time-servers'" in the evangelical sense (to use Bp. Sanderson's words, i. 315); as I am in the same sense a 'man-pleaser,' and have made myself the servant of all, and am all things to all men." (1 Cor. ix. 19. 22.) So take Occasion by the forelock, and be ye slaves of Opportunity. St. Paul seems to have had his eye on the ancient proverbs, "Carpe diem," καιρὸν γνῶθι, καιρῷ λατρεύειν (Phocyl. fr. 112; cp. Wetstein), and to have intended to christianize them. This "exquisitior sensus" is also in harmony with what follows. Cp. xiii. 11—13.

However, as the preponderance of authority is in favour of Κυρίῳ, it is not removed from the text.

13. κοινωνοῦντες] communicating, contributing; μεταδιδόντες (Theod.). See above on Gal. vi. 6, and 2 Cor. viii. 4; ix. 13, and below, xv. 26, and Philem. 6. The word is here used actively. Cp. Eur. Med. 811. Fritz.

13, 14. διώκοντες—διώκοντας] A happy play upon the words. Cp. v. 3, ὑπερφρονεῖν—φρονεῖν—σωφρονεῖν.

It would seem as if the Apostle's mind, strained by the pressure of the argument with which it had been labouring, now gracefully and playfully relaxes itself in Christian cheerfulness. In his concilistory courtesy he would show his readers, that what he had said severely concerning them in the former parts of his Epistle had been spoken in love. So he now says, in a tone of lively affection, Even we Christians, whom the world persecutes, ought to be Persecutors; we ought to follow with our blessings and our prayers those who pursue us with rancour and disdain.

16. τοῖς ταπεινοῖς συναπαγόμενοι] drawn away from high aspirations, by Christian condescension to, and sympathy with, those of mean condition and low estate. The word ταπεινοῖς is here rendered by some learned Interpreters 'things that are lowly.' But in the New Testament the word ταπεινὸς is always applied to persons. See Matt. xi. 29. Luke i. 52. 2 Cor. vii. 6; x. 1. James i. 10; iv. 6. 1 Pet. v. 6.

17. προνοούμενοι] See above, 2 Cor. viii. 21. 1 Thess. v. 22. Cp. Prov. iii. 4, LXX.

19. δότε τόπον] give place unto wrath. The meaning of this passage is questionable. It may have several meanings. It may signify, Do not aggravate your enemy's wrath by resistance, or by rendering evil for evil; but by gentleness give it room to spend itself, as a mariner does in a storm. See v. 20, which explains the precept. So in Virgil (Æn. iv. 433) Dido asks for room for her own rage to spend itself: "Tempus inane peto, requiem spatiumque furori."

In a recent valuable contribution to the resources of the English reader in the study of this Epistle, this passage is rendered, "Give place unto the wrath of God." And there is high authority for this rendering;

But, perhaps, the former interpretation is preferable, and is confirmed by St. Paul's use of δίδοτε τόπον (Eph. iv. 27), and St. Luke's (xiv. 9).

Besides, it could hardly be prescribed as a Christian duty—to make room for the divine anger to work against an enemy. The endeavour of a Christian would be, to avert the divine wrath from him, rather than expose him to it.

Give place and room to your enemy's anger to spend itself, and pass by, "pertranseundi et evanescendi locum." Origen; and see the ancient author in Catenâ, p. 455, who compares here our Lord's precepts, Resist not evil, but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also (Matt. v. 39); and when they shall persecute you in one city flee to another (x. 23).

Overcome the wrath of your enemy by letting it spend itself upon you. Primasius.

And so these words were understood by the Clergy of Egypt writing to the Emperor Leo, in Evagrii H. E. ii. 8. Fritz.

It has indeed been said that the Apostle must mean, "Give room for the anger of God to work," because he says, Avenge not yourselves, and adds, For it is written, Vengeance is Mine, saith the Lord.

But this argument is not convincing. For those considerations are very cogent, as reasons for letting an enemy's anger pass, and for not encountering it by revenge, which is an invasion of the prerogative of God.

This passage suggests an important consideration with regard to Revision of an AUTHORIZED VERSION of Scripture.

Our own Version has here, "Give place unto wrath."

This translation is a judicious one, not only in what it does say, but also in what it does not say.

One of the excellencies of a Translation, especially of an Authorized one (and it is a characteristic excellence of our own), is not to say too much.

Our Translators knew well that this present passage admitted of a variety of exposition, and that it had been variously interpreted in ancient times by Expositors of high repute.

But they knew also, that it is not the office of Translators, especially of Translators who are framing a Translation for public use in the Church, to take (in such a doubtful case as this) any one exposition, and to enforce that exposition on all, as the only sense of the passage.

They felt that it was their duty rather to practise a modest reserve, and to observe a discreet silence, and to leave it an open question for men's private inquiry and meditation; and thereby to suggest to them this important practical lesson, that for the profitable study of Holy Scripture, one of the most essential prerequisites is Humility, and that there are many things in the Word of God on which it ill becomes any one to dogmatize; that there are passages in Holy Scripture which admit of various interpretations, all of them profitable, and none of them to be refused; and that to affix our own particular meaning to such passages, as the only sense they will bear, and to require a Church to receive it as such, is to restrain the plenitude of Scripture, and to enforce on men's consciences our word as the Word of God; and that such places of Scripture are designed for the exercise of that Faith which looks forward to the time when all doubts will be cleared away, and we shall no more see through a glass darkly, but shall see face to face, and shall know even as we are known. (1 Cor. xiii. 12.)

I ever held it a kind of honest spiritual thrift (says a wise Bishop of our Church) where there are two senses given of one place (of Scripture), both agreeable to the analogy of faith (Rom. xii. 6) and manners; . . . to make use of both. And so will we. Bp. Sanderson (ii. 49).

A good rule for Expositors, and still better for Translators, who will do well, in such cases, to exclude neither of the two senses by an imposition of the other.

20. ἄνθρακας πυρός] coals of fire. From Prov. xxv. 21.

The Holy Spirit, by the hand of St. Paul, has indited here a chapter of Christian Proverbs. And he connects them with those of Solomon by adopting this Proverb from the Book of Proverbs, and so blends them together.

But what are these coals of fire? To heap coals of fire on a man's head may seem at first a strange expression.

The Jews heaped ashes on their heads (2 Sam. xiii. 19) in mourning.

The Proverb does not teach to heap ashes, the sign of mourning, on our enemy's head, but live coals; that is, by conferring benefits upon him, so to kindle, as it were, on his head a fire of burning shame and remorse and of love. Such coals of fire were heaped on Saul's head by David (see 1 Sam. xxvi. 7—21). And they burnt brightly for a time (v. 25), but were unhappily quenched at last. Such coals of fire the Son of David endeavoured to kindle on the head of Judas (John xiii. 26. Matt. xxvi. 50), but they were smothered by covetousness, and went out in smoke. Cp. Origen here, and Aug. in Ps. 79, and De Doct. Christ. Vol. iii. p. 92, where the other interpretation—which attributes a desire of injury to the person obeying this proverb—is called "malitiosa," and Serm. 149, "Cùm quisque benefecerit inimico, et non victus malo vicerit in bono malum, plerumque illum inimicitiarum suarum pœnitebit, et irascetur sibi. Ipsa verò ustio pœnitentia est, quæ, tanquam carbones ignis, inimicitias ejus consumit."

21. Μὴ νικῶ—κακόν] Be not thou overcome by the evil of others, but overcome their evil with thy good.

He who harbours malice against an enemy on account of the injuries he has received from him, is overcome by his evil; but he who turns injuries into occasions for prayer, overcomes evil with good. See Chrys. Worldly injuries are the leaves and flowers, of which the heavenly crown of glory is to be woven.

ἐξουσία, εἰ μὴ ἀπὸ Θεοῦ· αἱ δὲ οὖσαι ὑπὸ Θεοῦ τεταγμέναι εἰσίν. 2 [b]ὥστε ὁ ἀντιτασσόμενος τῇ ἐξουσίᾳ τῇ τοῦ Θεοῦ διαταγῇ ἀνθέστηκεν, [c]οἱ δὲ ἀνθεστηκότες ἑαυτοῖς κρῖμα λήψονται.

Heathen Power of Rome, as an outrage against their Theocracy, and a profane usurpation of the prerogatives of God, was eminently manifest at this time; and it led, in a few years after this Epistle was written, to the siege and destruction of Jerusalem.

This strong language, therefore, of the Apostle in this Epistle, specially designed for Jewish readers at Rome, on the duty of obedience and loyalty to Civil Rulers, is a proof of St. Paul's moral courage, and confidence in his own mission. Cp. below on Titus i. 12.

How different would have been the history of the Roman Empire, if the Emperors, and Magistrates, and Citizens of that Empire had listened to the doctrine of the Apostles—whom they put to death!

Ἐξουσία is authority, distinguished from δύναμις, power, or force, which may exist where there is no authority, and even in opposition to it. Therefore (as Bp. Sanderson remarks, Prælect. v. 11) St. Paul mentions ἐξουσία, or lawful authority, four times in three verses here, but says not a word of δύναμις, or physical force. Compare note above on 1 Cor. xi. 10, a text which affords an excellent illustration of the present passage.

— ἐξουσίαις ὑπερεχούσαις] the authorities above him, those which are set over him, whatever they are. In a Monarchy, the King is ὁ ὑπερέχων (1 Pet. ii. 13). St. Paul's rule is general, and applies to all forms of Government. Cp. Bp. Sanderson on Conscience, Lect. vii. § 6, 7.

Every man is bound to take care to discern, and acknowledge the authority which is set over him (ὑπερέχουσα), and to pay to it the honour which is its due, and not to deprive it of its rightful honour, by paying allegiance and subjection to some other authority which is not set over him. A warning to those who rob Rulers of their honour, by transferring it to the Bishop of Rome, who claims to be ὁ ὑπερέχων,—over every person, every where, and in every thing. See on 2 Thess. ii. 4.

— ὑποτασσέσθω] let it submit itself. Be thou subject to—do not rebel against.

He does not say, that every one must always obey, but that he must submit. "Semper necesse est subjici (ἀνάγκη ὑποτάσσεσθαι), non semper necesse est obedire," says Bp. Sanderson (Prælect. vi. 3). See further on v. 5.

Obedience is active. And if any earthly authority commands any thing that is contrary to the will of God, the Apostles have taught us to say, "We ought to obey God rather than man," and "Whether it be right in the sight of God, to hearken unto you rather than unto God, judge ye" (Acts v. 29; iv. 19). And St. Paul and St. Peter suffered death at Nero's hands, rather than burn incense to Jupiter at Nero's command.

If the Emperor command one thing, and God command another, what is to be done? In such a case you must not fear the one. And why? Because you fear the Other. Who is it that here forbids your obedience? A higher authority. Therefore in such a case you will say to the Emperor, Excuse me; you threaten me with a prison for disobedience, but He threatens me with Hell. Augustine (Serm. 68).

Sometimes the Powers that be, are good, and serve God, sometimes they fear Him not. Julian was an unbelieving Emperor, an apostate and idolater. Yet Christian soldiers served under him. When, indeed, there was a question concerning obedience to Christ, they acknowledged Him alone Who is King of Kings. When, for instance, the Emperor commanded to worship idols, or to offer incense, they obeyed God rather than man. But when the Emperor said, Draw out the line of battle, March against this or that nation, they obeyed. They distinguished the King Eternal from the King temporal, and obeyed the King temporal for the sake of the King Eternal. Augustine (in Ps. 124).

But still the precept is general, to submit, and not to rebel (v. 2), not to take up arms against the Authority set over us.

We see no countenance given by the Apostles, or by any of the ancient Christians, to insurrection against Rulers—even though they were Neros or Julians. "Vincit qui patitur." Prayers and Tears were the arms of the Church.

St. Paul teaches—

(1) To obey God always.

(2) To obey the Higher Powers, as His ministers, and therefore in all things agreeable to His Will, and for His sake.

(3) To submit to—and not to rebel against—the Higher Powers. See below on v. 5.

— οὐ γὰρ ἔστιν ἐξουσία, εἰ μὴ ἀπὸ Θεοῦ] for no authority exists, except from God. Observe ἔστιν emphatic, perhaps with some reference to the etymology of the word Ἐξουσία, which deserves careful attention. See above on 1 Cor. xi. 10. No authority exists but from God. All lawful authority, such as that of Kings, Parents, Husbands, is an emanation, or effluence, from one only fountain and well-spring, the Godhead of Him Who is ὁ Ὤν, the Self-Existent, Everlasting, and Almighty JEHOVAH.

Why then does St. Peter speak of authority as an Ordinance of Man? (1 Pet. ii. 13.)

Because the People may have much influence in designating the person, or persons, by whom Power is to be exercised, therefore St. Peter calls the Magistrate a κτίσις ἀνθρωπίνη, or creation of man. But the People, which is sometimes the medium of conveying Power to a particular person, as in a popular election of a civil Magistrate, or King, is not the source of the Power so conveyed, any more than a pipe, through which a stream flows, is the origin of the water which flows through it. And therefore when St. Peter has said, submit yourself to the human magistrate, he adds the reason for submission—namely, "for the Lord's sake," from Whom alone all authority comes.

The substance of the power of every magistrate is the ordinance of God; but the specification of the circumstances thereto belonging, in regard of place, person, title, &c., is, as St. Peter terms it, a human ordinance, introduced by custom or positive Law. See Bp. Sanderson (ii. 198), and Bp. Andrewes, Private Devotions, p. 48, ed. 1830, and Hooker viii. 11. 6.

The People are often God's instruments in conveying Power (ἐξουσία), and in designating the persons by whom it is to be exercised. But as they are not the source of Power, so it does not follow, that because they can convey power, or designate the Person who is to use it, they therefore are able to revoke (as is erroneously imagined by some) what they have been the means of conveying. The People elect Members of the Legislature, but the Members of the Legislature do not derive their power from, but through, those who elect them; and they who have elected them cannot revoke what has not been given from, but through themselves, and which comes from the Constitution of the Realm, or rather, as St. Paul teaches, from the one only Source of all Power, namely, from Almighty God.

And all who hold power, however it may be derived to them, are bound to use their power as Ministers of Him from Whom alone they derive their power, and to Whom they will have to render a strict account, how they have used it, at the Great Day.

This is necessary to be remembered, because it has been argued by some, that because men may be instrumental in bestowing even regal power, they may therefore revoke that power at will, and dethrone a Monarch chosen by themselves.

But the truth is, that where a King is elected by the People, they only designate the Person who is to govern, but he derives the authority of governing from God alone. Cp. Bp. Sanderson (Prælect. viii.).

In saying that all authority is from God, as its only source, we must be on our guard against supposing that God can be the cause of any of its abuses. Nero's authority, as far as it was exercised not unlawfully, was from God: But all his abuses of it were from himself.

Yet, God uses well all human abuses. He often allows evil Kings to arise, in order to punish guilty nations (see Jerome in Dan. xi.). He uses evil governors to chastise evil subjects. He punishes the sins of the Shechems by the tyranny of the Abimelechs of this world (Judges ix. 20). He punished the vices of Rome by those of her Emperors; He also uses evil men as instruments for the trial and triumph of the good. He made Nero's sword, wielded by Nero's rage, to be an instrument for sending Peter and Paul to heaven, and of watering His Church by the Martyrs' blood. See above on ix. 17.

After οὖσαι Elz. inserts ἐξουσίαι, not in the best MSS.

— ὑπὸ Θεοῦ τεταγμέναι] Ὑπὸ means—

(1) Either by, as ἀπὸ, or

(2) Under, i. e. subordinate to, and not co-ordinate with, and therefore not entitled to obedience in any command contrary to God. For then they are not ὑπὸ Θεοῦ, but set themselves ἀντὶ Θεοῦ and ὑπὲρ Θεοῦ, against God, and above Him; and God is to be obeyed rather than man. (Acts v. 29.) And no man can serve two masters. (Matt. vi. 24.)

2. ὁ ἀντιτασσόμενος — λήψονται] He that setteth himself against the power which is set over him, and under subjection to which he should set himself, resisteth the ordinance set over him by God. Observe the paronomasia in the words ὑπο-τασσέσθω, ἀντι-τασσόμενος, διαταγῇ and ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ τεταγμέναι.

Θέλεις δὲ μὴ φοβεῖσθαι τὴν ἐξουσίαν; τὸ ἀγαθὸν ποίει, καὶ ἕξεις ἔπαινον ἐξ αὐτῆς· 4 [e] θεοῦ γὰρ διάκονός ἐστι σοὶ εἰς τὸ ἀγαθόν· ἐὰν δὲ τὸ κακὸν ποιῇς, φοβοῦ· οὐ γὰρ εἰκῇ τὴν μάχαιραν φορεῖ· θεοῦ γὰρ διάκονός ἐστιν, ἔκδικος εἰς ὀργὴν τῷ τὸ κακὸν πράσσοντι. 5 Διὸ ἀνάγκη ὑποτάσσεσθαι, οὐ μόνον διὰ τὴν ὀργὴν, ἀλλὰ καὶ διὰ τὴν συνείδησιν.

6 Διὰ τοῦτο γὰρ καὶ φόρους τελεῖτε· λειτουργοὶ γὰρ θεοῦ εἰσιν εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο προσκαρτεροῦντες.

But it may be asked, Can the Apostles be said to have observed this rule of subjection, when they preached in opposition to the command of the ἐξουσία that they should not preach? (Acts v. 28, 29.)

And if this was justifiable in their case, may not subjects take arms against a Power commanding unjustly?

To this it may be replied, that the Apostles in so doing did indeed then disobey a particular command of an Earthly Governor, but they did not disobey the ἐξουσία, to which they were subject in that behalf.

Nor was that Governor, who gave that command, τεταγμένος ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ in that respect, or acting as His διάκονος. Indeed, that command "not to preach" was directly opposed to the command of God. (Acts v. 20.)

But the Apostles did not set themselves up in opposition to the ἐξουσία, or attempt to subvert it by insurrection, or by inciting others to rebellion. They submitted to it even unto chains and unto death. (Acts v. 17; xii. 2, 3.)

3. Οἱ γὰρ ἄρχοντες οὐκ εἰσὶ φόβος] For Rulers are not a terror. He is speaking of what is commonly the case, and may fairly be expected to be the case. And even the worst ἐξουσία or authority is better than mere δύναμις or force.

But suppose the Power to be evil, and to command what is sinful. Is it not then a terror to good works? No. For he that does good, hears Christ saying, "Fear not them that kill the body" (Matt. x. 28); and he hears the Apostle's words, "Who will harm you if ye be followers of that which is good" (1 Pet. iii. 13)? St. Paul wrote this with Nero's power before his eyes; but that power was not a terror to him because he was ἀγαθοεργῶν. See next note.

— ἕξεις ἔπαινον ἐξ αὐτῆς] thou shalt have praise from it. For the most part. And the Apostle, in his Christian charity, "which thinketh no evil," does not love exceptions. He charitably presumes Rulers to be, what, being God's ministers, they ought to be.

But even suppose a Nero, and a Nero persecuting the Church, yet even then you may have praise therefrom. You may overcome his evil by your good; you may be more than conqueror, you may derive glory from it. For though it is unjust and condemns you, yet God is just, and will reward you. He will crown you for acting justly, and for suffering unjustly. Therefore hold fast your justice, and whether the Power acquits or condemns you, you will reap praise from it. If you die for the Faith from its hand, you will reap glory from its fury. Augustine (Serm. xiii. 302).

— τῷ ἀγαθῷ—κακῷ] So A, B, D*, F, G. Elz. has τῶν—κακῶν.

4. οὐ γὰρ εἰκῇ τὴν μάχαιραν φορεῖ κ.τ.λ.] for he does not wear the sword in vain, i. e. is not endued with the jus gladii, or power of life and death, to no purpose, but in order to execute justice and judgment in the name of God.

Μάχαιρα is not here a dagger (as some understand it), but gladius, ξίφος. See Grotius and Fritz. The Roman power is symbolized in the Apocalypse with a μάχαιρα μεγάλη. (vi. 4.)

Here is a divine refutation of the theory which would derive the original of government from the people by means of a social contract. The jus gladii, the right and power of the sword, which is the emblem of Sovereign Power, is by the ordinance of God, not by the donation of the People. For the Sovereign Power beareth the Sword, St. Paul telleth us, as God's Minister, from Whom he received it, and not as the People's Minister, who had no right to give it because they never had it. Bp. Sanderson, v. 210.

Here also is a refutation of the notions of those who would utterly abolish Capital Punishments; thus venturing to wrest God's sword from the hands of His Deputy and Vicegerent the Civil Magistrate; that sword which God Himself, who committed it to him, commanded him to bear, and not to bear it in vain. Cp. Gen. ix. 6.

5. ἀνάγκη ὑποτάσσεσθαι] See above on v. 1.

The teaching of St. Paul and St. Peter on Civil Obedience may be summed up in the words of the author just cited.

How far do Human Laws bind the consciences of subjects?

(1) All Laws enacted by Powers having legitimate authority bind always to ὑποταγὴ, subjection, so that a subject may not resist with force and arms the Higher Power, whether he command justly or unjustly.

This was the constant sense and practice of the Primitive Church, as appears from the explicit doctrine of St. Paul and St. Peter. See 1 Pet. ii. 18. Servants be subject (ὑποτασσόμενοι, the same word as St. Paul uses here) to your masters with all fear, not only to the good and gentle, but even to the froward. And St. Paul (Rom. xiii.) inculcates the duty of subjection in all, and concedes not the liberty of rebellion on any pretext to any.

(2) The duty of submission is not satisfied unless it be accompanied with obedience, wherever this can be rendered without sin.

(3) Where obedience cannot be rendered without sin, there the subject is not bound to obey; but he is bound not to obey. For there can be no obligation to do what is unlawful. We are obliged not to do evil by the law of God, Who is above all, and from Whom all Authority is derived. See Bp. Sanderson (Prælect. vi.).

Some writers in treating this subject use the phrase Passive Obedience, and impute the doctrine of passive obedience to the Divines of the English Church.

But the words passive obedience imply a contradiction in terms.

To be passive is not to act, but to be acted upon. But Obedience is essentially active.

The doctrine of the best Divines of the Church of England is, that if a thing commanded is plainly contrary to God's Law, we must "obey God rather than Man." (Acts v. 29.)

But they have also ever taught, as the clear sense of God's Word, that it is always necessary to submit to lawful Authority, and that it is a sin to rebel against it.

— οὐ μόνον διὰ τὴν ὀργὴν, ἀλλὰ καὶ διὰ τὴν συνείδησιν] not only because of the wrath (v. 4), but also for your conscience sake. Submit, not only from a principle of fear, which may act when the sin of resistance cannot be committed with impunity, and when that sin will be chastised by the wrath of the Power resisted; and will not act when there is no prospect of such punishment. But submit also from a reverence to your own Conscience, which tells you that rebellion against lawful Authority is a Sin against God, Whose Minister it is, and warns you that He is cognizant of it, and will punish it hereafter at the Great Day.

> "Si genus humanum et mortalia temnitis arma,
> At sperate Deum memorem fandi atque nefandi."
> Virgil (Æn. i. 543).

On the other hand, Loyalty and Obedience to Lawful Authority are confirmed and sanctified by the fact that they are duties rendered to God, Who is the source of all Authority, and Whose Deputy and Vicegerent it is. (Cp. 1 Pet. ii. 13.) When you serve man because God commands you to do so, you serve not man but God. Augustine.

It is not the Civil Magistrate who obliges the Conscience to obey the Law which he enacts, but it is God Who obliges the Conscience to obey the Civil Magistrate. Bp. Sanderson (iv. p. 91).

6. λειτουργοὶ] officers of the People. He had just called Civil Rulers by one name, διάκονοι θεοῦ, servants of God (v. 4), and now he calls them by another name, λειτουργοὶ, officers of and for the People (λήϊτον, λεῖτον), and thus he combines their twofold relation to God and men, and teaches that Civil Rulers are servants of God for the public good.

— εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο προσκαρτεροῦντες] attending continually to this very thing; that is, on service to God and the public weal, and therefore entitled to reverence and support. Here is the true principle of Taxation. The Apostle teaches that Taxes are paid by subjects to Rulers as Ministers of God, and that consequently frauds on the Revenue (such as smuggling, &c.) are sins against

CH. XIV. 1. Τὸν δὲ ἀσθενοῦντα τῇ πίστει προσλαμβάνεσθε] But him that is weak in faith receive ye.

Observe the interesting and instructive connexion of this topic with the main subject of the Epistle.

St. Paul had shown to the Jews that their notions of personal merit in themselves, on account of which they imagined themselves to have been adopted by God as His elect People, as distinct from all other Nations, were vain and illusory, and that they had no ground for hope of acceptance with Him in their own fancied obedience to the Levitical Law, and that the only foundations of Justification are in God's Love, and in the meritorious Death of Christ, the benefits of which are freely offered in the Gospel to all Nations on equal terms.

He would not admit any compromise of these fundamental articles of Faith, although he well knew that they would be mortifying to their national pride.

But having stated these truths, he now proceeds to show that he feels a tender regard for the scruples of the Jewish Christians.

He is ready to make personal sacrifices for their sake in all indifferent things. He condescended to their weaknesses in complying, under certain circumstances, with the ceremonial provisions of the Levitical Law. See Acts xvi. 3; xviii. 18; xxi. 26, and what he had said above, 1 Cor. ix. 19, 20; x. 24. 33.

Thus by his charitable allowance for them in such respects, he proved more clearly that his unflinching, uncompromising declaration of the great doctrine of Justification by Faith in Christ alone is grounded on a firm persuasion of its indispensable necessity to everlasting salvation.

In the present Chapter the convert to Christianity from Judaism, who for conscience sake still made a difference of meats and days, as distinguished by the Levitical Law, is called ἀσθενῶν τῇ πίστει (v. 1), weakly in his faith or persuasion. (See on v. 3 and v. 23.) The present participle ἀσθενῶν marks his present condition of infirmity, which may be succeeded by another state of stronger spiritual health, and of sounder persuasion, viz. that all Levitical distinctions are effaced by the Gospel.

By calling such a person ἀσθενοῦντα τ. π., weakly in his persuasion, St. Paul declares his own judgment that the Levitical difference of meats and days has now been abrogated (see above, Gal. iv. 10, and below, Col. ii. 16); and he therefore describes him who made no such distinction as strong. (xv. 1.)

But it is to be remembered, that, while the Church of Christ refused to enforce conformity to the Levitical Law, she did not as yet enforce nonconformity to it.

The Law which she did enforce, and always enforces on all her children, is the Law of Love.

On this text, see the Sermon of Bp. Sanderson (ii. 1—39), where he exposes the error of those who argue from this text that every one ought to be left free to comply or not, as he thinks best, with the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church; and shows that such observances as are appointed and prescribed by Lawful Authority, are not to be confounded with the ordinances of which St. Paul speaks, which were now obsolete, and are not to be placed in the same category with the meats and days here mentioned, which had now become indifferent, and might be used or forborne according to the private conscience of each individual. See also below on v. 13.

— προσλαμβάνεσθε] Do not reject him coldly and proudly, but receive him to yourselves (middle voice) tenderly and charitably as a brother. Cp. the use of the word, v. 3 and xv. 7.

— μὴ εἰς διακρίσεις διαλογισμῶν] but not to dijudications of diverse thoughts. A much controverted passage.

The word διάκρισις, as used in the N. T. and other writings, signifies the discrimination between two different things, or the pronunciation of judicial sentence between two contending parties. See Heb. v. 14. Xenophon, Cyrop. v. 2. 27. Fritz. p. 159.

Διαλογισμοὶ are cogitations generally involving some idea of altercation and dispute, marked by the preposition διά. See above, i. 21, and 1 Cor. iii. 20; and below, Phil. ii. 14. 1 Tim. ii. 8. James ii. 4.

Remark also that he does not say διάκρισιν, but διακρίσεις, in the plural number. He supposes more than one judgment of conflicting thoughts.

The sense then, as illustrated by the context, appears to be as follows:

One man thinks one day better than another (v. 6); another man thinks all days alike. One man thinks that some meats are unclean; another thinks that he may partake indiscriminately of all.

What then is your duty?

You, who are strong in faith, and who know and are fully persuaded in your mind that all such distinctions of days and meats are now abrogated in the Gospel, have a duty of charity to perform to him who is now weakly in faith. Receive him tenderly, but do not receive him to dijudications of differing thoughts.

That is, do not receive him so that he may be encouraged to enter into a controversial discussion with you on the questions of ceremonial observance of Days and Meats, and to engage in polemical litigation; but receive him on such terms, that there may be no pronunciations of judicial sentences, either on his side or on yours. Receive him kindly, but so that there may be no dijudications of differing thoughts: no determinations (on this side or on that) whether he is right in thinking one day better and one kind of meat more clean than another, or you are right in thinking that all days and all meats are alike.

Let there be no censorious judgments on either side; but let each party be fully persuaded in his own mind, and act accordingly; and let him respect the persuasions of others as he desires that his own persuasions may be respected by them.

Some learned Expositors and Translators suppose that διακρίσεις signifies merely judgment pronounced by the strong in faith; but then the plural number would not have been used, and such a limitation is also inconsistent with the precept to receive him; which is qualified, but not contradicted, by what follows.

Receive him kindly, but not in such a way that he may be admitted to become a litigant with you, and you with him, on your respective opinions and practices.

2. πάντα—λάχανα] The two extremes. One is persuaded (πιστεύει) that he may without offence eat any thing; because all creatures are from God, and are all good, and therefore none to be refused. (1 Cor. x. 26. 1 Tim. iv. 3, 4.)

The other limits himself to herbs,—lest, by eating meat, he should unwittingly eat something interdicted by the Levitical Law, which made a distinction between meats, but not between herbs.

3. καὶ ὁ] A, B (see Mai's table of errata, p. 503), C, D*, have ὁ δὲ, and so Lachm., Tisch., Alf.

4. δυνατεῖ] So A, B, C, D*, F, G. Cp. 2 Cor. ix. 8; xiii. 3. —Elz. δυνατός.

5. κρίνει] judges, decides in favour of one day in comparison with another. Cp. Æschylus, Ag. 458. Soph. Phil. 57. Meyer.

— πληροφορείσθω] let him be fully persuaded and carried on by conviction; and let him sail on quietly, as it were, with a fair wind of persuasion filling the sails of his own mind. On this sense of πληροφορία see above, Luke i. 1. Rom. iv. 21. 1 Thess. i. 5; below, Col. ii. 2, and Heb. x. 22, πληροφορία πίστεως, a prosperous gale of faith filling his sails and carrying him before the breeze. On this precept see on 1 Cor. x. 15.

St. Paul teaches here the important truths,

(1) That every man is bound to obey his Conscience.

(2) But that every man is also bound to take care that his Conscience is rightly informed and regulated by God's Law.

(3) There may be a πληροφορία,—a strong wind of persuasion, which will not waft a man to the harbour of Truth, but wreck him on the quicksands of Error.

6. Ὁ φρονῶν τὴν ἡμέραν] He that esteemeth the day; e. g. the Jewish Sabbath, or the New Moon, or the great Day of Atonement. See above on Gal. iv. 10, and below, Col. ii. 16, where St. Paul condemns those who regard these observances as necessary to salvation, and who would enforce them on others as terms of Christian communion.

Here, they who observe them are called weakly in the faith; but they are not to be condemned for their observances, but tenderly dealt with, so long as they do not impose them, as necessary, on others.

On the peculiar condition of the Ceremonial Law at this juncture, as distinguished from earlier and later times, see above, note at the end of Galatians ii. p. 54.

— καὶ ὁ μὴ φρονῶν—οὐ φρονεῖ] Not in A, B*, C, D, E, F, G, and cancelled by Lachm.

The omission probably arose from the recurrence of the word φρονεῖ. Rückert, Reiche, De Wette, Fritz., Philippi, Alford. Cp. above, xi. 6.

— καὶ εὐχαριστεῖ] He also gives thanks. Both parties, therefore, though differing in opinions and practice, may agree in thankfulness to God.

8. ἐάν τε γὰρ ζῶμεν] for whether we live, we live (not unto ourselves, but) unto the Lord.

St. Paul gives several reasons against judging our brother.

He is not our servant, but God's; and, by judging him, we lord it over one who belongs not to us, but to God, v. 4.

We live not to ourselves, but to one another. We are brethren and fellow-members in Christ. Who art thou that condemnest thy brother? v. 10.

We are not our own, but the Lord's; we have been created by God for His glory and service, and have been bought with a price (1 Cor. vi. 20; vii. 23), even the precious blood of His dear Son; we have no authority but from Him (xiii. 1). And so far is He from giving us authority to judge others, that He tells us that we shall all be judged, and shall have to give an account of ourselves to Him.

And by judging others, we usurp a power which belongs to Him alone, and which He will exercise over us, and over them whom we venture to condemn, but whom He has accepted (v. 4). And so, by judging others, we shall have condemned ourselves.

9. ἀπέθανε] Elz. prefixes καὶ, not in the best MSS. After ἀπέθανε Elz. has καὶ ἀνέστη καὶ ἀνέζησε. But the reading in the text is that of the best MSS.

10. Θεοῦ] So A, B, C*, D, E, F, G.—Elz. Χριστοῦ, as in 2 Cor. v. 10.

12. ἑαυτοῦ] of himself—not of another.

13. τὸ μὴ τιθέναι πρόσκομμα τῷ ἀδελφῷ ἢ σκάνδαλον] not to put a stumbling-block, or occasion of falling, in a brother's way. In such cases as these, where, according to the Law of Christian Liberty, it is left indifferent for a person to do or not to do a thing, then comes in the Law of Christian Charity.

And according to that Law, it may be expedient, that, in regard to it, and for the avoidance of causing a brother to stumble, a man should forego the use of his Christian Liberty, and abridge himself of the use of that, by using which he might cause his brother to offend. Here the rule is, "Do nothing that may reasonably be forborne, whereat scandal may be taken, and whereby a brother may be betrayed into sin."

This case is handled by St. Paul here, and xv. 1—3. 1 Cor. viii. 7—13; ix. 12. 15. 19—22; x. 23—33. See Bp. Sanderson, Case of a Liturgy, Works, v. p. 51; and the following remarks of Richard Hooker (IV. xii.), who demonstrates the essential difference between the case of those weak brethren, and that of those who take occasion from St. Paul's argument here, to withhold their own obedience from Rites and Ceremonies constituted by lawful public authority.

St. Paul's rule is, that in those things, from which without hurt we may lawfully abstain, we should frame the usage of our Liberty with regard to the imbecility of our brethren.

Wherefore unto them which stood upon their own defence, saying, "All things are lawful unto me," he replieth, "But all things are not expedient" (1 Cor. vi. 12) in regard of others. "All things are clean, all meats are lawful. But evil is unto that man that eateth offensively. If, for thy meal's sake, thy brother be grieved, thou walkest no longer according to charity. Destroy not him with thy meat for whom Christ died. Dissolve not for food's sake the work of God." (Rom. xiv. 15. 20.)

We that are strong must bear the imbecility of the impotent, and not please ourselves. (Rom. xv. 1.)

It was a weakness in the Christian Jews, and a maim of judgment in them, that they thought the Gentiles polluted by the eating of those meats which themselves were afraid to touch, for fear of transgressing the Law of Moses; yea, hereat their hearts did so much rise, that the Apostle had just cause to fear, lest they would rather forsake Christianity, than endure any fellowship with such as made no conscience of that which was unto them abominable.

And for this cause mention is made of destroying the weak by meats, and of dissolving the work of God (Rom. xiv.; xv. 1), which was His Church, a part of the living stones whereof were believing Jews.

Now our weak brethren (the Nonconformists) are said to be as the Jews were; and our Ceremonies (which have been abused in the Church of Rome) to be as the scandalous meats, from which the Gentiles are exhorted to abstain in the presence of Jews, for fear of averting them from Christian faith. Therefore, as Charity did bind them to refrain from that for their brethren's sake which otherwise was lawful enough for them; so (it is alleged) it bindeth us, for our brethren's sake, likewise to abolish such Ceremonies, although we might lawfully else retain them.

But, between these two cases there are great odds. Their use of meats was not like unto ours of ceremonies; that being a matter of private action in common life, where every man was free to order that which himself did. But this is a public constitution for the ordering of the Church: and we are not to look that the Church should change her public laws and ordinances, made according to that which is judged ordinarily and commonly fittest for the whole, although it chance that for some particular men the same be found inconvenient. Hooker.

14. αὐτοῦ] So the best MSS.—Elz. ἑαυτοῦ.

— τῷ λογιζομένῳ τι κοινὸν εἶναι, ἐκείνῳ κοινόν] to him that accounteth a thing to be unclean, to him it is unclean. Κοινὸν is unclean. See Mark vii. 2. Acts x. 14, 15. 28.

Though an act be good, yet if the agent do it with a condemning or doubting conscience, it is evil.

Things, not evil in themselves, become evil,

(1) If done against the conscience, or without persuasion that they are right (see v. 23).

(2) Or, if being left free to us to do or not to do, the doing of them causes others to offend (vv. 20, 21).

(3) Or, if by doing them, we leave undone what is better to be done. See Matt. ix. 13. Cp. Bp. Sanderson, ii. 56.

But two cautions are here necessary;

We must take care

(1) That our conscience be well informed.

For, though it be always a sin to act against our conscience, yet it is also a sin to neglect to regulate our conscience by the Law which ought to govern it, viz. the will of God. And, if we have not done this, we may be misled by our Conscience, and it will not profit us to plead, that we have acted according to our Conscience, if we have not acted toward our Conscience as God commands us to do.

(2) We may not forego a good action, if it is commanded us by the Authority to which we are subject (Rom. xiii. 1, 2), although others should take offence from that action done by us. For then "even the offence of the Cross would cease." Gal. v. 11. Cp. Hooker, IV. xii. 8. Sanderson, iii. 299.

15. Εἰ γὰρ (so the best MSS. for δὲ) διὰ βρῶμα ὁ ἀδελφός σου λυπεῖται] For if thy brother—who thinks that it is not lawful to eat such meats as were called unclean by the Levitical Law—is hurt (that is, incurs spiritual pain, not as a matter of feeling, but of suffering harm, in consequence of sin) by seeing thee eat them, and is either led thereby

(1) To make a schism in the Church by separating from thee, or

(2) To imitate thee, by eating such meats against his conscience, do not so destroy him (by thy eating) for whom Christ died. It is indeed abstractedly lawful for thee to eat such meats, but it is not lawful for thee to destroy thy brother by eating them.

— Μὴ—ἐκεῖνον ἀπόλλυε ὑπὲρ οὗ Χριστὸς ἀπέθανε] Do not destroy him for whom Christ died. St. Paul teaches here, that they for whom Christ died, may be lost; that is, he here affirms, that Christ died not only for those who shall finally persevere and be saved, but that He died also for those who will not derive benefit from His death,—that is, He died for all. He teaches, that evil example acting upon the weakness of others, may be a cause of perdition to some, who in Christ's design and desire would be saved, and for whom He died in order that they might be saved.

A strong assertion of the doctrines of Universal Redemption and of Free Will. See above on viii. 28—30.

16. Μὴ βλασφημείσθω οὖν ὑμῶν τὸ ἀγαθόν] Let not your good (i. e. your right persuasion that nothing in itself is unclean—your Christian Liberty) be evil spoken of, as either

(1) Causing a schism on the part of those who are not so persuaded, or

(2) Causing them to eat against their conscience what they deem to be unclean.

17. βρῶσις] eating: to be distinguished from βρῶμα, the thing eaten—meat (vv. 15. 20).

18. ἐν τούτῳ] So the best MSS.—Elz. ἐν τούτοις. Origen explains τούτῳ as referring to the Holy Spirit. Cp. ii. 29; viii. 9; ix. 1; xv. 16. 19. Phil. iii. 3.

20. τὸ ἔργον τοῦ Θεοῦ] the work of God, Man—not thy creature, but God's. Acts xv. 18. In the assertion of thy liberty to eat all God's creatures, do not destroy God's principal creature, man.

— Πάντα μὲν καθαρά· ἀλλὰ κ.τ.λ.] All things are pure, but there is evil (in them) to him who eats any thing with scandal, either given or taken.

Thus this precept is directed to the two parties;

(1) To him, the strong in faith, who breaks through the consideration of the scandal he gives to his weak brother by eating, and yet eats, and

(2) To the weak in faith, who is thus induced by the example of the strong, to break through the scandal he gives to his own conscience by eating, and eats.

On this sense of διὰ, indicating a barrier which might deter from the action done, and through which a passage is forced, in order that the action may be done, see above on ii. 27; iv. 13.

On the restrictions to be placed by us on the use of our Christian Liberty, from considerations of Christian Charity, see above on v. 13, and on 1 Cor. vi. 12.

On the assertion πάντα καθαρὰ, all things are clean, see above on 1 Cor. iii. 21, and below, Titus i. 15.

21. Καλὸν τὸ μὴ φαγεῖν κρέα, ἢ πιεῖν οἶνον] It is good not to eat flesh nor to drink wine, nor to do any thing wherein thy brother stumbleth, or is offended or is weak.

May it not, therefore, be our duty to take Vows of Total Abstinence from Wine, &c., in order that by so doing we may reclaim our brother from Intemperance?

This is no consequence of St. Paul's teaching. For, it is true that we are not to put a stumbling-block in our brother's way. But neither are we to put a stumbling-block in our own way. And this we should do by taking unnecessary vows which God and His Church do not prescribe, and which we may not be able to keep, and by breaking which we shall sin against our conscience, and involve ourselves in condemnation.

The meats, &c. from which the weak brother abstained, in the case here described, had been pronounced unclean by the Levitical Law. That Law was from Almighty God; and it was therefore an act of Christian Charity to abstain from such meats in regard to the scruples of those who had been trained from their infancy under that Law, and who abstained from those meats in reverence to God Who had given that Law.

But now the Gospel has been in the World for eighteen hundred years. In it God has declared that "every Creature of God is good and nothing to be refused" (1 Tim. iv. 4). He has there condemned as sinful the act of requiring abstinence from any particular food. (1 Tim. iv. 3.) He has made Wine to be a medium for communicating Sacramental grace to every Christian soul.

Therefore to abstain, as by necessity and by the solemn obligation of a Vow, from any of God's good creatures, or to require others to do so, is to make our brother to offend, by tempting him to imagine (as the Manichæans of old did) either that God is not the Creator of all, or that what He has created for man's use is not good, or that we are wiser than He, or that the Gospel has not done well in pronouncing all those creatures to be from Him, and to be sanctified by prayer and thanksgiving (1 Tim. iv. 4), and that the Gospel therefore is not from an all-wise God. It is to invert the order of things, and to Judaize Christianity. It is to do disparagement and outrage to the Cross of Christ, Who by His blood-shedding there purchased for us Christians the free use of, and dominion over, all the creatures, which we had lost by the fall of Adam. (See above on 1 Cor. iii. 22, 23.) It is to run the risk of betraying our weak brother into the sin of Infidelity, instead of endeavouring to strengthen his weakness, and to reclaim the erring to the Truth.

St. Paul, in his charity, abstained—but did not make a Vow to abstain—at certain times and places, from certain meats which his weak brother thought to be unclean. But in the case of the Vow supposed, persons are called on to promise to abstain from wine, &c., not because others regard it as unclean, but because others abuse it, or indulge in it to excess. The cases therefore are not similar. And if the Principle of the Vow is allowed, there is nothing so good which may not be utterly proscribed under a Vow. Not Wine only, but every creature of God is often abused by men. Religion itself is abused; it has its excess in Superstition. Fasting is sometimes abused to excess. Prayer is abused. The Holy Scripture is abused by those who quote it amiss. It was abused by Satan into a weapon against Christ. (Matt. iv. 6.) The Principle of the Vow, generally adopted, would rob us of God's best gifts, which Satan tempts men to abuse, and tempts them even to abuse more eagerly in proportion to their goodness. Christianity does not say, Make a vow to abstain from any of God's good gifts, but it says, Be temperate in all things. (1 Cor. ix. 25.) Cp. note above on 1 Cor. viii. 13.

22, 23. Σὺ πίστιν ἔχεις—Θεοῦ. Μακάριος—δοκιμάζει] Thou art persuaded that thou mayest eat all kinds of meats (see above on v. 1) indifferently. It is a good persuasion; but let that persuasion suffice thee for the approving of thine own heart in the sight of God. Have that persuasion in thyself, and keep it to thyself, in the sight of God, Who created all things, and Who is glorified by this thy persuasion that "all His creatures are good, and nothing to be refused." But do not apply thy persuasion indiscriminately in the presence and company of other men who are weak in faith. Trouble not the Church, offend not thy weak brother, cause him not to sin by a vain ostentation of this thy knowledge.

Blessed is he that condemneth not himself in that which he approveth.

This is a saying applicable to both parties;

(1) To him who rightly thinks that there is no difference between meats, as clean or unclean, but indiscriminately practises this opinion, i. e. eats all kinds of meats (when there is no necessity constraining him so to do), and so condemns what he approveth. For he is guilty of wounding the conscience of a weak brother, and so is liable to condemnation.

(2) To him who wrongly thinks that there is such a difference between meats, and yet is drawn by the example or taunts of others (despising him for this opinion) to act against his judgment, or to act with a doubting conscience, and to eat of what he himself judges to be unclean, or is not persuaded to be clean. And so he is condemned by his own heart as a sinner, because he ventures to do what he does not believe to be lawful. For he that doubteth is condemned for eating, because he does not eat ἐκ πίστεως, i. e. with assurance that he may eat.

Thus the Apostle proceeds ab hypothesi ad thesim, and adds a general rule of Christian practice as follows;

23. πᾶν δὲ ὃ οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως ἁμαρτία ἐστίν] whatsoever is not of Faith is sin; that is, whatever is not done with a full persuasion of the mind that it may lawfully be done, is sin.

St. Paul had above defined the sense in which he uses the word πίστις in this chapter. See v. 2, ὃς μὲν πιστεύει φαγεῖν, one man is persuaded that he may eat. So v. 14, πέπεισμαι, I feel persuaded. Cp. Chrys., Theodoret, Theophyl., Œcum. here. Therefore St. Paul's meaning is, Whosoever shall venture to do any thing which he is not fully persuaded to be not unlawful is guilty of sin.

"Bene præcipiunt qui vetant agere, quod dubites æquum sit an iniquum." Cicero (de Offic. i. 30).

To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin (James iv. 17). How much more guilty is he who knows the evil that he should not do, and yet does it! "Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that which he alloweth." Wretched is he that alloweth himself in the practice of that which in his judgment he condemns.

In applying the Apostolic Rule some cautions are necessary.

(1) We may not hastily imagine things to be unlawful, but may reasonably believe those things to be lawful which cannot be shown by Holy Scripture or right Reason to be unlawful. Cp. Bp. Sanderson (ii. 125, 126).

(2) If the Conscience is only in doubt, and in suspense, with no inclination on either side, and if lawful Authority has pronounced a judgment, and has determined the question in one way, then that way is to be followed by us. "In dubiis tutior pars eligenda." Cp. ibid. (p. 134).

(3) If our own Conscience is not in doubt, but is persuaded in one way, and if Authority has pronounced in another way, we ought to review the matter, and to consider carefully the grounds of the difference between our own private opinions and the judgment of public authority.

We ought to remember that we are prone to be swayed by self-love and self-will, that God loves an obedient spirit, and that Authority is His Minister (xiii. 1—3); and we ought to examine ourselves and our own motives of action, as in His sight, and with prayer for His grace; and to refer all things to the standard of His will; and to deliberate whether it may not be our duty to reform our consciences, and to conform them to the judgment and command of Authority.

The word πίστις, here used as equivalent to persuasion (see vv. 1, 2. 22), is carefully to be observed, and the more so on account of the erroneous theories which have been grounded on this word, misunderstood by some—especially the Puritans in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries—as if it signified Faith, either as distinguished from Works, or as equivalent to that act and habit of the mind by which it assents to the truth of the Gospel.

The pernicious effects, religious, social, and political, of this grave misunderstanding of the word, have been pointed out by Hooker (ii. 4), Bp. Sanderson (ii. p. 111—119).

— ἐστίν] After this word, A and many MSS. in cursive characters, and some Versions, add the 25th, 26th, 27th verses of Chap. xvi., perhaps because they were sometimes read in the Church as a conclusion to this Lesson. Hence in some MSS. these verses occur both here and after xvi. 24, where see note.

The insertion of the Doxology here would make an inconvenient break in the argument, which is continued in Chap. xv.

CH. XV. 1. δυνατοὶ—ἀδυνάτων] we who are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak (see xiv. 1), and not to be self-pleasers.

The design of the Apostle is to commend brotherly love, and to persuade the strong and the weak to dwell together in unity.

He therefore appropriately adduces the example of Christ enduring scorn for the salvation of men, and for the glory of God (v. 3), and cites the testimony of Holy Scripture that Jews and Gentiles should be united in Him. (v. 4—12.)

He also fitly refers to his own Apostolic Ministry, in offering the Gentiles as an oblation to God, and by preaching the Gospel from Jerusalem (whence the Gospel came forth) to Illyricum, and in now going up to Jerusalem with an offering of alms to the Jewish Christians from the Gentile Christians of Macedonia and Achaia; thus showing his own love both to Jews and Gentiles, and appealing to this Collection as exemplary to both parties at Rome.

— μὴ ἑαυτοῖς ἀρέσκειν] See 1 Cor. x. 24. 33.

2. ἕκαστος] Elz. adds γὰρ, not in the best MSS.

3. Οἱ ὀνειδισμοὶ—ἐπ' ἐμέ] This is quoted from the Sixty-ninth Psalm, v. 9. And thus the Holy Spirit teaches by St. Paul that that prophetical Psalm is rightly applied to Christ suffering for us. See a like application of it by St. John, ii. 17.

It is the more requisite to observe this, because an endeavour has been made by some Critics in recent times to alienate this, and other prophetical Psalms of like import, from Christ. (Cp. note on Acts viii. 32.) The Holy Ghost, in the New Testament, has provided the best safeguard for the true exposition of His Own Prophecies in the Old.

4. Ὅσα γὰρ προεγράφη] Not only what I write (see v. 15), as the Apostle of the Gentiles, according to the grace of the Holy Ghost given to me (vv. 15. 19), but whatsoever was written aforetime by the same Spirit in the Holy Scriptures, to which I now refer (see vv. 3. 9—12), was written for our learning, that we through the patience (i. e. mutual forbearance), which is taught by the Scriptures, and by bearing one another's burdens, and by the exhortation and by the comfort which the Holy Scriptures, and they only, can give, might have hope of Salvation.

By this reverential reference to the Ancient Scriptures, he assures the Jews that he is not unmindful of their prerogative and dignity in being the Depositories and Guardians of the Old Testament (iii. 2); and he assures them that his own Doctrine is in harmony with those Scriptures, and is grounded upon them. He also commends those Ancient Scriptures to the study of the Gentile Christians as the work of the Holy Ghost, and thus delivers a prophetic protest against such Heresies as the Marcionite and Manichæan, which disparaged the Old Testament in comparison with the New, and endeavoured to set them at variance, the one against the other.

— ἐγράφη] So B, C, D, E, F, G. Elz. has προεγράφη.

7. προσλαμβάνεσθε] charitably receive. See xiv. 1.

— ὑμᾶς] So A, C, D, E, F, G. Elz. ἡμᾶς.

— εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ] to partake in the glory of God. (Chrys.) Therefore, à fortiori, you ought to receive others.

8. Λέγω γάρ] So the best MSS. Elz. δέ.

— διάκονον—περιτομῆς] Ye Gentile Christians, who are strong, ought not to despise the Jewish Christians your brethren. Christ your Saviour was their Minister. He was born under the Law, and came first to the lost sheep of the House of Israel, to show the truth of God, and confirm the promises made to their Forefathers. Cp. above, Gal. iv. 4.

9. τὰ δὲ ἔθνη ὑπὲρ ἐλέους δοξάσαι] and to the intent that the Gentiles should glorify God for His Mercy. Δοξάσαι is the aorist infinitive, as βεβαιῶσαι, after εἰς τό. Christ was born under the Law, in order to show the Truth of God's promises to the Fathers of the Jews, and in order that the Gentiles should praise God for His Mercy (more gracious than Truth), because, by His obedience to the Law, He took away the Curse and Rigour of the Law, and fulfilled all the typical Ceremonies of the Law, and has enabled us to fulfil the commands of the Law, and has opened to all Nations the Kingdom of Heaven without subjection to the yoke of the Law. Therefore do not despise others, nor be elated in yourselves; for, whatsoever you are, you are only by the mercy of God. See above on Gal. iii. 13.

— καθὼς γέγραπται] as it is written. He cites Prophecies of Scripture, which show that God's design in the Law and the Prophets was that Jews (ὁ λαὸς, οἱ λαοί) and Gentiles (ἔθνη) should be all united as one man in praising and glorifying Him for His love to the world in Christ. See Eph. i. 10; ii. 15.

15. Τολμηρότερον δὲ ἔγραψα] I write to you more confidently in part because I am reminding you in addition to what you already know. I have more confidence of your acceptance of what I write because it is not new to you, but is already anticipated by your own conviction; and also because this admonition is not from myself personally, but from the grace of the Holy Ghost, Who inspires me to write. See v. 18, where he uses the word τολμήσω.

Ἀπὸ μέρους, in part, intimating that there were also other reasons why he might write boldly to them, especially the importance of the subject on which he writes, and his own love for the Jewish Nation, and desire for their Salvation. For examples of this phrase, see ix. 1, 2; x. 1, 2; xi. 25; xv. 24; above, 1 Cor. i. 14; ii. 15.

16. ἱερουργοῦντα] ministering, as a priest, the Gospel. Cp. 4 Macc. vii. 8, τοὺς ἱερουργοῦντας τὸν νόμον. Let not the Jewish Christians among you imagine that there is no longer any Temple, or Priesthood, or Sacrifice in the World. There is an Evangelical Hierurgy in the Church Universal, which is God's Temple. The Levitical Priests in the Temple, who offered up sacrifices which "were shadows of the good things to come" (Col. ii. 17. Heb. x. 1), only preannounced the Gospel by those types and figures; but I minister the substance, of which they ministered the shadow. I am God's ἱερουργός: the sacrifices which I offer are not holocausts of Animals, but Oblations of whole Nations, sanctified by the Holy Ghost, and now presented as an acceptable sacrifice to God in Christ.

Compare Phil. ii. 17, where the Apostle represents himself, in his approaching martyrdom, as a Christian Drink-Offering poured out on the meat-offering of the Faith of the Gentile World.

The change of metaphor is very appropriate to the alteration of circumstance under which that later Epistle was written.

The consummation of the whole may be seen in the last Epistle of all, 2 Tim. iv. 6.

17. τήν] Not in Elz., but in B, C, D, E, F, G. My boasting is in Christ, not in any thing done by myself.

18. οὐ γὰρ τολμήσω τι λαλεῖν] for I will not venture to speak of any thing that I myself have done, or of any thing which Christ wrought, not by my means, for the Obedience of the Gentiles. (See i. 5.) My glorying is not in myself, but only in Christ Jesus. (v. 17.) I myself am nothing. There is nothing done by me which Christ did not work. To Him be all the glory. (Cp. 1 Cor. xv. 10.) Of that I will boast, because the praise is His.

He uses the word τολμήσω here, following up the sentiment expressed by τολμηρότερον in v. 15.—Elz. has λαλεῖν τι, but the best MSS. have τι λαλεῖν.

19. ἁγίου] So A, C, D, E, F, G. Elz. Θεοῦ.

— ἀπὸ Ἰερουσαλήμ] from Jerusalem. He reminds the Gentiles that the Gospel came forth from Sion. See xi. 26. Micah iv. 2.

— καὶ κύκλῳ] and in a circle. He might well use this comparison, for his missionary tours had been like an ever-widening spiral, growing gradually, and enlarging itself further and further westward from its focus in Jerusalem; and so this missionary spiral continued to expand, till it embraced Rome, and probably Spain, and perhaps even Britain itself. See v. 23.

— μέχρι τοῦ Ἰλλυρικοῦ] as far as Illyricum. Probably on his second visit to Macedonia. See Acts xx. 2, and Paley's H. P. pp. 21, 22.

— πεπληρωκέναι] have filled up the Gospel. That is, have not only traced the first outline, but have filled it up.

20. φιλοτιμούμενον] being ambitious of danger and difficulty. Cp. above, 1 Thess. iv. 11. 2 Cor. v. 9.

21.] Compare what is said by St. Paul's Contemporary and fellow-labourer, S. Clement, Bishop of Rome (see on Phil. iv. 3), concerning St. Paul's preaching, travels, and sufferings. Παῦλος ὑπομονῆς βραβεῖον ὑπέσχεν, ἑπτάκις δεσμὰ φορήσας, φυγαδευθεὶς, λιθασθεὶς, κήρυξ γενόμενος ἐν τῇ ἀνατολῇ καὶ ἐν τῇ δύσει, τὸ γενναῖον τῆς πίστεως αὐτοῦ κλέος ἔλαβεν, δικαιοσύνην διδάξας ὅλον τὸν κόσμον, καὶ ἐπὶ τὸ τέρμα τῆς δύσεως ἐλθών, καὶ μαρτυρήσας ἐπὶ τῶν ἡγουμένων, οὕτως ἀπηλλάγη τοῦ κόσμου, καὶ εἰς τὸν ἅγιον τόπον ἐπορεύθη, ὑπομονῆς γενόμενος μέγιστος ὑπογραμμός. Clem. Rom. i. 15.

22. Διό] For which cause, also for the most part, I was being hindered from coming to you, who have already received the Gospel from others.

Other things also hindered me, but this was my principal impediment, because my first design and desire was to preach where the Gospel had not been preached.

23. μηκέτι τόπον ἔχων ἐν τοῖς κλίμασι τούτοις] because I have no longer place in these parts, i. e. in Achaia, whence the Epistle was written. See v. 25, 26, and xvi. 1. 23. He had no further τόπος or opportunity of preaching there on new ground. He therefore was now at liberty to come to Rome, which was not indeed new ground, but lay on the road to new ground. See note on v. 24.

— ἐπιποθίαν δὲ ἔχων] having a vehement desire, fulfilled not long afterwards, after his visit and arrest at Jerusalem, and two years' imprisonment at Cæsarea. (Acts xxi. 30; xxiv. 27; xxviii. 16.)

24. ἂν—Σπανίαν] So the best MSS. Elz. ἐάν. Vulg. renders it rightly "cùm in Hispaniam proficisci cœpero." The sense is, I have a desire of coming to you, for many years, whensoever I shall have set out for Spain, which is new ground.

My special mission being to preach the Gospel where Christ has not been named (v. 20), I could not rightly regard even you (who have already received the Gospel, see i. 8) as the end of my missionary journey, but I hope to take you in my way (cp. v. 28), when I shall have set out for Spain, "where Christ has not been named."

That St. Paul did go into Spain after his liberation from his two years' imprisonment at Rome, is asserted in various passages of the Fathers, quoted by Baronius, A.D. 61. Jacobson on Clem. Rom. i. 5, cited above on v. 21.

The following remarks are from the late Professor Blunt (History of the Christian Church, chap. iii. page 54), speaking of St. Paul's movements after his two years' imprisonment at Rome;

He is at Rome, and at liberty, the world once more before him. What more probable than that he should profit by the occasion now afforded him of completing his plan—his tendency still westward from the very beginning of his ministry,—and go forwards to Spain?

Clemens Romanus, his contemporary, and a writer who appears to have been in possession of knowledge of St. Paul, derived to him from opportunities of his own, expressly affirms that his travels extended to the limits of the West, a phrase by no means applicable to Rome, particularly when used by one who was dwelling at Rome at the moment, but quite applicable to Spain, the like being expressly found in several authors in direct relation to that country (Pearson, Minor Theolog. Works, ii. 361), and both Chrysostom and Theodoret asserting, without any hesitation, in so many words, that to Spain the Apostle went after his imprisonment at Rome (Ibid. i. 392). Certain it is that Spain was amongst the nations which received the Gospel the earliest. It had its Churches, and what is more, it had long had its Churches in the time of Irenæus, for he not only refers to them, but refers to them as channels of the primitive ecclesiastical tradition, which proved the doctrine of the Church to be opposed to that which the heretics, against whom he was disputing, claimed for orthodox (Irenæus, i. c. 10, § 2). All this is very consistent with St. Paul's visit to that country. (Blunt.)

Besides,—the ancient Canon Muratorianus, written in the second century, mentions the "journey of Paul setting forth from the city (of Rome) for Spain." See also Neander, Geschichte u. Pflanzung, p. 265. Guerike, Handbuch, p. 52. Hug, Einleitung, and Olshausen, Studien, 1838, pp. 957—7, quoted by Jacobson in Clem. R. p. 28, and the note below on Hebrews xiii. 24.

After Σπανίαν Elz. adds ἐλεύσομαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς, which is not in A, B, C, D, E, F, G.

The clause ἐλπίζω—ἐμπλησθῶ is inserted parenthetically; and the thread of the sentence is taken up again after ἐμπλησθῶ at νυνὶ δὲ πορεύομαι εἰς Ἰερουσαλὴμ, and the sense is,—I hope one day to set out (πορεύεσθαι) for Spain, and then to see you in my way thither, but now I am setting out in an opposite direction, namely, to Jerusalem.

— ὑφ' ὑμῶν] B, D, E, F, G have ἀφ' ὑμῶν.

— ἀπὸ μέρους] in part; for such is my love, and vehement desire, felt for many years (v. 23), of seeing you, that I cannot fully satisfy it, by a visit "in transitu." This desire also was fulfilled, for he remained at Rome two years. (Acts xxviii. 30.)

25. Νυνὶ δὲ πορεύομαι εἰς Ἰερουσαλήμ] But now I am setting out for Jerusalem. At the end of his second visit to Achaia, from which he went by way of Macedonia to Miletus, and so to Cæsarea and Jerusalem. See Acts xx. 2—17; xxi. 1—17; xxiv. 17—19. 1 Cor. xvi. 1—4. 2 Cor. viii. 1—4.

From these words it appears that both the Epistles to the Corinthians were written before that to the Romans. Origen. Cp. Paley, H. P. p. 8—12.

The Apostle mentions this circumstance of the collection of alms made in Macedonia and Achaia for the poor Jewish Christians, in order to show that he practised what he preached.

He had been exhorting the Gentile Christians to manifest their love for the Jewish Christians; he was himself going with alms from Gentile Christians to the poor Jewish Christians at Jerusalem. He was going διακονεῖν αὐτοῖς. (See also v. 31, διακονία.) He, the Apostle of the Gentile World, would do the work of a servant to them.

The incident here mentioned, that he was now on the point of setting out for Jerusalem, confirms the opinion that this Epistle was written at the close of his stay in Achaia, and probably at Cenchreæ, the eastern harbour of Corinth. See xvi. 1.

26. κοινωνίαν] contribution. κοινωνία, ἡ ἐλεημοσύνη, Phavorin. See above Gal. vi. 6. Rom. xii. 13, ταῖς χρείαις τῶν ἁγίων κοινωνοῦντες. Phil. i. 5; iv. 15.

27. ὀφειλέται] Macedonia and Achaia. Gentile countries are debtors to Jerusalem, for they have been admitted to partake in her spiritual privileges, and they owe in return a communion of their own carnal things.

A tacit exhortation to the Gentile Christians at Rome. "Dum Corinthios laudat, hortatur Romanos." Origen.

28. σφραγισάμενος τ. καρπόν] Fruits, such as olives and grapes, when the vintage was come, and the work of their collection was finished, and the process of their manufacture into oil and wine was completed, were consigned to amphoræ, &c., which were sealed for safety. See Mitscherlich on Hor. Od. iii. 8, 10.

The sense therefore is—When I have gathered in, and stored, and secured, and sealed up for them this fruit—this harvest or vintage of Christian Charity.

29. εὐλογίας] Elz. inserts τοῦ εὐαγγελίου τοῦ—not in the best MSS.

30. συναγωνίσασθαι] to strive together with me in your prayers. For he who prays, fights. Moses praying on the hill, and Joshua fighting in the plain, were fellow-combatants against the Amalekites, and the prayer of Moses was a more powerful weapon than the sword of Joshua. (Exod. xvii. 11.)

31. ἵνα ῥυσθῶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀπειθούντων ἐν τῇ Ἰουδαίᾳ] in order that I may be delivered from the disobedient in Judæa. Spoken prophetically; he was arrested by them, even when he was engaged in this charitable work, of "bringing alms to his nation" (Acts xxiv. 17), but he was delivered by the heathen power of Rome out of their hands. (Acts xxi. 27—34.)

— ἵνα ἡ διακονία μου—εὐπρόσδεκτος γένηται] that my service may be graciously accepted by them. Was it not certain that it would be so? No. St. Paul, the uncompromising assertor of Christian liberty, and of the non-obligation of the Levitical Law, even in opposition to St. Peter and St. Barnabas (Gal. ii. 11—15), might well presage that some of the Jewish Christians at Jerusalem would be prejudiced against him and his overtures of love.

CH. XVI. 1. Φοίβην—διάκονον—Κεγχρεαῖς] Phœbe, a deaconess of the Church at Cenchreæ, is described in the Subscription to the Epistle, also in the Syr. and Lat. Versions, as the bearer of the Epistle. Cp. Origen. Chrys.

On the office of Deaconesses, see Acts xviii. 18. 1 Cor. i. 11. 1 Tim. iii. 11, and the words of Pliny in his Epistle to Trajan, x. 9, where he speaks of the "ancillæ quæ ministræ vocabantur," in the Christian congregations; and the authorities in Basnage i. p. 451, Bingham II. xxii., and the special treatise of Ziegler, de Diaconis et Diaconissis, Witteberg, 1678.

Perhaps the Epistle was written at this port of Corinth, Cenchreæ, when St. Paul was about to set out from Achaia to Northern Greece.

He wrote the Epistle when he was about to leave Achaia (see xv. 23. 25), and Phœbe, a deaconess of Cenchreæ, seems to have been the bearer of the Epistle. See on v. 1.

Had he written it from the city of Corinth itself, probably he would have sent it by some one of that great commercial city, where he had many friends.

In Acts xviii. 18, we see him at Cenchreæ, showing his charity for the Jewish Christians, when he was about to leave Achaia, after his first visit to Corinth, and was going to Jerusalem; and now, perhaps, after his second visit to it, when on the eve of quitting Achaia, on his way toward Jerusalem, he performs another act of Apostolic charity to the Jewish and Gentile Christians, by writing this Epistle at Cenchreæ.

2. καὶ γὰρ αὐτή] for she herself also (not αὕτη), a reason for her friendly reception.

3. Ἀσπάσασθε] Salute. No less than thirty persons are saluted by name here (vv. 3—13). It is remarkable that St. Paul should have had so many friends in a city which he had never visited (i. 13), and that he sends so many greetings in this Epistle.

This fact is to be explained partly by the character of the great city to which he is writing, and to which, as to a common centre, persons flocked from all parts of the world. Cp. Juvenal (iii. 61, 62), calling Rome "Græcam urbem."

Partly it is due to the character of the Apostle himself, who had now preached the Gospel through Syria, Asia Minor, Macedonia, and Achaia, and whose name had become familiar, by his preaching and by his Epistles, to a large part of the civilized world.

This proof of the connexion of the Apostle St. Paul with so many persons dwelling in a city which he had never visited, opens out to us a view of the silent workings of the Gospel, by which it gradually leavened the world. Not by any violent effort, or sudden eruption, but by an almost imperceptible growth, the mustard-seed of the Gospel put forth its leaves and branches, and became a great tree, and overshadowed the world. (Matt. xiii. 31. Luke xiii. 19.)

— Πρίσκαν] So the best MSS. Elz. Πρίσκιλλαν.

— καὶ Ἀκύλαν—ὑπέθηκαν] He begins with salutations to Jewish Christians;

At the same time, he puts Priscilla's name before her husband's, showing to them of the Circumcision that in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female (Gal. iii. 18). See also above on Acts xviii. 28.

Aquila and Priscilla had been driven from Rome, with the Jews, by the edict of the Emperor Claudius (Acts xviii. 2), but now had been allowed to return, "edicti cessante sævitiâ" (Origen). The names of Aquila and Priscilla were most likely to suggest themselves to the Apostle, writing from Achaia (see Acts xviii. 2), where he had laboured together with them. They had accompanied him to Ephesus; and it is probable that in the tumult there, as well as previously at Corinth, they had "laid down their necks for his sake." See Acts xviii. 16. 18; xix. 24—30. 1 Cor. xvi. 19. Origen. Paley, H. P. p. 16, 17. 252, with the additions of Mr. Birks.

As Paley has observed (p. 17), Aquila and Priscilla were Jews by birth, but had boldly taken part with St. Paul and the Gentile Christians, and were specially entitled to the love of all the Gentile Churches.

5. τὴν κατ' οἶκον αὐτῶν ἐκκλησίαν] The Church which assembles for worship at their house. See v. 5, and note below on Philemon 2.

— Ἐπαίνετον—Ἀσίας] Epænetus, the firstfruits of Asia.

— Ἀσίας] So the best MSS., not Ἀχαΐας. Cp. 1 Cor. xvi. 15, where Stephanas is called the ἀπαρχὴ Ἀχαΐας. The name of Epænetus, the firstfruits of Asia, is naturally combined with that of Aquila and Priscilla, who had laboured with the Apostle in Asia.

On the accentuation of Ἐπαίνετος, see above on Acts xx. 4.

7. συναιχμαλώτους μου] my fellow captives; in some of his imprisonments, not recorded in the Acts of the Apostles, but referred to 2 Cor. xi. 23, ἐν φυλακαῖς περισσοτέρως: and Clement of Rome (ad Corinth. 5) says that St. Paul was imprisoned seven times.

— ἐπίσημοι ἐν τοῖς ἀποστόλοις] Of good reputation among the Apostles, that is, "coram eis et apud eos." See Fritz., Meyer, De Wette, Philippi. Cp. ἡπίσημος ἐν βροτοῖς, Eurip. Hippol. 103, and Ellicott on Gal. i. 1.

Not that the persons here mentioned were themselves Apostles (see above on 1 Cor. xv. 7. 2 Cor. viii. 23). But St. Paul specifies this circumstance in order to show the Jewish Christians, that his own kinsmen (cp. v. 21, and above, ix. 3) and fellow-prisoners were distinguished as persons of mark by the other Apostles, e. g. Peter, James, and John; and he thus indirectly declares the Christian communion and harmony of faith and love which subsisted between the other Apostles and himself, the last of their body,—the Benjamin of the Apostolic company, born in Christ not only after them, but after some of his own kinsmen who were not Apostles. See 1 Cor. xv. 8.

8, 9. Ἀμπλίαν—Οὐρβανόν] Amplius and Urbanus, two of the few Latin names among these members of the Church of Rome. The only other such names are Priscilla, Aquila (v. 3), Junia (v. 7), Rufus (v. 13), and Julia (v. 15). The other names are of Greek origin, and probably, for the most part, of a lower class, such as freedmen and slaves.

9. ἐν Χριστῷ] So v. 2, προσδέξησθε ἐν Κυρίῳ: v. 8, ἀγαπητόν μου ἐν Κυρίῳ: v. 9, συνεργὸν ἐν Χριστῷ: v. 10, δόκιμον ἐν Χριστῷ: v. 11, τοὺς ὄντας ἐν Κυρίῳ: v. 12, τὰς κοπιώσας ἐν Κυρίῳ—ἐκοπίασεν ἐν Κυρίῳ: v. 13, τὸν ἐκλεκτὸν ἐν Κυρίῳ. This frequent reiteration of these words, "in the Lord," applied to different persons and acts, brings out with force the doctrine,—

(1) That all Christians, whether men or women, are members of one body in Christ.

(2) That all that is done and suffered by them, is to be done and suffered in the Lord; that is, for His glory, according to His will, and in reliance on His grace. See below, v. 22.

(3) That St. Paul, and the Ministers of Christ who are followers of St. Paul, do not labour for themselves, but for the Lord; do not preach themselves, but Christ.

(4) That He is Head over all things to His Church.

(5) The non-occurrence of the name of St. Peter in this Epistle to the Church of Rome, and particularly its absence from this part of it, seems to be conclusive against the fundamental assertion of the present Church of Rome, that in order to be in Christ and in the Lord, it is necessary to be united to those who call themselves successors of St. Peter; and that all the grace, which flows from Christ, is derived through St. Peter, and through those who claim to be his successors, the Bishops of Rome, as Supreme, Visible, Heads and Lords of the Church, and Vicars of Christ upon earth.

10 ἀσπάσασθε Ἀπελλῆν τὸν δόκιμον ἐν Χριστῷ· ἀσπάσασθε τοὺς ἐκ τῶν Ἀριστοβούλου· 11 ἀσπάσασθε Ἡρωδίωνα τὸν συγγενῆ μου· ἀσπάσασθε τοὺς ἐκ τῶν Ναρκίσσου τοὺς ὄντας ἐν Κυρίῳ· 12 ἀσπάσασθε Τρύφαιναν καὶ Τρυφῶσαν τὰς κοπιώσας ἐν Κυρίῳ· ἀσπάσασθε Περσίδα τὴν ἀγαπητήν, ἥτις πολλὰ ἐκοπίασεν ἐν Κυρίῳ· 13 [d] ἀσπάσασθε Ῥοῦφον τὸν ἐκλεκτὸν ἐν Κυρίῳ, καὶ τὴν μητέρα αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐμοῦ· 14 ἀσπάσασθε Ἀσύγκριτον, Φλέγοντα, Ἑρμῆν, Πατρόβαν, Ἑρμᾶν, καὶ τοὺς σὺν αὐτοῖς ἀδελφούς· 15 ἀσπάσασθε Φιλόλογον καὶ Ἰουλίαν, Νηρέα καὶ τὴν ἀδελφὴν αὐτοῦ, καὶ Ὀλυμπᾶν, καὶ τοὺς σὺν αὐτοῖς πάντας ἁγίους.

10. Ἀπελλῆν] Cp. Hor. Serm. i. v. 100, "credat Judæus Apella," a name used by Horace, for an obvious reason, in ridicule, but not disdained by St. Paul, who adds, τὸν δόκιμον ἐν Χριστῷ, the approved in Christ, who has given him the true circumcision of the Spirit.

11. Νάρκισσος] Not the freedman of the Emperor Claudius (Suet. Claud. 28), for he had been put to death by Nero, A.D. 54, i. e. before the date of this letter; but perhaps a freedman of Nero. Dio lxiv. 3.

12. Τρύφαιναν] Tryphæna. On this, and other names in this list, see Lightfoot, Journal of Class. Phil. x. 57, and Merivale, vi. p. 260, and note on Phil. iv. 22.

13. τὸν ἐκλεκτὸν ἐν Κυρίῳ] the elect in the Lord. Another proof that St. Paul does not use the word elect to designate a person who can be known by men, as one who will finally persevere, and certainly be saved.

Almighty God knows who will persevere and be saved; but men have not this foreknowledge concerning themselves or others; and Christian Charity, which "hopeth all things," will suppose every one to be elect in the Lord, whom the Lord has graciously called into His Church, and has plentifully supplied with the means of everlasting salvation, and who is adorning the Christian profession of a sound faith with the good fruits of a holy life. See above on viii. 30.

14. Ἑρμῆν—Ἑρμᾶν] This is the order in the best MSS. Elz. puts Ἑρμᾶν first. Cp. v. 1 Φοίβην, v. 15 Νηρέα. Hence it would appear that the Gentile Christians at Rome did not scruple to retain names, though derived from heathen deities (Phœbe, Nereus, Hermes). And one of these names (Hermas) was retained by the writer of the Ecclesiastical book entitled the Ποιμήν, or 'Shepherd,' still extant—whom Origen and others suppose to be the Hermas here mentioned by St. Paul. But this is not probable, for the Author of that book was brother of Pius, Bishop of Rome, A.D. 150 (Canon Muratorian.).

Every thing was to be appropriated and consecrated by Christianity. Heathen Temples and Basilicas were to become Christian Churches. A Phœbe (the name of Diana) is a Deaconess of the Church, and a bearer of the Epistle of St. Paul to the Christians at Rome. The names Nereus and Hermes are christianized. The ship called Castor and Pollux brings the Apostle to Rome. See on Acts xxviii. 11. How striking is the contrast between Tryphæna and Tryphosa, with their sensuous meaning and voluptuous sound, and the sterner words that follow, τὰς κοπιώσας ἐν Κυρίῳ, labouring in the Lord!

This is a consideration which may serve to remove the scruples of those who cannot prevail on themselves to conform to the common use of the names of the Months of the Year or Days of the Week, because they are derived from Heathen deities or men. Rather, these names, like the appellations in this chapter, have their appropriate uses, as mementos of the sin and misery from which the world has now been delivered, and of the blessings it enjoys under the Gospel.

16. ἐν φιλήματι ἁγίῳ] a holy kiss; specially given in the Church at the Holy Eucharist. See Origen here, and Justin. Apol. ii. p. 97. Athenag. Legat. p. 36. Aug. c. lit. Petil. ii. 22. Cyril. Catech. 5. Cp. Bingham XV. iii., and note on 1 Thess. v. 26.

A very suitable direction, after the exhortations to the Gentile and Jewish Christians in this Epistle, to Christian love, to be sealed with a kiss of peace at the Lord's Table, after hearing this Epistle read in the Church.

The precept is repeated twice by St. Paul to the Corinthians (1 Cor. xvi. 20. 2 Cor. xiii. 12), for whom the epithet ἅγιον was specially needful. In the latter place, St. Chrysostom has some excellent remarks on the sanctification of the lips by the reception of the Holy Eucharist, and on the consequent duty to keep them pure from all taint of evil.

— αἱ ἐκκλησίαι πᾶσαι] πᾶσαι is omitted by Elz., but found in the best MSS. St. Paul, the Apostle of the Gentiles, speaks in the name of all the Churches—having the care of them all. (2 Cor. xi. 28.)

17. σκοπεῖν] mark them—have your eye upon them—as a helmsman has his eye upon a rock; and steer aside from them.

On the duty of shunning those who impugn the fundamentals of the Gospel, see Waterland on the Trinity (c. 4), who quotes 1 Cor. v. 5. Gal. i. 8, 9, and Gal. v. 12, in that sense, and 1 Tim. vi. 2—5. 2 Tim. ii. 16—18. Tit. iii. 10. 2 John 10, 11.

18. Χριστῷ] Elz. prefixes Ἰησοῦ, not in A, B, C.

— κοιλίᾳ—καρδίας] they are slaves of their own bellies, and deceive the hearts of others.

20. συντρίψει τὸν Σατανᾶν] will bruise Satan under your feet quickly. Satan now rules at Rome, but the Seed of the woman has bruised the Serpent's head, according to the first prophecy in Holy Scripture. (Gen. iii. 15.)

After the recent perversion of that prophecy, in the Papal Decree on the Immaculate Conception (Rome, Dec. 8, 1854), wherein this act of bruising the Serpent's head is applied to the Virgin Mary, as her special prerogative, it is not irrelevant to cite the following testimony to the truth, from the pen of the learned Romanist Commentator, Cornelius A Lapide, in his note here (Rom. xvi. 20): "Alludit Apostolus ad Genes. iii. 15, ut directè habent Hebraica הוּא Hic, id est Ipsum Semen, sive Proles mulieris, putà CHRISTUS conteret caput tuum."

And so the ancient Bishop of Rome, Leo I. (Serm. de Nativ. ii.), and S. Jerome in his Version of Gen. iii. 15. See his Quæst. Hebr. in Gen. iii. 15; and the masculine "IPSE" was received by Popes Sixtus V. and Clement VIII. How is the Church of Rome changed since St. Paul wrote this Epistle to it! (i. 8.) How is the gold become dim, and the fine gold changed! (Lam. iv. 1.)

— Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου] St. Paul's own subscription, written with his own hand in all his Epistles. See on 1 Thess. v. 28. Heb. xiii. 25. It is repeated in v. 24, where however A, B, C omit it.

21. Ἀσπάζεται] So A, B, C, D*, F, G. Elz. ἀσπάζονται.

— Τιμόθεος—Σωσίπατρος] Timothy, and Sosipater, or Sopater, of Berœa, were with St. Paul at Corinth when he wrote this Epistle, and accompanied him from it as far as Asia. (Acts xx. 2. 4.)

This Epistle to the Romans is almost the only letter of St. Paul, at the writing of which Timothy is known to have been present, and in which he is not joined with St. Paul in the opening address.

St. Paul had not been at Rome, but he was the Apostle of the Gentiles, and so had a divine commission to address the metropolis of the Gentile world; which Timothy had not.

Timothy was afterwards with him at Rome in his first imprisonment, and is associated with him in his Epistles written from Rome to the Colossians, Philemon, and the Philippians. See also Hebrews xiii. 23; and he was probably also at Rome with him at his second imprisonment and martyrdom. (2 Tim. iv. 9. v. 21.)

— Λούκιος] Perhaps St. Luke the Evangelist (Origen), who was with St. Paul at this time (Acts xx. 5), and accompanied him afterwards to Rome. (Acts xxviii. 16.)

On the double form of proper names in the New Testament, see above on Acts xv. 22, and Winer, p. 93.

— Ἰάσων] Cp. Acts xvii. 5.

22. Τέρτιος] Tertius. St. Paul employs a secretary, bearing a Roman name, to write to the Romans.

The words ἐν Κυρίῳ are to be connected with what immediately precedes (Origen). The work of an amanuensis, as well as of an Apostle, may be done, and ought to be done ἐν Κυρίῳ—it is as a labour of love "in the Lord." See above, v. 7, "Tertius ad gloriam Dei scribit, et ideò in Domino scribit." Origen.

On St. Paul's habit of writing his Epistles by the hands of secretaries, see above on 1 Thess. v. 28. 2 Thess. iii. 17. Gal. vi. 11.

23. Γάϊος] Caius. See on 1 Cor. i. 14. According to some, the first Bishop of Thessalonica. Cp. Tillemont i. 103.

— Ἔραστος ὁ οἰκονόμος τῆς πόλεως] Erastus the Quæstor of the City, probably Corinth. (2 Tim. iv. 20.)

Erastus, having a financial office at Corinth, was a fit person to be employed by St. Paul in collecting alms in Greece. He seems to have been sent by St. Paul from Ephesus to Macedonia for that purpose (cp. Acts xix. 21, 22), but having an official position, he was not, it seems, able to leave Greece to go with St. Paul to Asia and Jerusalem, with some who are here mentioned, e. g. Timotheus and Sopater. See Acts xx. 4. Cp. Birks, p. 255.

— Κούαρτος] Quartus, a Roman name: ὁ ἀδελφὸς, your brother.

24. Ἡ χάρις—ἀμήν] See above on v. 21.

25—27. Τῷ δὲ δυναμένῳ—ἀμήν] This Doxology is placed here in B, C, D, E, and some Cursive MSS., and in Vulg., Copt., Æthiop., and other Versions, and Latin Fathers.

But it is inserted at the end of Chapter xiv., and in the great majority of Cursive MSS., and in the Greek Lectionaries and Fathers.

It is found both there and here, in A, and a few Cursives.

It is omitted by D, F, G, and was rejected by Marcion. (Origen vii. p. 453.)

The Editors are divided as to its position. Among those who maintain its claim to stand here, are Erasmus, Stephens, Beza, Bengel, Koppe, Knapp, Rinck, Lachm., Scholz., De Wette, Tischendorf, Philippi, Meyer, Alford.

Some few Editors and Commentators, Mill, Wetstein, Griesbach, Matthiæ, Eichhorn, would remove it to the end of Chapter xiv., and two or three deny its genuineness.

The genuineness of this Doxology is substantiated by external and internal evidence. Even the involved structure of the sentence, which is such as an interpolator would scarcely have hazarded, is an argument in its favour. It was probably transposed, or rejected, in the first instance, by some who thought that the words in v. 24 marked the close of this Epistle, as of others from St. Paul's hands.

To Him who is able to establish you according to my Gospel, and the doctrine preached of Jesus Christ, according to the Revelation of the Mystery, which had been kept secret in all past ages (see Tit. i. 2. 2 Tim. i. 9. Matt. xxv. 46), but has been now made manifest (in the Gospel), and through the Scriptures of the Prophets made known unto all Nations, according to the commandment of Eternal God, for their obedience to the Faith. See i. 5.

This concluding sentence contains the kernel of the doctrine of the whole Epistle (see above on i. 3, and Introduction, p. 194—7), namely, that God had decreed—even before the world began—(and therefore long antecedently to the Call of Abraham, and to the giving of the Levitical Law) to unite all Nations in one Church Universal by Faith in Christ; and that this Divine Decree was kept secret from former ages, though the way had been prepared for its manifestation by the Prophetical Scriptures of the Old Testament, and is now, at length, in the fullness of time, revealed to all in the Gospel. See below, Eph. iii. 3—9. Col. i. 26. 2 Tim. i. 9. v. 10.

The way for this Evangelical Revelation had been quietly prepared by the Prophetical Scriptures. There was (according to Bengel's comparison) in the Old Testament the silent movement of the hands of the Clock; but it sounded forth the Hour with an audible voice in the Gospel.

— ᾧ] i. e. μόνῳ σοφῷ Θεῷ, To the only wise God, agreeing with τῷ δυναμένῳ, at the beginning of the sentence, which is resumed by ᾧ, to whom through Jesus Christ be glory for ever. Amen. On this anacoluthon, see Winer, p. 501. Gal. ii. 6. In a less impassioned strain he would have written αὐτῷ. See xi. 36, and particularly Eph. iii. 20, 21, which is the best exposition of this passage, and may have given occasion to the transfer.

INTRODUCTION

TO

THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

I. On the date of the Epistle to the EPHESIANS, COLOSSIANS, and PHILEMON.

AN interval of about three years elapsed between the date of the preceding Epistle, to the Romans, and that of the three following Epistles, to the Ephesians, Colossians, and Philemon.

(1) These three last-named Epistles were written by St. Paul when he was a prisoner (δέσμιος, Eph. iii. 1; iv. 1. Col. iv. 18. Philemon 1. 9, 10. 13).

(2) They were therefore written either at Cæsarea, or at Rome.

(3) They seem to have been written about the same time. For Tychicus is the bearer of the Epistles to the Ephesians (vi. 21), and to the Colossians (iv. 7); and Onesimus is associated with him in bearing the Epistles to Colossæ and to Philemon (Col. iv. 9. Philemon 10). Besides, the same persons are mentioned as present with the Apostle when he wrote both the last two mentioned Epistles; and their greetings are sent by him together with his own salutations to those whom he addressed [1].

(4) The place at which they were written, was most probably Rome.

This is the opinion of ancient Expositors [2], and of the majority of modern Interpreters and Critics [3].

The following considerations seem to be conclusive against the recent supposition of some [4], that these Epistles were written at Cæsarea during St. Paul's two years' confinement there, before he was sent to Rome (Acts xxiv. 27); and in favour of the earlier and received opinion that they were written at Rome during his first imprisonment in that city;

In his Epistle to the Romans St. Paul had expressed an earnest desire and intention to see Rome, after he had been to Jerusalem with the collection of alms for the poor Christians there [5].

It is evident that a visit to Rome was then the first object in his thoughts; and he would not form any plan of going to any other places (as soon as he had executed his mission at Jerusalem) before he had been to Rome.

Further, soon after he had written his Epistle to the Romans he declared at Ephesus, "After I have been at Jerusalem I must also see Rome" (Acts xix. 21).

Besides, when he had arrived at Jerusalem, he received a special commission from Almighty God to go to Rome. "Be of good cheer, Paul, for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome" (Acts xxiii. 11). Accordingly he appealed unto Cæsar [6].

When these things are duly considered, it will not appear credible, that the Apostle should publicly declare his intention of going to other places, in a different direction, before he had been at Rome.

Now, if we refer to the Epistle to Philemon, written at the same time as that to the Colossians,

[1] These are Aristarchus, Mark, Epaphras, Luke, Demas. Cp. Col. iv. 10—14, and Philemon 23, 24.

[2] Chrys. Procem. ad Epist. ad Ephes. Jerome on Eph. iii. 1; iv. 1; vi. 20. Theodoret, Procem. ad Epist. ad Ephes.

[3] See Davidson's Introduction, ii. p. 362, compared with Meyer's Einleitung über den Brief an der Epheser, p. 15—19. Alford, p. 23.

[4] e.g. Schulz, Schneckenburger, Schott, Böttger, Wiggers, Thiersch, Meyer. See his Einleitung, p. 15, and cp. Alford, p. 21.

[5] See Rom. i. 10—13, and Rom. xv. 23, where he says, "Now having no more place in these parts, and having a great desire these many years to come unto you," &c.

[6] See note above on Acts xxv. 10.

and probably also as that to the Ephesians, we find that the writer hoped and designed to pay a visit, soon after its date, to Colossæ in Phrygia. "Prepare me a lodging, for I trust that through your prayers I shall be given unto you." (Philemon 22.)

Such language as this could hardly be used by St. Paul at Cæsarea, where he was in bonds, having appealed to Cæsar, and having announced his desire and design to go to Rome, and having received a divine mandate to go thither. When he was at Cæsarea, all his thoughts would be directed westward to Rome; and he would not have announced an intention or a desire of going, in a contrary direction, into Phrygia.

Therefore these Epistles were not written at Cæsarea.

But when his desire of visiting Rome had been accomplished, and when, in obedience to the divine command, he had a near prospect of standing before Cæsar, and of bearing witness to Christ, then he might use such language as that; then he might cherish the hope of declaring to his friends in Colossæ, and to the Christian Churches of Asia, the blessings he had received in Palestine and in Italy, and might reasonably desire to confirm their faith by declaring to them how "the things that had happened unto him had fallen out unto the furtherance of the Gospel" (Phil. i. 12).

Hence it appears more probable, that these Epistles were written at Rome during the Apostle's first imprisonment in that city, A.D. 61—63.

II. On the Persons to whom the Epistle inscribed "to the EPHESIANS*" was written.*

The accuracy of this title has been controverted by some[1].

I. The external evidence adduced in behalf of the allegation that this Epistle is not rightly inscribed "to the Ephesians," is as follows;

(1) A passage in S. Basil (c. Eunom. ii. 19), where he says that St. Paul, writing an Epistle to the Ephesians, as truly united by knowledge to the Existing One (τῷ ὄντι), denominated them in a singular manner (ἰδιαζόντως), as existing (ὄντας), speaking to them thus, "To the Saints who exist (τοῖς οὖσιν), and faithful in Christ Jesus." For so those persons who were before us have delivered to us; and so we have found it written in the ancient copies of this Epistle. Eph. i. 1.

It thence appears that the words "in Ephesus" (ἐν Ἐφέσῳ) were not found in some ancient Copies seen by S. Basil.

Indeed, it could not be said, that St. Paul had addressed the Ephesians in a singular manner, peculiar to them (ἰδιαζόντως) if he had written τοῖς οὖσιν ἐν Ἐφέσῳ, inasmuch as he uses a similar mode of address to the Romans and to the Philippians[2].

The observation of S. Basil was probably derived from Origen, whose comment on this point has been first published not long ago in Dr. Cramer's Catena[3]. Origen there says, We found this expression, "to the Saints that exist" (τοῖς ἁγίοις τοῖς οὖσιν), used only in the case of the Ephesians, and we inquire what its meaning is. Consider then whether, as He who revealed Himself to Moses in Exodus describes His Name as the I AM (Exod. iii. 14), so they who partake in the Existing One become ὄντες, being called out of non-existence into existence, as St. Paul says, God chose the things that are not, in order to destroy those things which are. (1 Cor. i. 28.)

So Origen. It is true that S. Jerome here (who had Origen's Commentary before him, as he tells us in his Preface) speaks of this observation as too subtle[4]; and he tells us that other Expositors are of opinion that the true reading here is not "to those who are," but "to those who are holy and faithful at Ephesus."

It appears then—

(a) That the words "at Ephesus" were not found here in some ancient Copies.

(b) But that those persons, who did not find those words here, did not entertain any doubt that the Epistle was rightly inscribed to the Ephesians.

Origen, who, as far as we know, was the first person who made the remark above cited, recognizes the Epistle as addressed to the Ephesians, even when he is making the remark, and comments upon it as such.

[1] See Meyer's Einleitung, p. 9.
The allegations of others (e. g. De Wette and Baur) that the Epistle is not a genuine work of St. Paul, have been fully examined and refuted by Meyer, Davidson, and Alford, and do not require further notice.

[2] Rom. i. 7. Phil. i. 1.

[3] Ed. Oxon. p. 102.

[4] "Quidam curiosiùs quàm necesse est putant ex eo quod Moysi dictum est," &c., and he then recites the remark above quoted from Origen.

The same may be said of S. Basil.

(2) The second argument in behalf of the allegation that the Epistle was not addressed to the Ephesians, is deduced from the assertion of Tertullian, that Marcion, the heretic, desired (gestiit) to alter it, so as to be inscribed "to the Laodiceans[1]."

But this testimony of Tertullian implies that such an inscription would have been an alteration, and it is accompanied with the assertion[2] that, "according to the verity of the Church, we have this Epistle addressed to the Ephesians, and not to the Laodiceans."

All then that can be admitted here is, that Marcion might perhaps have found in some copies of this Epistle the inscription, "to the Laodiceans;" and that this might have suggested to him the desire of which Tertullian speaks.

(3) The words "at Ephesus" (ἐν Ἐφέσῳ) are not found in the text of the Vatican Manuscript, (Cod. B), but have been added in the margin of that Manuscript by a later hand.

These words are also erased from one Cursive MS. (Cod. 67).

Hence it has been supposed by some, that this Epistle was either not addressed to the Ephesians, or that it was an encyclic or circular letter addressed to other Churches of Asia; and that a blank space was left in some copies after τοῖς οὖσιν, in order to be filled up with the name of such other Churches[3].

II. But on the other hand it is to be observed—

(1) That no copies now in existence have any other name than that of Ephesus; and all the extant Manuscripts, including the Vatican Manuscript, which have any title prefixed to the Epistle, exhibit the words "to the Ephesians" (πρὸς Ἐφεσίους).

(2) That all the extant Manuscripts, except the two just mentioned, have the words "at Ephesus" (ἐν Ἐφέσῳ) in verse 1.

(3) That the ancient Church universally received this Epistle as addressed to the Ephesians.

Here we may refer particularly to the testimony of the Apostolic Father and Martyr, St. Ignatius, who was the scholar of St. John, who lived and died at Ephesus. Ignatius was Bishop of a great Asiatic Church, Antioch, and he also wrote an Epistle to the Church of Ephesus, and in that Epistle[4], alluding to the Mysteries revealed by St. Paul in this Epistle[5], he congratulates them on their high dignity, as being συμμύσται Παύλου τοῦ ἡγιασμένου, initiated together with Paul the sanctified into the Mysteries of the Gospel; and adds that St. Paul makes mention of them in the whole[6] of his Epistle, as in Christ Jesus; that is, as incorporated in Him; a very fit description of the character of this Epistle, which dwells specially on their mystical union and spiritual indwelling in Christ.

Another ancient witness to the same effect, also from Asia, is S. Irenæus, a scholar of S. Polycarp, Bishop of another neighbouring Asiatic Church, Smyrna, and also a disciple of St. John.

He quotes this Epistle about thirty times[7], and wherever he mentions the persons to whom it was addressed, he speaks of them as the Ephesians[8].

III. Let us pass now to arguments from internal evidence.

It is alleged on behalf of the opinion that this Epistle was not addressed to the Ephesians—

That it does not contain any salutations, or any personal notices of any individuals residing in the place, to which it is sent.

This, it is argued, is inconsistent with the supposition that it was addressed to Ephesus, where St. Paul had actually resided and preached for no less a space of time than three years. (Acts xix. 8—10; xx. 31.)

This remark deserves attention.

It may be observed with regard to it—

That the absence of personal notices and salutations may have arisen from the large number of persons with whom the writer was acquainted. An Apostle who had preached three years in a city could not specify all his friends there, and he might not wish to make invidious distinctions among them.

In the two Epistles to the Church of Corinth, where St. Paul had spent a longer time than in any other Gentile city except Ephesus (Acts xviii. 1. 11), there are no salutations.

On the other hand, there are more personal greetings in St. Paul's Epistle to the Church of Rome, where he had never been, than in all his other Epistles put together.

Again; he despatched this Epistle by the hands of an Asiatic friend and fellow-labourer, Tychicus, who was charged with messages to the recipients, concerning the affairs of St. Paul, in whose personal condition they are supposed to feel an affectionate interest. (Eph. vi. 21.) Tychicus could supply by word of mouth all that was wanting of personal and private greetings on the part of the Apostle.

Besides, as has been elsewhere observed[1], the Epistle to the Ephesians proceeds on the assumption that the persons to whom it was addressed had been already well trained in the doctrines of Christianity; and that they were prepared and qualified to receive the full revelation of those sublime Mysteries which distinguishes this Epistle among the writings of St. Paul.

Who was so likely to have imparted this preparatory teaching to this great Gentile Church at Ephesus as the great Apostle of the Gentiles himself?

May we not therefore say, that in the ripe fruit of Christian Doctrine, brought forth in perfection in this Epistle, we see the genuine produce of the previous culture of the three years' residence and preaching of the Apostle at Ephesus[3], who, as he himself says, had kept "back nothing from them," but had "declared to them the whole counsel of God[3]?"

On the whole, then, there is nothing in the allegations which have been specified of sufficient weight to invalidate the testimony from ancient Manuscripts, Fathers, and Versions, and from the general tradition and consent of the Universal Church, that this Epistle was addressed by St. Paul to the Ephesians.

IV. But it may be inquired—

May there not have been some real foundation for the discrepancy, however slight, which has been already noticed in the reading of the first verse of the Epistle, and for the omission of the word Ephesus, and for the observations already recited of Origen and Basil upon that reading?

May not some circumstances in the transmission of this Epistle have furnished Marcion with a plausible reason for his desire to alter the title of this Epistle, and to call it an Epistle to the Laodiceans?

In answer to these inquiries it may be observed—

(1) That all St. Paul's Epistles were designed for general circulation[4].

(2) That Ephesus, being the city to which this Epistle was addressed, and being a great commercial city near the coast of Asia, would be the first Asiatic city in which this Epistle would be received and read.

(3) That it would thence be disseminated by Copies among all the Churches of inner Asia, and would thus be brought to Laodicea, and through it to Colossæ, east of Laodicea.

(4) That it would probably pass through Colossæ and Laodicea in its way to Pontus, the country of Marcion.

(5) That St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Colossians, commands them to read the Epistle from Laodicea (Col. iv. 16) in the following words: "And when this Epistle (i. e. that to the Colossians) is read among you, cause that it be read also in the Church of the Laodiceans; and that ye likewise read the Epistle from Laodicea."

(6) That this mandate of the Apostle in a Canonical Epistle,—that to the Colossians, which was to be publicly read by them in the Church, and which requires them to transmit that Epistle to Laodicea, and also to receive another Epistle from Laodicea and to read it in like manner,—affords a

[2] The allegation from the other side from εἴγε ἠκούσατε, in iii. 2, has been considered in the note on that passage. See also i. 15.

[3] See his speech to the elders of Ephesus, Acts xx. 20—27, a speech which has many points of coincidence with this Epistle; e. g. cp. xx. 28 with i. 7, 14, and xx. 27 with i. 11.

[4] See note on 1 Thess. v. 27.

presumption that the other Epistle (viz. that from Laodicea) was one of his own Epistles, and was also a Canonical Epistle.

(7) That there is no evidence that any Canonical Epistle was ever addressed directly by him, or by any other Apostle, to the Laodiceans.

(8) That therefore there is good reason for the opinion of Bp. Pearson[1], Dr. Whitby, and others, that the Epistle which the Colossians were to receive from Laodicea, and which they were required to read, was no other than St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians, which would come in a natural geographical order from Ephesus to Laodicea, and through Laodicea to Colossæ.

(9) Similarly that Epistle may have passed into Pontus by the same route; and thus Marcion may have taken occasion to designate the Epistle to the Ephesians as an Epistle to the Laodiceans.

(10) On the whole, it seems probable, that as the Colossians were expressly commanded by St. Paul to pass on their Epistle to the Laodiceans, so the Ephesians also received a similar instruction from St. Paul, perhaps by means of Tychicus, the bearer of their Epistle, to forward their Epistle to Laodicea.

The following pertinent observations on this subject are from Professor Blunt's Lectures on the Early Fathers, A.D. 1857, p. 438:—

"It is well known that a question has been agitated relating to one of the Epistles of St. Paul, viz. whether the Epistle to the Ephesians is properly so entitled? whether the Epistle which we call that to the Ephesians is not in fact an Epistle to the Laodiceans, the same to which allusion is made in Col. iv. 16, 'Cause . . . . that ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea?' As if St. Paul had said, 'Cause that ye read the epistle which I sent to Laodicea with directions that it should be forwarded to Colossæ.'

"But it is plain that Irenæus has no such understanding of the passage, but only knows of an Epistle to the Ephesians; whilst his quotations from it plainly identify it with our own of the same title.

"Still less does he afford any ground for the notion that a distinct Epistle to the Laodiceans ever existed, which has since disappeared.

"For, copious as are the extracts in Irenæus from the various writings of St. Paul (his very plan leading him to overlook none of them), there is not one that is not to be found in our present copies of them.

"And in another of the Fathers, Tertullian, we have more than negative evidence upon this question; for in his treatise against Marcion, in the fifth book of it (adv. Marcionem, v. 11), in which he is refuting that heretic out of the Epistles of St. Paul, on arriving at the Epistle to the Ephesians, he observes, 'We now come to yet another Epistle, which we entitle the Epistle to the Ephesians, but the heretics entitled it to the Laodiceans.' And he afterwards adds, that it was Marcion's pleasure to change the title of this Epistle (c. xvii), as a proof of his own profound investigation of the subject.

"With respect to the text, therefore, in the Epistle to the Colossians, which gave occasion to the doubt we are now discussing, we may be disposed to conclude, with Bp. Middleton (on the Greek Article, note on Eph. i. 1), that nothing is more probable than Macknight's conjecture, viz. that the Apostle sent the Ephesians word by Tychicus, who carried their letter, to send a copy of it to the Laodiceans, with an order to them to communicate it to the Colossians."

III. On the Design and Contents of the EPISTLE to the EPHESIANS.

It has been observed by S. Chrysostom[2], S. Jerome[3], and others, that the Epistle to the [2] Chrys. in Procem. ad Ephes., ἐστὶ νοημάτων μεστὴ ἡ Ἐπιστολὴ ὑψηλῶν καὶ δογμάτων. And he explains this circumstance from the fact that the Ephesians had been already well instructed in the Articles of the Christian Faith: λέγεται δὲ καὶ τὰ βαθύτερα τῶν νοημάτων αὐτοῖς ἐμπιστεῦσαι ἅτε δὴ κατηχημένοις.

A very just observation, and affording a sufficient answer to those who have argued, from the absence of salutations and personal notices in the Epistle to the Ephesians, that either the Epistle is not correctly inscribed to the Ephesians in our present editions of it, or could not have been written by St. Paul, who had personally resided and preached at Ephesus for about three years. (Acts xix. 8—10; xx. 31.)

On the contrary, this Epistle evidently assumes (as Chrysostom remarks) that they to whom it was addressed had been already well schooled in the doctrines of Christianity. The great Gentile Church of Ephesus had been planted and watered by the Apostle of the Gentiles, St. Paul, as is evident from the Acts of the Apostles, xviii. 19; xix. 8—10; xx. 31.

[3] "In hanc potissimam Epistolam ignota sæculis sacramenta congessit." And on Eph. iii., "Nulla Epistola Pauli tanta habet mysteria tam reconditis sensibus involuta." And on chap. iv., "Inter omnes Pauli Epistolas hæc vel maximè et verbis et sensibus involuta." Jerome (in Præf.).

Ephesians stands pre-eminent among the Epistles of St. Paul in the sublimity of its revelations of supernatural truths, which could never have been discovered by any efforts of human Intelligence.

This peculiar characteristic of the Epistle to the Ephesians may be ascribed to several causes—

(1) St. Paul had already resided for about three years at Ephesus, and had fully preached the Gospel there, so that "all that dwelt in Asia (that is, the region of which the capital was Ephesus) heard the word of the Lord Jesus" (Acts xix. 8—10; xx. 31).

In no city (as far as we know) had the Apostle resided and taught continuously for so long a time as Ephesus.

The Ephesians, therefore, had been well prepared by previous discipline to receive the full and systematic instruction in the Mysteries of the Gospel, which is embodied in this Epistle. They were specially qualified to do so.

(2) Besides, the City of Ephesus occupied a prominent place among the Cities of the World, as having special needs and claims on the Apostle of the Gentiles for such instruction from him.

Ephesus was the stronghold of Satan in many forms of spiritual iniquity. It was a Court and Camp of the Evil One. Thither he had attracted the inhabitants of Asia and "the World[1]" by the mysterious traditions of an ancient superstition, and by the alluring fascinations of religious pomp and pageantry[2], and by the no less powerful operations of selfish interests and secular advantages, represented in the combination of Demetrius and his craftsmen[3], and had made them to bow before himself in the magnificent Temple of the Ephesian Artemis.

There the Devil deluded mankind by sorcery and witchcraft. There he beguiled them into converse with himself, and allured them to hold familiar intercourse and communion with the powers of darkness, in order to attain a knowledge of the hidden secrets of the invisible world, and to penetrate into the mysteries of futurity.

The immense amount of the price of the Magical Books committed to the flames at Ephesus in consequence of St. Paul's teaching there, is specified by his friend and companion St. Luke[4], in order to give some notion of the powerful dominion exercised by Satan over the minds of that populous, wealthy, commercial, intellectual City, by means of Magical Arts[5].

(3) Hence it was particularly requisite, that in an Epistle to such a City as Ephesus the Apostle of the Gentiles should reveal the true character of the Spiritual Powers of Darkness[6], under whose thraldom the Heathen World was enslaved, and should thus lead men to recognize the dignity and blessedness of that intellectual, moral, and spiritual Emancipation which had been achieved for them by Jesus Christ.

The Apostle, therefore, having his spiritual eye illumined by heavenly light, uplifts the veil which separates the Visible World from the Invisible; he enables mankind to contemplate the workings of the two antagonistic Powers and Forces, of the Kingdom of Light on the one side, and of the Empire of Darkness on the other. (v. 8.)

This is a part of his design in this Epistle; and on the ground-work of the supernatural truths, here communicated as objects of Faith, he builds up a superstructure of moral duties as subjects of Practice. He executes this great task in a manner adequate to its dignity, grandeur, and importance.

His diction in this Epistle bespeaks the transcendant sublimity of the Doctrines which he here reveals. It has something in it more than human. Especially in the dogmatic portion of it, occupying the greater part of the first four Chapters, his style breathes the poetic raptures of an impassioned effusion of Sacred Poetry, like a Divine Dithyramb. It burns with an impassioned fervour kindled by the Holy Spirit, Who descended in tongues of fire on the day of Pentecost. It grows and spreads itself with irresistible power in a spiritual conflagration. Or, to use another figure, its sentences flow on, as it were, in the full strong tide, wave after wave, of an immense and impetuous sea, swayed by a powerful wind, and brightened and sparkling with the golden rays of a rising Sun.

It is worthy of observation, that although the subject of this Epistle is of so sublime and mysterious a character, and though the language is characterized by a majestic grandeur, and by a poetic and even a lyrical tone, yet the whole management of the argument is methodical and systematic, such as might have been looked for in a philosophical Essay on Christian Faith and Practice.

Indeed, the Divine Apostle, while revealing in this Epistle the most mysterious, supernatural truths, displays in a signal manner a marvellous combination of calm Judgment, temperate Reason, comprehensive Intelligence, tender Affections, and fervid Imagination.

Let us now consider the plan of the Epistle.

The Apostle has his eye fixed on the Great Author of all things, the Fountain of being and blessedness, the Everlasting Father of all [1].

He reveals Him existing before the World, and shows us ourselves pre-existing in the divine mind and counsel, and as chosen by the Divine love in the unspeakable riches of His grace, and appointed by the pleasure of His Will for adoption into sonship in Christ [2].

He displays the Divine purpose to sum up all things in Christ, the Son of God, the King and Lord of Angels; in Christ, God of God, and yet becoming Man, and so, by His Incarnation, uniting Angels and Men under one Head, in One universal Church in Heaven and Earth.

He shows us God in Christ taking human flesh, and dying in that human flesh on the Cross; and thus reconciling God to Man by the offering of Himself a willing Victim for the World, and so destroying the enmity between God and men, and making peace [3].

He shows us Christ on the same Cross reconciling man to man, by fulfilling and taking away the Law of Levitical Ordinances, which separated Jew from Gentile, who were aliens from the life of God, and without God in the world [4], and joining together all, as one new man, in Himself [5]; and thus fully revealing the Mystery, which even the Angels themselves had not known, that the Gentiles would be made fellow-heirs of the promise, and be united together in the Body of Christ.

He shows Christ dying on the Cross, and redeeming men from the power, and guilt, and penalty of sin by the ransom there paid, and from the bondage of Satan; and also purchasing for them an eternal and heavenly inheritance by the infinite value of His precious Blood poured out for them on the Cross.

He shows us ourselves in Christ by reason of His Incarnation, and by virtue of His Death. He shows us ourselves delivered from the debasing dominion of the Powers of the Air and of the Satanic Spirits of Darkness, and made children of light in the Lord, as members of His Church, formed from His most precious side pierced on the Cross for us.

He shows the glory and blessedness of that Church taken from that side, as Eve was taken from Adam when he slept, and being no other than bone of His bone, and flesh of His flesh,—the Spouse of Christ [6]. He shows us, as members of Him, Who, as God consubstantial with the Father, fills all things by His Godhead, and Who also as God-Man, by reason of His Incarnation, His Death, Burial, Descent into Hell, and Ascension into Heaven, fills all things, and has made us whose Nature He has taken, and whose Nature He wears, to be partakers of His own fulness [7], and has united us in Himself to God, and Who, as our Head, has quickened us by His free Grace, who before were dead in trespasses and sins, and has raised us, His members, from the Dead, and has carried us up with Himself into Heaven, and has made us to sit with Himself in heavenly places [8], and has given us access in Himself by one Spirit to the Father [9].

He represents to us also the instrumental means by which these blessings of mystical incorporation in Christ are conveyed to us and to the whole race of Mankind.

He shows us that Christ has instituted a Visible Society, His Church Universal, which is to continue for ever in the World; that this Society is One Body, animated by One Spirit, and to be known by the worship of One Lord, by the profession of One Faith, and by the administration of One Baptism [10]; and that Christ, after His Ascension into Heaven, gave spiritual gifts to men, and that He gave certain offices, the highest of which is that of Apostles, "for the perfecting of the Saints, and the building up of the body of Christ, till we all attain to the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, to a perfect man," that is, to the ripeness of spiritual manhood, "to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ[1]."

He refers, therefore, to the practice of the Holy Apostles; and he teaches us that in the instrumental means employed by them for the maintenance of the Life and Unity, and for the expansion of the growth and stature, of the Church, and for the full development of her organization, we may see an exhibition of the mind of Christ Himself in the dispensation of those gifts and graces which He bestows by the operation of the Holy Ghost for that purpose, even to the end of time.

Thus, then, we may recognize in the Epistle to the Ephesians a divinely-inspired System of Instruction concerning the Origin, and Institution, and purposes of the Universal Church of Christ.

This is the dogmatic design of the Epistle.

It has also another purpose. In the second portion of it[2], the Apostle proceeds to show that this spiritual Teaching, revealing the transcendental doctrines and sublimest Mysteries of our Faith concerning the Eternal Love, and Prescience, and Purpose of God the Father toward Man in the Incarnation of His Dear Son, and in delivering Him up to die for the sins of the whole World, and in summing up all things in Him, and in reconciling all things to Himself in Him dying on the Cross, descending into Hell, ascending into Heaven, and sitting on His own Right Hand in Glory, and sending the Gift of the Holy Ghost from heaven, and in uniting all men as fellow-members and as sons of God by adoption in Christ, in an Universal Church foreknown and predestined from Eternity, is not a mere scholastic thesis of speculative Philosophy, but is the very root and mainspring of all true Christian Practice.

He shows that by reason of our Baptismal incorporation in the mystical Body of Christ, which is His Church, and by our fellowship with one another in Him, we are bound to abstain from Lying, for "we are members one of another[3]."

He shows that for the same reason we are bound to keep our hands from stealing, and to work honestly therewith, in order that we may be able to give to our fellow-members in need[4].

He shows that we are bound to keep our lips from evil words, in order that we may not grieve the Holy Ghost, by whom we were sealed, and that we may edify one another in love.

He shows that we are bound to abstain from all uncleanness and covetousness, for by such sins as these we should violate our primary obligations as members of Christ's Body, and be joining ourselves in communion with those Powers of Evil and Spirits of Darkness whom we have renounced, and from whom we have been delivered by Christ. (v. 4—11.)

He shows that Marriage, which is the Mother of all household Charities and Virtues, has its foundation in the Doctrine of Christ's Incarnation, and of the Marriage Union between Him and the Church, consummated by His Death, and of our own spiritual espousals to Him, and of our own communion with Him by His Blessed Body and Blood. (v. 30.)

Hence, therefore, he warns us, that sins against Marriage, such as fornication and adultery, are desecrations of a great Mystery, that they are acts of sacrilege against Christ.

Thus the Apostle teaches in this Epistle, that all virtuous practice grows like ripe fruitage on the branches of the Spiritual Vine by virtue of our union with Him Who said, "I am the Vine, ye are the branches[5]," and by the efficacious supply of life and spiritual Grace which we drink by means of that mystical union in Him.

He affirms that we have been created anew in Christ Jesus in order that we may tread in the appointed path of good works which God has prepared for us to walk in. (ii. 10.)

He also shows the necessity of maintaining stedfastly this truth, and of teaching the Doctrine of the Unity of Christ's Church as the ground-work of Christian Ethics.

This is a proposition, of which men need to be reminded, especially in times of division, when teaching on this subject is too often disparaged as merely theoretical, and is sometimes even denounced as exclusive and illiberal, and when some even appear to rejoice and exult in the miserable multitude of our religious divisions, as if they were proofs of a generous Liberty, and the luxuriant produce of a vigorous intellectual Energy.

But the divine Apostle boldly denounces these things as indications of moral feebleness and spiritual sterility, and even of infantine silliness[1]; and declares that we shall be only like puny and stunted children, and never reach the ripe manhood and full stature of our moral, intellectual, and spiritual growth, until we attain to the Unity of the Faith. (iv. 3.)

Thus, then, it appears that Teaching concerning the constitution, offices, privileges, and duties of the Christian Church, is a practical thing. It is, indeed, a practical thing, if the growth of man's moral, intellectual, and spiritual being ought to be his chief care; it is indeed a practical thing, if love of God, Whose goodness to men in Christ it reveals, is the main-spring of virtuous practice; it is a practical thing, if love of our fellow-men, whose nature Christ has taken, and joined for ever in Himself to the nature of God, and if love of our fellow-members in Christ are very strong motives to the right discharge of social duties to others. It is a practical thing, if speaking the truth and abstaining from falsehood, and if honest labour and abstinence from fraud, are practical things, and are even the safeguards of society. It is a practical thing, if abstinence from all pollutions of flesh and spirit, if purity and chastity, temperance and sobriety, are practical things. It is a practical thing, if violations of the Marriage Vow are sinful, and if the maintenance of the sanctity of Marriage, as symbolizing the mystical Union between Christ and His Church, is the source and well-spring of domestic peace and joy. It is a practical thing, if by the neglect of these duties men forfeit the hope of a blessed inheritance in the Kingdom of Christ, and if they thus make themselves partners with and companions for ever of the spirits of darkness[2]. It is a practical thing, if by the exercise of these moral duties we walk as children of the light[3], and are made meet for the glorious inheritance of the blessed Saints in Light[4]. It is indeed a very practical thing, if we must all appear before the Judgment Seat of Christ to give an account of our own works; and if the fires of Hell will never be quenched, and the joys of Heaven will never vanish away.

Therefore we may reckon the Epistle of St. Paul to the Ephesians as among the most precious treasures of dogmatic Theology, Church Polity, and Christian Ethics, that the Divine Author of Truth has vouchsafed to the world.

Lastly, we may regard the Apostle St. Paul, preaching at Ephesus, and writing this Epistle to the Ephesians, and afterwards, at the close of his career, settling his beloved son Timothy as Bishop at Ephesus, and writing two Epistles to Timothy as Chief Ruler of that Church, as preparing the way for the Apostle St. John, who passed the latter part of his life at Ephesus, governing the Ephesian Church and the Churches of Asia dependent on it, and dying there; and we may recognize in the Epistles to the Ephesians, and to Timothy the Bishop of Ephesus, a declaration of those Doctrines of the true Faith, particularly concerning the Divinity and Incarnation of the Son of God, the Eternal Word, which afterwards were displayed in all their fulness to the World in the Gospel, Epistles, and Apocalypse of the beloved Disciple and Evangelist, the Apostle and Bishop of Ephesus, St. John.

Πρὸς Ἐφεσίους] So A, B, D, E, F, G.

Ch. I. 1. διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ] by the will of God. An important example of the use of the preposition διὰ, for the vindication of the true meaning of such texts as John i. 3, πάντα δι' αὐτοῦ ἐγένετο, said of Christ, and erroneously supposed by some to denote ministerial inferiority in the divine Λόγος. See Origen[1], Jerome, and Theodoret here.

— τοῖς ἁγίοις τοῖς οὖσιν ἐν Ἐφέσῳ καὶ πιστοῖς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ] to the saints who are at Ephesus, and to the faithful who are in Christ Jesus. For proofs of the genuineness of these words, and for an examination of the argument derived from the omission of the words ἐν Ἐφέσῳ by B (supplied in the margin by B), and from the remarks of S. Basil (ad Eunom. ii. 19), and Tertullian, c. Marcion. iv. 1; v. 11. 17. 21), and Origen and Jerome in loc., see above in the Introduction to the Epistle, p. 270.

On the word ἅγιοι, saints, as applied to Christians generally, see on Rom. i. 7. 1 Cor. i. 2.

On the ancient history and geography of Ephesus, see Dr. Smith's Dict. pp. 833—7, and above on Acts xx. 27—35; and Howson, ii. 80—103.

— Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ] So Ignatius l. c. and B, D, E.—Elz. has Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ.

The words πιστοῖς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰ. are not to be rendered 'believers in Christ Jesus;' but ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ denotes union in Him, Who is the Χριστὸς, or Anointed One, and is also Ἰησοῦς, or Saviour of His Body (Eph. v. 23), and through Whom all unction, and saving grace, and power flow down upon His Members incorporated in Him, and dwelling by faith and holiness in Him.

3. Εὐλογητός] בָּרוּךְ Blessed; applied only to God. See above, Rom. ix. 5. 2 Cor. i. 3. 1 Pet. i. 3.

— εὐλογήσας] Observe the aorist. God blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places (cp. v. 20; ii. 6; iii. 10; vi. 12) in Christ Jesus, when He raised Him from the dead, and exalted Him to His own right hand; and thus by the exaltation of our Head made us also His Members to sit in heavenly places in Him (see i. 20), and poured out upon us the blessings of the Holy Ghost, consequent on Christ's exaltation and session at God's right hand. See iv. 8.

These blessings in heavenly places are tacitly compared by the Apostle with those earthly blessings which were promised to God's ancient people; and thus the superiority of the privileges of the Christian Church is intimated. Jerome.

Those blessings are properly spiritual blessings, which are wrought in the soul by the Spirit of God, and by the same Spirit are cherished and preserved in the heart of the receiver, and are proper and peculiar to those who are born of the Spirit. Bp. Sanderson, iii. p. 70.

4. καθώς] according as. The Apostle thus intimates that our Exaltation in Christ is a sequel to our Election in Christ, and is in accordance with it and in pursuance of it. Cp. the use of καθὼς in John xvii. 2. 1 Cor. i. 6; v. 7. 2 Cor. iv. 1; and see Meyer here and Ellicott.

4, 5. ἐξελέξατο ἡμᾶς κ.τ.λ.] He chose us before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blemish before Him in love, having predestined us to the adoption of sons through Jesus Christ to Himself, according to the good pleasure of His will.

Ἐν ἀγάπῃ is construed by Chrys., Syriac and Arabic Versions, as expressive of the love of God in the act of predestination; and so many modern Interpreters. The Vulg., Cod. Aug. and Æthiopic and Gothic Versions, join the words with those immediately preceding; and this on the whole seems the more natural combination. Ἐν ἀγάπῃ seems to express a necessary fruit of our incorporation and indwelling ἐν τῷ ἠγαπημένῳ v. 6.

Almighty God, Who foresaw that we should fall in the first Adam, created righteous, predestinated our Redemption in the Second Adam, even before the foundation of the world. Athanas. (Orat. ii. c. Arianos, p. 430), who compares 2 Tim. i. 9, where St. Paul says that God called us according to His own purpose and grace given us in Christ before the world began.

As to the Election of which St. Paul speaks in v. 4, and the Predestination specified in the next verse in the word προορίσας, the most satisfactory mode of ascertaining his sense is to examine how his words were understood in primitive times.

One of the best comments on this passage at the beginning of this Epistle to the Ephesians, is supplied by the introductory address of S. Ignatius, the disciple of St. John, in his Epistle to the same Church. That apostolic Father had St. Paul's words in his mind when he thus wrote,—Ἰγνάτιος ὁ καὶ Θεοφόρος τῇ εὐλογημένῃ ἐν μεγέθει Θεοῦ Πατρὸς καὶ πληρώματι, τῇ προωρισμένῃ πρὸ αἰώνων εἶναι διὰ παντὸς εἰς δόξαν παράμονον, ἄτρεπτον, ἡνωμένην, καὶ ἐκλελεγμένην ἐν πάθει ἀληθινῷ ἐν θελήματι τοῦ Πατρὸς καὶ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν, τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ τῇ ἀξιομακαρίστῳ, τῇ οὔσῃ ἐν Ἐφέσῳ: that is, "Ignatius, also called Theophorus, to the Church in Ephesus of Asia, which is blessed in the greatness and fulness of God the Father, and which was predestinated before all ages to be for ever to enduring and unchangeable glory, and to be united and elect in the true passion of Christ, by the will of God the Father, and of Jesus Christ our God."

It is evident that S. Ignatius here applies the words Elec- tion and Predestination—and that he supposed St. Paul to apply them—to the whole visible Church of God at Ephesus; to all those who were joined together in the body of Christ by the apostolic symbol of "one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism." (Eph. iv. 5.)

St. Paul himself has fully declared his own meaning in this respect in other passages of his Epistles, especially in Rom. viii. 29, 30 (where see note), which happily illustrates the present text, and is clearly illustrated by it.

Compare above, Introduction to Romans, pp. 194, 195. St. Peter also (i. 1, 2) applies the words ἐκλεκτοὶ κατὰ πρόγνωσιν Θεοῦ, 'Elect according to the foreknowledge of God,' to whole Societies of Christians; and he applies the word συνεκλεκτὴ, 'co-elect,' to a Church. (1 Pet. v. 13.)

This observation might have preserved this text from becoming a subject of contentious controversy concerning the election and final reprobation of individuals: which is known only to God, and cannot be predicated by man, either of himself or of any other.

Chrysostom well observes, that in the word election applied to the Universal Church of Christ, which is a chosen generation (1 Pet. ii. 9), a reference is made by the Apostle to the choice made of old by God of the seed of Abraham, the Jewish nation, to be His peculiar people. The Jews were God's elect people. He has now chosen all the faithful in Christ. See above, pp. 190—195.

— εἶναι ἡμᾶς ἁγίους] The purpose of our election was, that we should be holy. God did not elect us because we were holy, or because He foreknew that we should be holy (the Arminian theory), but in order that we might be holy. Cp. Eph. ii. 10; and see above, pp. 194, 195, and Chrys. and Jerome here.

— ἀμώμους] without blemish. Tittmann, Synon. p. 29. Meyer. Cp. v. 27.

— κατενώπιον αὐτοῦ] in the eye of Him Who sees all things.

5. εἰς υἱοθεσίαν] to adoption. This word shews that we are not as Christ is, sons of God by nature, but were predestinated to be made sons of God by adoption in Christ, Who is the only begotten Son of God (Origen), and Who took our nature in order to make us sons of God. Compare the Collect for Christmas Day.

— εἰς αὐτόν] unto Himself; so that by virtue of our adoption in Christ (Who is "God with us," "God manifest in our flesh") we might become "partakers of the Divine Nature." (2 Pet. i. 4.)

— κατὰ τὴν εὐδοκίαν τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ] according to the good pleasure ('bene-placitum') of His will.

But we are not therefore to imagine that God acts arbitrarily or capriciously in this or in any thing.

"They err, who think that of the will of God to do this or that, there is no reason but His will." Hooker (I. ii. 3). And St. Paul seems to have guarded against this notion in v. 11, where he says that God did what He did in our election, according to the counsel of His will. God acts freely according to the good pleasure of His will, but this good pleasure is regulated by the counsel of His will.

Many times there is no reason known to us of God's acting; but, that there is no reason thereof, I judge it most unreasonable to imagiue, inasmuch as He worketh all things according to the counsel of His will (v. 11), and whatever is done with counsel, hath of necessity some reason why it should be done. Nor is the freedom of the will of God a whit abated by means of this, because the imposition of this law on Himself is His own free act. Hooker.

6. ἐν ᾗ] So Elz. with the majority of MSS.; and so Scholz., Tisch., Bloomf., Harless, Ellicott. A, B, and a few Cursives, have ἧς, which has been received by Lachmann, Meyer, Alf. See also Winer, G. G. § 24, p. 148, who compares Eph. iv. 1. 2 Cor. i. 4.

— ἐχαρίτωσεν] 'gratificavit.' (Vulg.) The Syriac, Arabic, and Æthiopic Versions, understand the word as intimating an effusion and collation of grace on us, and so Jerome.

Chrysostom interprets the word as meaning not only that He bestowed grace and favour upon us, but that He made us to become gracious, and pleasing in His sight, inasmuch as He views us as incorporated in Christ, in Whom He is well pleased (Matt. iii. 17; xii. 18; xvii. 5); and Chrys. compares Ps. xlv. 12, where the king has pleasure in the beauty of the Church. And so Theodoret, Theophyl., Œcumen. Cp. Sirach xviii. 17, ἀνὴρ κεχαριτωμένος.

Both senses seem to be justified by the analogy of language and of doctrine, and therefore the word may be rendered, 'He graced us in the Beloved One.' But neither of these meanings would authorize us to render κεχαριτωμένη (in Luke i. 28) as equivalent to a source of grace to others.

— ἐν τῷ ἠγαπημένῳ] in the Beloved One, in Whom we have redemption, by His Blood—Christ.

A refutation of the Socinian theory, that it was inconsistent with God's Love to give up His own Son to suffer death,—the Innocent for the guilty. It was God's εὐδοκία, or Good Pleasure, to redeem us in Christ; and He εὐδόκησε, was well pleased in Christ His well-beloved Son. (Matt. iii. 17; xii. 18; xvii. 5.) And never was He more well-pleased than when Christ offered Himself a willing Victim to redeem the world. See note above on Matt. xvii. 5.

7. ἀπολύτρωσιν] redemption, by the price (τιμὴ) of His blood paid as our ransom (λύτρον) from death; and also as the purchase-money by which He acquired us to Himself, and to everlasting life in Himself. Cp. 1 Pet. i. 18; and Grotius, De Satisfactione Christi, pp. 4. 28.

That man is properly said to be redeemed, who is rescued from an enemy's hand, by whom he has been despoiled of liberty. We were in captivity, enslaved by the powers of this world, and could not lift up our hands from our chains, or so much as raise our eyes, unless some one had come to redeem us. But who is He so great as to be able to redeem the whole world by a ransom paid for it?—Jesus Christ, the Son of God. He gave His own blood, and rescued us from slavery and made us free. Jerome.

In Him we are created anew, and recover the image of God. Cp. Theodoret, and see below, v. 14.

— τὴν ἄφεσιν τῶν παραπτωμάτων] the forgiveness of sins. He had spoken of the redeeming worth and efficacy of Christ's blood; he now speaks of its expiatory and propitiatory virtue, of which St. John says: "If any man sin we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and He is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." (1 John ii. 1.) Cp. Rom. iii. 25, ὃν προέθετο ὁ Θεὸς ἱλαστήριον διὰ τῆς πίστεως ἐν τῷ αὐτοῦ αἵματι.

What is properly contained in this expression, forgiveness of sins?

(1) As sin is called a debt by Christ Himself, and is combined with the verb ἀφιέναι, to release (Matt. vi. 12; cp. Matt. xviii. 27, and Luke xvii. 3), we may say that ἄφεσις ἁμαρτιῶν means remission of sins considered as debts incurred by us, and by which we stand obnoxious to God.

But this is not the whole matter;

(2) The word ἀφιέναι in reference to sin is used by the LXX for כִּפֶּר, to expiate and reconcile; and also for נָשָׂא, to carry and take away; and also for סָלַח, to pardon. Hence the term ἄφεσις ἁμαρτιῶν contains the notion of an expiation and of a reconciliation, and also of bearing and taking away sin, and of consequent pardon for sin. And since it is so ordered by God, that without shedding of blood there is no ἄφεσις, or remission (Heb. ix. 22)—there must be a victim slain; and in order to take away the sins of the whole world that victim must be of infinite worth. And supposing such a victim to be provided and to suffer in our Nature, then we have an assurance that a sufficient propitiation for our sins, and a satisfaction to God's injured holiness and justice, has been provided, and that our sins have been remitted, and that we are reconciled to Him.

And that this has been done by Christ dying for us is testified by Holy Scripture, Heb. ix. 26; x. 12. Rom. iv. 25. 1 John ii. 1, 2. 1 John iv. 10. Cp. Bp. Pearson, Art. x. p. 675.

— τὸ πλοῦτος] So A, B, D*, F, G. Elz. τὸν πλοῦτον. Cp. ii. 7; iii. 8. 16. Phil. iv. 19. Col. ii. 2. Winer, § 9, p. 61.

8. ἧς ἐπερίσσευσεν] which he made to superabound. Cp. 2 Cor. iv. 15; ix. 8. 1 Thess. iii. 12, where περισσεύω is used in an active sense; and so it is explained by Theodoret and

He made the well-spring of His mercy and love to gush forth, and to refresh and cleanse us with its streams. Theodoret.

— ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ καὶ φρονήσει] in all wisdom and prudence—bestowed upon us by the superabundance of His grace. Σοφία and φρόνησις are expressly described as gifts of the Spirit by Isa. xi. 2.

The Heathen Philosophers imagined themselves to be the only σοφοὶ and φρόνιμοι, but their wisdom is folly, and generates vanity and madness (Rom. i. 22. 1 Cor. i. 20), but the Christian who is filled with grace from the Spirit of Wisdom and Understanding, though he may be despised as a fool by this world, yet he is, and will be one day acknowledged to be, the only wise and prudent man. Cp. Wisdom v. 4. The difference between σοφία and φρόνησις, as used by the Hellenistic writers, seems to have been correctly stated by the ancient expositors, namely, that σοφία expresses wisdom, properly so called, and φρόνησις is that faculty which applies the principles of wisdom, and is, in a word, wisdom in action. Cp. the use of the word φρόνιμος in Matt. x. 16; xxv. 2, and φρονίμως ἐποίησεν Luke xvi. 8. Thus God, Who is the Only Wise, is said to stretch out the heavens φρονήσει (Jer. x. 12. Prov. iii. 19), and φρόνησις is said to be a fruit of σοφία (Prov. viii. 1). And Solomon is said to have received σοφίαν καὶ φρόνησιν from the Lord (1 Kings iv. 29), the latter as a sequel to the former; and he says that the ἄφρων does evil with laughter, but σοφία generates φρόνησιν (Prov. x. 23). Hence there is truth in S. Jerome's remark that σοφία relates both to visible and invisible things, but φρόνησις to what is visible.

9. γνωρίσας τὸ μυστήριον] having made known to us the Mystery. If He had not made it known to us, we should never have known it; and that is the reason why it is called a Mystery. Bp. Sanderson (i. 233).

10. εἰς οἰκονομίαν τοῦ πληρώματος τῶν καιρῶν] for the dispensation of the fulness of the seasons, which, observes Theodoret, is thus expressed by St. Paul in Gal. iv. 4. When the fulness (πλήρωμα) of the time was come, God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the Law, to redeem them that were under the Law, that we might receive the adoption of Sons. Cp. Mark i. 15, πεπλήρωται ὁ καιρός.

The dispensation of the fulness of the seasons, signifies that dispensation of God to man, the Incarnation, which waited for its manifestation till the seasons predetermined by God had been fulfilled. For examples of this use of the genitive, see Jude 6, κρίσις μεγάλης ἡμέρας, Winer, § 30, p. 169.

As to the word οἰκονομία, used in this sense, see below, iii. 9, and 1 Tim. i. 4; and this sense has been well expressed by S. Ignatius in his Epistle to the Ephesians, c. 18, ὁ Θεὸς ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς ἐκυοφορήθη ὑπὸ Μαρίας κατ' οἰκονομίαν Θεοῦ.

It seems that the early Christian writers derived their use of the word οἰκονομία from this passage of St. Paul, and applied it to the Incarnation. See Euseb. H. E. i. 1; i. 2, and passim, and Routh, R. S. ii. 239. 263, and Suicer in voce.

— ἀνακεφαλαιώσασθαι τὰ πάντα κ.τ.λ.] to sum up all things for Himself in Christ, both the things in heaven and the things on earth.

In what does this ἀνακεφαλαίωσις, or recapitulation, consist? and how was it effected?

(1) It consists in bringing all things, which before were separated and disjointed, under one Head, Christ. Chrys., Œcum., Bengel, De Wette.

Heaven and earth were at variance, and heavenly Beings were separated from earthly, they had not one Head (Chrys.); and earthly things were at strife among themselves.

But the Son of God, God of God, Creator of the World, the Lord of Angels, became Man; and by becoming Man He united the Human Nature to the Divine in His own Person; and joined all men together in Himself, by taking the Nature of all, and thus He brought Angels and Men, Heaven and Earth, under one and the same Head. Chrys.

There is one Christ Jesus, our Lord, Who came by an universal dispensation, "omnia in semet Ipsum recapitulans." He Who was Invisible became Visible; He Who is Incomprehensible became Comprehensible; He Who is impassible became passible; He Who is the WORD became Man, in order that as He is Lord of heavenly and invisible things, in that He is the Word of God, so also He might have Lordship over earthly and visible things, by making Himself the Head to the Church, and so concentrate all things in Himself. Irenæus (iii. 16. 6).

Omnis dispositio in Eum desinit per Quem cœpta est, per SERMONEM scilicet Dei, Qui et caro factus est. Tertullian (de Monog. 5).

(2) Tertullian rightly supposes that an act of restoration, a "reductio ad initium" (c. Marcion. v. 17), is intimated by the word ἀνακεφαλαίωσις, or recapitulatio, and so the ancient Versions in Cod. Augiensis et Boernerian. In fact, the Son of God by becoming Man, reconciled God to Man, and made peace between Earth and Heaven; and by being the Second Adam, the Father of the New Creation, or regenerate race, brought together the scattered tribes of the Earth, and joined them to the Church of Heaven.

This is what St. Paul predicates of Christ when he says that "it pleased the Father that in Christ all fulness should dwell, and having made peace through the blood of the cross, by Him to reconcile all things unto Himself,—by Him, whether they be things on earth or things in heaven" (Col. i. 19). Severian.

The sense is well expressed by Chrysostom, thus: We call a thing an ἀνακεφαλαίωσις, or recapitulation, when the subject is concisely brought into a small compass. God in Christ gave One Head to all, angels and men; the Word, Who is God, to angels, and the same Word made flesh, to men.

So Augustine (Enchiridion, 62) speaks of the Incarnation as a work of instauration, as supplying to angels from men what had been lost to angels by the fall of the apostate angels; and also as an instauration to men by raising them up to what they lost by the fall of Adam: and Peace, he says, was restored to the world by the harmony thus effected between all intellectual creatures, and between them and their Creator.

The Invisible Angelic Powers, we may well believe, groaned over our degeneracy and ungodliness; for if they rejoice in the recovery of one sinner, how much more in the restoration of the World! And this was effected by the Incarnation, and Passion, and Resurrection of Christ. Thus Human Nature arose, and was freed from Incorruption, and was arrayed with Immortality.

The Prophecies of the Old Testament were accomplished, and the figurative Ritual of the Ceremonial Law, which was made after the pattern in the heavens (Heb. viii. 5; ix. 23) was fulfilled in Christ. "In cruce et passione Domini recapitulata sunt omnia Universa Mysteria. Omnis dispensatio vetustatis, non solùm quæ in terris, sed etiam quæ in cœlis gesta est, in Christi passione completur." Jerome.

Besides, the whole Creation waits and yearns for a Restoration in the Second Adam from the Curse, to which it was made subject in the first Adam. As it sympathized with man in his unhappy fall in Adam, so it yearned and groaned with him for the Incarnation, so it will triumph with him in his glorious Resurrection in Christ. See on Rom. viii. 19—22, and Theodoret here.

For an exposition of this text, see also Bp. Andrewes, Sermons, i. 265.

11. ἐκληρώθημεν] we were made His κλῆρος, or heritage. We become in Christ His λαὸς ἐγκληρος (Deut. iv. 20). There seems to be a reference to God's choice of the Jews of old as His κλῆρος among the Nations (cp. Exod. xix. 5, 6), and to His choice of the Levites to be His special κλῆρος among the Jews. (Deut. x. 9; xviii. 1, 2.)

So, under the Gospel, Christians are become "a holy priesthood, a peculiar people" (1 Pet. ii. 5), and Churches are κλῆροι Θεοῦ. Cp. 1 Pet. v. 3. Hence Theodoret (in Psalm xxiii.) says, Formerly the Jews were called a peculiar people, the inheritance of God; but now God's people and inheritance are they who are chosen from the Gentiles, and have been illumined by the beams of the true faith.

The word κληροῦν, κληροῦσθαι, rare in the LXX (see 1 Sam. xiv. 41, and Isaiah xvii. 11), and found only in this passage of the New Testament, is common in ancient Christian writers, and signifies to be enrolled in the Clerus or Clergy of the Church.

See the authorities in Suicer, ii. p. 113, by which the interpretation above given of the word is confirmed.

(2) Some learned Interpreters render it "we were chosen by lot"—but this seems less appropriate here, and less consistent with the counsel of God's Will, of which the Apostle speaks.

(3) Others suppose that ἐκληρώθημεν means, "we were made partakers of the lot or inheritance of the Saints." See Acts xxvi. 18. Col. i. 12. So Meyer.

— προορισθέντες] See v. 5.

— κατὰ τὴν βουλὴν τ. θ.] See v. 5. God worketh all things with counsel. Origen.

12. τοὺς προηλπικότας] us who before had hoped. The participle with the article indicates the cause; and is equivalent to the Latin "quippe qui speraverimus." Winer, p. 121. Meyer, p. 447.

The preposition πρὸ is explained by καὶ ὑμεῖς, which follows. We of the natural Israel were led by our Prophets to preconceive hopes in Christ. You Gentiles received the word of truth, and embraced the Gospel.

13. ἐσφραγίσθητε] ye were sealed. The literal Israel received the seal of Circumcision (Rom. iv. 11), and were thus shown to themselves and to others to be God's peculiar people. Ye were sealed with the true Circumcision, that of the Spirit in your baptism (Rom. ii. 28, 29). Cp. 2 Cor. i. 21, 22. Eph. iv. 30, and Chrys. here.

— τῷ Πνεύματι τῆς ἐπαγγελίας] by the Spirit of Promise. Of what Promise? That made by God speaking by Joel, ii. 28 (Tertullian, c. Marcion. v. 17), and by Christ, Who said, Behold I send the promise of My Father upon you. (Luke xxiv. 49; Acts i. 4.)

14. ἀρραβών] arrha, part-payment (see on 2 Cor. i. 22; v. 5), and an earnest of the whole. The earnest of the Spirit is "pars ejus honoris, qui nobis à Deo promissus est," Irenæus v. 8. "Hoc enim complebitur unde arrha data est," Aug. Serm. 23. "Si autem arrhabo tantus, quanta erit possessio!" Jerome.

— εἰς ἀπολύτρωσιν τῆς περιποιήσεως] for the redemption of the purchasing, i. e. with a view to that Redemption whose end and purpose was to purchase for you the inheritance in heaven, of which St. Paul had just been speaking. On the force of περὶ in this composite word, see Titus ii. 14.

In order to understand this expression, it is to be observed,—

(1) That the genitive case, τῆς περιποιήσεως, is here used, as often in the New Testament, where, in classical Greek, a verb, adjective, or participle might be used, namely, to define the characteristic quality or design of the preceding substantive. See note on Matt. xxii. 11; xxiv. 15, τὸ βδέλυγμα τῆς ἐρημώσεως. Winer, § 34, p. 210. Cp. note below on iv. 16, ἀφὴ τῆς ἐπιχορηγίας, 'joint for the supply.'

The Redemption of the purchasing is a phrase equivalent to 'the Redemption,' whose end was to acquire something by purchase.

(2) That the word περιποίησις is used in the sense of acquisition as here, 1 Thess. v. 9. 1 Pet. ii. 9, where it is active, and it is well rendered acquisitio here by Vulg., and Cod. Augien., and Arabic, and consertation by Gothic, and adoptio by Cod. Boerner.

(3) That the Redemption (ἀπολύτρωσις) wrought by Christ's death, and the price paid by His blood, is to be considered as availing to us in two respects,

(1) For our deliverance from sin and death;

This is what is specially to be predicated of His Sacrifice, as satisfactory.

(2) For the purchase of our title to an everlasting reward and heavenly inheritance.

And this is what is to be predicated of His Obedience as meritorious. See above, v. 7.

(4) St. Paul unites both these characteristics of Christ's death. It is an ἀπολύτρωσις, in that it is our deliverance from shame and woe; and it is an ἀπολύτρωσις τῆς περιποιήσεως, in that it is the purchasing to us of an Inheritance in glory and bliss. Hence in the Epistle to the Hebrews (ix. 15) he speaks of Christ's death for the redemption of transgressions, that they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance.

The force of εἰς is well expressed by Jerome, as signifying with a view to. We are qualified by the Spirit to partake of the benefits of the redemption which is the purchase of our heavenly inheritance. Spiritus repromissionis idcirco nunc sanctis datur, ut redimantur et copulentur Deo, in laudem gloriæ Ipsius. Jerome.

(5) There is also another acceptation of the word περιποίησις, in an active sense, which may probably have been in the mind of the Apostle;

Christ, our Redeemer, purchased us to Himself (περιεποιήσατο), as St. Paul himself says to the Ephesian Presbyters at Miletus (Acts xx. 28), Christ, our Redeemer, purchased the Church with His own blood, and he therefore says, Ye were bought with a price (1 Cor. vi. 20). And St. Peter (2 Pet. ii. 1) speaks of false teachers denying the Lord that bought them.

Thus the act of Redemption was an act of περιποίησις, by which the Redeemer acquired the redeemed as a possession to Himself. And they are therefore called by St. Peter (1 Pet. ii. 9) a λαὸς εἰς περιποίησιν, and by Christ Himself (in Isaiah xliii. 21) a λαός μου ὃν περιεποιησάμην. Cp. Malachi iii. 17. And this is the sense assigned to the word here by Chrysostom, Severian, and others.

This sense may well accord, and be combined with the former. For it is by virtue of our acquisition by Christ, as His People, and by our adoption into, and union with Him, that we have a title to the heavenly inheritance which He has purchased for us. It is by following our Divine Joshua that we enter the heavenly Canaan which He has conquered for us. It is as a people purchased by the blood of the Lamb out of every kindred under heaven, that we are made Kings and Priests unto God for evermore. (Rev. v. 9, 10.)

Some learned Interpreters understand περιποίησις in a passive sense, i. e. as the thing purchased,—the Church. But this seems contrary to analogy.

15. κἀγὼ ἀκούσας] I also having heard, i. e. having heard in my detention here at Rome.

No argument can reasonably be hence deduced (as is supposed by some) against the opinion that St. Paul had been personally concerned with those to whom this Epistle is addressed. What he now heard was the good news of their perseverance. See Theodoret, who rightly observes, that "as St. Paul was grieved when he heard of schisms at Corinth (1 Cor. i. 11), where he had preached for a year and a half, so he now rejoices when he hears of the faith and love which prevailed at Ephesus," where he had preached for nearly three years.

16. ὑμῶν] The second ὑμῶν is not in A, B, D, and in some Cursives and Versions, and is expunged by Lachm., Rück., and Meyer; but is retained by Tisch., Ellicott, and Alf.

17. ὁ πατὴρ τῆς δόξης] the Father of Glory. Cp. Ps. xxiv. 7, ὁ βασιλεὺς τῆς δόξης, Acts vii. 2, ὁ Θεὸς τῆς δόξης, and 1 Cor. ii. 8; and as to the use of πατὴρ, cp. 2 Cor. i. 3, πατὴρ τῶν οἰκτιρμῶν. James i. 7. See Chrys., and Voret. de Hebraism. 247. "Pater gloriæ Ille est, cujus Christus Rex gloriæ ascendens" (Ps. xxiv. 10). Tertullian, adv. Marcion. v. 17.

God is the Father of Glory in an absolute sense, in His own glorious essence and attributes.

And, in a relative sense, He is the Father of Glory to us. And in this character He is represented to us in this Epistle. See i. 2, 3; iii. 14.

— δῴη] The optative mood after κάμπτω ἵνα indicates that

It was necessary that they should be enlightened as to the eyes of their mind, in order that they might have the ἐπίγνωσις of God, and know the hope of His calling. This illumination was His gift.

— καρδίας] So the best MSS. and Editions. Elz. has διανοίας.

So St. Paul's contemporary, Clemens R. (i. 36), speaking of a similar spiritual knowledge and illumination in Christ, says, διὰ τούτου ἠνεῴχθησαν ἡμῶν οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ τῆς καρδίας, διὰ τούτου ἠθέλησεν ὁ δεσπότης τῆς ἀθανάτου γνώσεως ἡμᾶς γεύσασθαι.

19. τί τὸ ὑπερβάλλον μέγεθος] what is the exceeding greatness. This word μέγεθος is illustrated by S. Ignatius in his opening address to the Ephesians, Ἰγνάτιος τῇ εὐλογημένῃ ἐν μεγέθει Θεοῦ πατρὸς καὶ πληρώματι.

The Epistle of Ignatius to the Ephesians does not often directly quote that of St. Paul, but it is imbued with its spirit, and abounds with allusions to it.

— κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν τοῦ κράτους τῆς ἰσχύος] according to the working of the power of His might. κράτος is ἰσχύς in action. Ἐνέργεια is the working of the κράτος.

22. καὶ τ. πάντα ὑπέταξε κ.τ.λ.] and He put all things in subjection under His feet.

You will ask, it may be (says Dr. Waterland), what is the meaning of those texts? How was all power given Him, according to Matt. xxviii. 18? Or how were all things put under His feet, according to Eph. i. 22?

Nothing is more easy than to answer this.

The Λόγος, or WORD, was from the beginning Lord over all; but the God incarnate, the Θεάνθρωπος, or God-man, was not so till after the Resurrection. Then He received in that capacity what He had ever enjoyed in another. Then did He receive that full power in both natures which He had heretofore possessed in one only. This is very well represented by Hermas, in his fifth Similitude, where the Son of God is introduced under a double capacity, as a son and as a servant, in respect of his two natures, divine and human.

From hence you may perceive, how easy it is to account for our Lord's having all power given Him after His resurrection; given Him in respect of His human nature, which was never so high exalted, nor assumed into such power and privilege, till that time; having before been under a state of affliction and humiliation.

There is a notable fragment of Hippolytus (Vol. ii. p. 29, ed. Fabric.; and see a parallel place in Origen, Com. in Ioh. p. 413), which is so full to our purpose, that I cannot forbear adding it. Speaking of that famous passage in the Epistle to the Philippians (chap. ii.), and particularly upon these words, "Wherefore God also hath highly exalted Him" (v. 9), he comments upon it thus; "He is said to be exalted, as having wanted it before; but in respect only of His humanity: and He has a name given Him, as it were a matter of favour, which is above every name, as the blessed Apostle Paul expresses it. But in truth and reality, this was not the giving Him any thing which He naturally had not from the beginning: so far from it, that we are rather to esteem it His returning to what He had in the beginning, essentially and unalterably: on which account it is, that He having condescended, οἰκονομικῶς, to put on the humble garb of humanity, said, 'Father, glorify me with the glory which I had' (John xvii. 5). For He was always invested with divine glory, having been coexistent with His Father before all ages, and before all time, and the foundation of the world." Waterland (Defence of some Queries, i. p. 69).

— ἔδωκε] See iv. 11.

— κεφαλὴν ὑ. π. τ. ἐκκλησίᾳ] See on v. 10. Wonderful Mystery! He placed the Church on the same throne with Himself; for where the Head is, there is the Body also. Theodoret.

23. τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ τὰ πάντα ἐν πᾶσι πληρουμένου] the fulness of Him that filleth up all things in and with every thing, by and for Himself. τὰ is omitted by Elz., but inserted in the best MSS. and Editions, and indicates that Christ fills up the Natural Universe with his presence and power, and the Spiritual Universe with His grace.

πληρουμένου is not passive, but the middle voice. See Theodoret, and the Syriac, Æthiopic, and Gothic Versions, and Winer, § 38, p. 231, and it is to be distinguished from the active πληροῦντος, as indicating action done by and for Himself.

How, it may be asked, is the Church the fulness of Christ?

As the Body is of the Head; and as the Head is of the Body. Chrysostom.

And in order that we may not imagine that the Church has any intrinsic fulness of her own, St. Paul uses the middle voice, and says that Christ fills up every thing in all things for Himself. In fact, He enables the Church, which is His Body, to be the fulness of Himself, the Head. And therefore St. John says that of His fulness have we all received. (John i. 16.)

He fills the Church with all grace here, and will fill her with all glory hereafter. Cp. Theodoret.

Christ is the Sun of Righteousness; and the Moon, which derives her light from the Sun, is an emblem of the Church, which is illumined and filled up by the light of Christ (Matt. xxiv. 29. Luke xxi. 25). The Moon may be called the fulness of the Sun, as its orb is filled up by the Sun's light.

The Church here spoken of is the Church Universal on Earth, the whole company of faithful people, of every age and country, and also of all Angels and Saints, who are summed up together into One full lunar Orb of Glory by Christ, God and Man, Who, by His Divinity, fills all things and rules all creatures in Heaven and Earth; and by the union of the Human to the Divine in His One Person, has gathered together all Men and Angels into One Body under One Head, and enlighteneth every one that cometh into the world. (John i. 9.)

Hence St. Paul says that by our adoption into Christ's Body we have come to Mount Sion, the City of God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of Angels, to the General Assembly and Church of the Firstborn, and to the Spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling which speaketh better things than that of Abel. (Heb. xii. 24.)

CH. II. 1. παραπτώμασι καὶ ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις] in transgressions and sins. Παράπτωμα (from παραπίπτω, to fall aside from the right path) is distinguished from ἁμαρτία in being sometimes the consequence only of ignorance, inadvertence, or negligence,—whereas ἁμαρτία has more of wilfulness and presumption in it. The difference is well marked in Ps. xix. 12, παραπτώματα τίς συνήσει; . . . . 13, καθαρισθήσομαι ἀπὸ ἁμαρτίας μεγάλης. Cp. Tittmann, Syn. N. T. p. 47, and Bp. Sanderson, i. 82; iii. 224.

2. κατὰ τὸν αἰῶνα τ. κ. τ.] according to the course of this present world, its duration, its fashion, its pleasures, and its cares. Cp. 2 Tim. iv. 10, ἀγαπήσας τὸν νῦν αἰῶνα, as distinguished from, and opposed to, the αἰὼν ὁ μέλλων. Cp. Luke xvi. 8; xx. 34, οἱ υἱοὶ τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου. 2 Cor. iv. 4, ὁ θεὸς τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου. Gal. i. 4.

— κατὰ τὸν ἄρχοντα τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ ἀέρος] according to the Prince of the Dominion of the Air, the Ruler of all the Forces of the Air, the Sovereign of its Empire. Matt. xii. 24, ἄρχων τῶν δαιμονίων. Cp. Eph. vi. 12, τοὺς κοσμοκράτορας τοῦ σκότους.

Satan and his angels, being cast down from heaven (2 Pet. ii. 4. Jude 6), but not being yet consigned to hell, have their empire in this lower air (ἀὴρ, not αἰθὴρ), and are therefore called powers of the air, and of darkness.

On the present power and operation of Evil Spirits, and on their future destiny, see notes above on Matt. viii. 29, πρὸ καιροῦ, and Luke viii. 31.

Since their fall, the Evil Angels, being dispersed some in the air, some on the earth, some in the water, some in the minerals, dens, and caves, that are under the earth, have by all means laboured to effect an universal rebellion against the laws of God. These wicked spirits the heathen honoured instead of gods; particularly some as dii inferi, some in oracles, some in idols; in a word, no foul or wicked spirit was not, one way or other, honoured of men as God, till such time as Light came and dissolved the works of the devil. Hooker (I. iv. 3).

Therefore, in an Epistle to the Ephesians, whose city was a stronghold of idolatrous worship (Acts xix. 27), and of magic arts (Acts xix. 19), St. Paul fitly reminds them, that the powers to which they had paid homage, and which a great part of the world yet worshipped, were Evil Spirits, Powers of Darkness, leagued together against God under the Rulers of the Air, the Spirit working in the children of disobedience.

— τοῦ πνεύματος] the spirit which now worketh in the children of disobedience. The words τοῦ πνεύματος are to be taken in apposition with ἀέρος, and are to be explained by reference to the opposite Spirit which worketh in the children of obedience.

The Spirit who worketh in us breathes upon us from above, from the glowing αἰθὴρ, the pure and lofty empyrean of the heaven of heavens. But the Spirit which worketh in the children of disobedience is the low and murky air (ἀὴρ) in which the Powers of Evil dwell. This is their inspiration. By a similar figure the Apostle says, v. 8, "Ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord." The Rulers of the darkness of this world, the spiritual powers of wickedness (vi. 12), do not abide where the stars shine and the holy angels dwell, but in the gloomy region of this nether air. In this part of the heaven those foul spirits reside, against whom we contend and wrestle, in order that, having vanquished those evil Angels, we may gain our reward, and be united together in an incorruptible immortality with the Holy Angels. Having been severed from the darkness of evil angels by the light of the Gospel, and having been redeemed from their power by the precious blood of Christ, watch ye and pray, that ye may not enter into temptation. Augustine (Serm. 222). See also Augustine, Epist. 217, where he enlarges on this subject.

— ἐν τ. υἱοῖς τ. ἀπειθείας] 'in filiis incredulitatis.' Tertullian (c. Marcion. v. 17); 'filiis diffidentiæ.' (Vulg.) But it is something more than unbelief; it is unbelief in action, disobedience. Cp. Heb. iv. 6.

This phrase, "worketh in the children of disobedience," is a comfortable assurance to us that the Devil has no power against the children of obedience. Theodoret.

The phrase οἱ υἱοὶ τ. ἀπειθείας is adopted by the imitator of Ignatius (ad Philipp. 4), where he says that "the Prince of this world knows that the confession of the Cross of Christ is his own destruction; and that before the Cross of Christ was, he worked in the children of disobedience, and that now he works in men to tempt them to disobedience and deny the Cross, which is the origin of his own perdition. He works to this end in Jews, Heathens, and Heretics." See also the same writer ad Smyrn. 7, where he speaks of those who are ashamed of the Cross, and mock at the Passion and Resurrection of Christ, as the children of that Evil Spirit who tempted Adam, and slew Abel, and endeavoured to supplant Job, and excited the Jews against Jesus, and now worketh in the children of disobedience.

3. ἦμεν (B ἤμεθα) τέκνα φύσει ὀργῆς] children of wrath. So the Vulgate, Syriac, Gothic, Arabic, and Æthiopic Versions. We were by nature children liable to God's wrath (His ὀργὴ rather than His στοργὴ), on account of His holiness and hatred of sin (cp. 2 Pet. ii. 14, κατάρας τέκνα, and above on John xvii. 12, υἱὸς ἀπωλείας), and by reason of our hereditary taint derived from our first Parents, in whom we all sinned and fell. See Rom. v. 12. And yet the doctrine of Original Sin is now said by some (e. g. Meyer, p. 32) to be no part of the teaching of St. Paul!

The sense which the Church of England assigns to this passage is evident from the use she makes of it in her Catechism. See also the beginning of her "Office for Baptism of Infants," and cp. Ps. li. 5. John iii. 6. On the position of the substantive ὀργῆς see Rom. ix. 21. Phil. ii. 10. 1 Tim. iii. 6; and Winer, § 30, p. 172.

The word φύσει, 'by nature,' at first seems to create a difficulty. For, Is not Human Nature the work of God? Certainly it is, when it is understood as a whole; but not in its abuses. Hence St. Paul speaks of Gentiles doing by Nature the works of the Law (Rom. ii. 14, where see note), and men violating the Laws of Nature by evil lusts (Rom. i. 26); and he appeals to Nature on a question of order and decency in the Church. (1 Cor. xi. 14.)

Can we then be said to be subject to God's wrath, by reason of that Nature which is His work?

This question presented itself to primitive writers in commenting on this passage; and has been answered by Tertullian in his treatise on the Human Soul, which contains the germ of the argument, afterwards developed by Bp. Butler in his Sermons on "Human Nature:" "Quùm dicit Apostolus 'fuimus aliquando naturâ filii iræ,' irrationale indignativum suggillat" (this is a doubtful exposition), "quod non fit ex eâ naturâ quæ à Deo est, sed ex illâ quam diabolus induxit: dominus et ipse dictus sui ordinis, 'Non potestis duobus dominis servire' (Matt. vi. 24), pater et ipse cognominatus, 'Vos ex diabolo patre estis' (John viii. 44), ne timeas illi proprietatem naturæ alterius ascribere posterioris et adulteræ, quem legis avenarum super seminatorem et frumentariæ segetis nocturnum interpolatorem." (Matt. xiii. 23—25.) Tertullian (de Animâ, c. 16).

Later theological writers were driven to the use of erroneous language on this subject by an excess of reaction against the heresy of Pelagius; and because he claimed more for Human Nature than was due, they were tempted to condemn it altogether, and thus exposed themselves to the charge of disparaging Him Who is its Author. See for instance Augustine (de Libero Arbitrio, iii. 54, in Joann. Tract. 14, ad finem; c. Julian. Pelagian. lib. vi.).

The meaning of the word φύσις, or Nature, must be determined by the context in which it stands.

Here, evidently, it is used by St. Paul to signify Nature,—not as created by God, but as depraved by man, not listening to the Voice of God speaking to him by Reason and Conscience, and not submitting to and obeying the Will and Word of God, and not seeking for light and strength in the Grace of God, but making an abuse of Nature to become his Nature, by listening to the Voice of the Evil One, and giving himself up to the indulgence of the violent and vicious passions of his Nature, and surrendering himself a miserable slave to the Enemy of God, the Prince of the Power of the air, and joining himself to the children of disobedience. See Bp. Butler, Sermon ii. on Human Nature, where he considers the word Nature as used in this text by St. Paul, and distinguishes its various significations; and cp. note below on iv. 26, and Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans, p. 190.

6. καὶ συνήγειρε, καὶ συνεκάθισε] and raised us together with Christ, and made us sit together with Him, at God's Right Hand. By virtue of Christ's Incarnation, Resurrection, and Ascension, and Session at God's Right Hand, and by reason of our Incorporation into that Body, of which, as the Apostle has already stated, we all are Members under Him our Head (i. 10. 23; cp. v. 30), we are already risen, and are seated, in hope and expectation, in heavenly places.

"In cœlestibus Christus jam sedet, nondum autem nos. Sed quia spe certâ quod futurum est jam tenemus, simul sedere nos in cœlestibus dicit Apostolus nos, nondum in nobis, sed jam in Illo." Augustine (c. Faust. xi. 8).

Because the Body of Christ—that is, the Church—will be at God's Right Hand in bliss; therefore the Apostle says, that God has made us to sit together with Christ in heavenly places. For though we are not yet there in person, we are there already in hope. Augustine (de Agone Christiano, 28).

The Head being already seated there, the Body sits with it; therefore the Apostle adds, that we sit there together in Christ. Chrysostom.

Even now the Saints of God have their conversation in heaven (Phil. iii. 20); their home is there, and their heart is there. And so, even now, they sit together in heavenly places in Christ. Origen, Jerome.

Bp. Pearson (Art. vi. p. 513) thence takes occasion to dwell on the consequent duties of faith, trust, and hope, in Christ our Head, Who has risen, and ascended, and sitteth at God's Right Hand, and has thus raised us and exalted us His Members, even to the immediate neighbourhood of the Throne of God. (Rev. iii. 21.) Hence also follows the duty of personal holiness. While we look upon Him at God's Right Hand, we see ourselves in Heaven. "How should we rejoice, yea, how should we fear and tremble at so great an honour!" "Be ye holy, for I, the Lord your God, am holy." (Lev. xix. 2; xxi. 8.)

7. ἵνα ἐνδείξηται ἐν τοῖς αἰῶσι τοῖς ἐπερχομένοις] that He might show forth in the ages that are to come the exceeding riches of His grace. "Ut ostendat sæculis supervenientibus inenarrabiles divitias benignitatis suæ, Qui à Lege et Prophetis annunciatus est, Quem Christus Suum Patrem confessus est." Irenæus (iv. 5).

— τὸ ὑπερβάλλον πλοῦτος] So A, B, D*, F, G.—Elz. has the masculine form. See above, i. 7.

— χάριτος—ἐν χρηστότητι—ἐν Χριστῷ· 8. τῇ γὰρ χάριτί ἐστε σεσωσμένοι] Cp. v. 5. There is an observable alliteration in the words χάρις, χρηστότης, Χριστὸς in these verses, 5—10. And it may not be irrelevant to remark, that the first radical letters of these words, XP, constitute a perfect septenary and sabbatical number, 700,—a number expressive of Fulness and of Rest (see on Matt. xxviii. 1), and formed the Christian symbol of the Church and Empire, as may be seen in the Editor's Appendix to the Apocalypse, G, pp. 157—162.

8, 9. χάριτί ἐστε σεσωσμένοι—οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων] by grace ye have been saved, not of works. Quoted by S. Polycarp ad Philip. i., who adds θελήματι Θεοῦ διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

On the doctrine of the passage cp. Gal. ii. 16, and the Remarks "on the Doctrine of Justification" prefixed to the Epistle to the Romans, pp. 191—198; and cp. Tit. iii. 5, where salvation is spoken of as a thing already effected, as here; and see above, Rom. viii. 28—30.

8. Θεοῦ τὸ δῶρον κ.τ.λ.] ye are saved by Grace through faith; and this very thing that you are saved through faith, does not originate and proceed out of yourselves (ἐξ ὑμῶν). Of God is the gift, for a gift it is. Faith is from God. He called you, that you might believe. (Theodoret.) Your salvation does not proceed out of your works, lest any one should boast; for we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God prepared before for us to walk in.

We are not only God's ποίημα, or handiwork, but we have also been created anew in Christ. The word κτισθέντες is said of our Regeneration. (Theodoret, Theophyl.) See v. 15, and Gal. vi. 15, and 2 Cor. v. 17. The word ποίημα, though not to be limited to our original creation, yet surely does not exclude it. And we were created anew for good works. God therefore has a double claim on us,—first, as our ποιητὴς, next as our κτιστὴς in Christ.

Hence it follows, that the power we have of working does not spring out of ourselves, but from God, and cannot therefore have any intrinsic merit in it, for which we can claim salvation as a due. We are mere creatures, and works of God; all our faculties are of Him. To Him be all the praise. We were created anew in Christ Jesus, and were admitted into a state of salvation, not because we had done good works, and merited salvation thereby; but we were admitted into that state by God's free grace, in order that we might do good works which God before prepared for us as our appointed path to lead us into heaven (cp. Chrys.), as you formerly walked in transgressions and sins which led to destruction. See v. 1.

Hence Augustine says (in Ps. cxlii.), "Opera bona non habemus? Habemus planè; sed vide quid sequitur, Ipsius figmentum sumus." Do not therefore imagine that thou canst do any thing of thyself that is good. No. Turn thine eyes away from thine own work, and look up to the work of Him Who made thee. He has made thee. He re-makes in thee what He had made and thou hast un-made. He made thee to be; and if thou art good, He made thee to be so; and therefore work thy work with fear and trembling. (Phil. ii. 12, 13.) Why with fear and trembling? Because it is God Who worketh in thee to will and to do of His good pleasure. Therefore work with fear and trembling, in order that our Creator may have good pleasure to work in the low valley of our working. O God, there can be no good in us, unless it be done by Thee Who hast made us!

11. τὰ ἔθνη ἐν σαρκί] Gentiles in the flesh; that is, not circumcised, not having in your flesh the seal of God's covenant with Abraham.

— οἱ λεγόμενοι ἀκροβυστία κ.τ.λ.] ye are called the Uncircumcision by those who call themselves the Circumcision. But do not heed these names. For, if ye have the Circumcision of the Spirit, ye, though uncircumcised in the flesh, have the true Circumcision (Rom. ii. 28. Phil. iii. 3), whereas if they are uncircumcised in heart and ears (Acts vii. 51), their Circumcision becomes Uncircumcision. (Rom. ii. 25.) Cp. Jerome here, who adds, "Circumcidamur et sabbatizemus in Spiritu, spirituales victimas offerentes . . . nos Deo offeramus, et accincti lumbos et expediti pascha comedamus."

12. καιρῷ] season, only temporary.

— χωρὶς Χριστοῦ] separate from Christ.

— ἄθεοι] ye had a multitude of gods, and yet ye were without God (Jerome), and this in God's own world, and although ye yourselves were His creatures, created in His Image. A strange solitude!

13. ἐγγὺς ἐγενήθητε ἐν τῷ αἵματι τοῦ Χριστοῦ] ye who were formerly far off were brought near by the blood of Christ. How was this done?

(1) By the Incarnation of Christ.

Forasmuch as all the children are partakers of one flesh and blood (see Acts xvii. 26), He also Himself likewise took part of the same (Heb. ii. 14); and being God manifest in the flesh (1 Tim. iii. 16), He united us to God.

(2) By the propitiatory and expiatory shedding of His Blood on the Cross, by which He redeemed us from death, the penalty of sin (Heb. ii. 14, 15. 1 John ii. 2; iv. 10), and by which also He atoned and reconciled us to God (2 Cor. v. 18, 19. Col. i. 20, 21), and has purchased for us an everlasting inheritance.

Christ (says the Apostle) reconciled us by His Body and by His Flesh. That flesh, which in Him was spotless, reconciled the flesh which in us was sullied by sin, and brought it into amity with God. (Cp. Rom. viii. 3.) Hence we see the necessity of confessing the reality of Christ's human flesh, and its consubstantiality with our flesh. Otherwise the Reconciliation between us and God would never have taken place. But now Christ, by His communication of Nature with us, has reconciled man to God. He has reconciled us by the body of His flesh, and has redeemed us by His blood. In every Epistle the Apostle clearly testifies that we are saved by the flesh of our Lord and by His blood. Irenæus (v. 14).

14. ἡ εἰρήνη] Christ is our Peace, in reconciling men to God, and in reconciling all nations to each other in Himself.

— ὁ ποιήσας τὰ ἀμφότερα ἕν] "Qui fecit duo unum, Judaicum scilicet populum et Gentilem." Tertullian (c. Marcion. v. 17).

— τὸ μεσότοιχον τοῦ φραγμοῦ λύσας] Having broken down the intervening wall which hedged off the Jew from the Gentile, and having united all men as one family in Himself, the Second Adam, one new man, in Whom there is neither Jew nor Greek . . . for ye are all one in Christ Jesus (Gal. iii. 28). See Acts xv. 9. So Tertullian, l. c., and Severian here, and S. Jerome.

Bp. Fell, Hammond, Wetstein, and others, suppose an allusion here to the Court of the Gentiles fenced off from the rest of the Temple (Ezek. xliv. 7. Acts xxi. 28), which was indeed a practical evidence of that separation.

But the word φραγμὸς, or hedge, leads the mind rather to the metaphor of the Vineyard, in which the favoured people of God were planted, and in which they were fenced off by a hedge from all other Nations. See Isa. v. 7, "The Vineyard of the Lord of Hosts is the house of Israel." And v. 2, "He made a wall about it," where the LXX has φραγμὸν, hedge, as St. Paul here, περιέθηκα. And see our Lord's own words, Matt. xxi. 33. Mark xii. 1.

15. τὴν ἔχθραν ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ κ.τ.λ.] having by His flesh abolished the enmity, namely, the Law of the Commandments, in positive precepts. Such seems to be the order and construction of the words. The meaning is, that Christ by His Flesh, which was the Flesh common to all, and by His Obedience, which was meritorious for all men, without any distinction of race, abrogated and annulled the enmity (Rom. viii. 3) which separated Jew from Gentile, namely, the Law of Ritual Ordinance, but not the Commandments enjoining moral duties, which are perpetual and obligatory on all, and which our Lord declared to be binding on all when He said, "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments" (Matt. xix. 17).

But He abrogated such ordinances as consisted in δόγματα, positive edicts and decrees, such as Circumcision. He not only took away the curse of the Law, and mitigated the rigour of the Moral Law, but He repealed the ordinances of the Ceremonial Law.

The word δόγμα is never applied in Scripture to any commandment of Natural Law, but only to occasional and positive Edicts promulgated by Authority, and such as had no force before promulgation. (See Luke ii. 1. Acts xvi. 4; xvii. 7.)

That this is the meaning of δόγματα is evident from Col. ii. 14. 20, which affords the best explanation of the word as used here, and of the sense of this passage.

Christ effected this "in and by His Flesh,"

(1) By taking that flesh which had been defiled by lusts of the flesh (see v. 3), and by sanctifying it, and uniting it to God in Himself. See on Rom. vii. 6.

(2) By taking that flesh which formerly had been made by Circumcision a note of difference and occasion of separation between Jew and Gentile (see v. 11), and by taking away that cause of difference and separation by abolishing the Ceremonial Law.

(3) By perfect obedience to that Law, and by fulfilling all righteousness (Matt. iii. 15) in the flesh common to us all.

(4) By His Death in that Flesh, which fulfilled, consummated, and exhausted all the Sacrificial Types and Ceremonies of the Levitical Law. And thus by removing that Legal Fence which severed Jew from Gentile, He joined them together in Himself, the Second Adam, the One New Man.

16. καὶ ἀποκαταλλάξῃ] He proceeds to speak of another Reconciliation effected by Christ; and of another ἔχθρα, or Enmity, dissolved by Him, viz. that between God and Man.

Christ effected this Reconciliation by His Flesh; and He destroyed this Enmity also by His Cross. "Reconciliat in uno corpore ambos, et Judaicum et Gentilem populum, Deo, quem utrumque genus offenderat." Tertullian (c. Marcion. v. 17).

— ἀποκτείνας τὴν ἔχθραν ἐν αὐτῷ] having slain the enmity by it, i. e. by the Cross.

The Cross was laid upon Christ by Satan, the ἐχθρὸς, the Arch-Enemy of God and Man. But Christ, who was nailed by the Enemy to the Cross, destroyed thereby the Enmity which Satan had made, and nailed Satan himself to it, and triumphed over him by it (Col. ii. 15, where see note), and vanquished him with his own weapons; and by His Death destroyed him that had the power of it, even the Devil. (Heb. ii. 14.)

17. εἰρήνην] The second εἰρήνην, omitted by Elz., is found in A, B, D, E, F, G, and has been adopted by Lach., Tisch., Rückert, Meyer, Ellicott, Alford.

The εἰρήνη, or Peace, here mentioned, is contrasted with the ἔχθρα above mentioned; and the word εἰρήνη is happily repeated, just as the word ἔχθρα had been repeated (vv. 15, 16), because Christ, Who is our Peace (v. 14), has now brought both parties (i. e. Jew and Gentile), who were before at Enmity with one another and with God, to a state of Peace between themselves and with Him, and has given access to both, by one Spirit, to the Father.

He Who is our Peace came and preached Peace to all. Hence after His Death, by which He made Peace, the first words He uttered, and He uttered them twice to His assembled disciples, were "Peace be unto you" (John xx. 19. 21). And He showed also that it is by the One Spirit that we have access through Him to our Father, now at peace with us, by breathing on them and saying, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost;" and He gave them the Ministry of Peace and of Reconciliation to God, "Whose soever sins ye remit," &c. (John xx. 22, 23.)

— εὐηγγελίσατο—ἐγγύς] A quotation from Isa. lvii. 19.

In writing to Gentile Churches, recently converted to Christianity, St. Paul rarely quotes the Old Testament. See note above on 1 Thess. i. 9.

The Ephesian Church was a Gentile Church. See ii. 11; iv. 17.

But in this Epistle St. Paul often cites the Old Testament. See in iv. 8, a quotation from Ps. lxvii. 18; in iv. 25, from Zech. viii. 16; in iv. 26, from Ps. iv. 4; in v. 14, from Isa. lx. 1; in v. 31, from Gen. ii. 24; in vi. 2, 3, from Exod. xx. 12, Deut. v. 16.

This characteristic of the present Epistle harmonizes with the peculiar circumstances of the Ephesian Church, which had been instructed by the Apostle personally during no less a period than three years. (Acts xx. 31.)

18. τὴν προσαγωγήν] the access, their only access, to God.

19. οὐκέτι ξένοι καὶ πάροικοι] no longer strangers and sojourners. Πάροικοι = 'inquilini,' persons dwelling in a city, but not having the rights of citizens.

In a Christian sense, Ye are no longer strangers and sojourners in regard to the heavenly City, but ye are strangers and sojourners on earth. Augustine (in Ps. 118).

20. ἀποστόλων καὶ προφητῶν] of Apostles and Prophets, ye are built on them. This expression, Ye are built upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, is not to be understood (as it has been recently by some) to signify, Ye are built on the foundation on which they are built, but it means, Ye are built upon them. The expression may be illustrated by the considerations stated above on Matt. iii. 9; x. 2; xvi. 18. John i. 42. And comp. Rev. xxi. 14, where the Apostles are called the θεμέλιοι, foundation-stones, of the heavenly Jerusalem.

He puts Apostles before Prophets. We are built on Apostles first, and then Prophets: Christ comes before Moses, the Gospel comes before the Law; the Creed comes before the Decalogue.

The Apostles had a fuller revelation of what Prophets desired to see, Luke x. 24 (Theodoret). Besides, the Ephesians, as Gentiles, were brought by the Apostles to a knowledge of the Prophets. See above on 1 Thess. ii. 18.

He joins Apostles with Prophets, and thus shows that the Prophets, as well as Apostles, appertain to the Gentiles as well as to the Jews. Chrys.

Thus he refutes by anticipation the Marcionites and Manicheans, who endeavoured to separate the Old Testament from the New.

Tertullian, referring to this text, says that Marcion, to fortify his own heresy, expunged the words and Prophets: "Oblitus Dominum posuisse in Ecclesiâ sicut Apostolos et Prophetas; timuit scilicet ne et super veterum Prophetarum fundamento ædificatio nostra constaret in Christo, cùm ipse Apostolus ubique nos de Prophetis exstruere non cesset" (c. Marcion. v. 17).

For the argument of the Church against the Manicheans, see Augustine (c. Faustum, lib. xviii. xix.).

It is to be regretted that the force and beauty of this text, and of the Apostle's argument here, have been marred in recent Expositions of it, limiting the word "Prophets" to the New Testament dispensation, and excluding all reference to the Old Testament. Such is the interpretation of Pelagius, Koppe, Rosenmüller, Flatt, Harless, Olshausen, De Wette, Meyer, and others. But it is opposed to the general sense of Christian Antiquity. The absence of the article before προφητῶν is no argument against this ancient interpretation, as Meyer allows; and see Bp. Middleton (chap. iii. p. 89).

The sense of the Ancient Church in this matter is well expressed by an Apostolic Father. "Christ alone is the Door to the Father. Through Him (i. e. Christ), Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and the Prophets, and the Apostles, and the Church enter in. All these enter in by Christ to the Unity of God. But the Gospel has a peculiar prerogative, in that it declares the Advent of Christ, His Passion and His Resurrection. The beloved Prophets prophesied of Him, but the Gospel is the consummation of Incorruption (ἀφθαρσίας, see on vi. 24)." Ignatius (ad Phil. 9).

This interpretation, which is adopted by Bp. Pearson (on the Creed, Art. i. p. 19), is in full harmony with St. Paul's argument in this Chapter.

He had shown that both Jews and Gentiles are reconciled and united in Christ. (v. 11—17.) He shows now that this reconciliation and union is in perfect unison with the Divine Plan in both Testaments. The Prophets in the Old Testament prophesied of Christ to come. The Apostles in the New preach Christ already come. Both speak of Him, and meet in Him. And the Church, in which Jews and Gentiles are united in Christ, is built on the foundation of the Apostles of the New Testament and of the Prophets of the Old. The Gentiles are not without the Old Testament, nor are the Jews without the New. Both are built on both, and both meet together in the One Corner-Stone, which is Christ.

Observe also, that in this description of the foundation of the Church, St. Paul says nothing of St. Peter singly, as distinguished from the other Apostles, or of his so-called Successor, the Bishop of Rome, as the Rock of the Church; and thus he refutes also by anticipation the Papal Heresy. See on Matt. xvi. 18.

— ὄντος ἀκρογωνιαίου] The Lord is called the Chief Corner-Stone (Ps. cxviii. 22. Matt. xxi. 42), not the highest Stone, but the principal and corner Stone (see A Lapide), because in Him the two Walls (the one coming from the Gentile, the other from the Jewish, World) meet, and are united in one. Theodoret. Augustine, Serm. iv. Christ is the "lapis angularis," as "omnia sustinens, et in unam fidem Abrahæ colligens eos qui ex utroque Testamento apti sunt ædificio Dei." Irenæus (iv. 25). The chief corner-stone binds together not only the walls, but the foundation-stones also. So Christ unites Prophets and Apostles, as well as Jews and Gentiles. Chrys.

21. πᾶσα οἰκοδομή] So B, D, E, F, G, I, K, and many Cursives and Fathers. And so Lachm., Tisch., Ellicott, Alf. Elz. has πᾶσα ἡ with A, C. See also Winer, § 18, p. 101, and so Harless, Olshausen, De Wette.

Though πᾶς without the article following it rarely signifies the whole, yet it sometimes has that meaning, and so the Apostolic Father, S. Ignatius, uses the word in his Epistle to the Ephesians, c. 12, where see Dr. Jacobson's note. So omnis in Latin, e. g. "Non omnis moriar" for totus, and see the remarks of Bp. Pearson (Vind. Ign. ii. 10).

The force of the Apostle's argument would be much impaired by the adoption of the rendering of those Interpreters who, proceeding on the principles of classical usage, affirm that these words mean "every congregation that is built in."

That interpretation may serve as a specimen, among others that might be cited (if the task were not invidious), how Criticism may become uncritical by an over-strained application of the rigid rules of Attic philology to the Text of the New Testament.

CH. III. 1. δέσμιος τ. Χριστοῦ] the prisoner of Christ. Cp. iv. 1. Col. iv. 18, μνημονεύετε μου τῶν δεσμῶν. Phil. i. 7. 13, 14. 16. Heb. x. 34. Philem. 9, 10. 13.

St. Paul was now in custody, as described in the Acts of the Apostles (xxviii. 16), bound to the soldier who guarded him.

He regards his chains as from the hand of Christ (cp. Winer, p. 170, on the use of the genitive), and therefore as sanctified to him; as S. Ignatius, in his Epistle to the Ephesians, c. 11, calls his own chains πνευματικοὺς μαργαρίτας, spiritual bracelets of pearls. And compare Tertullian's beautiful address, "ad Martyres," on the disposition and feelings with which a prison and bonds for Christ are to be regarded by the Christian martyr:—

"Hoc præstat carcer Christiano quod eremus Prophetis . . . Nihil crus sentit in nervo, cum animus in cœlo est (c. 2). Carcerem nobis palæstram interpretámur . . . Bonum agonem subituri estis, in quo Agonothetes Deus vivus est, Xystarches Spiritus Sanctus, corona æternitas: brabium politia in cœlis, gloria in sæcula sæculorum." (c. 3.)

— ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν τῶν ἐθνῶν] in behalf of you Gentiles. "Vinctum Jesu Christi Paulum esse pro gentibus potest intelligi, quòd Romæ in vincula conjectus hanc Epistolam miserit eo tempore quo ad Philemonem et ad Colossenses et ad Philippenses scriptas esse monstravimus." S. Jerome.

His preaching of the Universality of the Redemption accomplished by Christ for Gentiles no less than Jews, had been the occasion of his arrest by the Jews at Jerusalem, and of his consequent imprisonment, and it was made more glorious and efficacious by that imprisonment. See Acts xxi. 28; xxii. 21, 22, and Phil. i. 12.

St. Paul, a Hebrew of the Hebrews, was made by God's grace to be the Confessor, as well as the Apostle, of the Gentile World.

2. εἴγε ἠκούσατε τὴν οἰκονομίαν τ. χ.] if (as I suppose) ye heard the dispensation of the grace given unto me. See the use of εἴγε, iv. 21, εἴγε αὐτὸν ἠκούσατε.

The word ἠκούσατε, with the accusative, signifies more than 'ye heard of' as a mere fact: it means, 'if ye attended to,' and understood it. See iv. 21, and on Acts ix. 7.

3. κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν] by revelation. See Gal. i. 12.

— καθὼς προέγραψα ἐν ὀλίγῳ] as I wrote above in this Epistle in few words. Ἐν ὀλίγῳ signifies brevi, in small space or time, summatim, strictim, raptim. See note above on Acts xxvi. 29.

The meaning is, that he had only just touched on that great subject, which would require a large space and much time for its due consideration, and would not even then be exhausted, so high and profound is its Mystery. Cp. Wetstein here.

4. πρὸς ὅ] at which, or by reference to what has been already written by me (short and summary as it is), you are enabled, while you read it, to apprehend my insight into the Mystery of your own privileges in the Body of Christ.

5. ἑτέραις] Elz. prefixes ἐν, which is not in the best MSS. and Edd. The sense is, it was not made known to other ages. And then he qualifies this, and explains it by the epexegesis τοῖς υἱοῖς τῶν ἀνθρώπων, i. e. to the sons of men, that is to say, to unregenerate Reason, not enlightened by the Holy Spirit, the Giver of all knowledge of the hidden things of God.

He does not mean to say that this Mystery was wholly concealed from all in past ages; for (as S. Jerome and others observe here) it was foretold by the Prophets in the Old Testament, and was confirmed by the Apostles by an appeal to the previous testimony of the Prophets. See the argument of St. James in the Council of Jerusalem (Acts xv. 16, 17), and of St. Paul at Antioch in Pisidia (xiii. 47), and to the Romans (i. 2—5; ix. 24; x. 19; xvi. 27). But what he means is, that it was not revealed to the sons of men, to the whole human race, nor was it revealed so fully as it is now. See Chrysost. and Theodoret here, and particularly the full exposition of S. Jerome.

7. ἐγενήθην] 'factus sum' (Vulg.). I was made, I became, so by God's grace. Cp. above, 1 Thess. i. 5, 6; ii. 5. 7. This is the reading of A, B, D*, F, G, and is preferable to that of Elz. ἐγενόμην.

8. τῷ ἐλαχιστοτέρῳ] less than the least. On this form of double comparison, expressive here of deep humility, cp. 3 John 4, μειζότερος. Winer, § 11, p. 65. Lobeck, Phryn. p. 135.

As to St. Paul's estimate of himself, apart from what he was by divine grace as the Apostle of Christ, see above on 1 Cor. xv. 8, ὥσπερεὶ τῷ ἐκτρώματι ὤφθη κἀμοί, and on 2 Cor. xi. 33.

He represents his own littleness and lowness of estate as a fit reason why he should have been specially chosen by God's grace to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles, who were regarded by the Jews as outcasts from God.

Humility is the path to honour. "Omnibus infimior Paulus; idcirco major." Jerome.

— τὸ—πλοῦτος] See i. 7.

— ἀνεξιχνίαστον] "Divitias antè investigabiles, nunc apertas." Jerome. "Thy way is in the sea, and Thy paths in the great waters, and Thy footsteps are not known" (Ps. lxxvii. 19).

9. οἰκονομία] So the majority of the best MSS. and Editions. Elz. has κοινωνία.

— τῷ τὰ πάντα κτίσαντι] to Him Who created all things. The Apostle uses these words lest it should be imagined that, because the Mystery was hidden in God, and was not revealed by Him to the world in past ages, it was not His own dispensation. Its existence in His own Mind, its concealment from the World, its Revelation were all ordered by Him.

The words διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, which are added here in D, E, I, K, and by many of the Fathers and by Elz., but are not in A, B, C, D*, F, G, nor in the Latin Fathers generally, were used as an argument by the Arians to prove an inferiority in Christ. And it may be relevant therefore to add the remarks of Waterland upon them (i. p. 130, Defence of some Queries, Qu. xi.):

"The Son of God," you say, "is manifestly the Father's Agent in the Creation of the Universe," referring to Eph. iii. 9, and to Heb. i. 2, from whence you infer that He is "subordinate in nature and in power to Him." You insist much upon the distinction δι' αὐτοῦ and ὑπ' αὐτοῦ, explaining the former of an instrumental, and the latter of an efficient cause. As to the Son's being agent with, or assistant to the Father, in the work of Creation, we readily admit it, and even contend for it. The Father is primarily, and the Son secondarily, or immediately, Author of the world; which is so far from proving that He is inferior, in nature or powers, to the Father, that it is rather a convincing argument that He is equal in both. A subordination of order, but none of nature, is thereby intimated.

As to the distinction between δι' αὐτοῦ and ὑπ' αὐτοῦ, per quem and ex quo, or the like, it can be of very little service to your cause. The preposition διὰ, with a genitive after it, is frequently used, as well in Scripture, as in ecclesiastical writers, to express the efficient cause, as much as ὑπὸ, or ἐκ, or πρὸς, or any other. So that the argument drawn from the use of the prepositions, is very poor and trifling, as was long since observed by Basil the Great, who exposes its author and inventor, Aëtius, for it. Please but to account clearly for one text out of many (Rom. xi. 36), "Of him, and through him (δι' αὐτοῦ), and to him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever." If you understand this of the Father, then, by your argument from the phrase δι' αὐτοῦ, you make Him also no more than an instrumental cause; if you understand it of more persons, here is an illustrious proof of a Trinity in Unity.

10. ἵνα γνωρισθῇ κ.τ.λ.] in order that the manifold wisdom of God might now be made manifest to the Powers and Authorities in the heavenly places, by means of the Church.

Therefore the Cross of Christ was not only a blessing to us, but even to the Angels themselves; and it revealed to them a Mystery which they did not know before (cp. 1 Pet. i. 12). Jerome.

Compare what St. Paul declares to the Bishop of Ephesus, viz. that by His Incarnation on Earth the Son of God was "seen of Angels." (1 Tim. iii. 16.)

Let us not imagine then that the Church is only the depository of Faith; she is also a treasury of Knowledge and Wisdom for others. Jerome.

Thou, O Paul, enlightenest Angels and Archangels. Yes. The Mystery had been hidden in God; but it is now revealed by the ministry of the Church. Chrys.

Hence also Ignatius does not hesitate to say (ad Smyrn. 6), Let no man deceive himself. Even the heavenly powers themselves, and the Glory of Angels, and the Rulers, both visible and invisible, will be condemned, unless they believe in the blood of Christ.

Mysterious and marvellous privilege of the Church to be as a speculum to minister Light to Angels! How exalted is the notion thus afforded of the dignity of the Holy Scriptures, which are the Luminaries of the Church (Ps. cxix. 105). She is the golden Candlestick. But God's Word is the Light which is poured into her, and streams forth through her to the World. See below on Rev. i. 12; xi. 4.

Hence, as the Ark which enshrined the Law was the Throne of God, sitting between the Cherubim in the Holy of Holies, so the Triune God is revealed as enthroned in the Heavenly Church on the Fourfold Gospel, the Evangelic Cheruhim (revealing in their several faces the Fourfold character of CHRIST Himself), and as worshipped by them, leading the Chorus of Universal Praise to the Ever-Blessed Trinity. See on Rev. iv. 6—9.

The word πολυποίκιλος is used by Euripides (Iph. Taur. 1149) as an epithet of embroidered garments, and by Eubulus (Athen. xv. p. 679, D) to signify the many variegated hues of a rich chaplet of flowers; hence it is rendered many coloured by the Arabic Version here.

So is God's wisdom infinite in variety, richness, and beauty, and adapting itself to all the needs of man, in every age, and of every creature in the world.

For a specimen of its variety, see the instance noted by Our Blessed Lord, Matt. xi. 18, 19.

This remarkable statement of the Apostle, that the Angels themselves are indebted to the Church of Christ for illumination in the Mysteries of the Gospel, would be a very profitable one to the Colossians, and other Christians of Asia, who had been beguiled by false teachers into worship of Angels (Col. ii. 18). This and other truths contained in this Epistle to the Ephesians, and especially its clear language on the unapproachable Majesty of Christ, God manifest in the flesh, would render this Epistle to the Ephesians very salutary and seasonable for the use of the Colossians. See below, Col. iv. 16, and Introduction to that Epistle.

11. ἐποίησεν] He made effectual.

12. διὰ τ. πίστεως αὐτοῦ] through the faith of which He is the author and finisher (Heb. xii. 2), the source and the end.

13. Διὸ αἰτοῦμαι μὴ ἐγκακεῖν] Wherefore I beseech you not to faint in my tribulations. Do not suppose that I faint in my afflictions. I, a prisoner at Rome, exhort you Ephesians not to faint in them. Why should he fear that they might faint in his trials? Because seeing him, who was Christ's chosen champion, and one who professed to be endued with supernatural powers, afflicted and outraged by the World for preaching the Gospel, they might be tempted to imagine that his professions were untrue, and that the World was stronger than Christ. Thus they might be offended, and perplexed, and falter in the faith. Hence St. Paul praises the Galatians for not despising his infirmity in the flesh. (Gal. iv. 14.)

"Non itaque mirum est, si pluribus Paulo angustiis coarctato, Ephesii tentabantur, et habebant necessarium orationum ejus auxilium, ne deficerent in pressuris suis . . . quas propteres patiebatur quia Evangelium prædicabat." S. Jerome. Cp. note on Acts xiv. 22.

He therefore beseeches them not to faint in his tribulations, and he prays God to give them strength to endure unto the end (v. 14—16). By the former prayer he shows the freedom of their will, and by the latter prayer he shows their need of divine grace. Augustine (Serm. 163).

On ἐγκακεῖν, see Gal. vi. 9.

14. κάμπτω τὰ γόνατα] I bow my knees. A remarkable expression. He speaks of the "bending of the knee" as a synonym for prayer. A posture commended by Christ's example in prayer (Luke xxii. 41), St. Stephen's (Acts vii. 60), St. Peter's (Acts ix. 40), St. Paul's, and his company on the sea shore (Acts xxi. 5), and prescribed by God Himself (Rom. xiv. 11). As to its use in the early Church, see the passages in Suicer's Thes. v. γονυκλισία.

— πρὸς τὸν Πατέρα] Elz. adds τοῦ Κυρίου ὑμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. Not in A, B, C, nor in some Fathers and Versions, and expunged by Lachm., Tisch., Rückert, Harless, Meyer, Ellicott, Alf., but found in D, E, F, G, I, K, and Chrys., August., Theodoret.

The internal as well as external evidence seems to preponderate against the addition; and even if it be genuine, the ἐξ οὗ would refer rather to πατέρα, as δῴη, which follows, undoubtedly does. And see Jerome's note here, who says, "simpliciter ad Patrem legendum, non ut in Latinis Codicibus additum est, ad Patrem Domini Nostri Jesu Christi."

Indeed, the whole tenour of this Epistle is so ordered as to display God the FATHER as the Beginning and Origin, the Author and Giver of all things, and as having a Paternal Relation to all things in heaven and earth, and so giving a Name to all things: which is a proper act of Paternity.

The act of Adam, the Father of the Human Family, as recorded in the Book of Genesis (ii. 19), giving a Name to all creatures, in his character of the Common Parent of Mankind, and Lord of all Creatures, and so constituted by God, the Universal Father, as His Vicegerent upon earth, was like an earthly reflexion of God's own paternal attributes and sovereign prerogatives.

As to the phrase itself, where πατὴρ is put absolutely without a genitive, cp. 1 Cor. viii. 6, εἷς Θεὸς ὁ πατὴρ, ἐξ οὗ τὰ πάντα καὶ ἡμεῖς εἰς αὐτόν, and Eph. v. 20, τῷ Θεῷ καὶ πατρί. Phil. ii. 11. Col. i. 12.

15. πᾶσα πατριά] Every family. πατριὰ = Heb. מִשְׁפָּחָה (meschpachah), and used for it by LXX in Exod. vi. 15. 17. 19. Lev. xxv. 10. Deut. xxix. 18. Ps. xxi. 30. See Luke ii. 4. Acts iii. 25, πᾶσαι αἱ πατριαὶ τῆς γῆς. "Cognatio vel familia." Jerome. Cp. Winer, § 18, p. 101.

All the Families of heaven and earth derive their name from Him; that is, they all proceed from Him, and are subject to Him, as the Universal Father of all.

To impose a name was a mark of property in, and lordship over, the thing named, and was the special prerogative of fatherhood. Cp. Gen. ii. 19. Isa. lxiii. 19. Jer. vii. 10; xiv. 9. Dan. ix. 18. Luke i. 13. 62.

Abraham, the Father of many Nations (Gen. xvii. 5), was (as well as Adam, the Father of the whole Human Family) an earthly Representative of the Almighty Father of all, particularly in giving up his son; and as the Patriarch in whose seed "all families of the earth should be blessed" (Gen. xii. 3. xxviii. 14), who, by Faith in Christ, should call Abraham their father (Rom. iv. 12. 16), and be called children of Faithful Abraham. (Gal. iii. 8.)

As all families of the faithful are named from Abraham their Father, and as all the families of mankind, according to the flesh, are named from Adam their Father, so all the families in heaven and earth are named from God their Father, from Whom they all come, and in Whose Son they all are blessed.

Since God is the Universal Father of Angels and Men, St. Paul prays to Him to strengthen the Gentiles now incorporated in one Body under Christ, Who is Lord of Angels and of Men.

16. δῴη] Lachmann and Rückert have admitted δῷ, from A, B, C, F, G, and so Meyer. Cp. i. 17. But (as Ellicott observes) it seems hardly probable that δῷ would have been altered into the rarer form δῴη.

18. ἐῤῥιζωμένοι καὶ τεθεμελιωμένοι] Rooted as a plant, and therefore alive and always growing—and grounded as a building, and therefore firmly established—in Love. And so he says to the Corinthians, "Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building" (1 Cor. iii. 9, and cp. Col. ii. 7). Origen.

— τί τὸ πλάτος κ.τ.λ.] what is the breadth, &c. The Everlasting WORD extended Himself in every direction: in height by Creation, in depth by His Incarnation, and in His descent into Hell, and in breadth by filling the World with His Light and Glory. Athanas. (de Incarn. § 16.)

The Expositor of this text in the present age, even at the risk of being charged by some with indulging in fanciful speculations, can hardly afford to forget that the ancient Church loved to contemplate the Cross of Christ, dying for the sins of the whole world, as expressing by its quadriform dimensions the Universality of those attributes here ascribed by the Apostle to God's love in Christ.

The Cross of Christ has all the dimensions of which the Apostle speaks. By it He ascended up on high and led captivity captive (Eph. iv. 8); by it He descended to the lowest parts of the earth, and by it He extendeth Himself to the length and breadth of the whole world. Origen.

In the elevation of the Cross we see an emblem of His divine power; in its depression we recognize His human condescension; in its extension we see an image of the diffusion of the Gospel throughout the world, and of the union of all men in Him. Severian (in Catenâ, p. 162).

The Apostle, writing to the Ephesians, pourtrays, in the form and figure of the Cross, Christ's Power extending to all things and uniting all things. Gregory Nyssen (c. Eunom. Orat. iv. p. 582). And S. Jerome says, "Hæc universa de Cruce Domini Nostri Jesu Christi intelligi queunt."

See also Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. iv. p. 385, note.

S. Augustine often applies the dimensions of the Cross to illustrate the true character of the spiritual life of those who are crucified to the world in Christ. The firmness and stability, the heavenward tendency, the wide extension of the Cross, symbolize the constancy, and faith, and hope, and expansive charity of the Christian. See Epist. 140, c. 64, in Joann. Tract. 118, § 5, in Ps. ciii. § 14.

He who is crucified with Christ, and extends himself as it were together with Christ upon the Cross, comprehends (καταλαμβάνει) what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height. Origen. And so Jerome here.

19. γνῶναι—ὑπερβάλλουσαν τῆς γνώσεως] to know the love which surpasses the knowledge. So Homer, Il. xxiii. 847, ἀγῶνος ὑπέρβαλε. This hyperbole describes the work of the Spirit.

Although the love of Christ surpasseth all human knowledge, yet ye shall know it, if ye have Christ dwelling in you; and not only so, but ye shall be filled up to all the fulness of God. Chrys.

— εἰς πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ] In order that by virtue of your mystical incorporation and indwelling in Christ, Who is God as well as Man, and in Whom dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily (Col. ii. 9), and of Whose fulness ye have all received (John i. 16), ye His members may have your life hid with Christ in God (Col. iii. 3), and may increase with the increase of God (Col. ii. 19), and be filled up to the fulness of God.

On πληρωθῆτε εἰς see Winer, p. 194.

21. ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ] A, B, C, add καί, and so some Versions, and Lachmann, Rückert, and D*, F, G, have ἐν X. Ἰ. καὶ τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ. Probably this variation arose from the position of the word Ἐκκλησίᾳ in the original before Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ.

The reading in the text is supported by D c*, I, K, most Cursive MSS., and the Greek Fathers, and is adopted by almost all the Editors except those above named.

As to the sense, Christ is medium unionis, the Corner-Stone (ii. 20), wherein both sides of the building unite, or like the ladder whereon Jacob saw angels ascending and descending. (Gen. xxviii. 12; cp. John i. 51.) All intercourse betwixt heaven and earth, God and man, is through Him. If any grace come from God to us, it is by Christ. If any glory come from us to God, it is by Christ too. Unto Him be glory in the Church by Christ Jesus. (Eph. iii. 21.) Bp. Sanderson (i. 343).

— εἰς πάσας τὰς γενεὰς κ.τ.λ.] to all generations of the Age of Ages (i. e. of Eternity). The antiquity of this form of ascription of Glory is testified even by its perversion on the part of the Valentinian Heretics, of whom it is recorded, that "Paulum manifestissimè dicunt Æonas nominare sæpissimè, adhuc etiam et ordinem ipsorum servare sic dicentem, in universas generationes sæculi sæculorum." (Eph. iii. 21.) Irenæus (i. 3).

And yet in this expression of the Apostle himself, some have found traces of Gnosticism! as Baur, Paulus, p. 433. See the note in Ellicott's excellent edition, p. 63.

The ὁ αἰὼν τῶν αἰώνων is the "Age of Ages,"—namely, Eternity; and the πᾶσαι αἱ γενεαί are all its generations; and the ascription of Glory to God is "for all the Generations of Eternity," for ever and ever, world without end. Amen.

CH. IV. 1. Παρακαλῶ—ἐκλήθητε] Hence the imitator of S. Ignatius to the Church of Antioch (c. 1): παρακαλῶ οὖν ὑμᾶς ὁ δέσμιος ἐν Κυρίῳ ἀξίως περιπατῆσαι τῆς κλήσεως ἧς ἐκλήθητε.

On the attraction in ἧς ἐκλήθητε see i. 6. 2 Cor. i. 4. Winer, § 24, p. 148.

2. πάσης ταπεινοφροσύνης] all lowliness of mind. A phrase used by St. Paul in his address to the Ephesian Presbyters, Acts xx. 19.

— ἀνεχόμενοι] On the transition to the nominative after ὑμᾶς cp. i. 18. Winer, § 63, p. 505.

3. σπουδάζοντες] 'studentes;' earnestly desiring and endeavouring. A strong word, as Archbp. Laud has observed in his Sermon on this text (Serm. vi. Works, i. pp. 155—182), where he says, "Keep then the Unity of the Spirit; but know withal (and it follows in the text, Eph. iv. 3), that if you will keep it, you must endeavour to keep it. For it is not so easy a thing to keep Unity in great bodies as it is thought; there goes much labour and endeavour to it. The word is σπουδάζοντες, study, be careful to keep it. And the word implies such an endeavour as makes haste to keep; and indeed no time is to be lost at this work."

A salutary and seasonable admonition for those who have little regard for Unity in the Church of Christ, and who appear to be almost as eager to break it, as they ought to be earnest to keep it.

— τὴν ἑνότητα τοῦ Πνεύματος κ.τ.λ.] The Unity of the Spirit grounded in internal affection, is to be shown by the bond of Peace, manifested in external profession and action.

The one is the unity of faith, the other of practice; the one of doctrine, the other of discipline and polity. Both are necessary. Hence S. Ignatius (ad Magn. 13) speaks of the duty of Church-Communion, ὑποτάγητε τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ καὶ ἀλλήλοις ἵνα ἕνωσις ᾖ σαρκική τε καὶ πνευματική.

Like-mindedness is that which joineth all; and in the well-joining of all consists the strength of the Structure. Cp. Col. iii. 14. Phil. i. 27. Bp. Sanderson, i. p. 349.

St. Paul dwells here on ἑνότης, unity, and repeats the word εἷς, one, no less than seven times in the two following verses. Such is the stress laid by him on Unity.

S. Ignatius, in addressing the Ephesian Church (c. 1), speaks of it as προωρισμένην πρὸ αἰώνων εἶναι ἡνωμένην. Cp. Ignat. ad Magnes. 7, where he seems to have had in his mind these and the following words of St. Paul.

4. Ἓν σῶμα] One Body. All the faithful every where who ever have been, or are, or will be. Chrys. Charity binds together those who are united by the Spirit, and knits them into the one Body of Christ. Origen.

Hence it is justly argued, that the Church upon Earth is a Visible Society, distinguished by certain sensible tokens.

As those everlasting promises of love, mercy, and blessedness, belong to the mystical (i. e. invisible) Church, even so, on the other side, when we read of any duty which the Church of God is bound unto, the Church whom this doth concern is a sensibly known Company. And this Visible Church in like sort is but one, continued from the first beginning of the world to the last end. Which Company being divided into two moieties, the one before, the other since, the coming of Christ; that part which since the coming of Christ partly hath embraced, and partly shall hereafter embrace, the Christian Religion, we term, as by a more proper name, the Church of Christ. And therefore the Apostle affirmeth plainly of all men Christian, that be they Jews or Gentiles, bond or free, they are all incorporated into one company, they all make but one body. The unity of which visible body and Church of Christ consisteth in that uniformity which all several persons thereunto belonging have, by reason of that one Lord whose servants they all profess themselves, that one Faith which they all acknowledge, that one Baptism wherewith they are all initiated. Hooker (iii. 1).

The practical inferences from this may be thus expressed;

St. Paul exhorting the Ephesians, his disciples, to the maintenance of charity and peace among themselves, doth for inducement to that practice represent the unity and community of those things which jointly did appertain to them as Christians; the unity of that Body whereof they were members; of that Spirit which did animate and act them; of that Hope to which they were called; of that Lord Whom they all did worship and serve; of that Faith which they did profess; of that Baptism whereby they were admitted into the same state of duties, of rights, of privileges; of that one God and universal Father, to Whom they had all the same relations. He beginneth with the unity of the Body; that is, of the Christian Church. Barrow (vi. p. 495, on the Unity of the Church).

— ἓν Πνεῦμα] one Spirit. Compare the words of one of St. Paul's fellow-labourers: Ἵνατί ἔρεις καὶ σχίσματα ἐν ὑμῖν; ἢ οὐχὶ ἕνα Θεὸν ἔχομεν, καὶ ἕνα Χριστὸν, καὶ ἓν Πνεῦμα τῆς χάριτος τὸ ἐκχυθὲν ἐφ' ἡμᾶς, καὶ μία κλῆσις ἐν Χριστῷ.

The Apostle teaches us that there is "one Body;" but this Body lives, does it not? Yes. Whence? From the one Spirit. What our soul is to our bodies, that the Spirit is to the members of Christ, to the Body of Christ, the Church. Augustine (Serm. 268).

5. εἷς Κύριος] one Lord,—whence the Church has derived her name as Κυριακὴ, the Lord's House.

— μία πίστις] one faith. See on Rom. xii. 6.

— ἓν βάπτισμα] one Baptism. "Unus omnino baptismus est nobis . . . ex Apostolicis literis. Quoniam unus Dominus, et unum Baptisma, et una Ecclesia." Tertullian (de Bapt. 15). Hence he argued against iteration of Baptism: "Semel ergo lavacrum inimus, semel delicta diluuntur; felix aqua quod semel abluit."

6. πᾶσιν] Elz. adds ὑμῖν, which is not found in A, B, C. And D, E, F, G, I, K, and many Cursives, have ἡμῖν,—and so Irenæus, ii. 2: "Unus Deus Pater, Qui super omnes et per omnia et in omnibus nobis;" and so again iv. 20, and v. 18; and this seems to be the true reading.

7. Ἑνὶ δὲ ἑκάστῳ ἡμῶν ἐδόθη ἡ χάρις] There is one Spirit; and all have spiritual blessings in common, without respect of persons, sufficient for their salvation. But each of us has also some special grace. This grace is a gift from God; and these gifts are proportioned, not according to the measure of the recipient—for God's grace can make men capable of receiving what otherwise they could not receive—but they are distributed according to the measure of God's free bounty; they are to be regarded as such, "lest any man should boast" (Eph. ii. 9), as if he himself were in some respect the cause of the graces which he receives from God. See above, 1 Cor. vii. 17. Rom. xii. 3.

There is therefore unity in diversity. There are diversities of gifts; but it is the same Spirit, Who bestows them as He wills, and they are all given for one end,—the edification of the One Body of Christ; and they are to be exercised for that end in a spirit of unity, humility, and love. See 1 Cor. xii. 4—31,—the best exposition of this passage.

8. Διὸ λέγει] God says, Ps. lxviii. 18. See Justin M. c. Tryphon. §§ 39. 87, where he adopts St. Paul's argument, and applies that Prophecy to Christ sending the gifts of the Holy Spirit from heaven after His Ascension; and so Tertullian, c. Marcion. v. 2, who, as well as Justin, applies the prophecy of Joel ii. 28 to the same effusion and bestowal of supernatural gifts (cp. Acts ii. 17, 18), and thus shows the Harmony of the New Testament with the Old. So also Irenæus, ii. 20.

It is evident, therefore, that the primitive Christian writers were convinced of the propriety of St. Paul's application of the language of the Psalmist to the Ascension of Christ and its fruits.

The original words of the Psalmist are לָקַחְתָּ מַתָּנוֹת בָּאָדָם, thou hast received gifts in the man. Thou (Who hast gone up on high and hast led captivity captive) hast received gifts in the human race collectively.

It may therefore be said, is there not a discrepancy here?

The Psalmist says, "Thou hast received," but the Apostle says, "He gave."

Let it however be observed, that the Psalmist adds, "even for the rebellious, that the Lord God might dwell with them."

Here is plainly involved the act of giving.

Hence, since the Apostle was speaking of God's gifts by Christ (v. 7), it was quite competent to him, for brevity's sake, to speak of Christ's giving those gifts, which at His Ascension He received in order to give. Cp. Surenhus. p. 585. And this is a common use of the Hebrew verb לָקַח (perhaps connected with the Greek λαγχάνω, λάχος), which often signifies to fetch, i. e. for the use of another. See Gen. xviii. 5; xxvii. 13; xxxviii. 6; xlii. 16. Exod. xxv. 2. 1 Kings xvii. 10. 2 Kings vi. 13.

As to the word בָּאָדָם (ba Adam), its literal signification is, "in the Adam, or man."

And it was in His character as "the Man," "the Second Adam," the Representative and Head of Regenerate and Redeemed Humanity, that Christ ascended into Heaven, and carried our Nature to the Right Hand of God. It was in His exalted Humanity that our second Adam acquired gifts in Himself, and gave gifts to His whole human family; it was in His nature as Man that our Head received and gave gifts to all His Members.

The reception of those Gifts in Him and by Him, in His Humanity, as our second Adam, virtually implied the donation of those gifts to us, who are mystically united as one body in Him, just as the reception of the priestly unction by Aaron, the type of Christ, on his head, was the effusion of it on his beard and on the skirts of his clothing. (Ps. cxxxiii. 2.)

It is not necessary to say that the ב in בָּאָדָם marks a "dativus commodi," and means "for men," in the original, though doubtless this signification is implied, because whatever is received by Christ in our Nature, is received for the benefit of our Nature.

9. Τὸ δὲ, ἀνέβη] On this citatory use of the article τὸ, see Heb. xii. 27. It is similarly prefixed to sentences. Mark ix. 3. Acts iv. 21; xxii. 37. Rom. viii. 26; xiii. 9. 1 Thess. iv. 1.

— καὶ κατέβη] Elz. adds πρῶτον, not in the best MSS. and Edd.

— εἰς τὰ κατώτερα] A, B, C, I, K add μέρη, but it is not in D, E, F, G, nor in the most ancient Fathers, and it is rejected by Tisch., Meyer, Ellicott, Alford.

What is the region meant here by the lower parts of the Earth?

(1) Some understand it simply as the Earth, to which Christ came down by His Incarnation. See Bp. Pearson, Art. v. p. 429. Cp. John iii. 13, where our Lord says, "No man ascended up to heaven but He that came down from heaven." And so Dr. South, Serm. i.

But this interpretation seems hardly consistent with the comparative partitive words κατώτερα τῆς γῆς.

And therefore we are led to understand them—

(2) as signifying that lower region to which Christ descended at His Death.

This interpretation is that which was generally accepted by the ancient Church.

Thus Irenæus says, v. 31, "Tribus diebus conversatus est ubi erant mortui." And then he quotes our Lord's words concerning Himself, as being three days and three nights in the heart of the earth, and then he cites the present text.

So Tertullian (de Animâ, 55), "Formâ humanæ mortis apud inferos functus nec antè ascendit in sublimiora cœlorum, quàm descendit in inferiora terrarum, ut illic Prophetas et Patriarchas compotes Sui faceret."

So also c. Praxeam, 30, and cp. S. Cyril Hieros. (Catech. iv. 12, p. 47), with the Benedictine Editor's note, who refers to Greg. Nazian. (Orat. xlii.), Augustine (de Genesi ad lit. xii. 33). See also S. Athanas. (c. Arian. i. 44, 45, pp. 353, 354), who compares St. Peter's words (Acts ii. 22—24); and see on Phil. ii. 8. And so Origen in Matth. Hom. 35, Chrysostom here, and S. Jerome, and Theodoret, and Theophylact (who observe that this text is a refutation of Nestorianism), and Hilary in Ps. lxvii. § 19, and Augustine (de Trinitate, x. § 65). Theodoret well illustrates St. Paul's words, τὰ κατώτατα τῆς γῆς, by those of the Psalmist, which were spoken of Christ's death, and which were probably in the Apostle's mind, Ps. lxxxvii. 7, ἔθεντό με ἐν λάκκῳ κατωτάτῳ. And again, Ps. cxxxix. 15, said first of formation in the darkness of the womb, and next of Resurrection from the tomb in the earth, ἡ ὑπόστασίς μου ἐν τοῖς κατωτάτοις τῆς γῆς.

The meaning therefore appears to be, that at His Death Christ descended into the lower parts of the Earth, His Human Body being laid in the Grave; and that His Human Soul, separated from His body by death, went into the place appointed for departed and disembodied souls. See on Luke xxiii. 43, and on 1 Pet. iii. 19.

This sense also seems to be most in harmony with what follows concerning Christ filling all things.

10. ὁ καταβὰς αὐτός ἐστι] See on John iii. 13.

11. αὐτός] 'ipse, nemo alius.' See above, ii. 14; v. 23. 27.

— ἔδωκε] He gave. Their office and qualifications as Apostles were not from themselves, but all that they had or did or were, was His gift to them and to the Church. See on v. 7.

God the Father (ἔδωκε) gave Christ as Head to the Church (see above, i. 21), and put all things under His feet; and Christ, the Son of God, our Head, being seated in glory at God's right hand, gave (ἔδωκε) the gifts of the Holy Ghost, and gave Apostles.

Thus all gifts in the Church flow to us by the Holy Spirit, through the Son, from the Father.

Thus also CHRIST, seated in glory at the Right Hand of God, is proclaimed the Author and Doer of all that was effected by the Apostles. He gave Apostles, and He gave all that was given by them. This is the clue to the right understanding of the design of the Book written by St. Paul's companion, St. Luke, "The ACTS of the APOSTLES;" and these words of St. Paul might well be prefixed as a Motto to that Divine Book.

See above, Introduction to "the Acts of the Apostles," p. vii—xv, where this subject is more fully considered.

— ἀποστόλους] Apostles.

Observe St. Paul says that Christ gave some Apostles; he does not say that He gave one Apostle to be chief over all.

If, as the Church of Rome affirms, the doctrine of the Supremacy of the Pope as the Visible Head of the Church, is the "res summa Christianitatis," the main groundwork of Christianity (to use the words of Cardinal Bellarmine, de Pontifice), it is incredible that St. Paul, in describing here the fundamentals of the Church, should have made no mention of that doctrine.

— τοὺς δὲ προφήτας] and some Prophets. On these offices in the Church, see notes above on 1 Cor. xii. 28.

Pastors and Teachers are not names of separate orders or degrees in the Church, but St. Paul intended to indicate thereby several gifts and functions which might appertain to the same person. "Hoc tanquam unum aliquid duobus nominibus amplexus est." Augustine (Ep. 149).

13. μέχρι—εἰς τὴν ἑνότητα τῆς πίστεως] till we all arrive at the oneness of Faith. Therefore Unity in the Faith is represented by St. Paul not only as something attainable, but as the very end and purpose of the Christian life, and as the ripeness and maturity of the life of the Church, and therefore is proposed as the proper aim for every Christian.

Unless we arrive at that ripeness we are described by St. Paul as mere babes (v. 14, cp. 1 Cor. iii. 1), or as ships without ballast, tossed about with every wind of doctrine, and never coming to the harbour; or as silly dupes and victims of the trickery (κυβεία, properly dicing) of spiritual gamesters.

A solemn warning and stern reproof to the vain-glorious self-conceit of schism. They who make divisions in the Christian Church may imagine themselves to be wise, and may vaunt their own superior intelligence; but the holy Apostle describes them as mere babes. Cp. Introduction above, p. 276, 7.

— εἰς μέτρον ἡλίκιας τοῦ πληρώματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ] See iii. 19. The spiritual life is here represented as one of continual growth (αὔξησις, v. 15) in faith and knowledge, cherished in us, and strengthened and diffused by means of spiritual gifts from Christ in His Church; so that our life is gradually extending itself till it holds communion with the whole Body of Christ, and circulates, as it were, like blood in every part of it, and partakes in its fulness, as every drop of water in the sea partakes of the saltness and movement of the whole.

14. νήπιοι] babes. See 1 Cor. iii. 1.

— ἐν πανουργίᾳ πρὸς τὴν μεθοδείαν τῆς πλάνης] in imposture devised for the machination of deceit. Μεθοδεία πλάνης indicates a certain systematic plan of delusion on the part of those who use μεθόδους πλάνης καθ' ἡμῶν. Caten. p. 172. it as the state of the heart when the conscience is hardened by sin, and "seared as it were with a hot iron" (1 Tim. iv. 2).

St. Paul takes care to protest here, that the sin and blindness of the Gentile world were the natural results of their own sin, in hardening their own hearts, and stifling the voice of Reason and Conscience, and giving themselves up to work all uncleanness with greediness; and was therefore a judicial retribution upon them from God for their misuse of His Gifts. Cp. Rom. i. 18—24. He thus explains his use of the word φύσις above in ii. 3.

19. ἐν πλεονεξίᾳ] in greediness. It is observed by Origen and Jerome here, that this word is often coupled by St. Paul with words of lust, fornication, and adultery. See v. 3, and particularly 1 Thess. iv. 6 and note there. And so it is observable that Our Lord passes on from speaking of Covetousness to speak of Adultery. Luke xvi. 18, where see note.

The reason is obvious. We are all members one of another in Christ. St. Paul dwells particularly in this Epistle on the moral duties consequent on this fellow-membership. Each member ought to edify the other members; and whenever one member encroaches on, and usurps what belongs to, another member, he is guilty of the sin of πλεον-εξία. And in nothing is this sin more shown than in Harlotry and Adultery assuming to themselves the sacred name of Love.

21. εἴγε αὐτὸν ἠκούσατε] if at least (as I suppose) ye heard Him, i. e. hearkened to Him. See above, iii. 2.

He is speaking of the instruction which they had already received antecedently to their Baptism, and by which they had been taught what they were bound to do in and after Baptism. See on Gal. iii. 27, where he says that all we who have been baptized have put on Christ. He reminds them now that they must wear the robe of Christ's righteousness which they had then put on.

This must be observed, because it seems to be imagined by some that St. Paul is now calling on the Ephesians to put on Christ for the first time. He might, indeed, use this expression if he were speaking of putting on the armour of Christ, and of doing the works of Christ, as in Rom. xiii. 14.

But he is here speaking of putting on a new nature; he is reminding them of what they have already been taught, and have already done, in their Baptism, and urges them to live according to that baptismal teaching, and according to their own baptismal profession.

Hence he says, Since ye have been taught to put off, as concerns your former habits, the old man, whose very life tended to corruption, and to be renewed in the Spirit of your mind, and to put on the new man . . . therefore having put away (ἀποθέμενοι) Lying, speak the Truth each with his neighbour, for (by your baptismal incorporation into Christ's body) ye are members one of another.

Compare the similar argument to the Colossians, iii. 9, 10 (the best commentary on this passage), where he says, "Since ye have put off the old man with his deeds, and have put on the new man . . . lie not one to another, but put on bowels of kindness," &c.

He proceeds here to evolve other moral duties in like manner from the spiritual germ of their baptismal engrafting into the Body of Christ.

23. ἀνανεοῦσθαι δὲ τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ νοὸς ὑμῶν] But to be renewed in the spirit of your mind.

This appears to be the true meaning. They could not be said to have been taught to be renewed by the Holy Spirit; and the "Holy Spirit of their mind" would seem to be a harsh expression.

Therefore, notwithstanding the high authorities that might be adduced in behalf of that sense, the sense appears to be that which has been thus expressed by S. Augustine (de Genesi ad liter. vi. 26), "Renovamur secundùm id quod amisit Adam, id est secundùm spiritum mentis nostræ; secundùm autem corpus quod seminatur animale, et resurget spirituale, in melius renovabimur." See 1 Cor. xv. 51.

The first new birth, that of our spirit, takes place in this life, and is called the first resurrection (see on John v. 25); and this first Resurrection must precede, in order that we may be partakers of the second Resurrection, viz. in order that we may be renewed in our bodies, glorified at the General Resurrection in the last day. We must be born anew in the spirit of our mind now, in order that we may be raised in the flesh glorified hereafter.

The πνεῦμα, or spirit, is the higher and nobler element of the inner man, and is contrasted with the σὰρξ, or flesh, and ψυχὴ, or animal principle. See above on 1 Thess. v. 23.

And the renovation of the spirit will lead to the blessed result of the glorification of those other elements of the human constitution hereafter, with which it is associated here.

St. Paul first uses the word ἀνανεοῦσθαι, and then he adds, ἐνδύσασθαι τὸν καινὸν ἄνθρωπον.

What then is the difference between νέος and καινός?

The word καινὸς refers rather to the operation of an external Agent, and so is properly applied to works made by power operating upon material prepared for it. But νέος describes rather the inner growth or change of a natural object. Thus in the proverb, "new wine is to be put into new bottles," the bottles are καινοί, but the wine is νέος. (Matt. ix. 17. Mark ii. 22. Luke v. 38.)

Νέος is a person or thing in a new or youthful condition, as contrasted with the same person or thing in a state of old age or decay. Καινὸς is a person or thing in a new state, as distinguished from another thing or person in an old condition.

In spiritual matters the work of ἀνακαίνωσις is performed by the external operation of the Holy Ghost on the inner life; and therefore the καινὸς ἄνθρωπος is said to be κτισθεὶς, and the νέος ἄνθρωπος is said to be ἀνακαινούμενος. (Col. iii. 10.) And here ἀνανεοῦσθαι is described as a duty we ourselves owe to our own moral and spiritual being, and ἐνδύσασθαι καινὸν ἄνθρωπον is to put on, as it were, the vesture of the new nature which is made for us by God, and given to us by Him in Christ. The καινὸς ἄνθρωπος is καινὴ κτίσις. (Gal. vi. 15.) The new Διαθήκη which God makes with man is καινὴ (Mark xiv. 24. 2 Cor. iii. 6. Heb. viii. 8), although, being the same dispensation spiritualized, it may also be called νέα. (Heb. xii. 24.) The heavens which will be made new are καινοί (2 Pet. iii. 13); and Christ, by His Incarnation, Sacrifice, and Glorification, and by his Mediatorial Power and Grace, makes all things new, καινά. (Rev. xxi. 5.)

26. Ὀργίζεσθε καὶ μὴ ἁμαρτάνετε] Be ye angry and sin not. A quotation from the LXX (Ps. iv. 5). Ὀργίζεσθε represents the Hebrew רִגְזוּ (rigzu), Be ye troubled, Be ye stirred with the emotions of feeling.

The Hebrew word רָגַז (raghaz) is applied to any agitation of mind exciting to action, as fear and rage. Cp. Gen. xlv. 24. So 2 Kings xix. 27, 28. Isa. xxxvii. 28, 29.

On the quotations from the Old Testament in this Epistle, see note on ii. 17.

These words are quoted as Scripture by S. Polycarp, the disciple of St. John, ad Phil. 12.

This is a very important text. St. Paul had been describing the Gentile world as sunk into a spiritual insensibility (ἀνοργησία), as having their conscience hardened and rendered callous by sin, and as having no just feeling of shame, and hatred and indignation against it as an outrage against God, and a debasement of Human Nature, which is God's Work.

The habit of ἀναλγησία, or insensibility, was even encouraged by the two great schools of Moral Philosophy then dominant in the world.

The "wise man" of the Stoic System was schooled never to allow the mind to be ruffled by passion, and it was their principle

τῷ Διαβόλῳ. 28 [z] Ὁ κλέπτων μηκέτι κλεπτέτω, μᾶλλον δὲ κοπιάτω ἐργαζόμενος ταῖς ἰδίαις χερσὶν τὸ ἀγαθόν, ἵνα ἔχῃ μεταδιδόναι τῷ χρείαν ἔχοντι. 29 [a] Πᾶς of ethical discipline, not to temper or control the affections, but to extinguish and eradicate them, or to brand and cauterize them. See Lactant. vi. 15.

[z] Acts 20. 34. [a] Matt. 12. 34—37. ch. 5. 3, 4. Rom. 3. 13, 14. Col. 4. 6. Eccl. 10. 18. Ecclus. 21. 16.

The disciples of the Epicurean School were taught to look down with serene indifference and apathetic contempt on all the errors of a restless and miserable world. Cp. Lucret. i. 1—10.

On these accounts, the Apostle might well say Ὀργίζεσθε, Be ye angry. That is, do not imagine that the feeling of anger, which is natural to man when he sees an act of cruelty, injustice, and wrong,—an act of outrage against God and man,—is an unrighteous feeling. No; it is a feeling implanted in human nature, which is the work of Almighty God. It is "connected with a sense of virtue and vice, of moral good and moral evil," and it is "one of the bonds by which human society is held together." And it is implanted in Human Nature for good purposes, in order that Vice may not go unpunished, but may be held in that detestation and abhorrence which it deserves, which is necessary for the preservation of Human Society, which is also God's work, and in order that Vice may receive that chastisement which is also necessary for that end, and which it would not receive, if it is practised with desperate recklessness, as it is by the heathen, who "are past feeling," and "have given themselves up to work all uncleanness with greediness," or is regarded with Stoical Apathy or Epicurean Indifference.

Therefore ὀργίζεσθε, be ye angry. Do not blunt your ὀργή, which is necessary (as its etymology indicates) to set you upon your ἔργον, or work, and makes you energize; and without which you may be ἀργός, or even πανοῦργος.

On this subject the student may be referred to Bp. Butler's Sermon on Resentment (Serm. viii.), and to his three Sermons on Human Nature and his Preface to them. Bp. Butler gives a somewhat different construction to St. Paul's words; but this does not affect the general drift of his argument. Cp. Winer, p. 278, note.

The germ of that moral system by which that learned Prelate has vindicated the divine Author of our nature from the cavils of those who "charge God foolishly," by ascribing to Him, or to the Nature He has given us, those evils which are owing to our abuse of that Nature, may be seen in the remarks of another Bishop of the Christian Church, who thus speaks:

We have Anger implanted within us,—not in order that we may insult our neighbours, but that we may reclaim the sinner, and in order that we may not be insensible. Anger is like a stimulus applied to us in order that we may gnash our teeth against the Devil, and in order that we may be vehement against him; not in order that we may fight one another. We have arms given us, not that we may war against each other, but that we may use them as a panoply against our Enemy. Art thou passionate? Be so against thine own sins, rebuke thine own soul, lash thine own conscience, be a vehement and severe censor of thine own faults. This is the use of Anger. For this purpose it was implanted in us by God. S. Chrysostom (on cap. i. p. 772).

To which may be added the following, from another eloquent and learned writer of the ancient Church:

"Arbitror hoc de illâ irâ nunc dictum, quâ naturalibus stimulis concitamur, et nobis quasi hominibus esse concessum, ut ad indignæ alicujus rei facinus moveamur, tranquillitatemque mentis velut levis quædam aura conturbet, nequaquam tamen in tumentes gurgites furoris impetu sublevemur. Firmianus noster (Lactantius), Librum De Irâ Dei, docto pariter et eloquente sermone conscripsit, quem qui legerit puto ei ad Iræ intellectum satis abundèque posse sufficere." S. Jerome.

Thus the writers of ancient Christendom have anticipated (and by so doing have confirmed) the teaching of our great English Moralist, Bishop Butler, who thus speaks:

Notwithstanding all the abuses (of Anger), is not just indignation against cruelty and wrong one of the instruments of death which the Author of our nature hath provided? Are not cruelty, injustice, and wrong, the natural objects of that indignation? Surely then it may, one way or other, be innocently employed against them.

True. Since therefore it is necessary for the very subsistence of the world, that injury, injustice, and cruelty should be punished: and since compassion, which is so natural to mankind, would render that execution of justice exceedingly difficult and uneasy; indignation against vice and wickedness is, and may be allowed to be, a balance to that weakness of pity, and also to any thing else which would prevent the necessary methods of severity. . . . . The account now given of the passion of Resentment, as distinct from all the abuses of it, may suggest to our thoughts the following reflections:

First. That vice is indeed of ill desert, and must finally be punished. Why should men dispute concerning the reality of virtue, and whether it be founded in the nature of things, which yet surely is not matter of question; but why should this, I say, be disputed, when every man carries about him this passion, which affords him demonstration, that the rules of justice and equity are to be the guide of his actions? For every man naturally feels an indignation upon seeing instances of villainy and baseness, and therefore cannot commit the same without being self-condemned.

Secondly. That we should learn to be cautious, lest we charge God foolishly, by ascribing that to Him, or to the Nature He has given us, which is owing wholly to our own abuse of it. Men may speak of the degeneracy and corruption of the world according to the experience they have had of it; but human Nature, considered as the divine workmanship, should, methinks, be treated as sacred; "for in the image of God made He man."

That passion, from whence men take occasion to run into the dreadful vices of malice and revenge; even that passion, as implanted in our nature by God, is not only innocent, but a generous movement of mind. It is in itself, and in its original, no more than indignation against injury and wickedness; that which is the only deformity in the creation, and the only reasonable object of abhorrence and dislike. How manifold evidence have we of the divine wisdom and goodness, when even pain in the natural world, and the passion we have been now considering in the moral, come out instances of it? Bp. Butler (Sermon on Resentment, p. 76).

Indeed, the true view on this important matter had already been opened by St. Paul himself, 2 Cor. vii. 11. And the Holy Spirit had suggested as much in the Gospel, by saying that He Who was "meek and lowly of heart" "looked round about Him with anger, grieved for the hardness of their hearts." (Mark iii. 5.)

— καὶ μὴ ἁμαρτάνετε] and sin not. He does not forbid anger, but even commands it on fit occasions (see last note), and when it is directed to right ends, and moderated and regulated by proper restraints; but he forbids all abuses of it, and all excess in it.

Here is evidently a distinction made between anger and sin; between the natural passion and sinful anger. Bp. Butler.

— ὁ ἥλιος—παροργισμῷ] let not the sun go down on your exacerbation, exasperation or irritation. (He does not say ὀργῇ, but παροργισμῷ.) Παροργισμὸς is not simply anger, but rather an abuse and perversion of it. The preposition παρὰ indicates a deflection from the right rule by which the affection of ὀργὴ ought to be regulated. See vi. 4, μὴ παροργίζετε τὰ τέκνα, do not provoke, irritate, exasperate your children; and cp. Dean Trench's excellent volume on the Synonyms of N. T. § xxxvii. p. 155.

27. μηδὲ κ.τ.λ.] So the best MSS. and Edd. Nor yet, much more, give place to the Devil. See on John xiii. 27, the case of Judas. Satan (says Jerome) first threw a fiery dart into his heart (cp. St. John's words, xiii. 2, τοῦ διαβόλου ἤδη βεβληκότος εἰς τὴν καρδίαν), and if Judas had not cherished it within him, Satan would never have been able to enter there, as he did, after Judas had received the sop. If Judas had stood firm against Satan, Satan would have found no place in him. Origen.

Shut the door against Satan, and you will obey the Apostle's precept, Give no place to the Devil; by which precept the Apostle shows, that if the Devil enters and takes possession in us, it is because we have admitted him. Augustine (Serm. 32).

28. Ὁ κλέπτων] he that stealeth; he that is in the habit of stealing. See examples of this use of the present participle, Matt. iv. 3, ὁ πειράζων. Gal. i. 23. Winer, p. 316, § 45.

— ταῖς ἰδίαις χερσὶν τὸ ἀγαθόν] So A, D*, E, F, G, and Lachm., Rückert, Ellicott. There are some slight variations in the MSS. here.

— ἵνα ἔχῃ μεταδιδόναι] Another practical application of the great doctrine of Unity in the Body of Christ. He had said, Lie not, because we are members one of another. He now says, Steal not, but work with your hands, in order that you may have wherewithal to give to your fellow-member in need.

He proceeds to say, Utter no corrupt language, but what is good for the use of edifying to others. So all moral duties flow from the same divine source,—the Incarnation of Christ.

29. πρὸς οἰκοδομὴν τῆς χρείας] for the edifying of the need. Χρεία is the need, urgency, or exigency of some emergent and pressing occasion, and is so used in the preceding verse, which explains its use here. Cp. Acts vi. 3; xx. 34. Rom. xii. 13. Phil. iv. 16. Tit. iii. 14.

This precept is to be obeyed in two ways;

(1) The Christian who has learnt to be not overcome of evil, but to overcome evil by good (Rom. xii. 21), converts every need of his own into an opportunity for good.

Every stone that is thrown at him by an enemy, is picked up by him, and used by him for the purpose of οἰκοδομή, or edification; i. e. to be built into the structure of his own spiritual life, and of that of the Church. Thus, in the Poet's words, he "turns his necessity to glorious gain." His conversation is ordered for the improvement and building up of the need, which is like a tottering house, that needs repair.

The Vulg. approaches near the meaning by its translation, "ad ædificationem opportunitatis;" only "opportunitas" is too favourable a word; it should be rather "necessitas."

A similar precept is given in v. 16, where St. Paul speaks of "redeeming the opportunity" because the days are evil.

(2) There is also another mode in which this precept may be applied. The χρεία (or need of which the Apostle speaks) is not only our own need, but our neighbour's need also.

We are bound so to temper our conversation and to regulate our own discourse, that it may serve to edify him in his need; that is to say, our words are to be so accommodated as to suit the special wants of the particular persons with whom we associate and converse. We are not to apply the same remedies to all cases indiscriminately, but to study the diversities of constitutions and temperaments of individuals, to sympathize with them in their difficulties and necessities, and to order our conversation so as to be wholesome and seasonable to each for their growth in the faith.

This is a special duty of the Christian Pastor—the Physician of souls.

This view of the Apostolic precept seems to have been in the mind of the framers of several ancient Versions, where the words are rendered, or rather paraphrased, 'for the edification of faith.' Cp. Trench (Syn. N. T. p. 121).

30. μὴ λυπεῖτε] grieve not the Holy Spirit,—a plain evidence of His Personality. Cp. Acts xiii. 2. Rom. viii. 5. John xiv. 26; xv. 26; xvi. 7, 8. 13; and Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. viii. p. 578.

These words are imitated by the Apostolic writer Hermas, Pastor. lib. ii. Mand. x., μὴ θλῖβε τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον τὸ ἐνοικοῦν ἐν σοί. μήποτε ἀποστῇ ἀπὸ σοῦ.

— ἐν ᾧ ἐσφραγίσθητε] Observe the aorist,—by Whom ye were sealed (see i. 13) at a particular time, i. e. at your Baptism, called ἡ σφραγίς, or the seal, by the ancient Church. See Clem. Alexandr. (in Euseb. iii. 23), relating the story of the young man committed by St. John the Evangelist to a certain presbyter, who (says Clemens), having instructed him, at length baptized him (ἐφώτισε), and then remitted some of his care, as having set upon him the guardian seal (σφραγῖδα) of the Lord. See also in Suicer, Thes. v. σφραγίς.

The seal of the Holy Ghost is upon thee. Let that seal be upon thy mouth. Break it not. The mouth of him who is sealed by the Spirit will never utter what is unworthy of the grace he has received from the Holy Ghost. Chrys.

— εἰς ἡμέραν ἀπολυτρώσεως] for the day of Redemption (cp. Luke xxi. 28), the Great Day, the Day of the general Resurrection; when the body will rise from the dust, and from the burden and bondage of corruption, and be glorified like the body of Christ; and when the soul will be reunited to the body, and you will rise in body and soul to a full fruition of the blissful inheritance purchased for you by the blood of the Redeemer, of Whom the Patriarch said, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter Day (the great Day of Redemption) upon the earth, and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." (Job xix. 25.)

It is observable, that the seal of the Holy Spirit here is connected with the future glory of the Resurrection. And with good reason. For we rise by a first Resurrection in Baptism from the death of sin to newness of life on earth; and its end and consummation is that we may rise by the second Resurrection of the great Day of Redemption to everlasting newness of life in heaven, even to a glorious Immortality.

On this text cp. Bp. Andrewes (Sermons, iii. 201).

31. Πᾶσα πικρία κ.τ.λ.] The language of this and the following precepts are imitated by Hermas, Pastor. lib. ii. Mand. ii.—viii.

32. ἐχαρίσατο] forgave you; bestowed upon you forgiveness in Christ dying for you; and applied that gift to you actually and personally, on your profession of Repentance and Faith in Him at your Baptism. (Acts ii. 38; xxii. 16.)

CH. V. 1. Γίνεσθε οὖν] This verse is to be connected with the foregoing and the following. Since God forgave you in Christ, therefore do you, who are children of God and members of Christ, become followers of God as dear children, and walk in love as Christ loved us.

2. προσφορὰν καὶ θυσίαν] an offering and sacrifice. 'Oblationem et hostiam' (Vulg.). The difference between these words appears to be, that a θυσία requires the intervention of a Priest, and that as used here it refers to the office of Christ, as the Great High Priest of the Church, offering Himself as a Victim, slain for the sins of the world, and entering into the true Holy of Holies, Heaven itself, with His own blood, where He ever liveth to plead the meritorious and saving efficacy of that Great Sacrifice, and by virtue thereof to make intercession for us. (Heb. vii. 25; ix. 24; x. 20.)

S. Ignatius adopts these words in his Epistle to the Ephesians, in which he expresses his wish for Martyrdom, and that he may be a true disciple of Christ, τοῦ ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν ἑαυτὸν ἀνενεγκόντος Θεῷ προσφορὰν καὶ θυσίαν, c. 1.

— εἰς ὀσμὴν εὐωδίας] for an odour of a sweet smell, acceptable to God. As to the genitive, expressing the characteristic of the preceding substantive, cp. 2 Pet. ii. 1, αἱρέσεις ἀπωλείας, Winer, § 34, p. 211, and note above on Matt. xxiv. 15, and the examples in St. Luke xvi. 8; xviii. 6.

St. Paul seems to refer to the sacrifice offered by the Patriarch Noah after the flood, where the Septuagint says (Gen. viii. 21), ὠσφράνθη Κύριος ὁ Θεὸς ὀσμὴν εὐωδίας, and where the original signifies an odour of comfort and rest (perhaps with some reference to the name of the Patriarch Noah—rest, comfort—who offered it), one in which God is well pleased.

Hence the term ὀσμὴ εὐωδίας is of frequent occurrence as descriptive of the burnt offerings of the Levitical Law. See Levit. i. 9. 13. 17, and about twelve other passages, and about eighteen places of the book of Numbers.

The Sacrifice of Christ, Who delivers us from God's wrath (see Gen. viii. 21), and from His curse, and Who is the true Passover, is an odour of rest, רֵיחַ נִיחוֹחַ, in which the Father εὐδοκεῖ, acquiescit, is well pleased. See above on i. 6, and on Matt. xvii. 5.

4. αἰσχρότης] filthiness; immunditia, Tertullian (de Pudic.), and Vulg.

5 [e] Τοῦτο γὰρ ἴστε, γινώσκοντες ὅτι πᾶς πόρνος, ἢ ἀκάθαρτος, ἢ πλεονέκτης, ὅς ἐστιν εἰδωλολάτρης, οὐκ ἔχει κληρονομίαν ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ τοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ Θεοῦ. 6 [f] Μηδεὶς ὑμᾶς ἀπατάτω κενοῖς λόγοις· διὰ ταῦτα γὰρ ἔρχεται ἡ ὀργὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐπὶ τοὺς υἱοὺς τῆς ἀπειθείας.

— μωρολογία] fools' talk; 'vaniloquium' (Iren. iv. 37), 'stultiloquium' (Vulg.). The word μωρὸς has a wider sense than the English word fool, as usually understood; and μωρολογία comprises the notion of wickedness and profanity, blurted out in loose and random talking or writing. See on Matt. v. 22. Ps. xiv. 1, "The fool hath said in his heart," &c. Cp. Trench, Synon. of N. T. p. 138.

—ἢ] or even.

— εὐτραπελία] jesting, jocularity. Well described thus by S. Jerome, "Appetit quædam vel urbana verba . . . vel facета, quam nos jocularitatem alio verbo possumus appellare, ut risum moveat audientibus. Verùm et hæc à sanctis viris penitus propellenda, quibus magis convenit lugere." And he proceeds to mention a speech, ascribed by primitive writers to our Blessed Saviour, "Never be ye joyful, but when ye see your brother walking in love."

The εὐτράπελος (from εὖ and τρέπομαι) is properly a person who turns himself about with dexterous adroitness, and ready versatility, like an intellectual harlequin, and adapts himself with flexible pliancy to the humours of persons and to the circumstances of occasions, and is therefore defined as ὁ ποικίλος, and as ὁ ἁπαντοδαπὸς by Aristotle (Ethic. iv. 8), and as ὁ ἅστατος, ὁ εὔκολος, ὁ πάντα γινόμενος by Chrysostom, and is expressed by the Latin facetus in Horat. (1 Epist. vi. 55), "Ut cuique est ætas, ita quemque facetus adopta;" and is well described by Juvenal (iii. 74—104), and in the inimitable portraiture of Wit drawn by Dr. Barrow in his Sermon on this text (Serm. xiv. Vol. i. p. 305), a portraiture doubtless drawn from the life, as displayed in the manners of that age of εὐτραπελία. Cp. Trench's remarks on this word, p. 139—141.

— τὰ οὐκ ἀνήκοντα] the things, which in the matter before us, i. e. the use of the Tongue, "the best member which we have," are not convenient; indicating that there are other things to be done with the Tongue which are convenient. And this is explained by the following word, εὐχαριστία, giving God thanks, glorifying Him with the Tongue; that is, τὸ ἀνῆκον. Cp. James iii. 9, where he contrasts the use and abuse of the Tongue.

As to the difference of the objective τὰ οὐκ ἀνήκοντα here, and the subjective τὰ μὴ καθήκοντα in Rom. i. 28, see Winer, § 55, p. 431.

5. ἴστε] So the majority of the best MSS. and Edd. Elz. ἐστε. The verb ἴστε refers to v. 3, and γινώσκοντες refers to what follows. Ye are already acquainted with the precept which I have delivered, since you know, &c. Cp. Winer, p. 318.

— πᾶς—οὐ] See John iii. 16. 1 John ii. 23. Winer, § 26, p. 155.

— τοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ Θεοῦ] of Him Who is Christ and God. See Bp. Middleton here, and the Catena of authorities, in behalf of this interpretation, from Jerome, Faustinus, Basil, Cyril Alexandrinus, Theodoret, quoted by the late Dr. Wordsworth (in the Second of his "Six Letters to Granville Sharp on the use of the Article in the Greek Text of the New Testament," 1802), which is summed up (p. 36) with the words, "All the Greek authorities which we have quoted, which do speak at all, are on our side, and testify that He Who is here called Christ is also God." Cp. ibid. p. 132, and below on Titus ii. 13. 2 Pet. i. 1.

Therefore, to adopt the words of S. Jerome here, "Cùm dixerit 'in regno Christi et Dei,' Ipsum Deum et Christum intelligamus." Cp. also below, v. 20, τῷ Θεῷ καὶ πατρί.

7. συμμέτοχοι] He had spoken of the practical duties consequent on their communion with the mystical Body of Christ; and he argues from the nature of that mystical union in the Body of Christ, that they cannot have fellowship with works of darkness. Cp. 2 Cor. vi. 15, and συγκοινωνεῖτε here, v. 11.

By the operation of the Holy Ghost in the Incarnation of Christ we have been "made partakers of the divine nature" (2 Pet. i. 4). He is our Emmanuel, "God made manifest in the flesh," "the Word made flesh." Thus we have been brought near to God. Christ has married our Nature. He has espoused Humanity, and made us to be His Body, and reconciled God to Man. O altitudo, O divine wedlock, O profound mystery!

How greatly should we rejoice in this our exaltation! How greatly also should we fear, when we think of the pure, spotless, holy, and awful Presence into which we have been brought! How vigilantly should we watch, and how fervently pray, that by the gracious operation of the same Holy Ghost, by Whom Christ became flesh, we may be enabled to "purify ourselves even as He is pure" (1 John iii. 3), so that we, who have been made partakers of the Divine Nature in Him, may be partakers of the Divine Glory hereafter!

Here then we see further evidence of the practical results of this doctrine on Church Unity and Communion. See above, iv. 24—30; and below, v. 30—32; and Introduction, p. 276, 7.

On this text, cp. Augustine's Sermons, Vol. v. pp. 537. 1263. 1407. 1415. 1417. 1545.

8. τέκνα φωτός] children of light (see 1 Thess. v. 5); made such by your Baptism. For our very Baptism entitleth us thereto, which is the Sacrament of our initiation, whereby we put on Christ (Gal. iii. 27), and are made members of Christ and children of God. Whence it is that in the Greek Fathers Baptism is usually called φωτισμὸς, that is, an Enlightening; and persons newly baptized were called νεοφώτιστοι; and ὁ ἐπὶ φώτων, an officer in the Greek Church, to whom it belonged to hear the Confessions of the Catechumens, and, after they were approved, to present them for Baptism; with many other phrases borrowed from the same metaphor of light, and applied in like manner to Baptism. Bp. Sanderson, i. p. 382. Cp. Heb. vi. 4.

9. φωτός] So the major part of the best MSS. and Edd. Elz. has πνεύματος.

10. δοκιμάζοντες] proving what is acceptable to the Lord; making God's Will your rule, and His pleasure your touchstone; and inquiring in every thing, not, what is pleasing to men? nor what is agreeable to yourselves? but what is well pleasing to God? and acting accordingly. Cp. Rom. xii. 2; and below, v. 17.

13. πᾶν γ. τὸ φανερούμενον φῶς ἐστι] "Omne quod manifestatur lumen est." All that is made manifest is light (Iren. i. 8). And the context shows that this is the true sense, which is adopted by Harless, Meyer, Winer (p. 231), Alford, Ellicott, who observes that φανερόω is used nearly fifty times in the New Testament, and never in a middle sense.

The sense of the whole passage appears to be as follows. Your lot in this world is cast with evil men; but you are not to partake of the evil which they do. You are often associated with sinners; but you are not to associate with them as sinners. You are not to associate with them in their sins. You are wheat with the tares in the field; but you are not to be as tares.

Ye are Light in the Lord, and ye may not have fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. Ye owe them the duty of reproof. Do not partake in these works of darkness, but rebuke them. Ye may not join with them in doing their works, for these works are shameful even to be spoken of; how much more are they shameful to be done. But ye owe to the doers the duty of reproof; and ye will have your reward in performing it. For those things which are reproved are illumined by the Light. Cp. John iii. 20, "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light, and doth not come to the Light," ἵνα μὴ ἐλεγχθῇ τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ. For that which is illumined is Light.

That is, the works of darkness, when reproved by you, will be illumined. Unless they are reproved they will remain dark; and the doers of them will be cast into outer darkness. But if they are reproved, they will be changed into Light. This happy change will be wrought by your reproof, and by the protest of your example leading them to love the light and to rejoice in it, and teaching them repentance and newness of life in Christ. Wherefore the Scripture says, "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."

Ye yourselves have passed through this blessed transformation. Ye were once Darkness, but now are ye Light in the Lord. Walk as children of Light, especially by enlightening the darkness of others, and by changing that darkness into Light by your Light.

So Jerome, who says, "Lux arguit ea quæ erant tenebræ . . . ut ex eo quod corripiuntur (i. e. by being reproved) mutentur in melius, et mutata manifestentur, et sint lumen; quia omne quod manifestatur lux est."

While sin is hidden, it works with boldness, as in the dark; but when the sinner is brought forth from his hiding-place, and is reproved, and repents, and receives remission of sins, he becomes light. Chrys.

14. Διὸ λέγει, Ἔγειρε] Not found totidem verbis (as Origen, Jerome, and Severian have already observed) in any one text of the Old Testament, but the sense of several texts (particularly Isa. xxvi. 19; li. 17; lii. 1; lx. 1. Ezek. xxxvii. 13. Mal. iv. 2) is compressed by the Apostle into one, as is common in the N. T. See on Matt. ii. 23, and Surenhus. p. 588.

As to the form διὸ λέγει, see iv. 8. Heb. iii. 7. James iv. 6.

On this text, see Augustine, Sermons 88. 98, Vol. v. pp. 675. 742.

15. Βλέπετε οὖν πῶς ἀκριβῶς περιπατεῖτε] See to it, therefore, how ye fulfil the precept of walking accurately in the straight line of Christian duty. Cp. Winer, § 41, p. 269.

On this text, see Augustine, Serm. 167, Vol. v. p. 1160.

16. ἐξαγοραζόμενοι τὸν καιρόν] redeeming for yourselves the opportunity, delivering it out of its present bondage, because the days are Evil. Observe the preposition ἐξ, and the middle voice in the word here used, ἐξαγοραζόμενοι.

The Days are evil; they are like a Captive sold into bondage to a hard master, your ghostly Enemy; therefore it is your duty to redeem, as it were, by a ransom, the Opportunity out of his hands, and to liberate it from his thraldom, and to dedicate it to the free service of God.

Ye Ephesians, who have listened to the call of Christ, and have risen from sleep, and have been illumined by Christ, the Sun of Righteousness, do ye, who have set forth on the morning of your journey towards your heavenly home, as pilgrims of Christ, take heed, and walk warily on the road, and be not overcome by the evil of the days, but overcome it by your good.

Be not changed by them into evil, but change them into good. They are like prisoners sold into slavery, but do you rescue them, redeem them, and make them your own and Christ's by using them well. Remember how Joseph's days were evil, and Job's days were evil; and remember also how they redeemed the opportunity, and made all their trials to be occasions of good. They changed their bad days into good days. Do you imitate them. See Jerome here, and cp. Col. iv. 5, and above on iv. 29.

St. Paul sets a good example of his own precept by his own practice. When he wrote this Epistle he was a prisoner, bound to a soldier. The days were evil for him; but he redeemed them. He made his prison to be a pulpit, from which he preached to the world. The Roman soldier's presence was a perpetual memento to him that he himself was a soldier of Christ. Every part of the soldier's armour became like a weapon of Christian warfare, and was wielded by him in the cause of Christ. See vi. 13—20.

18. ἀσωτία] dissoluteness. Cp. Luke xv. 13.

19. ἑαυτοῖς] to one another, perhaps antistrophically. See next note, and the assertion of Socrates (vi. 8), on the early use of antiphonal singing even in the time of S. Ignatius. Cp. Bingham, xiv. 1.

— ψαλμοῖς καὶ ὕμνοις καὶ ᾠδαῖς] Ψαλμὸς (from ψάω, rado, i. e. to sweep the strings) is properly with an instrumental accompaniment, as a harp; ᾠδὴ (from ἀείδω, cp. Theocritus, xv. 96. 99) is vocal melody; ὕμνος is a hymn of praise. The three words are combined as here by S. Hippolytus, ap. Euseb. v. 28, Ψαλμοὶ δὲ ὅσοι, καὶ ᾠδαὶ ἀδελφῶν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς ὑπὸ πιστῶν γραφεῖσαι, τὸν Λόγον ὑμνοῦσι θεολογοῦντες. A passage happily illustrating the narrative of Pliny the Younger to Trajan (Ep. x. 97), that the Christians met early in the morning, in order "Carmen Christo quasi Deo dicere secum invicem."

21. Χριστοῦ] So the majority of the best MSS. and Edd. Elz. Θεοῦ.

22. ὑποτάσσεσθε] Not found in some MSS., and rejected by S. Jerome, and Tisch., Ellicott, Alf.

23. ἀνήρ] Elz. prefixes ὁ, which is not in A, D, E, F, G, I, K, and is rejected by almost all recent Editors. Ἀνὴρ is a husband whoever he may be.

— αὐτός] 'Ipse, nemo alius.' Elz., with some MSS., inserts καὶ before αὐτὸς, and ἐστὶ after it; but these words are not found in the great majority of the ancient authorities, and are rejected by Griesb., Scholz., Lachm., Tisch., Meyer, Ellicott, Alf.

— σωτὴρ τοῦ σώματος] A paronomasia. Christ is the Σωτὴρ τοῦ Σώματος, in which πάντες οἱ σωζόμενοι (Acts ii. 47) are incorporated ἵνα σωθῶσι. This is imitated by St. Paul's contemporary S. Clement, who had his eye on this passage when speaking of the Unity of the Church he says, σωζέσθω οὖν ὅλον τὸ σῶμα ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ καὶ ὑποτασσέσθω ἕκαστος τῷ πλησίον αὐτοῦ, c. 38.

Herein (says Chrys.) the Apostle grounds the duty of submission on the part of the Wife. Christ is the Head of the Church, and Saviour of His Body. Such is the relation of a husband to his own wife. He is her head, and therefore has the pre-eminence; his office also is one of protection and conservation, and he has therefore a double claim to submission and affection on her side.

24. Ἀλλ'] But—. St. Paul had said to wives, Be subject to your own husbands as to the Lord.

He now puts the precept in a somewhat different form. If you think it too much for me to command you to be subject to your husband, to a frail man, as to the Lord, and Head, and Saviour of all, yet observe the relation of the Church to her Lord, and there learn your own duty to your husband. If you will not look up to your husband as to Christ, yet look to the Church, the Spouse of Christ, in her conjugal relation to Him.

25. ἑαυτὸν παρέδωκεν ὑ. α.] On Christ's love for the Church, which He purchased with His own Blood, see St. Paul's speech to the Ephesian presbyters at Miletus. (Acts xx. 28.) They were prepared to receive this teaching of the Epistle.

26. καθαρίσας τῷ λουτρῷ τοῦ ὕδατος] having cleansed her with the (well-known) laver of the (well-known) water, "the laver of Regeneration," as the Apostle calls it (Tit. iii. 5), the laver of Baptism. See note there.

The laver of the water with which the Church is cleansed is here appropriately mentioned by the Apostle in connexion with the death of Christ, because the water of Baptism derives all its regenerating virtue and cleansing efficacy from that Death; as was symbolized by the water flowing from the side of Christ on the cross. See note on John xix. 34.

The reference to the lustral water of baptism here in connexion with the espousal of Christ and His Church, derives additional significance from the custom of the bridal bath, to which the Apostle is supposed to allude. Cp. Jahn, Archæol. Bibl. § 154.

— ἐν ῥήματι] Some ancient expositors apply this to the Baptismal Words, In the Name of the Father, &c.; but it seems rather to mean by and with the instrumentality of the Word of God preached and received.

As to this sense of ῥῆμα, see vi. 17, and Heb. vi. 5. The article is not necessary after the preposition ἐν, especially with such an emphatic and special word (amounting to the dignity of an appellative) as ῥῆμα, God's Word. See the examples in Winer, § 19, p. 108—114.

St. Paul guards the Ephesians from imagining that the Holy Sacrament of Baptism is to be confounded with any of those magical charms and incantations with which they were familiar, and for which their city was proverbial. See Acts xix. 19.

It is not the Water alone which works this wonderful change, but it is the Holy Spirit working in the Water, and in the Word of God preached and received with faith in the heart.

Hence St. Peter says that we "are born again by the Word of God" (1 Pet. i. 23); and St. James teaches that God of His own will begat us with the Word of Truth (James i. 18). Here the Word may mean Christ; but it is Christ preached. See on 1 Tim. iv. 5.

This truth was remarkably exemplified in the case of Cornelius. He was commanded to send for Peter, who would speak ῥήματα to him (Acts xi. 14); and when Peter spoke those ῥήματα, the Holy Ghost descended on all that heard the Word. (x. 44.)

In that special case the Holy Ghost descended before Baptism, in order to authorize Peter to confer Baptism on the Gentiles (see note on Acts x. 47); but this visible descent was also designed to show what is ordinarily done when the door of the Church is opened by the key of the Word and Sacrament of Baptism.

St. Paul is here speaking specially of the case of Adults; but Infants also may be fitly said to be washed with the laver of the water with the Word, in that they make profession of belief in the Word, by the mouth of their Sureties, and are baptized in the faith of Christ preached by the Word.

27. αὐτός] So the major part of the best MSS. and Edd. Elz. has αὐτήν.

— ἵνα παραστήσῃ κ.τ.λ.] that He might present to Himself (His Bride) the Church glorious, not having any spot (of impurity) or wrinkle (of decay). Cp. the description of the Church glorified in the Apocalypse, xxi. 2. 9, and the Marriage of the Lamb and His Bride, xix. 7.

28. Οὕτως κ. οἱ ἄ. ὀφείλουσιν] So A, B, D, E, F, G, Lach., Tisch., Meyer, Ellicott. Elz. has οὕτως ὀ. οἱ ἄ.

29. Χριστός] So A, B, D*, F, G, and Griesb., Scholz., Lachm., Tisch., Meyer, Ellicott, Alford. Elz. has Κύριος. See on Acts xx. 28.

S. Ignatius (ad Polycarp. c. 5), imitating this passage, tells Polycarp to charge husbands, in the name of Jesus Christ, to love their wives as the Lord loves the Church.

30. Ὅτι μέλη ἐσμὲν τοῦ σώματος αὐτοῦ, ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐκ τῶν ὀστέων αὐτοῦ] The words ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς—αὐτοῦ are not in A, B, and have been rejected by Lachm., Tisch., but they are supported by the great majority of authorities, and are received by Meyer, Ellicott, Alf.

We are from the flesh and bones of Christ by means of His Incarnation, and by incorporation into His Body.

The Church owes her life to the Death of the Son of Man. He suffered that death in His human flesh. And as Eve, "the mother of all living" (Gen. iii. 20), was formed out of the very side of the first Adam sleeping in Paradise, and was bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh (Gen. ii. 23), and she was called woman, Isha, because she was taken out of מאן, Ish (ii. 23), and thus we all by nature are taken out of the side of the first Adam, and are bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh, so the Church, the spiritual Eve, the mother of us all by Grace, was taken out of the side of the Second Adam sleeping in the sleep of death upon the cross; and we all, as members of Christ's Church, are taken out of the very flesh and bones of Christ dying as man upon the cross. See above on John xix. 34, and S. Jerome's and Theodoret's notes here, and the words of S. Ignatius (ad Trallian. c. 11): "They who are of the Father are like branches of Christ's Cross, and their fruit is incorruptible. Christ in His Passion calls us to Himself as His own Members. The Head cannot be born without Members, when God, Who is Christ Himself, promises union with Himself."

Hence it is said by Hooker (V. lvi. 7): The Church is in Christ, as Eve was in Adam. Yea, by grace we are every one of us in Christ and in His Church, as by nature we are in those our first parents. God made Eve of the rib of Adam; and He frameth His Church out of the very flesh, the very wounded and bleeding side of the Son of Man. His body crucified, and His blood shed, for the life of the world, are the true elements of that heavenly being, which maketh us such as Himself is, of Whom we come. (1 Cor. xv. 48.) For which cause the words of Adam may be fitly the words of Christ concerning His Church, "flesh of My flesh, and bone of My bones," a true native extract out of Mine own Body. So that in Him, even according to His manhood, we according to His heavenly being are as branches in the root out of which they grow.

To all things He is life, and to men light (John i. 4—9), as the sons of God: to the Church both light and life,—life eternal (John vi. 57) by being made the Son of Man for us, and by being in us a Saviour, whether we respect Him as God or as Man.

Adam is in us an original cause of our nature, and of that corruption of nature which causeth death; CHRIST is the cause original of restoration to life. (Heb. v. 9.) The person of Adam is not in us, but his nature, and the corruption of his nature, derived unto all men by propagation. Christ, having Adam's nature, as we have, but incorrupt, deriveth not nature but incorruption, and that immediately from His own person, unto all that belong unto Him.

As therefore we are really partakers of the body of sin and death received from Adam, so, except we be truly partakers of Christ, and are really possessed of His Spirit, all we speak of eternal life is but a dream.

That which quickeneth us is the Spirit of the Second Adam (1 Cor. xv. 22. 45), and His flesh is that wherewith He quickeneth. That which in Him made our nature incorrupt, was the union of His Deity with our Nature. And in that respect the sentence of death and condemnation, which only taketh hold upon sinful flesh, could no way possibly extend unto Him.

This caused His voluntary death for others to prevail with God, and to have the force of an expiatory sacrifice. The blood of Christ (as the Apostle witnesseth) doth therefore take away sin (1 John i. 7), because, "through the eternal Spirit, He offered Himself unto God without spot" (Heb. ix. 14).

That which sanctifieth our nature in Christ, that which made it a sacrifice available to take away sin, is the same which quickeneth it, raised it out of the grave after death, and exalted it unto glory.

ἄνθρωπος τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ καὶ τὴν μητέρα, καὶ προσκολληθήσεται πρὸς τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ· καὶ ἔσονται οἱ δύο εἰς σάρκα μίαν. 32 Τὸ μυστήριον τοῦτο μέγα ἐστίν· ἐγὼ δὲ λέγω εἰς Χριστὸν καὶ εἰς τὴν ἐκκλησίαν.

c Col. 3. 19. 1 Pet. 3. 6. a Col. 3. 20. Prov. 20. 22. b Exod. 20. 12. Deut. 5. 16. Matt. 15. 4. Mark 7. 10.

33 c Πλὴν καὶ ὑμεῖς οἱ καθ' ἕνα, ἕκαστος τὴν ἑαυτοῦ γυναῖκα οὕτως ἀγαπάτω ὡς ἑαυτόν· ἡ δὲ γυνὴ ἵνα φοβῆται τὸν ἄνδρα.

VI. 1 a Τὰ τέκνα, ὑπακούετε τοῖς γονεῦσιν ὑμῶν ἐν Κυρίῳ· τοῦτο γάρ ἐστι δίκαιον. 2 b Τίμα τὸν πατέρα σου καὶ τὴν μητέρα, ἥτις ἐστὶν ἐντολὴ

Seeing therefore that Christ is in us as a quickening Spirit, the first degree of Communion with Christ must needs consist in the participation of His Spirit, which Cyprian in that respect well termeth "germanissimam societatem," the highest and truest society between man and Him Who is both God and Man in one.

These things, S. Cyril duly considering, reproveth their speeches which taught that only the Deity of Christ is the Vine whereupon we by faith do depend as branches, and that neither His flesh nor our bodies are comprised in this resemblance. For doth any man doubt that even from the flesh of Christ our very bodies do receive that life which shall make them glorious at the latter day, and for which they are already counted parts of His blessed body? Our corruptible bodies could never live the life they shall live, were it not that here they are joined with His body which is incorruptible, and that His is in ours as a cause of immortality,—a cause, by removing through the death and merit of His own flesh that which hindered the life of ours. Christ is, therefore, both as God and Man, that true Vine whereof we both spiritually and corporally are branches. The mixture of His bodily substance with ours is a thing which the Ancient Fathers disclaim. Yet the mixture of His Flesh with ours they speak of to signify what our very bodies, through mystical conjunction, receive from that vital efficacy which we know to be in His. And from bodily mixtures they borrow divers similitudes rather to declare the truth than the manner of coherence between His sacred body and the sanctified bodies of Saints. Hooker.

This communion with Christ the Son of Man, and yet God of God, Very God of Very God, the "Word made Flesh" (John i. 14), God manifest in the Flesh (1 Tim. iii. 16), God Incarnate, "God with us," "Emmanuel" (Matt. i. 23), i. e. God in the human nature common to us all, is personally applied to us in an inscrutable and mysterious manner by means of the two Sacraments, Baptism and the Lord's Supper (cp. Irenæus, v. 2, 3), by which we are united to Christ, and in Christ to God. The blessings flowing to us through Christ's Humanity are thus conveyed to us, and make us partakers of the Divinity (2 Pet. i. 4); and if we are partakers of the Divinity, and dwell as living members in Christ's body, we have therein a visible pledge and assurance of a glorious Immortality,—the Immortality of God.

31. Ἀντὶ τούτου καταλείψει] For this cause a man shall leave his father and mother, even as Christ left His heavenly Father's house and married our Nature, espoused to Himself a Church on earth, and made her to be one flesh with Himself. Jerome, Theodoret.

— προσκολληθήσεται—μίαν] See above on Matt. xix. 5.

32. Τὸ μυστήριον τ. μ. ἐ.] This Mystery is great. What Mystery? That which Adam, the Father and Representative, the Patriarch and Prophet of the whole human family, was empowered of God to reveal (Chrys., Hierome, Theophyl.) concerning the oneness of man with his wife, for whom the man leaves his own nearest and dearest relations, and severs himself from his own flesh and blood, and joins himself to one who has no relationship to him, and joins himself to her indissolubly, so that they twain become one flesh. This appears to be the true sense of the words, and to be evinced by the pronoun τοῦτο, this.

The word Mystery, as used by St. Paul, signifies something kept secret and hidden (ἀποκεκρυμμένον, Col. i. 26; σεσιγημένον, Rom. xvi. 25), and generally something sacred and divine which cannot be discovered by Natural Reason, but is unfolded by Divine Revelation.

On the etymology of the word, see on Matt. xiii. 11.

St. Paul often uses the word Mystery in his Epistles to the Church and Bishop of Ephesus, famous for the practices of those who professed to hold intercourse with the spiritual and invisible world. See Eph. i. 9; iii. 3, 4. 9; vi. 19. 1 Tim. iii. 9. 16.

The mystery of the conjunction and oneness of Man and Wife might well be called a great and profound one at that time; for it was hidden from all the Nations of the world, even those which boasted most of their intellectual knowledge, social civilization, and religious illumination.

Polygamy was common in many parts of the world; and Divorce for the most trivial causes was practised without scruple in Italy and Greece, and even among the Jews. See on Matt. xix. 3. The declaration therefore of the oneness of man and wife, must have sounded as a strange announcement in the ears of the world at that time, and that oneness might well be called "a great mystery." Even now, when Christianity has revealed this doctrine for so many ages to mankind, yet, on account of the blindness of their hearts, many are unwilling to receive this divine Mystery; and how many who have received it are eager to reject it, by creating new facilities for Divorce!

— ἐγὼ δὲ λέγω εἰς Χριστὸν καὶ εἰς τ. ἐκκλησίαν] but I am speaking with a view to Christ and the Church, whose union is represented by Holy Matrimony.

The Mystery therefore of Marriage is great, not only for the reasons mentioned above, but because it has a mystical relation to the Marriage of Christ and the Church, and is an image of it. Do not therefore be surprised that what I am declaring to you is confessedly a great Mystery. Do not reject it, because it is a great Mystery. For, the whole Œconomy of Christ's union with His Church, the whole Œconomy of the relation to us of "God manifest in the flesh," is indeed a great Mystery. See St. Paul's words to the Bishop of Ephesus, 1 Tim. iii. 16.

As it has been well expressed by an eloquent Bishop of our own nation, This is a great mystery; but it is the symbolical and sacramental representation of the greatest mysteries of our religion. Christ descended from His Father's bosom, and contracted His Divinity with flesh and blood, and married our nature, and we became a Church, the Spouse of the Bridegroom, which He cleansed with His blood, and gave her His Holy Spirit for a dowry and Heaven for a jointure, begetting children unto God by the Gospel. This Spouse He hath joined to Himself by an excellent charity. He feeds her at His own table, and lodges her nigh His own heart; provides for all her necessities, relieves her sorrows, determines her doubts, guides her wanderings. He is become her Head, and she is a signet upon His right hand. Here is the eternal conjunction, the indissoluble knot, the exceeding love of Christ, the obedience of the Spouse, the communicating of goods, the uniting of interests, the fruit of marriage, a celestial generation, a new creature. "Sacramentum hoc magnum est;" this is the Sacramental Mystery represented by the holy rite of Marriage. Bp. Taylor (Serm. xvii. "The Marriage Ring," Vol. v. p. 254). Cp. Gregory Nazianz. (Orat. xxxvii. § 7).

33. Πλήν] But waiving all farther considerations of this profound Mystery, do you receive, in addition to what I have already said, this plain practical lesson, as follows.

On this use of πλὴν see 1 Cor. xi. 11. Phil. i. 18; iii. 16; iv. 14.

— ἵνα] I command that (cp. John xiii. 29); or, let her see that. Cp. Winer, § 45. 5, p. 282.

Ch. VI. 1. Τὰ τέκνα—2. ἐπαγγελίᾳ] Quoted by Tertullian as an argument for the unity of the old and new dispensation against Marcion, who expunged the words ἥτις—ἐπαγγελίᾳ (c. Marcion. v. 18).

St. Paul says that this is the first commandment, not in order, but in respect of promise.

The first three commandments are prohibitory, the fourth is imperative and positive, but has no promise annexed to its performance; the fifth is the first in regard to God's promise of blessings for obedience. (Cp. Chrys. Winer, § 48, p. 349.)

Observe, that St. Paul writing to the Ephesians (who had been taught by him for three years), enforces this precept with a quotation from the Old Testament (see on ii. 17), which he does not do in writing to the Colossians (iii. 20). Cp. Townson's Works, i. 102.

3. ἵνα εὖ σοι γένηται—γῆς] in order that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest live long on the earth. This is not to be limited to temporal life in this world. But the Apostle here gives an exposition of the true spiritual meaning and universal application of the Fifth Commandment; as our Lord in His Sermon on the Mount expounds the true significance of the whole Decalogue. See on Matt. v. 17. 21. 31. Cp. Matt. xxii. 37. 40. Compare specially our Lord's promise to the meek, that they should inherit the earth, Matt. v. 5, and note.

4. παιδείᾳ καὶ νουθεσίᾳ] discipline (implying strictness and severity, cp. Heb. xii. 5. 7, 8. 11) and admonition,—the former applicable specially to the body, the latter to the mind.

S. Barnabas (Epist. 19) has a passage which bears on the same social and domestic duties in what is there called "the Way of Light," as opposed to "the Way of Darkness,"—οὐ μὴ ἄρῃς τὴν χεῖρά σου ἀπὸ τοῦ υἱοῦ σου, ἀλλὰ ἀπὸ νεότητος διδάξεις φόβον Κυρίου, ... ὑποταγήσῃ κυρίοις ὡς τύπῳ Θεοῦ ἐν αἰσχύνῃ καὶ φόβῳ· οὐ μὴ ἐπιτάξῃς παιδίσκῃ ἢ δούλῳ σου ἐν πικρίᾳ, ὅτι ἦλθεν (ὁ Θεὸς) οὐ κατὰ πρόσωπον καλέσαι ἀλλ' ἐφ' οὓς τὸ Πνεῦμα ἡτοίμασεν. (See below, v. 9.)

5. Οἱ δοῦλοι] Slaves or bondmen,—not to be confounded in their condition with the household servants of Christian nations in later days, who have been raised by the Gospel from the condition of δοῦλοι to that of freemen and brethren in Christ. See below, Introduction to the Epistle to Philemon.

— κατὰ σάρκα] Earthly, as distinguished from heavenly. Be obedient, not only to God your heavenly Master, but to your earthly masters, as to Christ.

We may have masters according to the flesh upon earth, to whom we may and must give reverence upon earth; but of our souls, and spirits, and consciences, as we have no fathers upon earth, so we may have no Masters, but only our Father in heaven. (Matt. xxiii. 9.) Bp. Sanderson (iii. 279).

— ἁπλότητι] With a single eye to what is good and right, not with sinister respects to our own interests. See above on Rom. xii. 8.

6. μὴ κατ' ὀφθαλμοδουλείαν] not with eye-service; "non ad oculum servientes." (Vulg.) Cp. Col. iii. 22, 23.

Many servants there are, who will work hard as long as their master's eye is upon them, but when his back is turned, can be content to go on softly. Such ὀφθαλμοδουλεία the Apostle condemns. Sanderson (iii. p. 32).

— ὡς δοῦλοι Χριστοῦ] as servants of Christ. Who is never absent from you, and Whose eye is ever upon you at your work, and Who will judge you according to your works at the Great Day.

— ἐκ ψυχῆς] from the heart. These words are joined with what follows; but this combination seems to impair the rhythm of the sentence and not to improve its sense. They are joined with what precedes in the Vulgate, Æthiopic, and Arabic Versions, and by Meyer and Ellicott.

8. ἕκαστος—ποιήσῃ] So A, D, E, F, G.—Elz. has ἐάν τι ἕκαστος, and so the majority of recent Editors. But ἕκαστος is the emphatic word; each person, whether bond or free, and properly stands first. Whatsoever each person shall have done, that he shall receive again from God. A religious comfort to slaves, who when they "did well and suffered for it" (1 Pet. ii. 20) from their earthly masters, might thence take consolation in the reflection, that the more they did and suffered for God, the more they would receive hereafter from God; and so they might even rejoice in their sufferings on earth as leading to an increase of heavenly glory. See Chrys. here.

— τοῦτο κομιεῖται] that he will receive back again,—as a deposit, or as seed sown. See 2 Cor. v. 10, and Gal. vi. 8. 2 Cor. ix. 6. A, B, D*, F, G, have κομίσεται here, but in Col. iii. 25, A, C, D*, have κομιεῖται, and D, E, I, K, have κομιεῖται here.

9. καὶ αὐτῶν καὶ ὑμῶν] the Master both of them and you. So A, B, D*, F, G, and most of the recent Editors.—Elz. has καὶ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν.

— προσωποληψία] He does not regard persons, but their works.

11. μεθοδείας] μηχανήματα (Theodoret); 'machinationes.' Tertullian c. Marcion. v. 18. See above, iv. 14.

12. ἡ πάλη] our wrestling, our warfare, is not like that of the soldiers of this world, but far more perilous and glorious. He had been speaking of armour, and is going to speak of it more in detail. He addresses them as soldiers, and now reveals to them who and where their enemies are.

— κοσμοκράτορας] He calls them rulers of this world,—not because they have received any such rule from God, but because the world submits itself to their rule, and eagerly sells itself into slavery to them. Theodoret.

— τοῦ σκότους] of darkness. This is the opinion of all the doctors of the Church, that the intervening air between heaven and earth is full of adverse powers. S. Jerome. See above on ii. 2. Elz. adds τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου, which is not in the majority of the best MSS. and Edd.

— τὰ πνευματικὰ τῆς πονηρίας] the spiritual powers of wickedness; 'spiritualia nequitiæ' (Vulg.); i. e. whose essence it is to work wickedness. As to this use of the neuter plural in a collective sense (the spiritualty or spiritualhood), and on the genitive, see Winer, § 34, p. 212, 13.

13. πανοπλίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ] So Ignatius to the Ephesians, c. 6: "Let none of you be called a deserter; let your Baptism abide with you as your arms, Faith as your Helmet, Love as your Spear, Patience as your Panoply."

14. περιζωσάμενοι τὴν ὀσφῦν] See 1 Pet. i. 13. Polycarp ad Philipp. 2.

15. ὑποδησάμενοι—ἐν ἑτοιμασίᾳ κ.τ.λ.] An allusion to the attitude and attire of the Israelites eating the Passover in a state of preparation, or rather preparedness to quit Egypt, and to march "harnessed" (Exod. xiii. 18) to Canaan. See Exod. xii. 11: "Thus shall ye eat it, with your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, ye shall eat it in haste."

It was a sign of haste to eat standing, with their feet shod, in preparation for the journey, that, being strengthened with the Paschal food, they might pass through the vast and terrible wilderness in their way to the promised land.

So the Christian, when he sets forth from the Egypt of spiritual darkness, is fortified with the "true Passover" sacrificed for him (1 Cor. v. 7), and he goes forth "harnessed," and has his feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of Peace, and so is equipped for the march through the wilderness of this world to his heavenly rest.

Let no one therefore of the true Israelites look back and yearn for Egypt, but let all press onward toward the heavenly Jerusalem. See Origen, Chrys., and Jerome here.

16. θυρεόν] the large oblong or oval shield,—properly like a θύρα, or door; 'scutum' (Vulg.); differing from the lighter ἀσπὶς or 'clypeus.' Ellicott.

— ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ] in incorruptibility; that is, who love Him with a love that is not corrupted by any evil admixtures and deleterious influences, or impaired by change of circumstances or lapse of time, but is pure and immarcescible, ἀμίαντος καὶ ἀμάραντος.

The Apostle had been speaking of conjugal union and love, and he had represented it as a figure of the spiritual marriage and love between Christ and His Church (v. 22. 32).

He now says, "Grace be with all that love the Lord Jesus Christ ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ:" that is, Grace be with every Christian soul that has been espoused to Christ in spiritual wedlock in baptism, and who loves her Lord Jesus Christ with a pure love, unadulterated with any admixtures of carnal affection for any worldly object (as the old man was corrupted, see iv. 22), and untainted by heretical pravity of unsound doctrine, or by schismatical pride of sectarian strife. Grace be to them who love Him alone with their whole heart fervently.

This meaning of the Apostle may be illustrated by his words to the philosophical, carnally-minded, and schismatical members of the Corinthian Church, who did not love Christ ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ: "I have espoused you to one husband that I may present you as a chaste Virgin to Christ. But I fear lest by any means, as the Serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety, so your minds should be corrupted (φθαρῇ) from the 'simplicity' (or singleness, oneness, and pureness) of love in Christ."

The word φθαρῇ, as there used, explains the sense of its opposite ἀ-φθαρσία here; and this sense is approved by ancient Expositors (Chrys., Jerome, Theophyl.) and Versions, especially the Vulg., Syriac, Gothic, and Arabic, which thus paraphrases the word, "with a love free from blemish or corruption." Hence this word may well be supposed here to signify the incorruptibility of a spiritual and eternal love,—a love which flows forth from the pure well-spring of the inner man of the heart, in the incorruptible (ἀφθάρτῳ) element of the meek and quiet spirit described by St. Peter (1 Pet. iii. 4),—a love which knows no decay, and is not affected by time,—a love which is never blighted or withered, but is as undying and unfading as the crowns of glory which it will one day wear.

This is the sense in which the words of St. Paul seem to have been understood by an Apostolic Father and Martyr, who says in his Epistle to the Ephesians, Whosoever corrupts (ὃς ἂν φθείρῃ) the faith by evil teaching, will go into unquenchable fire. For this cause, Christ received the unction on His head, in order that He might diffuse incorruption (ἀφθαρσίαν) to the Church. Do not ye therefore be anointed with the noisome odours of the dogmas of the Ruler of this world. (Ignatius ad Eph. 16.) And to the Magnesians he says, Let no one separate you into parties, but be united to your Bishop and the Presidents of the Church, for a type and discipline of Incorruption (ἀφθαρσίας, i. e. of soundness and integrity in faith and practice). And he calls the Gospel of Christ the perfection of incorruption, and says that it contains every blessing, if we believe with love. (Phil. 9.) And in his Epistle to the Romans he says (c. 7), "I have no pleasure in the food of corruption (φθορᾶς), nor in the pleasures of this world; but I long for the bread of God, which is the flesh of Jesus Christ the Son of God, Who was born in the latter days from the seed of David and of Abraham, and the drink of God, which is His blood, which is Love incorruptible (ἀγάπη ἄφθαρτος) and everlasting life."

INTRODUCTION

EPISTLE TO THE COLOSSIANS.

THE Epistle to the Colossians, like the other Epistles of St. Paul, holds its own peculiar place, and performs its own special work, in the system of Christian Teaching, which has been vouchsafed by the Holy Spirit, operating by the ministry of the Apostle.

This Epistle may best be considered in connexion with that to the neighbouring Church, and great City, of Ephesus.

Both these Epistles were written by St. Paul, at the same place, Rome, and about the same time; that is, in his first imprisonment in that City (A.D. 61—63), and appear to have been conveyed by the same person, Tychicus[1].

The Epistle to the Colossians, in its plan and substance, may be regarded as following, by a natural sequence, the Epistle to the Ephesians.

If the comparison may be allowed, the divine Apostle, bearing in his hand these two Epistles—that to the Ephesians, and that to the Colossians—may be likened to the builders of the literal Temple of God, of whom we read in the book of Nehemiah, "Every one with one of his hands wrought in the work, and with the other held a weapon. The builders every one had his sword girded by his side, and so builded[2]."

So the Apostle here. He is both a builder and a soldier. He has his sword girded by his side, and so builds. He builds up the Truth in one Epistle; and he wars against Error in the other. He builds in the Epistle to the Ephesians, He has his sword girded at his side in the Epistle to the Church of Colossæ.

He has thus left a practical lesson to the Church, and to every Christian. The Church on earth is ever militant; and she has also ever her work of edification. She must build as well as fight; and she must fight as well as build. And every Christian is a soldier; but he must also be a builder. The soldiers of Nehemiah, with a trowel in their hand, and a sword girded at their side, and so building the fabric of God's Temple, and the Apostle St. Paul building up the Church with one Epistle, and at the same fighting against her enemies with another, are examples for every Christian in every age.

The similarity of thought and language between these two Epistles[3] proclaim the connexion of the Subject and the identity of the Author.

The Epistle to the Ephesians, with its constructive character, and the Epistle to the Colossians, with its polemical protests, and denunciatory refutations, have each their respective office and use.

Both are grounded on the foundation of the same doctrines, especially that of the Divine Love in the Mystery of the Incarnation. Both were written at the same time by the same Apostolic hand, that of Paul the prisoner of Christ; they were both sent into Asia by the same messenger, the beloved Tychicus. The Ephesian Epistle was to be communicated to the Colossians, and the Colossian Epistle was to be communicated to the Ephesians; the Apostle himself (it would seem) gave a special direction to that effect[1]. Each of the two Epistles would afford salutary instruction to the readers of the other[2], in that age, and in every succeeding generation; and in these two Epistles, written and sent simultaneously, the Church Universal would recognize a beautiful example of her own duty, to drive away dangerous errors, especially those which assail Christ's Incarnation and Atonement, while at the same time she builds up her people on the only solid foundation and immoveable Rock of Truth, Christ Jesus, confessed to be Very Man, and to be the Son of the Living God[3].

Let us consider, a little more at large, the evidence of these propositions.

In the Epistle to the Ephesians, as we have already seen, the holy Apostle, as a wise master-builder[4], had laid deep and strong the groundwork of the Christian Church upon Christ, acknowledged to be God, co-equal and co-eternal with the Father, the King and Lord of Angels, Creator and Ruler of the world; and upon the same Christ, condescending to become Man, and by His Incarnation uniting Human Nature in His own Person to the Divine Nature, and offering Himself on the Cross as a propitiatory sacrifice for the sins of the whole world, and reconciling God to man in Himself, and purchasing to Himself an Universal Church by His own Blood, and vanquishing the Principalities and Powers of this world by His Death, and abolishing the enmity between Angels and Men, and between Men and Men, knitting together both Jews and Gentiles as fellow-members in His own Mystical Body, the Church, by the profession of One Lord, One Faith, One Baptism[5]; and thus harmonizing and restoring, consecrating and summing-up all in one; and proclaiming and establishing an Universal and Everlasting Peace, and blending every thing, and bringing all persons to dwell together in Unity, in Himself, God and Man, and through Himself, in the Father, the Sovereign Author of all, and the Fountain and Well-Spring of Love; and having ascended up on High, and given gifts to men, as a divine boon and royal largess to the World, on the glorious occasion of His Coronation and Inauguration, as Man, in Heaven, and of His Session as our King and Head at the Right Hand of God; and by these Gifts of the Holy Ghost the Comforter, providing for the organization and consolidation, as also for the continual growth and enlargement of the living fabric of His Church, till it expands to its full stature, to the perfectness of its growth in Christ.

These mysterious truths, to the height of which no human Intelligence can climb, the depth of which no human Reason can fathom, and the length and breadth of which no human Capacity can comprehend, and which, even the Angels of heaven themselves did not know, and had been dimly seen by the Prophets, and prefigured by the types and shadows of the Levitical Law, are now revealed by the Holy Spirit to the Apostles, and are displayed to the eyes of Angels and of Men, by the Church, as in a clear mirror, where all may contemplate the beauty and glory of the Love of God in Christ.

From these transcendent truths, fully developed[6], the Apostle had proceeded to enforce the practical duties of Unity in the Faith, of Truth[7], of Charity, of Holiness[8]. He had shown in the Epistle to the Ephesians, how the daily duties of domestic and social life, the duties of Wives to Husbands, and Husbands to Wives; the duties of Children to Parents, and of Parents to Children; the duties of Slaves to Masters, and of Masters to Slaves, all grow out of this one Root, and flourish on the one stem of Unity in Christ, confessed to be God and Man, and of Communion with His Body the Church [1].

The divine Apostle, in his Epistle to the Ephesians, had thus prepared the way for a subsequent theological application of these fundamental principles, in the Epistle to the Colossians; not only for the purpose of establishing and confirming Evangelical Truth, but also of refuting and exploding Heretical errors. The Epistle to the Colossians discloses various forms of religious error, which are not displayed in any other Epistle of St. Paul, but which, having been disseminated by the Evil One in the field of the Church, and having taken root in primitive times in Phrygia, have brought forth a large harvest of evil, and are still prevalent in our own age.

These errors, like all others which have been most disastrous to the Church, presented themselves originally in the specious garb of Good. They came forward in the name of Philosophy and superior Intelligence, and yet were vain and illusory [2]. Their Teachers dressed themselves up in the guise of Humility, and yet were inflated with Pride [3]. They affected sanctity, and meekness, and a religious reverence for the ritual and ordinances of God according to the Levitical Law [4]; and yet, in a spirit of proud and arbitrary lawlessness, they usurped a tyrannical dominion over the wills and consciences of men; and not holding the Head [5] required them to receive their own human commands and traditions [6] as terms of communion, and as necessary to salvation, and imposed upon them a system of Will-Worship [7]. They professed to promote superior spirituality by rigorous rules of asceticism, and self-mortification, and neglect of the body, and yet were vainly puffed up by a fleshly mind [8]; they ministered to the gratification of the carnal appetites and sensual indulgences by denying due honour to the body [9], particularly by derogating from the dignity of Christ, God manifest in the flesh [10]; and thus they were depriving the Human Body of its most glorious prerogative,—that of being sanctified, consecrated, and glorified by the Incarnation of the Son of God, and by union in Him to God.

They professed to be deeply sensible of their own unworthiness, and of the corruption of fallen man, and therefore to be afraid to approach an offended and all-holy God; and in a spirit of affected humility and awe for His tremendous Majesty, and for the holiness of His Nature, and for Him Who had revealed Himself of old by the ministry of Angels, and of honour for His righteous Law which He had given amid thunders and lightnings from Mount Sinai by the agency of Angels, and of respect for His Word, which represented Angels as Princes of Kingdoms [11], they invoked Angels as Mediators, and thus did dishonour to the only Mediator between God and Man, the Man Christ Jesus [12], Whom, on account of His being man, they treated as inferior to the Angels. And while they professed extraordinary sanctity and exemplary devotion to God, they suborned God's Servants, the Elect Angels, to be accomplices of rebellion against Him, and they perverted the blessed Mystery of the Incarnation,—that stupendous marvel and crowning consummation of God's Love toward man in Christ, for man's everlasting glory and bliss,—into an occasion for working man's ruin, and for dishonouring and degrading Him Who is God Incarnate, God manifest in the flesh, and for frustrating the mercy of God the Father in the person of His dear Son.

Such were the machinations of the Evil One in the Churches of Phrygia. Such were the spiritual perils which beset the Church of Colossæ.

Almighty God, in His wisdom and love, controlled and overruled these evils for endless good to the Colossian Church, and to the Church Universal of every age and country, by the ministry of St. Paul in the present Epistle.

1. The Apostle here asserts in the clearest terms the Godhead of Christ [13], and has thus furnished a divine refutation of all Arian and Socinian Heresies which contravene that Doctrine.

2. He here proclaims in unequivocal language the great Mystery of the Incarnation, and of the Atonement made by Christ fulfilling all righteousness in our Nature by a sinless obedience, and offering Himself as a perfect, expiatory, propitiatory, satisfactory, and meritorious sacrifice to God; taking away the sins of the world, and redeeming Mankind from the bondage of Satan, and from the Curse of the Law, and purchasing them to Himself, and incorporating them in Himself as a Church, and procuring for them an everlasting inheritance in Heaven, by the priceless cost of His own Blood.

Thus the Holy Spirit has supplied in this Epistle a divine panoply against the heretical sophistries of those, who, relying on the frail Reed of a vain Philosophy in matters of Faith, impugn the Doctrine of the Atonement; and who repeat the insults and outrages of the Crucifixion by smiting their adorable Saviour on the head with that Reed [1], even denying the Lord that bought them [2].

3. The Apostle has also here provided a safeguard against the devices of those, who, professing superior sanctity, and pretending to afford to their votaries extraordinary means of holiness, and assuming the disguise of lowliness and of self-abasement, hide beneath that specious surface a haughty, aspiring, and ambitious spirit, and exercise lordship over God's heritage, and encroach on men's Christian Liberty, and usurp dominion over their wills and consciences, and would reduce into spiritual bondage and vassalage the servants of God and children of Christ, whom He has purchased for Himself with His most precious blood; and who impose upon them arbitrary forms of Will-worship, and deny them the use of God's creatures, and lay upon them heavy burdens, particularly the yoke of constrained celibacy, and so open a wide door, not only to carnal pride and self-righteousness, but to the indulgence of fleshly lusts; and who require subjection to their own magisterial dictates, and unscriptural traditions and ordinances, as if they were oracles of God, and necessary to everlasting salvation; and invent new Articles of Faith, to be received by all on pain of damnation; and while they call themselves Christians, and boast their own Church to be the only true Church of Christ, yet derogate from the divine honour of the great Head of the Church, and place the holiest of His creatures in an attitude of rivalry against Him, by making for themselves Mediators in the person of Angels and of Saints, and of the Blessed Virgin Mother of Christ.

4. St. Paul has also here furnished us with a divine defence against the spurious spiritualism of those, who forgetting the dignity and the honour, the prerogatives and the privileges, the hopes and the destinies of the Human Body, created by God the Father, assumed by God the Son, and made a Temple of God the Holy Ghost, and the heir of a glorious Resurrection, and of a future heavenly transfiguration into likeness to Christ's glorified Body [3], would dissolve and decompose man into a mere ghostly phantom, an ideal and shadowy spectre, an airy and visionary dream; and thus, having taken away the foundations of honour and reverence from the Body, while they profess to spiritualize Humanity, would make it an easy prey to the assaults of carnal lusts and sensual appetites, and would reduce it from its high exaltation in Christ Jesus at the very Right Hand of God, to the low level of the beasts that perish.

Thus the Teaching of St. Paul, in this glorious Epistle, displays, by a signal specimen, the love and wisdom of God inspiring the divine Apostle, "redeeming the time, because the days are evil [4]," and using the temporary and local devices of the Evil One as occasions for the refutation of Error, and for the maintenance and advancement of Truth, and for the perpetual edification and consolidation of the Universal Church of Christ.

Had St. Paul ever been at Colossæ before he wrote this Epistle? and did he found the Church there?

This question has been answered in the negative by most modern Expositors, on the following grounds [5];

(1) St. Paul no where speaks of himself in this Epistle as the founder of the Church at Colossæ, or as having preached there.

(2) He no where in this Epistle refutes the errors of the false teachers at Colossæ by reference to what he himself had preached there, as he does in his Epistles to the Galatians [6], and to the Corinthians [7].

(3) He refers to Epaphras as the teacher of the Colossians [8].

(4) Above all, he says that he has great conflict for them and for those of Laodicea, and for as many as have not seen his face in the flesh [9].

[1] Matt. xxvii. 29. Mark xv. 19.

[9] ii. 1.

Hence it is inferred by many, that St. Paul had never been at Colossæ when he wrote this Epistle.

Of these several arguments, the only one which seems entitled to much consideration is the last.

As to the other three, it may be replied, that it was not St. Paul's manner to speak much of himself in his Epistles, which were to be read publicly in all Churches of the world.

In the Epistle to the Ephesians he says nothing of his own preaching at Ephesus, or of his ever having been there; and yet we know from the Acts of the Apostles that he had resided and preached there for nearly three years[1].

Wherever he does speak of himself in his Epistles, and of his own preaching, and of its purport and effects, and wherever he asserts his own apostolic dignity and authority, it will be found to be either in his earliest Epistles, which were written and circulated when his name was little known, and his authority was not established, as in the Epistles to the Thessalonians[2]; or in his Epistles to Churches where his apostolic character and commission were disparaged and impugned by rival and false Teachers, as was the case in Galatia and at Corinth.
